

Dickson
BIBLICAL RESEARCH LIBRARY

Master Volume
V

Dickson Biblical Research Library

Master Volume V

Roger E. Dickson

www.africainternational.org
Philadelphia, Western Cape, South Africa
BRL Master Volume V
2022

Copyrights of Bible text:
International King James Version
(Africa International Missions 1987 - NT, 2011 - OT)

CONTENTS

BOOK 61 THE GIANTS AMONG US

	Introduction	Page 10
Chapter 1	Nonessentials For Spiritual Growth	Page 11
Chapter 2	Essentials For Spiritual Growth	Page 16
Chapter 3	Mandated Strength	Page 20
Chapter 4	Armor Up For Battle	Page 22
Chapter 5	Partners In Christ	Page 25
Chapter 6	Maintaining Contact	Page 28
Chapter 7	Out Of Duty	Page 31
Chapter 8	A Road Map To Spiritual Power	Page 36
Chapter 9	Beaming Lights	Page 43

BOOK 62 DEAD PREACHERS

	Introduction	Page 49
Chapter 1	Jonah	Page 55
Chapter 2	Amos	Page 59
Chapter 3	Hosea	Page 64
Chapter 4	Joel	Page 68
Chapter 5	Micah	Page 75
Chapter 6	Obadiah	Page 81
Chapter 7	Nahum	Page 84
Chapter 8	Habakkuk	Page 87
Chapter 9	Zephaniah	Page 91
Chapter 10	Haggai	Page 94
Chapter 11	Zechariah	Page 100
Chapter 12	Malachi	Page 105

BOOK 63 NEW CREATION

	Introduction	Page 109
Chapter 1	New Creation	Page 111
Chapter 2	New Covenant	Page 114
Chapter 3	New Attitudes	Page 116
Chapter 4	New Saints	Page 118
Chapter 5	New Laborers	Page 122
Chapter 6	New Soldiers	Page 126
Chapter 7	New Walk	Page 134
Chapter 8	New Responsibilities	Page 139
Chapter 9	New Righteousness	Page 144

BOOK 64 CHARACTER FOR CHRIST

	Introduction	Page 147
Chapter 1	Character Through Wisdom	Page 149
Chapter 2	Character Through Knowledge	Page 153
Chapter 3	Character Through Peace	Page 157
Chapter 4	Character Through Hope	Page 160
Chapter 5	Character Through Hope Of Eternal Life	Page 161
Chapter 6	Character Through Assurance	Page 163
Chapter 7	Character Through Faith	Page 164
Chapter 8	Character Through Truth	Page 167
Chapter 9	Character Through Morals	Page 170
Chapter 10	Character Through Prayer	Page 176

BOOK 65 THE POWER OF MANY AS ONE

	Introduction	Page 181
Chapter 1	The Birth Of Hierarchy	Page 183
Chapter 2	Staying Close To One Authority	Page 186
Chapter 3	Dependence On One Another	Page 188
Chapter 4	Setting The Stage For Hierarchy	Page 190
Chapter 5	Identity Of One Body	Page 192
Chapter 6	The One-Member Church	Page 197
Chapter 7	The Many As One Body	Page 198
Chapter 8	Discipleship Beyond Assemblies	Page 201
Chapter 9	Oneness In All Achaia	Page 203
Chapter 10	The Achaian Example	Page 208
Chapter 11	Unity Around The Meal	Page 210
Chapter 12	The Rise Of Wolves And Sheep Thieves	Page 213
Chapter 13	Remaining One With One Lord	Page 215
Chapter 14	Christ-Centered Assemblies	Page 218
Chapter 15	Interrupted Organic Discipleship	Page 219
Chapter 16	Preaching Christ	Page 226
Chapter 17	An Identity Crisis	Page 228
Chapter 18	The Oneness Attitude	Page 231
Chapter 19	Fellow Workers	Page 234

BOOK 66 THE LAST HIGH PRIEST

	Introduction	Page 237
Chapter 1	The Divine High Priest	Page 239
Chapter 2	The Incarnational High Priest	Page 242
Chapter 3	The Salvational High Priest	Page 244
Chapter 4	The Faithful High Priest	Page 245
Chapter 5	The Approachable High Priest	Page 246
Chapter 6	The Sympathetic High Priest	Page 247
Chapter 7	The Directly-Called High Priest	Page 248
Chapter 8	The Resurrected High Priest	Page 249
Chapter 9	The Legal High Priest	Page 250
Chapter 10	The Better-Covenant High Priest	Page 252
Chapter 11	The Heavenly High Priest	Page 253
Chapter 12	The Offered High Priest	Page 254
Chapter 13	The Sanctifying High Priest	Page 256
Chapter 14	The Redemptive High Priest	Page 258
Chapter 15	The Sacrificial High Priest	Page 259
Chapter 16	The Blood-Offered High Priest	Page 262
Chapter 17	The Only High Priest	Page 265
Chapter 18	The Eternal High Priest	Page 266
Chapter 19	The Unshakable High Priest	Page 268

BOOK 67 SURVIVORS

	Introduction	Page 270
Chapter 1	Survivor Destiny	Page 273
Chapter 2	Survivor Joy	Page 274
Chapter 3	Survivor By The Word	Page 276
Chapter 4	Survivor Spirituality	Page 278
Chapter 5	Survivor Submission	Page 281
Chapter 6	Survivor Families	Page 284
Chapter 7	Survivor Husbands And Wives	Page 287
Chapter 8	Survivor Discipleship	Page 288
Chapter 9	Survivor Lives	Page 291
Chapter 10	Survivor Faithfulness	Page 296
Chapter 11	Survivor Leadership	Page 297
Chapter 12	Survivor Character	Page 300

BOOK 68 CHANGE FOR GROWTH

	Introduction	Page 304
Chapter 1	Change In The Winds	Page 307
Chapter 2	Traditionalized Restoration	Page 309
Chapter 3	Conforming To The Norm	Page 311
Chapter 4	Opposition Of The Establishment, Part I	Page 314
Chapter 5	Opposition Of The Establishment, Part II	Page 317
Chapter 6	Opposition Of The Establishment, Part III	Page 318
Chapter 7	The Rise Of Rebels	Page 319
Chapter 8	The Rejection Of Rebels, Part I	Page 321
Chapter 9	The Rejection Of Rebels, Part II	Page 323
Chapter 10	The Rejection Of Rebels, Part III	Page 324
Chapter 11	The Attack Of Ignorance	Page 325
Chapter 12	The Attack Of Slander	Page 327
Chapter 13	Institutionalized Individuals	Page 330
Chapter 14	Early Rise Of Institutional Religion	Page 332
Chapter 15	Institutional Judaism Against Christ	Page 335
Chapter 16	Opposition Of Heritage	Page 336
Chapter 17	Opposition Of Heavy Purses	Page 339
Chapter 18	Opposition Of Politicians	Page 340
Chapter 19	God's Work Through Change	Page 342
Chapter 20	The Result Of Persistence	Page 343

BOOK 69 BUILDING ETERNAL RELATIONSHIPS

	Introduction	Page 346
Chapter 1	Starting With The Basics	Page 346
Chapter 2	Learning To Love Again	Page 350
Chapter 3	Growing Together	Page 351
Chapter 4	Growing Into Eternity Together	Page 355
Chapter 5	The Sanctuary For Survival	Page 358
Chapter 6	Refocusing The Family	Page 359
Chapter 7	God's Manual For Parenthood	Page 363
Chapter 8	God's Instructions For Children	Page 366

BOOK 70 LIVING THE WORD OF GOD

	Introduction	Page 370
Chapter 1	Gambling With Faith	Page 370
Chapter 2	The Man In The Moon	Page 371
Chapter 3	No Love Without Law	Page 372
Chapter 4	Islam ... And The Rest Of Us	Page 272
Chapter 5	Theatrical Religion	Page 274
Chapter 6	Experiential Religiosity	Page 275
Chapter 7	Narcissistic Religiosity Versus Word-Based Faith	Page 376
Chapter 8	A Possible Conversation Before Time	Page 378
Chapter 9	Hydrophobia	Page 380
Chapter 10	Baptism: A Relationship Response Of Faith	Page 381
Chapter 11	Fellow Workers	Page 383
Chapter 12	Device Disconnection Disorder	Page 384
Chapter 13	Alienated Urbanites	Page 386
Chapter 14	The Organic Body Of Christ	Page 387
Chapter 15	Organized Religion	Page 389
Chapter 16	Church: The Serendipity Of Loving Others	Page 390
Chapter 17	Going Down	Page 392
Chapter 18	The Bunny Liberators	Page 394

BOOK 71 DISCIPLES OF DIVINITY

	Introduction	Page 396
Chapter 1	Totally Offered Sacrifice	Page 397
Chapter 2	Members Of One Another	Page 402
Chapter 3	Enemies Of Discipleship	Page 403
Chapter 4	Able Discipleship	Page 406
Chapter 5	Shoe Discipleship	Page 410
Chapter 6	Disturbing Discipleship	Page 414
Chapter 7	Tater Discipleship	Page 417
Chapter 8	Example Discipleship	Page 421
Chapter 9	Food Discipleship	Page 425
Chapter 10	Militant Discipleship	Page 430
Chapter 11	Multiple Discipleship	Page 434
Chapter 12	Envision The Summit	Page 437
Chapter 13	Victory On The Summit	Page 442

BOOK 72 FASTING

	Introduction	Page 447
Chapter 1	Listening To The Doctor	Page 448
Chapter 2	Mourn, Fast And Attack	Page 450
Chapter 3	Fasting For Life	Page 452
Chapter 4	Fast For Favor	Page 452
Chapter 5	Fasting In Face Of Calamity	Page 454
Chapter 6	David Leads The Way	Page 456
Chapter 7	The Fast Of Faith	Page 457
Chapter 8	Transition To The New Covenant	Page 459
Chapter 9	The Ministry Of Fasting	Page 461
Chapter 10	Fasting To Focus	Page 463
Chapter 11	“When You Fast”	Page 465
Chapter 12	Fasting In Anticipation	Page 466
Chapter 13	Life-Style Fasting	Page 468
Chapter 14	Spiritual Conquerors	Page 469

BOOK 73 THE GOSPEL OF GOD’S HEART

	Introduction	Page 472
Chapter 1	The Eternal Incarnation	Page 475
Chapter 2	The Eternal Sacrifice	Page 477
Chapter 3	Leaving Father Or Son	Page 480
Chapter 4	Religion: Growth Away From God	Page 483
Chapter 5	Gospel Versus Religion	Page 486
Chapter 6	Gospel Versus Self-Justification	Page 488
Chapter 7	Self-Serving Religiosity	Page 490
Chapter 8	Gospel Versus Self-Sanctification	Page 493
Chapter 9	Religious Malpractice	Page 495
Chapter 10	Empowered By The Gospel	Page 498
Chapter 11	The Righteousness Of God	Page 499
Chapter 12	Romans And Righteousness	Page 502
Chapter 13	Declaration Of Righteousness	Page 504
Chapter 14	A Matter Of The Heart	Page 506
Chapter 15	Defining The Heart	Page 508
Chapter 16	The Futility Of Church Righteousness	Page 510
Chapter 17	The Incarnational Sacrifice	Page 513
Chapter 18	Law Condemns – Faith Saves	Page 515
Chapter 19	The Cleansing Blood	Page 517
Chapter 20	A Resurrectional World View	Page 520
Chapter 21	The Gospel Foundation	Page 521
Chapter 22	Gospel Living	Page 523

Chapter 23	Gospel Assemblies	Page 526
Chapter 24	Parable Of The Heart Of God	Page 529
Chapter 25	Glorify The Son Of God	Page 534

BOOK 74

IMPLEMENTING GOSPEL LIVING

	Introduction	Page 535
Chapter 1	“Make America Great Again!”	Page 536
Chapter 2	Fake News	Page 537
Chapter 3	The Source Of A True Gift	Page 539
Chapter 4	The 18-Year Old Apostle	Page 541
Chapter 5	The Sunday After	Page 542
Chapter 6	Feral Christians	Page 545
Chapter 7	The Heart Of God	Page 547
Chapter 8	Light For A New Dark Ages	Page 549
Chapter 9	Falling Out Of Love	Page 551
Chapter 10	Wondering Beyond Words	Page 552
Chapter 11	Objective Assurance	Page 553
Chapter 12	Not Knowing What We Have	Page 555
Chapter 13	Let It Rot!	Page 557
Chapter 14	Antiseptic Blood	Page 558
Chapter 15	All Things In Common	Page 560
Chapter 16	Together	Page 561
Chapter 17	Worship Beyond The Power Grid	Page 563

BOOK 75

IT’S ALL ABOUT JESUS

	Introduction	Page 565
Chapter 1	Jesus Is Immanuel!	Page 566
Chapter 2	Jesus Is The Christ!	Page 570
Chapter 3	Jesus Is Crucified!	Page 576
Chapter 4	Jesus Is Power!	Page 579
Chapter 5	Jesus’ Last Words!	Page 586
Chapter 6	Jesus Lives!	Page 592
Chapter 7	Jesus’ Disciple!	Page 595
Chapter 8	Jesus Goes Viral!	Page 599
Chapter 9	Jesus Is King!	Page 604
Chapter 10	Jesus Is Lord!	Page 608

BOOK 76

ESCAPE FROM RELIGION

	Introduction	Page 612
Chapter 1	The Subtle Move To Religion	Page 618
Chapter 2	Christianity Versus Religion	Page 621
Chapter 3	Challenge Of The Restorationist	Page 624
Chapter 4	Gospel Stimulated Worship	Page 625
Chapter 5	Gospel Worship	Page 628
Chapter 6	Legalized Worship	Page 632
Chapter 7	Assemblies That Reflect Love	Page 634
Chapter 8	Love–Organized Encounters	Page 637
Chapter 9	Freedom And Law	Page 640

BOOK 77

RISE AND FALL OF CIVILIZATIONS

	Introduction	Page 644
Chapter 1	Rise And Fall	Page 648
Chapter 2	Economic Inequity	Page 648
Chapter 3	Aging Civilizations	Page 650
Chapter 4	Cracks In The System	Page 651
Chapter 5	Aging Parts And Pain	Page 653

Chapter 6	From Farm To City	Page 656
Chapter 7	Too Big To Sustain	Page 657
Chapter 8	Faith Permeates Transitions	Page 658
Chapter 9	Remembering Roots	Page 660
Chapter 10	Inward Inequity	Page 662
Chapter 11	Loss Of The Moral Compass	Page 663
Chapter 12	Discovering The Moral Compass	Page 666
Chapter 13	Road Map To Consummation	Page 669
Chapter 14	Social Signals	Page 676
Chapter 15	“Fallen! Fallen Is Babylon The Great!”	Page 678

BOOK 78

IN SEARCH OF THE LOST LOVE

	Introduction	Page 685
Chapter 1	The Right Page	Page 689
Chapter 2	The Gospel Core	Page 690
Chapter 3	The Gospel Connection	Page 692
Chapter 4	Wrong Responses	Page 694
Chapter 5	The Right Cut	Page 696
Chapter 6	Cry Freedom!	Page 696
Chapter 7	Freedom From Legalism	Page 697
Chapter 8	Responsive Faith	Page 699
Chapter 9	Gospel Versus Self	Page 700
Chapter 10	Freedom For Captives	Page 702
Chapter 11	Gospel Relationships	Page 702
Chapter 12	Attacking The Gospel	Page 705
Chapter 13	Losing The Objective	Page 706
Chapter 14	Losing Out On Love	Page 707
Chapter 15	Gospel Motivation	Page 709
Chapter 16	Losing One Another	Page 710
Chapter 17	Common Gospel Mission	Page 712
Chapter 18	The Living Dead Church	Page 714
Chapter 19	Knowing God	Page 715
Chapter 20	“That Silly Cross”	Page 718

BOOK 79

GOSPEL RESTORATION

	Introduction	Page 722
Chapter 1	The Gospel Revealed	Page 723
Chapter 2	The Incarnational Gospel	Page 724
Chapter 3	The Incarnational Gospel Journey	Page 726
Chapter 4	Incarnational Examples	Page 729
Chapter 5	The Crucifixional Gospel	Page 730
Chapter 6	The Resurrectional Gospel	Page 732
Chapter 7	Gospel Of The Kingdom Reign	Page 733
Chapter 8	Legal Restoration	Page 745
Chapter 9	Gospel Restoration	Page 739
Chapter 10	Gospel Gatherings	Page 741
Chapter 11	Gospel Identity	Page 743
Chapter 12	Gospel Hope	Page 745

BOOK 80

SOLUTIONS TO THE PROBLEM

	Introduction	Page 748
Chapter 1	Dysfunctional Challenges	Page 750
Chapter 2	Urban Dysfunctions	Page 752
Chapter 3	Wrong Rights	Page 757
Chapter 4	Function Of The Organic Body	Page 759
Chapter 5	Selecting The Qualified	Page 761
Chapter 6	Incohesive Cultures	Page 763
Chapter 7	Lords Of Authority	Page 766

Chapter 8	Endangered Identity	Page 768
Chapter 9	Contact Problems	Page 773
Chapter 10	Isolationists	Page 774
Chapter 11	Stingy Giving	Page 776
Chapter 12	Money Problems	Page 778
Chapter 13	Profiteering Prophets	Page 780
Chapter 14	Ministry Thieves	Page 782
Chapter 15	Idle Sponges	Page 786
Chapter 16	Challenged Leadership	Page 789
Chapter 17	Water Shortages	Page 791

BOOK 81

TETHERED TO CHRIST THROUGH THE GOSPEL

	Introduction	Page 794
Chapter 1	Untethered Objectivity	Page 797
Chapter 2	The Berean Bible Class	Page 798
Chapter 3	The Tree Of Life Church	Page 801
Chapter 4	Boxes And Freedom	Page 802
Chapter 5	Fallen	Page 803
Chapter 6	Heritage Authority	Page 805
Chapter 7	Gospel And Law	Page 807
Chapter 8	Have To – Want To	Page 810
Chapter 9	Persecuted For Righteousness	Page 813
Chapter 10	God's Righteousness	Page 814
Chapter 11	The Incarnational Son	Page 818
Chapter 12	The Incarnational Life	Page 819
Chapter 13	The Wrong Call	Page 822
Chapter 14	The Right Call	Page 826

ABBREVIATIONS

OLD TESTAMENT

Genesis - Gn, Exodus - Ex, Leviticus - Lv, Numbers - Nm, Deuteronomy - Dt, Joshua - Ja, Judges - Jg, Ruth - Rt, 1 Samuel - 1 Sm, 2 Samuel - 2 Sm, 1 Kings - 1 Kg, 2 Kings - 2 Kg, 1 Chronicles - 1 Ch, 2 Chronicles - 2 Ch, Ezra - Er, Nehemiah - Ne, Esther - Et, Job - Jb, Psalms - Ps, Proverbs - Pv, Ecclesiastes - Ec, Song of Solomon - Ss, Isaiah - Is, Jeremiah - Jr, Lamentations - Lm, Ezekiel - Ez, Daniel - Dn, Hosea - Hs, Joel - Jl, Amos - Am, Obadiah - Ob, Jonah - Jh, Micah - Mc, Nahum - Nh, Habakkuk - Hk, Zephaniah - Zp, Haggai - Hg, Zechariah - Zc, Malachi - Ml

NEW TESTAMENT

Matthew - Mt, Mark - Mk, Luke - Lk, John - Jn, Acts - At, Romans - Rm, 1 Corinthians - 1 Co, 2 Corinthians - 2 Co, Galatians - Gl, Ephesians - Ep, Philippians - Ph, Colossians - Cl, 1 Thessalonians - 1 Th, 2 Thessalonians - 2 Th, 1 Timothy - 1 Tm, 2 Timothy - 2 Tm, Titus - Ti, Philemon - Pl, Hebrews - Hb, James - Js, 1 Peter - 1 Pt, 2 Peter - 2 Pt, 1 John - 1 Jn, 2 John - 2 Jn, 3 John - 3 Jn, Jude - Jd, Revelation - Rv

Book 61

The Giants Among Us

It is a beautiful thing to be a Christian. Those who are simply religious or spiritual will never understand this. They will not until they believe in the One who can grow a beautiful thing out of a frail free-moral being who is dysfunctional on his own and seems to destine himself continually to spiritual failure and eternal doom. What makes the Christian who he is, is not produced by human religious catechisms and legal rituals. His spiritual formation does not come from that which is without, or of that which is of this world. It comes only from within and is created after the image of God. We identify man-made religions by the efforts of men to orchestrate spiritually through man-made disciplines or human intuition. But we identify the Christian by his voluntary submission to the word of his Creator. This means of growth comes with a risk. Voluntary submission comes with the possibility of voluntary rejection of the word of God. Peter explained in warning Christians, “Beware lest you also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness” (2 Pt 3:17). The disciples of Jesus in the first century continued with the mandate to “grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pt 3:18). Lest we rebel against our Creator, therefore, we too must spiritually grow. If we are not spiritually developing as children of God, then we are spiritually moving away from His grace. Growing a spiritual giant takes a great deal of effort. But we can get there, for we are promised by Jesus, “You are to be perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect” (Mt 5:48). We have already been made perfect by His cleansing us of sin. Now it is our task to live up to what Jesus has done for our soul by growing up in all things in Christ.

When Paul sat and leaned over a table to pen his final words to some disciples with whom he had spent three years of his life in ministry of the word, he remembered the last words he had spoken personally to them many years before: “For I know this, that after my departure grievous wolves will enter in among you, not sparing the flock” (At 20:29). Years later after this personal encounter with the Asian presbyters, he penned a letter to the same men, “Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might” (Ep 6:10).

After Paul’s personal meeting with the leaders from Ephesus in Acts 20, he knew that there was danger looming in the near future of the disciples of Asia. It was less than ten years after Paul wrote the Ephesian exhortation that Jesus sent a personal message of judgment to the same disciples in Ephesus. “I have this against you, that you have left your first love” (Rv 2:4). From the time of his personal exhortation in their presence in Acts 20, to the time Jesus judged them to have fallen from their first love in Revelation 2, it was less than twenty years. From the time of their mass conversion and excitement for Jesus that was recorded by Luke in Acts 19, to their fall that is recorded in Revelation 2:4, it was about thirty years. This is about the lifetime of a disciple. It could have been that those who were very young in Acts 19 lived to hear Jesus’ judgment of them in Revelation 2. There is one very clear and important lesson we learn from the Ephesian Christians: No matter how excited one might be at the time of his conversion to Jesus, he can lose that excitement, and subsequently lose his salvation within the period of a lifetime. The history of the Christians in Ephesus is a lesson in the rise and fall of a working faith.

No one is saved without the possibility of losing his first love. The belief that once one is saved and is unable to fall from his first love, is Satan’s effort to produce within us a false sense of salvational security. And once the false sense of security is produced, then we have set ourselves up to fall. If one convinces himself that he cannot fall, then he can convince himself that he can harbor all sorts of sinful beliefs and behavior, while at the same time, remain within the grace of God. Jude warned of this when he warned of some Christians “who turn the grace of our God into licentiousness ...” (Jd 4).

Knowing that we can fall from the grace of our Lord Jesus, we give the more earnest heed to those things that were spoken by Him. Knowing that dark days of rebellion could come in our lives, we do as Peter exhorted, “... to take heed, as to a light that shines in a dark place, until the day dawns and the morning star arises ...” (2 Pt 1:19). We “earnestly contend for the faith that was once for all delivered to the saints” (Jd 3). We do such on the promise of the Holy Spirit that He made through Peter:

Therefore, brethren, be all the more diligent to make your calling and election sure. For if you do these things, you will never stumble, for an entrance will be supplied to you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ (2 Pt 1:10,11).

Paul would thus exhort us, as he did the Ephesians, to be strong (Ep 6:10). He said the same to the Corinthians: “Therefore, my beloved brethren, be steadfast, unmoved, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord” (1 Co 15:58).

We would guard ourselves from falling from the Lord. And in guarding ourselves, we give the more earnest heed to spiritually grow in doing the will of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is what produces the type of character that is conducive to developing spiritual giants. God knew this when He admonished the Israelites at the time they were about to enter into the land of promise. In reference to the law that He had given to them through the hand of Moses, He exhorted,

Only be strong and very courageous so that you may observe to do according to all the law that Moses My servant commanded you. So do not turn from it to the right hand or to the left, so that you may prosper wherever you go (Ja 1:7).*

Individual members make up the universal body of Christ. As the Holy Spirit took the hand of Luke to give us in the book of Acts a heavenly view of the function of this body on earth, He focused on individuals who remained faithful and functional to the Lord. As these individual disciples implemented in their lives those essential characteristics that produce spiritual giants, Luke takes us on a literary journey of what causes the body to grow as a whole. By emphasizing those essentials that make the body grow organically, we conclude that there are things that are not necessary for personal spiritual growth. Avoiding the nonessentials for spiritual growth will keep us on the right road. On our way to spiritual growth, we must always assume that Satan will seek to detour us by offering alternative routes. By understanding what is necessary to produce spiritual giants, we determine those things that are Satan’s detours. They are his efforts to keep us as far as possible away from God.

The mandate from Jesus is to grow spiritually as individual members of the body. And when we spiritually grow as members of His body, the universal body grows. In order to reach the mountain peaks of spiritual growth, we must not be deceived into taking those paths that Satan offers that actually hinder our growth.

Chapter 1

NONESSENTIALS FOR SPIRITUAL GROWTH

We must not think that Satan is not aware of our desire to grow closer to God. So in order to divert Christians from that which they seek to do, that is, spiritually growing, we must assume that he is throwing out as many spiritual detours as possible that appear to produce spiritual growth, but actually lead one further away from God. If Satan can convince us that we are spiritually growing according to his devices, then he has us in his grasp. The one caught in the trap of spiritual nonessentials will be detoured from true spiritual growth simply because he believes he is growing according to the will of God.

In order to grow the organic body of Christ worldwide by developing spiritual giants among the members, the following are not needed:

A. Wealthy people:

It is often the curse of wealth to divert one’s mind from that which encourages spiritual growth. Jesus warned that in one’s pursuit of wealth “no man can serve two masters” (Mt 6:24). There is the master of wealth, and there is the Master of creation. It is simply an axiomatic truth that “you cannot serve God and wealth” (Mt 6:24). In other words, the same level of commitment that God demands to grow spiritually cannot be placed with equal focus on the things of the world.

If one would be a spiritual giant, then his focus for growth must be on spiritual things. Spiritual giants are totally focused on God. They are totally committed to His will. They are successful in business because they focus their business on bringing glory to God. What Jesus was saying in the preceding statements was that the intensity of focus that is needed to grow spiritually as God would have us grow, cannot be split between two objectives. The intensity of our focus cannot be both on God and on wealth. Therefore, one has to make a decision, “for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be devoted to the one and despise the other” (Mt 6:24). In order to “despise” wealth, Paul explained, “Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth” (Cl 3:2).

How many times throughout our ministry have we heard someone who said, “I want to make money so I can support the preaching of the gospel.” And in the pursuit of money, the one who had a noble goal lost his direction when he was consumed by wealth. The money consumed his life by consuming his thinking. In order to make the wealth, he had to totally focus on the things of this world. And in focusing on the things of this world, he lost his spiritual dedication to accomplish spiritual things.

A good Nigerian friend once explained to us that there are some cultures in Nigeria whose total goal in life is to make money. Everything that is done is based on the world view that wealth is to be accumulated. And in the pursuit of such, dishonesty and extortion are justified. One does not have to be totally honest with others in order that wealth be acquired. This desire for wealth is manifested in the lives of many of the present religious leaders of the nation. Their religion is often “miracles for money.” They preach a gospel of prosperity in order to exploit the poor into giving their livelihood into their bank coffers. They have deceived the innocent into thinking that they too will be blessed with large houses and vehicles if they would only give more.

The fact is that wealth is simply not a means by which one can spiritually grow. Jesus stood beside a poor widow who contributed her last two copper coins to pay the temple tax (Lk 21:2). At the same moment, the rich gave out of their abundance (Lk 12:4). They gave out of their leftovers. But Jesus said of the poor widow that “she out of her poverty has put in all the livelihood that she had” (Lk 12:4). If by chance the rich who contributed would lose all their wealth, except for their last two copper coins, we wonder if they too would have contributed these last two coins as the poor widow? If they could not, then in Jesus’ testimony of the two contributors, who was the more spiritually minded? Sometimes, opportunities as this manifest the true heart of the rich.

Could some “prosperity preachers” make the statement Peter made to the poor cripple who sat at the gate of the temple called, Beautiful, “Silver and gold I do not have ...” (At 3:6)? We would conclude that wealth has absolutely nothing to do with spiritual growth. If we were to take Jesus’ statement in Matthew 6:24 seriously, then we would be very cautious about the desire to be wealthy. We must never forget the burning statement of Jesus in Matthew 16:26:

For what will it profit a man if he will gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what will a man give in exchange for his soul?

We have our opinion about the religious Pharisees of Jesus’ time. We would say that they were generally not very spiritual people. In Luke 16:14 the Holy Spirit explained why: “And the Pharisees were lovers of money ....”

There are few among us who can be spiritual giants, while at the same time, be wealthy. But there are those who can. Gaius was such a person in the first century. In fact, John prayed of Gaius, “Beloved, I pray that in all things you may prosper and be in health, just as your soul prospers” (3 Jn 2). John could pray that Gaius prosper because Gaius had already cast in his two copper coins for kingdom business. He was supporting evangelists as they went forth to preach the gospel (3 Jn 6-8). We would conclude, therefore, that if one has not dedicated his business to the preaching of the gospel to the world, then he should not expect God to bless his business.

Regardless of where one is in his relationship to the wealth of the world, he must always remember that the One he proclaims as his Savior did not have a fox hole in which to sleep at night (Mt 8:20). From the rich to the poor among us, we must read again of the first converts of the city of Philippi. Paul later wrote of them, “that in great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty, abounded in the riches of their liberality” (2 Co 8:2). The physical poverty of the Philippians did not hinder their spiritual wealth, and thus, they gave of their wealth. It was out of their deep physical poverty that they were freely willing to give to the needs of others.

B. Famous people:

Remember Jesus’ statement in Matthew 5:5: “Blessed are the meek, for they will inherit the earth”? We remember sitting as a young preacher many years ago before an aged preacher of the gospel. The aged preacher, Gus Nichols, told a story that many years before the parents of a very talented son, came with their son for his advice. The parents were members of the Lord's church, and thus asked brother Nichols, "Should we encourage our son to go into the entertainment business because he has such a great voice?" Brother Nichols said, "You are a good Christian family, and it seems that your teenage son is a strong Christian. I suppose he might be able to survive the music/film industry."

The son did not. Brother Nichols said to everyone in the seminar, "I have come to the conclusion that no young Christian can spiritually survive the music/film industry." And he was right. Remember Whitney Houston? She, as many other young people, started singing in church choirs, and then went into the professional music/film industry and lost their way. And in the case of Houston, ended up dead.

If a young person thinks that he or she can grow spiritually by being famous, then they have allowed the Devil to deceive them into believing a great lie. Their youthful ambitions to be somebody famous will often lead to their spiritual doom. One cannot become a spiritual giant by narcissistically focusing on himself or herself every day. It is best to be an opera singer in the shower than a spiritually dead and fallen saint singing before millions. So if a young person would come to us and ask if they should pursue fame in the music/film industry, we would suggest that they bury their ego in Christ and His word and follow the advice of the Holy Spirit: "*Flee also youthful lusts. But pursue righteousness, faith, love and peace with those who call on the Lord out of a pure heart" (2 Tm 2:22).

We know of few in the music/film industry who pursue righteousness, faith, love and peace. One does not become a spiritual giant by looking at oneself in the mirror every day to see if he or she is pretty enough to go on stage. Therefore, follow in the company of those "who call on the Lord out of a pure heart."

C. Multitudes of people:

When God starts something big, He starts small. Adam and Eve were sufficient to populate the earth. Noah and his family were sufficient to repopulate the world. Abraham and Sarah alone would do the job of creating a nation (Gn 12:1-4). And in order to take the gospel into all the world, twelve men were sufficient to begin the process. God's work is manifested in small numbers lest men take credit for His work.

In Judges 7 God wanted to deliver His people from the oppression of the Midianites. Gideon was called to accomplish the deliverance. And as most men who have little confidence in God working through them, Gideon proceeded to assemble a massive army. So 32,000 men were called to battle. But God said to Gideon, "The people who are with you are too many for Me to give the Midianites into their hands" (Jg 7:2). They were too many "lest Israel exalt themselves against Me, saying, 'My own hand has saved me'" (Jg 7:2). When God wants the glory, men should back off from taking ownership of something He has done or is doing through them. God is working through the church of His Son's people. The church, therefore, should be very careful about doing anything by which we as the church seek to glorify ourselves. God does not receive the glory when the people He uses to glorify Himself steal the glory for themselves. We are to do things in the name of Christ, not the name of the church (Cl 3:17).

So God commanded Gideon to say to the men, "Whoever is fearful and afraid, let him return and depart early from Mount Gilead" (Jg 7:3). And a wave of 22,000 men headed home. Only 10,000 remained. But "the Lord said to Gideon, 'The people are still too many'" (Jg 7:4). Then the Lord told Gideon to take the men to a river to test whether some would lap the water as dogs or bow down and cuff their hand to drink from their hand. At the end of the test, Gideon ended up with only 300 men. Then God told Gideon, "Arise, get down to the army [of the Midianites], for I have delivered it into your hand" (Jg 7:9). And you know the rest of the story. With only 300 men, God delivered a whole army into the hands of Israel. When God goes to work for you, do not expect failure.

"*What will we then say to these things? If God is for us, who can be against us?" (Rm 8:31). We do not need a great number of people to accomplish in our lives that which God expects us to do as a group of disciples. It is as what Paul stated, "*But in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him who loved us" (Rm 8:37). A handful of spiritual giants can accomplish greater things than a church house full of lukewarm "pew packers."

When faith-driven people come together to accomplish the will of God, nothing will be withheld from them (See Gn 11:6). Christians must have a positive mental attitude about what they can do both individually and as a group. They must be as positive as the spiritual giant who wrote from a prison cell, "I can do all things through Him who strengthens me" (Ph 4:13). When Christ-strengthened people determine to serve the Lord, nothing less than great things will be the end result of their labors. We must not, therefore, deceive ourselves into thinking that we need a great host of people to accomplish any task that is set before us. A few Spirit-filled people will do. In fact, one spiritual giant trusts in the God who can do “exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that works in us” (Ep 3:20). We must just read our Bibles about the life of Paul, and then proceed to Hebrews 11, in order to survey the spiritual giants of the Old Testament who did unimaginable things because of their faith. We can read about the spiritual giants in Hebrews 11, but the fact is that we can be the same.

D. Educated people:

Some societies move into glorifying an elite of educated people who must lead the way in all things. This is especially a problem in the realm of our faith. For example, some church organizations do not consider something “intellectual” or truly valid unless a proclamation comes forth from their fellowship of Bible college professors. We know we are in trouble when we allow the educated professionals among us to be the authoritative interpreters of the word of God.

Secular education is great, and God can use those who are educated in the disciplines of the world. But we must not lead ourselves to believe that education grows the church. In fact, the church grew the fastest in history when it had the least number of educated members. Even among the leaders of the disciples, the world perceived the following of them: “Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were uneducated and ordinary men, they marveled” (At 4:13).

The religious leadership of Jerusalem marveled at the wisdom and teaching of Peter and John. They did not marvel because the two apostles had diplomas and degrees on which their names were written. They marveled in the fact that these two men knew Jesus and the word of God they were speaking to the people. Their education was not in the disciplines of scholarship and universities of this world. It was in Jesus and the message of the gospel.

In reference to educated men, we must remember a truth about which Paul wrote. He reminded the puffed up Corinthians “that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called” (1 Co 1:26). Because men often puff themselves up with their education, he continued,

But God has chosen the foolish things of the world to shame the wise. And God has chosen the weak things of the world to shame the things that are mighty (1 Co 1:27).

“For since in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom did not know God, it pleased God through the foolishness of preaching” the gospel to save the lost (1 Co

1:21). For this reason, Paul “determined not to know anything among you [Corinthians] except Jesus Christ and Him crucified” (1 Co 2:2).

We often puff ourselves up with our clergy who hang degrees on their office walls in order to set themselves apart from those who know only their Bibles. In fact, this practice has become so acute among some disciples that one cannot preach for some groups of disciples unless he has a Master’s Degree or Doctorate. We feel that we have digressed from the simplicity of the gospel when we seek to validate our status among those of the world by our “degreed” preachers. The work of preaching the gospel is not in the number of diplomas and degrees one can hang on his office wall. It depends on the degree one knows the word of God. After all, it was God Himself who called some people “more noble minded” because they simply studied their Bibles (At 17:11). We will take a noble-minded Bible student in the bush any day over a clergyman who knows only theology, but no Bible.

If one feels that he must have a diploma or degree in Bible in order to preach the gospel, then he has fallen for the deception of trying to be validated by diplomas and degrees, and not by how well he knows the Scriptures. If one feels that he has no respect from the people because he has no Bible diploma or degree, then it is not he who has the problem. It is the people who have fallen from a respect for one who knows his Bible. Every noble-minded Bible preacher must never forget what Paul wrote in 2 Timothy 4:3.

For the time will come when they will not endure sound teaching. But to suit their itching ears, they will surround themselves with teachers who will agree with their own desires.

It is the people who seek the feel-good preachers who preach feel-good lessons. When the people fall from their love of the word of God, they will not seek Bible preachers. They will seek speakers who make them feel good in their apostate state of lukewarmness.

We simply must never forget that the church grew the fastest when there were only uneducated and common people leading it who knew only Jesus and His word.

E. Misdirected spiritual growth:

This is a sensitive subject. And the fact that it is sensitive magnifies the problem itself. We have convinced ourselves that church ownership of a building is somehow conducive to the spiritual growth of the church.

Throughout the years we have been sent numerous pictures of incomplete church buildings. The ones who send the pictures feel that they are growing because they are laying bricks upon one another. And if we would only help them financially to complete the brick stacking, then they would be validated as a strong “church” in the community. But nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, the more we feel that a physical building produces the spiritual growth of the church, the less it does when the building is completed.

The day when we turned from focussing on one another in order to take pride in brick and bamboo was the day we started taking our minds off that which produces true spiritual growth. We do not forget the psychological influence a church building has over the people. If we ignore this influence in leading the family of God to greater spiritual levels, we will always be leading with a crippled vision to restore fully the people’s focus on Jesus and one another. When men started referring to the “church” as the building, then we knew that our focus on brick and bamboo was redirected from the people as the church to bricks and bamboo.

As we journey through some thoughts on this subject, those who are convinced that a purpose-built facility for the purpose of worship is absolutely necessary to produce spiritual growth, will most certainly accuse us of being against the church owning its own buildings. But again, the accusation is evidence of the fallacy we have led ourselves to believe. The greater the accusations, combined with the obsession to have a “church building,” the greater the magnitude of the problem.

We must remember that Jesus established the context for this discussion by saying, “But the hour is coming and now is when the true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeks such to worship Him” (Jn 4:23). This truth was made on the foundation of what Jesus previously said to the Samaritan woman who stated, “Our fathers worshiped on this mountain, and You say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship” (Jn 4:20). But she was thinking in her past and present context. She was thinking carnally by trying to place the worship of the Samaritans on “this mountain” and “the place” of the worship of the Jews in Jerusalem. But now focus on Jesus’ answer. “Woman, believe Me, the hour is coming when you will neither on this mountain nor in Jerusalem worship the Father” (Jn 4:21).

What Jesus was saying is that there would never again be a place of worship for the true worshipers of God. True worshipers of God worship wherever they are and whenever they can. There is no such thing as “a place of worship” for Christians. When we are in discussions concerning the worship of the disciples of Jesus, “sanctuaries” and “temples” have no relevance. Though Christians have the right to build facilities for printing, Bible classes, schools and benevolence, building facilities does not build the church spiritually. If we attach spiritual growth to brick and mortar, then we are in trouble.

We must keep in mind that the body of Christ was born out of an era when there was no such thing as a “church building.” In fact, church buildings did not exist in the history of the church until Emperor Constantine of Rome sought to bring Christianity into conformity with the pagan religions of the Roman Empire. Since the pagan religions had their temples, then he thought the Christians should also have their “temples.” So in A.D. 323 he requisitioned the building of the first church building for the church. And from that time, the craze to have our own church building was started and perpetuated throughout history. The craze is so intense today that people do not consider a group of disciples to be a true established church unless they have their own church building. We have found that in some places this obsession has so misguided the people, that the people are left without copies of the Bible, while at the same time they are buying bricks and mortar to build a church building. We would build our buildings, but we would first make sure everyone has a copy of the Bible before we lay the first brick.

In the first three hundred years of the existence of the body of Christ, the function of the body was not confined to either a place or building. And yet, these were the times in which the church grew the fastest in history because it was growing spiritually. Therefore, we must dispense with this notion that church buildings cause spiritual growth. Such thinking is totally contrary to what the Holy Spirit said in the following statement:

... from whom the whole body being fitted and held together by what every joint supplies, according to the effective working of each part, causes growth of the body to the edifying of itself in love (Ep 4:16).

When we consider the worship of the children of God, we must not forget that worship is “neither here nor there.” The problem with establishing a “place of worship,” is that when we are in another place we feel that we are not in the right place of worship. Jesus explained to the Samaritan woman that there was a paradigm shift coming. And it came that “in every place” a child of God can worship. It seems that in these days religious leaders are trying to return to the old paradigm from which Jesus delivered the true worshipers of God.

The Christian’s worship is not confined to a location or restricted to specific times. We must keep in mind that the more we seek to have a church building in order to cause the growth of the church, the less the growth is when we get one. The church of the West has surrounded itself with some of the most beautiful buildings in the world. And yet, the church of the West is declining in members on an annual basis. If having a church building produces spiritual growth, then the Western church has certainly failed spiritually. We have seen too many church buildings being sold to be warehouses or for demolition because those who were seated in them had confined their religiosity to a tomb of four walls. We must not be detoured by Satan into believing that his detours are necessary for spiritual growth.

Chapter 2

ESSENTIALS FOR SPIRITUAL GROWTH

The more we appreciate being a disciple of Jesus, the more we seek to grow closer to Him. And the more we grow closer to Jesus, the more we grow spiritually. In fact, we are often frustrated with ourselves because we sometimes do not see ourselves growing as we think we should. This frustration is good because from our frustration we spur ourselves on to grow. We alert ourselves to dig deep into our hearts in order to find those obstacles we harbor that hinder our spiritual growth. While we are digging, we must follow certain guidelines. Following these guidelines will help us to dig ourselves out of the hole of spiritual stagnation and lukewarmness.

A. Spiritual growth through commitment:

It is a well-known truth that “our strength is shown in what we stand for and our weakness in what we fall for.” It is as someone said, “Giving God less than our whole lives is robbery.” There is a cost to discipleship. The cost is the totality of our lives. There is no such thing as “holding back” when we define what it takes to be a disciple of Jesus. If there is “holding back,” then there will always be a plateau to our spiritual growth.

“Seek-first-the-kingdom-of-God-and-His-righteousness” is not a statement that is to be relegated to a Sunday morning “hour of worship” (Mt 6:33). It is a statement that is based on the definition of what Jesus explained was the foundation for all spiritual growth: “You will love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind” (Mt 22:37). It is as someone said, “A Christian should be a walking sermon, a breathing prayer, a living poem, a visible spirit, and a human candle.” Less is not good enough when discussing the life of a disciple of Jesus.

The commitment to spiritual growth that Jesus demands is defined in one statement: “If anyone will come after Me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow Me” (Lk 9:23). The word “cross” in this statement was more than a metaphor. There was a literal cross involved in being a disciple of Jesus in the first century. The cross was a means by which Rome executed criminals and insurrectionists. The cross meant bearing the burden of a literal cross to one’s own crucifixion. And when Jesus was bearing His own cross to His own crucifixion, we are sure that this statement of Jesus was burned into the minds of the disciples who looked on in fear. It could be that they too would be burdened with their own crosses as they were crucified as insurrectionists of the Roman Empire. They surely remembered also the statement of Jesus, “And whoever does not bear his own cross and come after Me, cannot be My disciple” (Lk 14:27).

The commitment that these statements of Jesus taught and lived should be the foundation upon which all of us must build our faithfulness to Him. When contemplating the magnitude of all that God has done and will do for us, Paul wrote in bold print,

Therefore, I urge you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service (Rm 12:1).

It is “reasonable service” because when we realize the grace of the cross by which we are saved, we should be driven to our knees in appreciation. It is only reasonable that we sacrifice the totality of our lives for Him who sacrificed all for us. Therefore, it is only reasonable to refrain from being “conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind ...” (Rm 12:2). As Jesus led by an example of the crucified life before His disciples, so Paul did the same in his life. It is for this reason that Paul could never have been speaking wistful words in the following statement:

I have been crucified with Christ. And it is no longer I who live, but Christ lives in me. And the life that I now live in the flesh I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me (Gl 2:20).*

This explains the totality of the committed life. Anything less, as previously stated, is simply spiritual robbery. Discipleship calls for the maximum that we can give, not minimums by which we believe we can “get by.” There is no joy of just admiring others swim in the deep water of faith, while we are wading around in shallow water. One cannot experience the joy of being a totally committed disciple of Jesus unless he launches out into the deep. No true disciple of Jesus will be known for being such by circumstantial evidence.

(When I was six or seven years old, I desired to learn how to swim. Fortunately, I had an older brother who could lift me above his head. So into the deep water he kept throwing me, while all the time saying, “Swim or drown.” The fact that I am writing these words bears testimony to the fact that I learned how to swim very quickly. The lesson is that we must not complain to God for throwing us into deep water situations where we must learn to grow in faith, or drown for lack of commitment.)

Now some fear and run when they hear phrases such as presenting our lives as “living sacrifices” or “crucified with Christ.” These are statements of total commitment to Jesus. Here is the problem. Those who have an institutional concept of religion confine their faith to a Sunday morning churchianity between an “opening” and “closing” prayer. They are thus fearful about taking their faith outside the “hour of worship,” lest they must assume greater responsibilities for living the committed life. Those who have hired their religiosity to be done for them by the support of a preacher have supposed that they have relieved themselves of any responsibilities outside the “hour of worship.” They are fearful of living the totally committed life of a disciple lest they must behave on the job as they behave in the “church house” on Sunday morning. Some feel that their business outside the church house is their own, while the “work of the church” belongs to the clergy whom we have supported to tend to our religious affairs.

Now we must be honest with ourselves. Do we really believe that Jesus sacrificed heaven and died on a cross just to purchase us with His blood for “an hour of worship” once a week? Total commitment means that Sunday morning to Sunday morning seven days later belong to Jesus. He bought our lives, not an “hour of worship” on Sunday morning. Our Monday morning on the job is just as important as Sunday morning. The life of the totally commitment member is not taken off the altar of sacrifice with a “closing prayer.” We cannot be crucified with Christ during a Sunday morning ritual, and then, “uncrucify” ourselves until the next “hour of worship.” Such is only senseless religiosity that we have created after our own desires. We then create a god in our minds whom we believe is satisfied with such “church house Christianity.”

Total commitment means using our business for God. It means using our jobs for God. It means we are never “off duty” when it comes to being a disciple. Total commitment means contributing seven days a week. Yes, it can mean that one must give his last two copper coins before the collection plate is passed on Sunday morning. If we pass up the crippled man on the steps of the church house on our way to worship, and hold back our last two copper coins so we can perform a legal act of worship during the “hour of worship,” what spiritual humbugs we are.

B. Spiritual growth through work:

Are we saved by good words? Certainly not! But are we saved without good works? Certainly not!

For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared before that we should walk in them (Ep 2:10).*

Spiritual growth in discipleship means hands-on ministry. There will be no hands without callouses in heaven. All spectators will be in the other place. Someone once said, “Some people are bent with work, others are crooked trying to avoid it.” There is no spiritual growth without personal involvement in work for the Lord. Therefore, the disciple who wants to find work for Jesus, will find it. But those who do not want to work for the Lord, will find it easier to find an excuse.

It is simply a principle of character development that one must work for that in which he believes. There are no sideline cheering crowds in the church. Everyone is in the ministry. Almost a century ago some unknown poet wrote:

Are you an active member,
The kind that would be missed,
Or are you just contented,
that your name is on the list?
Do you take an active part,
To help the church along,
Or are you satisfied to be,
The kind that “just belongs?”

Think this over, sister, brother,
Are you right or are you wrong?
Are you an active member?
Or do you just belong?

We need to remember that at the judgment Jesus will not be looking for Bible diplomas, trophies, or medals of honor. He will be looking for scars, callouses and bruises. He will be rewarding those who experienced the joy of “faith working through love” (Gl 5:6). He will be rewarding those who obeyed the exhortation of James: “But be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving yourselves” (Js 1:22). When we do His will, then we can be assured that our work is not in vain (1 Co 15:10). Therefore, if we would reap His reward, and we would seek to grow spiritually, then we need to get to work. Idleness produces no spiritual growth. Reward is given only to those who come from the harvest fields.

Work produces spiritual growth. But we sometimes do not mean what we sing, as someone once wrote. We sing “I am thine, Oh Lord,” when really what we mean is “I resign, Oh Lord.” We will sing, “Have thine own way, Lord,” when really we mean, “Have thine own way, Lord, just not today.” And we will sing, “Nearer my God to thee,” when really we are thinking, “Nearer the ball game I would be.” And then we sing, “Take my life and let it be, consecrated Lord to thee,” but we are really thinking, “Take my Sundays and let that be, all my service Lord to thee.” And finally, we sing, “Jesus Savior pilot me,” but what we really mean is, “Jesus Savior stop this preacher preaching to me.” Yes, we sing “standing on the promises,” when all we are doing is sittin’ on the premises.

(We once hired a maid to work once a week in the house when my wife was very busy with the ministry of the work. After a short time, the maid observed the physical work that I was doing in the development of the grounds of the AIM campus. She commented to my wife, “Did your husband grow up on a farm?” She saw in my physical work the spirit of work that only farmers know. I had grown up on a farm, and my father did not have a time to check in and out of work. We worked from early in the morning to the time when the sun had long set over the western horizon, fourteen to sixteen hours a day. Farmers learn how to work. And in order to grow spiritually, we must learn how to work. And the only way to learn how to work is to get to work. Work is not learned in a classroom seminar on work.

C. Spiritual growth through fasting:

One characteristic by which Jesus said His disciples would be known runs almost counter to Western culture. Matthew recorded this counterculture identity of the disciples of Jesus:

Then the disciples of John came to Him, saying, “Why do we and the Pharisees fast, but Your disciples do not fast?” And Jesus said to them, “Can the attendants of the bridegroom mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? But the days will come when the bridegroom will be taken from them, and then they will fast (Mt 9:14,15).

Those days have come, but there is still little fasting among the disciples of Jesus. Those who live the affluent life find it difficult to fast since their lives are often surrounded with food and eating. Numerous television programs have refined eating to the point that food has almost become the god of the affluent. The marketing of food is so prevalent in our culture that it is almost inconceivable that one would seek times when he would deprive himself of food for spiritual reasons. It may be that the low level of spirituality is signalled by the high volume of food we consume. A society that suffers from obesity is a society that suffers from a lack of spirituality.

The spiritual hunger of those who originally followed Jesus is inspiring. On one occasion, the disciples were so hungry for Jesus that they forgot about eating.

Then Jesus called His disciples to Him, and said, “I have compassion on the multitude because they have continued with Me now three days and have nothing to eat” (Mt 15:32).

It seems that our Christian behavior today is somewhat different. When we have a special camp or seminar for Bible study, we even judge the success of the event by the quality and abundance of food we have consumed. Emphasis seems to be more on the food, than on the spiritual food of the word of God. In fact, if a three-day Bible teaching session were announced, and it was stated that there would be no food served, we doubt if anyone would show up for the seminar. But in the case of the multitudes who followed Jesus, they simply forgot about food because they were so obsessed with His teaching. And if one were following John the Baptist during his ministry, then one would fast. Fasting was a part of the religious culture of the first century.

We are always asked how one should fast. To ask the question is to betray our lack of fasting. Has fasting disappeared so far from our behavior as disciples that we have simply forgotten how to fast? There is no legal system for fasting. If there were, then fasting would not accomplish its purpose for spiritual growth. The Pharisees legally fasted twice a week. And so, the disciples came to Jesus and asked Him about the legalities of fasting. In response to their questions, Jesus said, “But you, when you fast, anoint your head and wash your face, so that you do not appear to men to be fasting ...” (Mt 6:17,18). If one wants to know how to fast, then that is about all he needs to know about fasting. Fasting is about fasting, not about establishing some legal system by which one would fast.

One can abstain from anything of this world that has dominance over our lusts. Some may need to fast from certain foods that they crave. Generally, fasting is from all foods for a period of time, which time is nowhere designated in the Bible. Throughout the Bible, fasting is simply the natural thing to do when one seeks to focus totally on spiritual things. And the fact that we do not fast betrays the fact that we are not focusing on spiritual things as we should. In fact, it could be said that one will always be frustrated with his spiritual growth until he starts fasting. It is only in the midst of an extended fast that one begins to understand the reason for fasting. When we start obsessing over spiritual food, instead of carnal food, then we are on our way to great spiritual growth.

D. Spiritual growth through prayer:

When one stops praying, he has really stopped believing. We must always keep in mind that nothing lies outside the power of prayer except that which lies outside the will of God for our lives. Jesus promised, “... whatever things you desire, when you pray, believe that you receive them and you will have them” (Mk 11:24). “Ask, and it will be given to you. Seek, and you will find. Knock, and it will be opened to you” (Mt 7:7). It is for this reason that we “pray without ceasing” (1 Th 5:17). And it was for this reason that Paul wanted “men to pray in every place” (1 Tm 2:8).

Someone once said, “Desire is the engine of destiny, but the engineer is prayer.” We must never forget that “the prayer of a righteous man accomplishes much” (Js 5:16). We are convinced that Epaphras was a disciple who truly believed in the power of prayer. When he was with Paul in a Roman prison, Paul wrote back to his home town, and reminded the Colossian disciples that Epaphras was “always laboring fervently for you in prayers” (Cl 4:12).

The fervent manner of our prayer is indicated by our fasting. When Paul and Barnabas designated elders in every city of Lystra, Iconium and Antioch, they, with all the brethren “prayed with fasting” (At 14:23). Paul instructed husbands and wives concerning times when they could give themselves to fasting and prayer (1 Co 7:5). When fasting is connected with prayer, great things will begin to happen in reference to our spiritual growth.

The intensity of our prayers is manifested through fasting. Prayer without fasting often becomes habitual, and soon empty. Jesus explained to the disciples that some things just do not happen without “prayer and fasting” (Mt 17:21). Anna was known for serving God “with fastings and prayers night and day” (Lk 2:37). Fasting and prayer is a ministry that is often neglected, but one that brings awesome results in the life of a disciple.

Christians who are struggling to grow spiritually are never satisfied with their prayer life. One way to deal with this frustration is to add fasting to our prayers. Spiritually minded people always know that they need to spend more time in talking with the Father. But our minds are often distracted from our concentration on that for which we need to pray. We are distracted by a heavy schedule of activity. We are distracted by a host of things that Satan would use to keep us from talking to our Father. This is when the example of Jesus should come into action in our lives. “Now it came to pass in those days that He went out into a mountain to pray. And He continued all night in prayer to God” (Lk 6:12).

It was certainly the circumstances surrounding Jesus at this time in His ministry that hindered His prayers. His only escape was a mountain, a place where there were no people. And in order to clear our minds from pressing job circumstances, the demands of a business, or simply people, we must look for a mountain. If we cannot find a mountain, then we must find a desert or forest or beach, some place where we are alone with God. When our prayer life begins to grow, then we know that we are spiritually growing. We must keep in mind that fasting focuses our prayers. Our spiritual growth is measured by our fasting and prayer life. Those who realize this are always conscious about their time that they spend in fasting and prayer.

E. Spiritual growth through evangelism:

Remember the Ephesian Christians who were active in their business with themselves (See Rv 2:2)? They were busy with themselves, and thus had become introverted in their focus. Jesus pronounced the judgment that they had left their “first love” (Rv 2:4). That first love was manifested in the evangelistic activity at the beginning of their Christian journey (See At 19). So Jesus called on them to “remember from where you have fallen, and repent and do the first works ...” (Rv 2:5).

Someone wisely wrote, “When a church is chiefly concerned with its own preservation, it has ordered its tombstone.” When the leaders submit to the whims of those who state, “I get nothing out of the worship,” then we know that we are in trouble. Introverted disciples complain about not getting something. Spiritual disciples are concerned about not putting enough in. Christianity is not about what we get, but what we give. This mental attitude must be manifested in everything that defines who we are as disciples of Jesus.

We know the mandates: “... disciple all the nations” (Mt 28:19). “Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature” (Mk 16:15). But in knowing we must not forget doing. We must learn how to forget ourselves in reaching out to others. James’ words would be appropriate here. “But be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving yourselves” (Js 1:22). If one claims to be a disciple of Jesus, and believes the great commission of Jesus, but is not doing the commission, then he has deceived himself into thinking that he is a disciple of the One who gave the commission.

God “has committed to us the word of reconciliation” (2 Co 5:19). If a soul is lost to whom we could have preached the word of reconciliation, then on whose shoulders will that lost soul rest? (See Ez 3:18,19). “We are ambassadors for Christ,” and thus, if we are not taking the word of the One who sent us into all the world, then we are masquerading ourselves as His ambassadors. What good is an ambassador who holds up in his mission station without telling the nation in which he lives that he represents the God of heaven?

Spiritual growth is the serendipity of living for others. The more we serve the needs of others, the more we service our spiritual growth. There is simply no other way to grow spiritually as a disciple of Jesus than to give oneself to others.

F. Spiritual growth through sacrifice:

Remember the words of the old song,

All to Jesus I surrender,
All to Him I freely give.

I will ever love and trust Him,
In His presence daily live.

All to Jesus I surrender,
Humbly at His feet I bow.
Worldly pleasures all forsaken,
Take me Jesus, take me now.

All to Jesus I surrender,
Lord, I give myself to thee.
Fill me with Thy love and power,
Let Thy blessing fall on me.

We remember the song, but when was the last time the song came from our lips and lives? Spiritual growth as a disciple of Jesus means to be willing to work and give, spend and be spent for Jesus. We must remember that the first and great commandment of the law is to “love the Lord your God with all” our heart, soul and mind (Mt 22:36-38).

There is no discipleship without sacrifice (Lk 9:23). This is true since the nature of sacrifice produces spiritual connectivity with Jesus. He was all about sacrifice. And the closer we move to truly making sacrifices for Him, the closer we move to His character. This was illustrated in the old preacher’s story about the hen and the hog. The hen bragged about giving eggs every day to feed the master. Not a day went by when she did not brag to the hog about her sacrifice of eggs for the master. But the hog replied to the hen, “What may be a trivial sacrifice for you is a lifetime commitment for me.”

Therefore, “let each one give according as he purposes in his heart, not grudgingly or under compulsion, for God loves a cheerful giver” (2 Co 9:7). It is not that we give until it hurts. Disciples give until it feels good. If we seek God’s love, then sacrificial giving gets His attention. The word “sacrifice” in our giving reveals that the giving truly originated from our hearts. There need be no heart in legal giving. But when our giving becomes sacrificial, then our spirituality is revealed. It is then that we truly love because He truly loved us by giving His Son (Jn 3:16; 1 Jn 4:19).

Chapter 3

MANDATED STRENGTH

Speaking of taking ownership of one’s spiritual strength and growth, here is a command of the Holy Spirit: “... be strong in the Lord and in the power of

His might” (Ep 6:10). That is not a suggestion. And again He commanded, “... stand firm and hold the traditions that you were taught ...” (2 Th 2:15). These statements do not seem like the Holy Spirit is doing the standing, but is holding the individual disciple responsible for being faithful to Jesus. When one wants to shift his ownership of faithfulness to the Holy Spirit, or someone else, then we would suggest that that person read again what the Spirit mandates. Spiritual growth can only be an individual process. It is not something the Holy Spirit will do for us. Others may encourage and exhort us, but it is the individual who must look deep inside and make a decision to grow. If we do not grow, we cannot blame others or the Holy Spirit if we fail.

In reference to the Ephesian disciples, it was not that they were in a religiously soft environment. On the contrary, they lived among some of the most hostile people of the world who were set against Christianity. The temple of Diana (Artemis) was one of the most glorious pagan temples of the ancient world. The worshippers were so fanatical about their religion and temple that they shouted out “Great is Artemis of the Ephesians” for two hours when just one Christian was seeking to address the people (At 19:28). Selling idols was a religious business that was associated with the temple (At 19:24,25). And when this business was endangered by the preaching of the gospel, the businessmen of Ephesus rose up against Christianity.

Opposition against Christianity in Ephesus did not cease with the great conversion that took place when Paul initially visited the city (At 19:1-20). On the contrary, the letter of Ephesians was written several years after the mass conversion in order to encourage the Ephesians to be strong in the midst of a religious environment that was truly hostile to Christianity (Ep 6:10). On his last mission journey through the area, Paul encouraged the presbyters of Ephesus and the surrounding cities to “take heed” (At 20:28). They were headed into the stormy clouds of the state persecution of the Roman Empire. By the time of Jesus’ special messages to the Christians in Ephesus in Revelation 2, it seems that the disciples had been intimidated into leaving their first love of reaching out to the lost (Rv 2:2). They had succumbed to the hostile religious culture in which they lived, and thus, retreated into themselves. They continued with works among themselves (Rv 2:2). They made sure that they were doctrinally correct (Rv 2:2). They tested those who came to them, claiming that they were apostles sent out by the church. They persevered and were patient (Rv 2:3). But still, they had lost their first love by retreating into themselves. So Jesus admonished this intimidated family of disciples, “Therefore, remember from where you have fallen, and repent and do the first works” (Rv 2:5).

Now we understand why the Holy Spirit in Eph- esians 6:10-13 admonished the Christians in Ephesus to “be strong in the Lord” (Ep 6:10). The Spirit knew what was coming. He knew they were headed for the spiritual state of apostasy by the time of Jesus’ message of Revelation 2:1-7. When we study the context of Ephesians 6:10-13, therefore, we know what one must do in order to guard himself from losing his first love. The mandate of the Spirit is to (1) be spiritually strong, and (2) put on the armor of God in order to stand against the forces of wickedness.

In his book, The Amateur Emigrant, Robert Louis Stevenson wrote,

You cannot run away from a weakness; you must sometimes fight it or perish; and if that be so, then why not now and where you stand?

When the Holy Spirit, through the hand of Paul, wrote the Ephesian letter, He knew where the Ephesian disciples were headed. They lived in a metropolitan area of over a quarter million people. The society of such a large city was filled with an intimidating religious culture of idol worshippers. It takes little deductive thought to realize that these disciples were headed for trouble. So the context of Ephesians 6 was to spiritually “muscle them up” for what was coming.

A weak sheep always follows the flock. And thus, in Acts 20 Paul gave a special message to the leadership of the sheep of God in order that they take heed to their own spirituality. The sheep would stand or fall on the basis of their spiritual leadership. When we read Revelation 2:1-7, we know that the Ephesian leadership did not listen well to Paul’s exhortation in Acts 20, or what he later wrote in Ephesians 6. So we would admonish all those who would presume to lead the sheep. We must listen up, for we will either lead the sheep to slaughter or to glory. We will lead them to retain their first love, or lead them in their fall. It all depends on our spiritual leadership.

A weak Christian is on the verge of falling. It only takes a little opposition or persecution to offer the weak the opportunity to fall. In order to prevent the fall of the weak, the strong have a special responsibility. They must “receive him who is weak in the faith” (Rm 14:1).

Brethren, if a man is overtaken in any trespass, you who are spiritual restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness, considering yourself lest you also be tempted (Gl 6:1).

The strong have the responsibility of watching out for themselves, lest they present a stumbling block over which the weak brethren might fall. Paul admonished the strong, “But take heed lest somehow this freedom of ours becomes a stumbling block to those who are weak” (1 Co 8:9). To the strong, therefore, the Spirit admonishes that they “comfort the fainthearted. Support the weak” (1 Th 5:14).

We can only imagine what it was like for Joshua to stand before a nation of over three million people and deliver the following message of God to Joshua:

Only be strong and very courageous so that you may observe to do according to all the law that Moses My servant commanded you (Ja 1:7).

Without all the written word of God that we have today in the Bible, especially our knowledge of the crucified Son of God, Abraham remained faithful to the call of God. Paul said of him, “He did not waver at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God” (Rm 4:20). What great faith Abraham had in the absence of the evidence we have today. His faithfulness renders all our complaints foolishness. His steadfastness to maintain his calling nullifies all our excuses. His stand makes senseless our fall.

A mother’s little daughter cried out in the middle of the night. The mother came running to the bedside of the daughter and found the daughter lying on the floor. The mother responded to the tears of her daughter, “Susie, what is wrong.” Through her tears, Susie sobbed, “I fell out of bed. I guess I stayed too close to where I got in.” Sometimes when one is a “weak” Christian, he has actually stayed too close to where he came into Christ. When there is no spiritual growth, we remain weak, and thus we are without excuse before God if we fall out. We must remember that there is no final level to spiritual growth that we must reach in this life. We must simply continue to grow spiritually.

Because of the faith of Abraham, and others like him (See Hb 11), Paul felt no inhibitions about demanding of others, “You therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus” (2 Tm 2:1). And to some wavering disciples in Corinth, Paul concluded, “Stand fast in the faith. Behave like men. Be strong” (1 Co 16:13). If any of the disciples in Corinth stumbled over unbelief, then they would have no excuse in judgment, for they would be standing beside such faithfuls as Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and a host of others who had no knowledge of Jesus Christ, but remained faithful.

David Livingstone (1813 - 1873) was a doctor and missionary who journeyed in Africa for sixteen years. He married a wife who did not fall in love with Africa, so she took their children and returned to England. After sixteen years in Africa, Livingstone also returned to England to write a book. David Livingstone, the man about whom no African has ever spoken a harsh word, became famous for his dedication to Africa and his struggle against the slave trade. He stayed his course, and as a result, monuments were made and books were written about his dedication to the continent that he so loved. After his death, the following inscription was written of him:

He needs no epitaph to guard a name,
Which men shall prize,
while his worthy work is known.
He lived and died for good – be that his fame.
Let marble crumble: this is Living - Stone.

Chapter 4

ARMOR UP FOR BATTLE

It is in verse 13 of the Ephesian 6 context that Paul begins with a flow of metaphors that explains things one must do to protect oneself spiritually from the religious environment in which he lives. Since we must engage the hostility of “the world forces of darkness of this age, against spiritual hosts of wickedness in high places,” we must take up the whole armor of God (Ep 6:12). If any part of the armor is left off as we suit up for battle, then there is a point of vulnerability in our soul for the attack of the enemy. So the exhortation is “take up the whole armor of God so that you may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand” (Ep

6:13). The point is that if we do not put on the whole armor, we will fall.

The Holy Spirit certainly knew that evil days were coming in the lives of the Ephesians. The days would be so evil that the Ephesian disciples would be intimidated into leaving their first love. Their loss would be so great that Jesus would later send a personal message to them to remember from where they were fallen, “and repent and do the first works” (Rv 2:5). Therefore, the essentials that are necessary in order not to fall to the enemy of all righteousness is to armor up with the following:

A. Gird oneself with the truth.

There is no article before the word “truth” in the Greek text in Ephesians 6:14. Emphasis, therefore, would be on a behavior of life as opposed to a knowledge of an outline of facts on “church doctrine.” John explains that “... if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship with one another ....” (1 Jn 1:7). John expands on this meaning in 2 John 4. “I rejoiced greatly that I found your children walking in truth.” Walking in truth certainly means knowing the word of God, but also, “walking” means behaving. There is no true knowledge of the truth unless one is walking it. And one’s walk is not in the right direction unless he has a knowledge of the word of God.

B. Put on the breastplate of righteousness.

The breastplate of the armor served to protect the vital organs of the soldier. Righteousness would mean living right before God. The best way to protect one’s self from falling is to live the life of a disciple. Sitting in endless assemblies listening to preaching and teaching is just not good enough. The fact that assemblies often become less in the number of those who attend lies in the fact that churches have developed an assemblyology theology. When preachers who know little Bible see the assembly diminishing, then they need to heed the meaning of the statement that was once said to us by a frustrated member, “We need more Bible teachers and less preachers.”

Assemblyology is the teaching that faithfulness is determined by how regular one attends the assemblies of the saints. But Christianity is not simply about assemblies. It is about living the life of Christ in a relationship with one another on a daily basis. When one is living the life of righteousness, he protects himself from the wiles of the devil. If he gives the presentation of being a saint in an assembly, but lives like the devil after the “closing prayer,” then he is an assemblyologist waiting for an opportunity to fall. But if one shows up at the assembly of the saints because he is walking in the light, then he is manifesting his desire to be with those who are also walking in the light. Those who do not show up at the assembly of the soldiers have revealed their lack of commitment to the army of God.

Righteousness means ministry. We must not lead ourselves to believe that assembly will take the place of ministry. If there is no ministry in our lives, then showing up at an assembly of those who also have no ministry in their lives, is like meeting with the dead in a casket, ready for burial. We are too often like the lukewarm Laodiceans who were Christian in name only. And sadly, they did not know that they were dead. Jesus said of the Laodiceans: “But you do not know that you are wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked” (Rv 3:17). The problem with the religious who are spiritually dead is that they usually do not recognize that they are dead. Sometimes we can be as the Christians in Sardis, “that you have a name that you live, but you are dead” (Rv 3:1). What makes us alive is right living. And right living means we are busy in ministry for others.

C. Shod one’s feet with the gospel.

When engaging the enemy, the feet must be protected. The feet must stand on firm ground in order that the enemy be engaged with strength. And in the spiritual realm, it is the historical fact of the death of Jesus on the cross and His resurrection for our hope that provides the firm ground upon which our feet can stand. Paul reminded the Corinthians, “I declare to you the gospel which I preached to you, which also you received and in which you stand” (1 Co 15:1). Those who have obeyed the gospel can have confidence in the fact that their feet stand firm on the truth of the gospel. Those who have declared their own salvation before God, without obedience to the gospel, cannot have this confidence. The obedient have a good conscience before God because of their obedience through baptism of the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus (See Rm 6:3-6).

When one follows the example of Jesus by going to the water to be baptized in order to fulfill all righteousness, then he can have a good conscience before God (See Mt 3:13-17). This is exactly what Peter meant when many years after the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, he wrote the following:

The like figure whereunto even baptism does also now save us—not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the appeal of a good conscience to God—through the resurrection of Jesus Christ (1 Pt 3:21).

If one follows the good news of Jesus to the cross and to the tomb of immersion for remission of sins (At 2:38), then he can be assured of his salvation in resurrection from the grave of water, after having all his sins washed away (At 22:16). This is shodding one’s feet with the gospel. If one does not obey the gospel (2 Th 1:6-9), then certainly he can have no clear conscience before God in preaching the gospel since he himself has not done all that God has said one must do in order to be saved.

D. Take up the shield of faith.

“Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen” (Hb 11:1). And for this reason, “this is the victory that overcomes the world, our faith” (1 Jn 5:4). Through faith the Christian shields himself against doubt and despair. Faith is the fountain from which we drink the sweet savor of our victory over all who would oppose us. In this way, faith is truly a shield. It is a shield of the mind. It is as someone said, “Faith is to accept the impossible, do without the indispensable, and bear the intolerable.” And when the intolerable comes, faith takes us through to victory. It is like a muscle. It grows only when used. It is also as Spurgeon said, “A little faith will bring your soul to heaven; a great faith will bring heaven to your soul.”

When faith is exercised, it grows. It is for this reason that we must walk by faith, and not by sight (2 Co 5:7). Thomas sought to walk by sight, for he would not believe until he saw and handled the resurrected Christ. Because he did not believe the testimony of others who saw the resurrected Jesus, Thomas said, “Unless I see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe” (Jn 20:25). Thomas believed only after Jesus stood before Him. And when Jesus stood before him and asked him to put forth his hand, finally Thomas responded, “My Lord and my God” (Jn 20:28). What is very encouraging about this incident is not the reaction of Thomas who personally experienced the resurrected Jesus, but what Jesus said of those who do not have the opportunity to walk by sight. “Because you have seen Me, you have believed. Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed” (Jn 20:29).

Those who cry out for a miracle are those who are struggling with their faith. Those who seek the appearance of an angel, are also crying out for faith. Thomas walked by sight. Peter walked by sight. All the apostles personally experienced and handled Jesus after His resurrection (See 1 Jn 1:2,3). But we have not. We walk by faith. And it is through our walk by faith that our faith becomes the shield that protects our destiny. We are thus more blessed than the apostles who walked by their sight of Jesus every day. It is for this reason that we do not want the appearance of an angel, nor the dead to rise in our presence. If such were to happen, our blessed faith would be stolen away by sight. We would no longer be blessed because we believe, and yet, have not seen.

E. Take the helmet of salvation.

Any blow to the soldiers head would render him unconscious or dead. The assurance of our salvation, therefore, keeps us alive. We know that we are saved by grace through faith (Ep 2:8). Our salvation is not the product of ourselves. It is the gift of God. We are created in Christ for good works, not by good work. And so, we work out our own salvation “with fear and trembling,” not for our salvation (Ph 2:12). In Christ, wherein there is salvation through grace, “we are His workmanship” (Ep 2:10). It is His grace that keeps us alive in Christ. When we take up the helmet of our salvation, we are depending on God, not ourselves in our battle against the spiritual hosts of darkness.

F. Take up the sword of the Spirit.

There is no question about the metaphorical meaning of the word “sword” in this statement. The sword is both an offensive and defensive weapon of war. As the word of God, the sword is defensive in that we are “no longer children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of teaching, by the trickery of men in cleverness to the deceitfulness of error” (Ep 4:14). On the contrary, the word of God is an offensive instrument against all sorts of error.

For the word of God is living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow, and able to judge the thoughts and intents of the heart (Hb 4:12).

Our warfare is real and spiritual. Christians do not become involved in the carnal warfare of guns and bombs in order to propagate their cause. Christianity is not a religious/political system as Islam. Paul reminded the Corinthians of this very vital point:

For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war according to the flesh. For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but powerful through God for the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ (2 Co 10:3-5).

This is a very powerful statement. It defines our conflict with false religions, oppressive dictators who would lie to the people, and religious/political systems that would impose on us the imaginations of men. When there is no confrontation with evil and error, there is usually no desire to study the word of God. People do not study their Bibles when they are not engaged in spiritual warfare. Too many are not doing as Paul exhorted the Corinthians, that is, being “steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord ...” (1 Co 15:58).

When we engage evil and error, we will find ourselves against an entire world of darkness. It is sometimes like a son boasted to his father, “Look dad, I pulled up a great big stalk of maize (corn) by myself.” In order to encourage his son, the father replied, “My, you’re so strong, Tommy.” Then Tommy boastfully replied, “I guess I am, for the whole world had hold of the other end of the stalk.” The whole world is against the disciple of Jesus, and thus, any who would engage the world without a knowledge of the word of God has lost the battle with the first volley of error thrown by the enemy.

Paul exhorted the young Timothy, “Fight the good fight of the faith. Lay hold on eternal life to which you were also called ...” (1 Tm 6:12). These were not wistful words of someone who had not fought the good fight of the faith himself. Paul wrote to the Corinthians, “I thus run, not with uncertainty. I thus box, not as one who beats the air. But I discipline my body and bring it into subjection ...” (1 Co 9:26,27). And thus after the conflict of engaging the wiles of the devil, the faithful can also say with Paul, “I have fought the good fight. I have finished my course” (2 Tm 4:7).

John Walker was a young official keeper of the lighthouse on Robin Reef at Staten Island in America. One day he became very ill. A medical boat was immediately dispatched to take him to the hospital. As they were loading him on the boat, he cried out to his wife, Catherine, “Mind the light.” Unfortunately, Mr. Walker died of his illness. But his wife Catherine minded the light of the lighthouse, keeping ships safe from the treacherous rocks of the reef. She faithfully minded the light for the next thirty years. We are reminded of Jesus’ message to the faithful disciples of Smyrna:

*Do not fear those things that you will suffer. Behold, the devil will cast some of you into prison so that you may be tested. And you will have tribulation ten days. Be faithful unto death and I will give you the crown of life (Rv 2:10).

Chapter 5

PARTNERS IN CHRIST

The New Testament is saturated with “one another” passages in reference to the relationship that Christians are to experience with one another. In our digital communication era, however, the word “relationship” seems to mean something different in this culture than what God intended should be among the members of the body of Christ. In fact, the concept of relationship that is commonly expressed today in the digital cultures of the world is quite different from the relationships that people have in the village life in the middle of India or Africa. Village relationships are closer to first century relationships than that which we witness in large cities today. The concept of a “wireless relationship” through digital smart phone texting (SMS) is not what is meant by the “one another” (relationship) passages of the New Testament. Relationship is defined in the New Testament as personal contact in order to determine if one another’s needs are fulfilled, both physically and spiritually. This can be enhanced by digital communication, but we must always be careful not to allow such communication to be substituted for face-to-face contact. Digital communication should actually bring us closer together, if such is used in reference to the disciples’ connection with one another.

Spiritual growth is directly connected to the relational function of the members of the body of Christ. The following statement defines true relationships that Christians are to have with one another. We do not see smart phones taking the place of Paul’s definition of how Christians are to relate with one another, as he explains in the following statement:

... from whom [Christ] the whole body being fitted and held together by what every join supplies, according to the effective working of each part, causes growth of the body to the edifying of itself in love (Ep 4:16).

This is the relational function of the organic body. We are as the body of Christ, fitted and held together by what we supply to one another. Each part of the body must be working and supplying. And when we are fitted and held together by supplying one another’s needs, then each member is held in fellowship with the whole body. It is then that spiritual growth occurs.

Other than the phrase “one another,” the word “fellowship” is the most common word used in the New Testament to explain the organic function of the body in order that each member spiritually grows. “Fellowship” is usually the English word that is used to translate the Greek word koinonia. This word has a diversity of meanings, depending on the context in which it is used. However, the word basically means “joint partnership” or “having things in common.” The context in which the word is used must be the final dictionary to define the word. What is significant about all the contexts in which the word is used, is that the concept of partnership and sharing is always understood.

A. Partners in truth:

John explained, “That which we have seen and heard we declare to you so that you also may have fellowship with us, and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ” (1 Jn 1:3). Our fellowship (partnership) with the Father and Son is based on the condition of continuing in the truth. “If we say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not practice the truth” (1 Jn 1:6). John further explained, “But if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship with one another ...” (1 Jn 1:7). We do not understand this to mean that we walk in agreement with some catechism of interpretations with which everyone must agree. The problem with such an interpretation of John’s statement is that too many interpreters want to slip in their favorite interpretations, if not opinions. Since God knew that we would do this—the Pharisees were good at this—then we must conclude that “the truth” must be something that is fundamental and clearly stated in Scripture. In the context in which John made the statement, the truth of Jesus being the resurrected Son of God was under attack. Therefore, we would conclude that if one did not walk in the truth of the resurrected Son of God, then he had no fellowship with the apostles, or God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Paul may shed some light on this. He wrote concerning our “... fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now ...” (Ph 1:5). Those who have obeyed the death, burial and resurrection of the Son of God through immersion in water definitely walk in fellowship with one another. This would be the “truth of the gospel” about which Paul wrote, and was in danger of being compromised in the early years of the existence of the church. To the Galatians he wrote, “To whom [the ‘circumcision brethren’ of Jerusalem] we did not yield in subjection even for an hour, so that the truth of the gospel might continue with you” (Gl 2:5). This truth of the gospel can be compromised. Paul continued to explain to the Galatians concerning the behavior of some Jews in Antioch, “But when I saw that they were not straightforward about the truth of the gospel ...” (Gl 2:14). It is the word of God that communicates to us the truth of the gospel (Cl 1:5). If we do not behave according to this record of the truth of the gospel, then we have no fellowship with one another. Obedience to the gospel, therefore, is the foundation upon which we have fellowship with one another. This truth of the gospel is revealed in the New Testament. If one is not following the road map of the New Testament, then he cannot obey the truth of the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, for such is revealed only in the New Testament (1 Co 15:1-4). He simply will not know what the truth of the gospel is if he does not read his Bible.

Does obedience to the gospel establish an unending fellowship? Certainly not! One may start out his Christian walk in fellowship with God through his obedience to the gospel, but if Jesus’ teaching in John teaches us anything, there are fundamental truths in which one must walk in order to maintain the fellowship we have in our common obedience to the gospel. Jesus said, “If anyone loves Me, he will keep My words” (Jn 14:23). It is not difficult to understand this. John explained, “And he who keeps His commandments abides in Him” (1 Jn 3:24). Walking in the light is walking in the truth of Jesus and His commandments. Jesus simply stated, “If you continue in My word, then you are truly My disciples” (Jn 8:31).

We have been called into fellowship with God through the gospel of the cross and resurrection (2 Th 2:14). Through Jesus on the cross, God calls us into fellowship with His Son (1 Co 1:9). But in order to remain in fellowship with Him, we must walk in the truth. The blessing to our walk in the truth is that we are in partnership with Father (1 Jn 3:24), the Son (1 Co 1:9), the Holy Spirit (1 Co 3:16; 2 Co 13:14), the apostles (1 Jn 1:3), and all other Christians (1 Jn 1:7).

B. Partnership in Christ’s suffering:

The Holy Spirit reminded Timothy of one very important principle of living the spiritual life in Christ: “Yes, and all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution” (2 Tm 3:12). If we seek to partner with Christ, then we must partner with Him in His suffering. Notice Paul’s description of this fellowship in his letter to the Philippians: “I want to know Him and the power of His resurrection and the fellowship of His sufferings, being like Him in His death” (Ph 3:10).

Most people want “sweet Jesus meek and mild.” But they forget that “Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example that you should follow His steps” (1 Pt 2:21). There is no partnership with Jesus unless we are willing to follow Him in His sufferings, even if these sufferings lead us unto death (Rv 2:10).

Discipleship means suffering. It may not be physical suffering, but indeed, there is at least the suffering that comes from being a nonconformist to the ways of the world. If we truly know Jesus, then we know that He warned everyone who would dare to claim to be His disciple that they would be hated by the world.

If the world hates you, you know that it hated Me before it hated you. If you were of the world, the world would love its own. But because you are not of the world, but I chose you out of the world, therefore the world hates you (Jn 15:18,19).

Those who partner with Jesus as His disciples, must partner with His sufferings. We simply need to remember what Jesus said: “If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you” (Jn 15:20). Someone concluded:

For every hill I’ve had to climb,
For every stone that bruised my feet,
For all the blood and sweat and grime,
For blinding storms and burning heat,
My heart sang but a grateful song,
These were the things that made me strong.

If there is no persecution from the world, then we should be cautioned. It may be that we are living according to the world, and the world sees no difference between us and them. It may be that we are silent concerning our beliefs, and thus, the world does not know what we believe. It may be that we have assumed that everyone in the world is saved regardless of whether they believe in Jesus. Or, it may be that all the world is Christian. We think that the latter is not the case, but all the former are true in one’s life if he is not living the life of a disciple.

If we live the life of a disciple, and are headed to eternal glory, then discipleship means sharing what we believe with others. It means rejecting those immoral practices by which the world entertains itself. Jesus lived in a more religious environment than we do today, and yet, it was the religious world of His day that crucified Him. We thus pause and think about this for a moment. Maybe we have fallen further away from what discipleship means than we think. If there is no persecution from the misguided religious world, then we are probably not engaging the religious world concerning those teachings that are necessary to believe and obey in order to be saved.

C. Partnership in burden bearing:

If we are disciples of Jesus, then there is no such thing as suffering alone. If one is suffering alone, then something is wrong. Either one has separated himself from the fellowship of his fellow disciples, or he is on a long journey among unbelievers. But Christianity is about helping one another through this world. The definition of “church” is fellowship among those who have partnered in Christ to make sure their journey through this world ends in the eternal presence of the Father. Paul explained, “Brethren, if a man is overtaken in any trespass, you who are spiritual restore such a one in a spirit of gentleness ...” (Gl 6:1). He continued, “Bear one another’s burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ” (Gl 6:2). Paul even wrote a commentary on what we are to do in our fellowship with one another in Christ:

We then who are strong ought to bear the weaknesses of the weak and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good, to his edification. For even Christ did not please Himself, but as it is written, “The reproaches of those who reproached You fell on Me” (Rm 15:1-3; see Is 35:3,4).

Christianity is defined by a fellowship of care that people have for one another. Paul concluded his first letter to the newly baptized Thessalonians, “Therefore, comfort one another and edify one another, just as you also are doing” (1 Th 5:11). Even in their newness in the faith, the Thessalonians were “contributing to the needs of the saints, given to hospitality” (Rm 12:13; see 2 Co 9:12). At the very beginning, Luke defined the organic function of the body in reference to the members’ relational activity with one another: “Now all who believed were together and had all things in common” (At 2:44). This is the nature of the body of Christ.

D. Partnership around the table:

Both Jude and Peter wrote their epistles in the middle or late 60s. In both letters mention is made of the “love feast” (2 Pt 2:13; Jd 12). The love feast was a vital function of the early body of Christ. There is something about eating together that brings people together. So for the first thirty or more years after the beginning in A.D. 30, the early disciples celebrated their common partnership in Christ over a full meal. Their breaking of bread together began in the early days of their fellowship and continued for years (At 2:42,46; 20:7). In fact, the love feast continued among the disciples well into the fourth century.

Because of the nature of the fellowship of the body (Rm 12:13), it was only natural that the early members seek every opportunity to share with one another through food. Though some puffed up Corinthians arrogantly manifested their lack of consideration in how they behaved at the love feast (1 Co 11:17-22), Paul still wanted them to continue eating together. So he gave some basic instructions on how to avoid their confusion. He instructed them concerning the basic ethics in how to show respect for one another when they came together to eat the love feast. “When you come together to eat,” Paul instruction, “wait for one another” (1 Co 11:33). And if anyone cannot wait to eat at the common love feast, then he should eat something before he comes to the table (1 Co 11:34). If these two simple instructions are honored, then coming together for the love feast accomplishes a great deal in bringing the members of the body together as a family. The love feast becomes the opportunity for spiritual growth. It places spiritually strong Christians in conversational company with weaker brothers. It is a special environment in which the members are bonded together in a social environment of mutual sharing.

The goal of the local members of the body of Christ is to come closer to one another as they come closer to Christ. It is as the spokes of a wheel. Jesus is the hub. As the spokes draw closer to the hub, the closer the spokes come together. Sometimes it is as the fish farmer who had his separate pools of different fish at the bottom of a mountain. Unfortunately, there came a great rain, and subsequent, flash flood. The waters of the flood covered all the individual fish ponds. The different fish in each pond had the opportunity to swim over and enjoy the fellowship of one another’s ponds. Sometimes it takes hardships to bring members out of their independent boxes (ponds) in order that they come together into one family. Every Christian must realize that he or she is not alone in the heat of the battle for Jesus. It is as the Hebrew writer encouraged, “Let brotherly love continue” (Hb 13:1). We must “love the brotherhood” (1 Pt 2:17). Peter concluded, “Finally, all of you be of one mind, having compassion one for another. Love as brethren, be kindhearted, humble” (1 Pt 3:8).

Chapter 6

MAINTAINING CONTACT

Some people define “church” as a series of ceremonial rituals that are performed on a regular basis, hopefully on a weekly basis on Sunday morning. Others define church as a catechism of doctrines that can be conveniently outlined, or possibly presented in a well-written book that explains all the correct proof text of scripture that validates each point of identity. There are those who define their particular denomination by a manual of traditions or doctrines. And then there is the definition of church to be a relational interaction of people with one another that is based on the members’ common obedience to the gospel and mutual love of one another. We would agree with the latter.

In one passage of Scripture Jesus defined “church”:

A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, as I have loved you, that you also love one another. By this will all men know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another (Jn 13:34,35).

This is the definition of the ekklesia (church) that Jesus called out of the world through the gospel. And if this is the definition of church—and it is—then doctrinal outlines fall far short of defining the organic body of Christ. Manuals of common tradition are worthless.

Love is an action word. Outlines and rituals are inert and impersonal. We may content ourselves to feel good about our correct outline of doctrine or common traditions. But we cannot content ourselves if our behavior is not identified by Jesus’ definition of His disciples. What is scary is that the majority of religious people today who are connected in some way to a particular religious group, maintain their connection (fellowship) with their particular church either on the basis of tradition or theology. Love takes second place to these customary systems of church identity.

The identity of the disciples of Jesus is known by their relational love they have for one another that is based on their common obedience to the gospel. They simply gravitate to one another and enjoy one another’s presence because they have obeyed the gospel. They realize that their interaction with one another on earth is in preparation to be with one another for eternity. If they cannot work out their differences on earth, then it is questionable that they will enjoy being with one another for eternity. It is imperative, therefore, that there be no “once a month” or “periodic disciples” who refrain from being with other disciples. Nevertheless, there are those members who stay away from the body of believers. By doing such, they manifest their self-deception that they will enjoy the company of the disciples in eternity. If one cannot voluntarily fellowship with other Christians on earth, then certainly God will not force this person to be together with Christians in heaven.

The following are some erroneous beliefs of those who have deceived themselves into thinking that they will have an eternal reward for their unloving relationship with their fellow body of believers:

A. Legal justification:

Legal justification is illustrated by contributing a few coins to the function of the body, when at the same time, the contributor has many notes in his pocket. If God would meet him on his exit from the legalized assembly, he could at least say he legally made a contribution. No judgment could supposedly be made against him because he dropped in a few coins.

As with legal contributions, one who practices legal fellowship is seeking to be with his fellow Christians as least as possible, and yet, feel justified before God. A preacher friend of ours several years ago mentioned the name of the presumptuous member who was supposedly a part of his fellowship. He said he saw the name of the member in the local newspaper. The problem was that the man gave the name of the church for which he preached. He told the newspaper that he was a member of this church. But my friend said the man never showed up at the assembly of the church.

Some people deceive themselves into thinking that they are in fellowship with God, when at the same time they maintain no fellowship with His people. John wrote of these people. “If we say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not practice the truth” (1 Jn 1:6; see 2:9,10). So the person who claims to be associated with the disciples, but never shows up to be in fellowship with the disciples, has simply deceived himself. The fact would be what Peter and John said to Simon the sorcerer, “You have neither part nor portion in this matter, for your heart is not right in the sight of God” (At 8:21).

B. Presumptuous relationships:

If one stayed away from his wife for an extended period of time without any reason, then we would question the man’s love for his wife. If one stayed away from his job for an extended period of time without any excuse, then he would be fired. If one seeks to starve his relationship with his brothers in Christ, then he simply has no love for his brothers in Christ. If one would presume to have a relationship with Christ, but fails to be with the body of Christ, then he has deceived himself. He has presumed to have that which does not exist, that is, a relationship with fellow disciples of Christ.

Christianity is about relationships, and relationships depend on being with one another. Some have often used the text of Hebrews 10:24,25 as a legal code to instill guilt in those who forsake the assembly of the saints. But there is something far more important behind the meaning of Hebrews 10:24,25 than the breaking of a legal code of attendance. In fact, what is stated in the text is the reason why some stayed away.

We must understand the passage in the context of the time in which it was written.

Let us hold firm to the confession of our faith without wavering, for He is faithful who promised. And let us consider one another to stir up love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as is the habit of some, but encouraging one another, and so much the more as you see the day approaching. For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins (Hb 10:23-26).

At the time the letter was written to the Jewish Christians, there was great intimidation of the Jewish Christians to go back into Judaism. The intensity of the Jewish insurrection was rising in the Roman Empire. What eventually happened was that Rome decided to put down the “Jewish problem” by the destruction of the Jewish state in Palestine, which eventually led to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, and finally the destruction of the stronghold of Masada soon after.

Some Jews who were converted out of Judaism were on the verge of returning to their fellow Jews, and thus, were slipping away from their faith in Jesus as the Messiah. The Hebrew letter was written in order to argue against their theological case of returning to a legal system of law under the Sinai law. After the Hebrew writer made his theological case, he concluded in chapter 10, “But we are not of those who draw back to destruction, but of those who believe to the saving of the soul” (Hb 10:39). Hebrews 10:24,25 must be understood in this historical context.

In order not to draw back into Judaism, the Jewish disciples must associate with one another. They must encourage one another to remain faithful to their former commitment that Jesus was the Messiah. The “day” about which the writer spoke, was not the final coming of Jesus at the end of time. The Holy Spirit would not lie to the readers, deceiving them into thinking that Jesus was coming in His final coming in their lifetime. All the early Christians had been told the prophecy of Jesus that is recorded in Matthew 24. National Israel, with the final destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, was coming to a close. Jesus was coming, but He was coming in time in judgment in order to conclude the age of Israel. The Hebrew writer, therefore, wrote to save Christian lives by discouraging them from repatriating with national Israel in Jerusalem. If they drew back into Judaism, indeed they would “draw back to destruction” (Hb 10:39).

As a culture of people, the Hebrew writer thus encouraged the Jewish brethren to assemble with one another in order to encourage one another to remain faithful to Jesus as the Messiah (Hb 10:25). And in order to remain faithful, they had to encourage one another to do two things: (1) stir up loving fellowship with one another, and (2) encourage getting to work for Jesus. Hebrew 10:24,25 is not talking about some “hour of worship” wherein one’s faithfulness is determined by his legal presence. This may be a convenient passage for preachers to beat people on the heart for not attending, but such an interpretation is certainly shallow in reference to the historical context of what was happening in the lives of the Jewish Christians when the passage was written.

The “sin” to which the Hebrew writer was referring was their apostasy to Judaism. In the book, the writer had earlier stated, “But exhort one another daily, while it is called ‘Today,’ lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin” (Hb 3:13). Turning back into “sin” meant turning away from the high priesthood of Jesus. Notice what the writer stated would happen if they turned from the atonement of Jesus: “*For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins” (Hb 10:26). If they turned away from Jesus, then they would be turning away from the atoning blood of Jesus.

We would understand “the Truth” in the context according to what Jesus said to the Jews during His earthly ministry: “And you will know the truth, and the truth will make you free” (Jn 8:32). Jesus was the revealed Word (Jn 1:1,2,14). He was the Truth. And it was He, through the cross, who set obedient people free from their sins. The Hebrews had obeyed the truth of the gospel because of their “knowledge of the Truth,” which Jesus was. But if they willfully turned away from the Truth (Jesus), then Jesus could do nothing for their problem of sin. This is something far more serious than missing the “attendance of the saints” on Sunday morning. The Hebrew writer was discussing apostasy, not legal attendance to assemblies, though the lack of attendance at the assembly of the saints is the first signal of a backsliding disciple.

It could be understood, however, that if one does not assemble around those who believe that Jesus is the Truth, then certainly he is falling from the faith. Our sweet fellowship that we have in Christ is that all of us have a “knowledge of the Truth.” We have obeyed the truth of the gospel, and thus are in fellowship with one another. Whoever would not want to be around like-minded people certainly has little knowledge of the Truth (Jesus). Christianity is not about attendance at legal assemblies, but about being drawn together in assembly as we draw closer to Jesus. It is as Jesus said: “*And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all men to Me” (Jn 12:32).

C. Estranged relationships:

Someone once said, “The difference between opinion and conviction is that you hold one and the other holds you.” It is not a matter of opinion that Christians are in fellowship with one another for the purpose of growing one another spiritually. It is that we are held together because of our commitment to one another. When in the absence of one another, our feelings should be as those expressed by Paul when he was away from the disciples in Thessalonica.

*So affectionately longing for you, we were well-pleased to impart to you not only the gospel of God, but also our own souls, because you had become very dear to us (1 Th 2:8).

And to the Roman Christians, he wrote, “*Be kindly affectionate to one another with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another” (Rm 12:10). To the Ephesians, he continued, “And be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another ...” (Ep 4:32). These are powerful statements in reference to the nature and intensity by which Christians are to desire one another’s presence. Has our digital age of distance communication deprived us of this longing for one another’s personal presence? Have we cheapened fellowship through texting on smart phones?

As we seek Jesus, we seek one another. A missionary friend of ours told of a religious woman in his community who was leprous. He mentioned that in her religious faith and longing for the saints that she crawled for two miles on her crippled hands and knees in order to be with the saints. And then she asked for forgiveness for her unfaithfulness and commitment to them.

We are often in the presence of lukewarm Christians who now define the culture of a lukewarm faith. Such happened to the disciples in the city of Laodicea. But Jesus pronounced judgment on them. “So then, because you are lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew you out of My mouth” (Rv 3:16). The Christians in Laodicea may have been comfortable with one another’s lukewarmness, but Jesus was not. There were possibly some in the church of Laodicea as the husband and father identified in the following poetic statement of a lukewarm Christian:

Take my wife and let her be,
Consecrated, Lord to thee.
Take my children as thine own,
As for me, I’ll stay at home.

This husband and father had forgotten Ezekiel 18:4: “Behold, all souls are Mine. As the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is Mine. The soul that sins, it will die.”

In the bulletin of a church over a half century ago were the words of an unknown poet.

His four-year old climbed on his knee,
Intent to have her daddy see,
What she in Sunday school had drawn;
While he stayed home and mowed the lawn.

“See there is Mom and me and Sue,
But Daddy, I could not draw you;
Because you never go with us,
Did you and Jesus have a fuss?”
He bowed his head and felt ashamed,
And found it so hard to explain;
He vowed a vow, and kept it too,
That miss again, he’d never do.

There is the old Chinese tale of a man traveling through a country. He saw a beggar at the side of the road, and subsequently, gave him six of his seven coins. While the traveler slept, however, the beggar stole the seventh. We would be harsh with the beggar, but we would do the same with God. He has allowed us to have and use all that we have, but we want to steal the rest.

Chapter 7

OUT OF DUTY

We can thank God that we do not have to stand before Jesus with a notebook of our works in order to have earned, or worst, to demand entrance through the “pearly gates.” We can throw away our notebook records of our meritorious works. We can thank Jesus for the sufficient sacrifice that He paid through His incarnation and sacrificial death on the cross. His taking of our burden of sin to the cross has relieved us of a tremendous burden. So it is in view of this sacrificial event that was coming in the lives of His immediate disciples that Jesus said, “... when you have done all those things that are commanded you, say, ‘We are unprofitable bondservants. We have done that which was our duty to do’ (Lk 17:10).

After we have performed the best we can in obedience to His commands, we must conclude that our performance was only our duty to do. We must remember that we are still unprofitable bondservants. We still lack. We are still a long way from that which we so earnestly desire. So we are not ashamed to quote over and over again, “For by grace you are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God” (Ep 2:8).

Eternal life with Jesus is a gift because it could not be earned out of duty. No duty could ever be performed to earn such an awesome gift.

But there is still duty. Duty means responsibility. It means taking ownership of the commandments of Jesus in order that we manifest our desire to be His disciples. “If you love Me,” Jesus reminded His disciples, “you will keep My commandments” (Jn 14:15). “If anyone loves Me, he will keep My words” (Jn 14:23). And why do we keep His commandments? Jesus explained, “If you keep My commandments, you will abide in My love” (Jn 15:10). So duty is necessary. Doing our duty is a manifestation of our taking ownership of our discipleship. And if we do not do His word, then we are out of duty. We will fail to grow spiritually. We can identify the spiritual giants among us by their love of, and obedience to, the word of Jesus. The Holy Spirit called the Bible students in Berea “noble minded” because they were students of the word of God (At 17:11).

A. The duties of discipleship:

The word “Christian” is a noun. In today’s religious usage the name has lost much of its New Testament meaning. It is now a name that is used to portray anyone who would believe that Jesus is the Son of God, regardless of his beliefs and behavior. But we know that only those who know and do the will of the Father have a right to cry out, “Lord, Lord,” because they are doing the will of the Father (See Mt 7:15-23).

Now the word “disciple” is inherently filled with action. This is the word that means “a follower,” “a learner,” one who willingly submits to a teacher who leads the student in the direction of the teacher. This is why the word “disciple” was used in reference to God’s people at least ten years before the name Christian came into existence. For it was about ten years after the events in Acts 2, that “... the disciples were first called Christians in Antioch” (At 11:26). And they were called Christians by the unbelievers. Christians did not name themselves Christians. But since the name was appropriate to identify those who were “of Christ,” the name stuck and the Holy Spirit sanctioned it when He used it about fifteen years later in the statement, “Yet if anyone suffers as a Christian ...” (1 Pt 4:16).

Here is something that is quite interesting. It was the Holy Spirit’s purpose to reveal in the book of Acts the function of the early disciples going about doing their duty. Through the guidance of the Spirit, Luke reveals to Theophilus in Acts the organic function of the early disciples as they carried out their duties as disciples. Throughout the document of Acts, therefore, Luke uses the word “disciple” to explain the function of those who went about as the body of Christ. The word “Christian” is only used twice in Acts, once in Acts 11:26, and when Paul almost convinced King Agrippa to be a Christian (At 26:28). But the word is only used in a noun form, whereas “disciple” is used in order to reveal the function of the organic body of Christ. In other words, Luke wanted Theophilus to know that disciples were on duty at all times. They were functioning parts of a universal body. They were going about the world doing that which was their duty to do as a part of the body of Christ. If one was doing nothing, then he was “out of duty” as a disciple.

If one would be a disciple, therefore, he must be at work carrying out the duties of a disciple. It is easy to label oneself a Christian. But if one does no ministry, and yet claims to be a disciple of Jesus, then his claim is empty. Maybe this is the reason why the name Christian is so commonly used today, and the word “disciple” used so infrequently. One can claim to be a Christian based on what he believes. But one who claims to be a disciple must prove his discipleship by what he does.

We have thought it interesting that few people who say they are Christians, also claim that they are disciples.

Remember what Jesus said, “If you continue in My word, then you are truly My disciples” (Jn 8:31). We have found it amazing that people will assemble on Sunday with exciting and colorful concert exhibitions, close their assembly, and then never study the word of Jesus. It is actually quite hypocritical. And it was as if Jesus knew there would be those who would claim to be His disciples, and yet be totally ignorant of His word. He spoke of such people: “Not every one who says to Me, ‘Lord, Lord,’ will enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he who does the will of My Father who is in heaven” (Mt 7:21). Jesus was saying that it is inconceivable that one would presumptuously claim to be “marching to Zion” without any knowledge of the “will of My Father.”

People must remember that 450 prophets of Baal religiously jumped up and down on Mount Carmel in a plea that their gods manifest themselves before Elijah. But their religious concert of praise that led to their cutting of themselves with knives was useless. We can only do as Elijah who mocked such prophets with the words, “Cry aloud, for he is a god. Either he is meditating or he is busy or he is on a journey. Perhaps he is sleeping and must be awakened” (1 Kg 18:27). But the emotionally misdirected worshipers “cried with a loud voice and cut themselves according to their custom with swords and lances until the blood gushed out of them” (1 Kg 18:28). Now we must confess that this was certainly an exciting worship service. When the worshipers are rolling on the ground, cutting themselves with knives, then you know they have judged their worship to be acceptable to their god. It was their customary religious practice to behave this way in their worship. Nevertheless, regardless of their emotionally intense worship service, we look at this as religious hysteria. And yet, save for the knives, the same carries on with assemblies of churches throughout the world today. The unbeliever looks on and judges such people to be mad (See 1 Co 14:23).

“Blood gushing” assemblies are a signal that people are out of duty and out of control in reference to their knowledge of Jesus. If one by chance shows up at an assembly where they are passing out knives, it would be best to be absent from the assembly.

As disciples, we must be into the word of Jesus, lest we deceive ourselves into creating a god after our own imagination. The only way to keep ourselves from creating our own gods is that we discover the one true God in the pages of the Bible. Remember that “these things were written for our learning” (Rm 15:4; see 1

Co 10:11). If we are not students of the word of God, then we are out of duty, and subsequently, out of control as we plead for our god to act, which god is possibly sleeping or on a long journey.

B. The duties of priesthood:

1 Peter 2:5 & 9 explain a very important status of the disciples of Jesus. Disciples “are being built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ” (1 Pt 2:5). Besides being a “holy priesthood,” Peter says that we are also “a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a special people, so that” we can proclaim the praises of Him who has called us out of darkness (1 Pt 2:9). Every Christian is a priest, and thus, every Christian is on duty to carry out his priestly duties to offer up spiritual sacrifices and praises to God.

Priests are to proclaim the praises of God to the unbelieving world. It is their duty to let the world know their origin and their destiny. There are no part time priests. All priests have presented their bodies a living sacrifice, separated from the world, and thus acceptable to God as His witness before the world (Rm 12:1). Any priest who might think that he can occasionally put off his priestly duties, therefore, is out of duty. Such a person does not have a priestly mind.

Under the Sinai law of the Old Testament, the nation of Israel was set apart as a people of priests. There was within the nation a designated group of priests (Levites) who ministered to the people of priests. These were the Levites. But every Israelite was to represent God before the world as a priest of God.

The same is true of the church. Every member of the church is a priest of God. The more we might think that we have a special class of designated priests (“clergymen”) among us, the less we assume our responsibility to be priests before the world. Jesus is now our high priest. “We have such a high priest who is seated at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens” (Hb 8:1). But we are the priests of God on earth before the world. It is our duty as priests of God, therefore, to do the work of a priest for the world. Every disciple who is not doing his priestly duties to the world around him is simply out of duty as a priest of God.

C. The duties of sainthood:

The Greek word hagios (holy) means to set apart. When Paul wrote to the disciples in Rome, he referred to them as those “called to be saints [holy]” (Rm 1:7). The ekklesia, therefore, is the called out assembly of those who are to be saints, and thus, set apart from the world. Saints are in the world, but not of the world (1 Co 5:10).

A saint is on duty in the world because he has been called out of the world. Paul explained, “If you then were raised with Christ, seek those things that are above ...” (Cl 3:1). In other words, “Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth” (Cl 3:2). The saint’s life has been “hidden with Christ in God” (Cl 3:3). He is no longer his own person because he has been “bought with a price” (1 Co 6:20). For this reason, the saint must glorify God in his body (1 Co 6:20). The life of a saint is as Paul explained of his own life:

I have been crucified with Christ. And it is no longer I who live, but Christ lives in me. And the life that I now live in the flesh I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me (Gl 2:20).

It would be superfluous for a Christian to say that he can take time off from being a saint. Sainthood is what the Christian is. It is not something that he does. Christians simply cannot cease being saints. They cannot because they have the responsibility of being the living proclamations before the world of the changed life. Spiritual giants recognize their priestly duties, and thus, they carry on daily performing their priestly duties to all those around them.

D. The duties of brotherhood:

Spiritual blood runs thicker through the veins of those who are in Christ, than the blood of those who are only physical brothers and sisters. This is true because brothers and sisters in Christ know that they will be spending eternity with one another. Their brotherhood is a reference to eternity, whereas physical brotherhood is earthly and temporary.

1. Physical responsibilities: Brotherhood means that those who are in a brother relationship with one another have responsibilities toward one another. James wrote,

If a brother or sister is naked and destitute of daily food, and one of you says to them, “Depart in peace, be warmed and filled,” but you do not give them those things that are needful to the body, what does it profit? (Js 2:15,16).

There is no brotherhood without obligations between those who compose the brotherhood. When Peter commanded that we “love the brotherhood,” he meant that we must take ownership of our responsibilities toward one another (1 Pt 2:17). John even stated that if we do not assume our responsibilities to the brotherhood of saints, we are not children of God. “But whoever has this world’s goods, and sees his brother in need and closes his heart against him, how does the love of God abide in him?” (1 Jn 3:17). In fact, John was a little more specific in the following statement: “We know that we have passed from death to life because we love the brethren. He who does not love abides in death” (1 Jn 3:14). If we do not think that these are great responsibilities, then we have not understood the nature or extent of the fellowship that must be characteristic of a disciple of Jesus. True love of the brotherhood is simply natural in being a disciple of Jesus.

Brotherhood means, as someone said, “We’re not put on this earth to see through one another, but to see one another through.” And if we do not spiritually grow to the point of helping see our brothers and sisters through this world, then the love of God is not in us.

Brotherhood is our test for eternity. John explains: “Whoever does not practice righteousness is not from God, nor the one who does not love his brother” (1 Jn 3:10). So in brotherhood, John cautioned, “... let us not love in word or in tongue, but in deed and in truth” (1 Jn 3:18). We must put our actions where our mouth is. “And by this we will know that we are of the truth, and will assure our heart before Him” (1 Jn 3:19). If we feel bad because we do not help our brother who is in need, then our feeling of guilt will condemn us (1 Jn 3:20). But “if our heart does not condemn us, we have confidence toward God” (1 Jn 3:21). We have confidence because we are doing what love would do, that is, taking action to preserve our brotherhood because we are taking care of one another’s needs.

2. Freedom responsibilities: Brothers and sisters in Christ will often disagree. We can ask Paul, Barnabas, Euodia and Syntyche about this (See At 15:36; Ph 4:2). Nevertheless, after their disagreement, neither Paul nor Barnabas turned from doing the work of evangelism, for they returned to exhort the disciples in the areas that they initially visited on the first mission journey (At 15:37-41). The names of Euodia and Syntyche were still written in the book of life, regardless of their disagreement (Ph 4:3).

When brethren disagree, it is the responsibility of both parties to maintain communication and harmony, though both parties have the right in matters of opinion to maintain their opinions or methods of work. God never intended for us to be clones of one another’s ministry or minds. If we were clones, then there would rise up among us those who would demand that all of us be unified after their particular opinions. Brotherhood is maintained, not by agreement upon common opinions or methods of work. On the contrary, brotherhood is maintained by allowing freedom in matters of opinion and methods of ministry. This was what Paul sought to guard among brethren when he gave the following mandate: “Stand fast therefore in the liberty by which Christ has made us free, and do not be entangled again with a yoke of bondage” (Gl 5:1).

This statement was made even in the context of those who would bind on the minds of the brotherhood that which they believed to be doctrinally right. There were some Jewish brothers who believed that circumcision was a matter of salvation (At 15:1). When one binds on the brotherhood that which he thinks is a doctrinal matter, but in actuality is only a matter of opinion or tradition, then he has perverted the gospel of Christ (Gl 1:6,7). When this happens among brothers, Paul’s admonition is the same as what he practiced when false brethren sought to bind circumcision on the Gentiles. “To whom we did not yield in subjection even for an hour, so that the truth of the gospel might continue ...” (Gl 2:5).

Brotherhood can be destroyed by failing to assume our responsibilities toward one another, as well as dogmatically binding opinions and methods upon the brotherhood. Brotherhood is destroyed when we do not guard one another’s freedom in Christ

3. Oneness in Christ responsibilities: The disciples in Achaia had some serious problems about calling themselves after different individuals. In doing such they were endangering their brotherhood. The individuals after whom they called themselves had already left the region. The spirit of sectarianism had come in among the disciples to the point that some said, “I am of Paul,” and others, “I am of Apollos,” and then others, “I am of Cephas” (1 Co 1:12). We feel that Paul was somewhat sarcastic when he chided their immaturity, for he admonished, “I am of Christ” (1 Co 1:13). Paul rebuked, “Is Christ divided?”

The brotherhood of the disciples throughout the province of Achaia, and in Corinth, was established on the foundation of two facts: (1) Christ was crucified for them, and (2) they were baptized in the name of Christ (1 Co 1:13). This was the foundation of their brotherhood. No man had any right to establish his own foundation by which members become a part of the body of Christ. And since Christ died for their sins, and they each voluntarily and individually obeyed the gospel through baptism, then calling themselves after any other person than Christ was quite sectarian. When we call ourselves after men on earth, brotherhood is destroyed. Since baptism brings us into the brotherhood of Christ, then certainly, it is not the choice of any man to add any member to any brotherhood than the brotherhood of Christ (At 2:47). When brotherhood is endangered by sectarianism, Paul's admonition is simple:

Now I urge you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you, but that you be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment (1 Co 1:10).

If we fail to make sure that all the physical needs of the brotherhood are supplied, then we are out of duty. If we fail to give one another freedom in Christ, we are out of duty. If we divide ourselves after different personalities, then we are out of duty as disciples. It is the goal of every member of the body to eagerly keep "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Ep 4:3).

E. The duties of servants:

Christianity is primarily about ministry, not assemblies. Assemblies are the result of disciples who are partners in their priesthood ministry to one another and the world. Unfortunately, this order has been reversed with most religious groups. Assembly has become more important than ministry. In fact, the religious world has moved to the point that if one of two things are supposedly correct, then one has a sure passage into eternal glory.

First, there are those who feel that if they carry out a prescribed ritual in assembly, which ritual is footnoted with a list of supposedly supporting scriptures, then they are somehow justified before God for believing and performing the correct rituals in their assemblies.

Second, there are those who feel that if they feel good after an assembly, their worship is acceptable to God, and thus, their passage into eternal glory is certain. They conclude that a hysterical assembly guarantees that they are in a saved relationship with God regardless of being involved in any ministry.

The fallacy of both the preceding concepts is deceptive. In reference to the first, the adherents are trusting in their legal performance of law in order to guarantee their acceptance before God. But Paul was emphatic when he said, "... for by works of law no flesh will be justified" (Gl 2:16). If we base our acceptance before God on the foundation of a worship service that is presumed to be according to law, then we have violated the very principle that Paul argued throughout the books of both Romans and Galatians.

How some can preach from the pulpit salvation by grace, while at the same time making sure that everyone is performing according to the law in a ritualistic assembly, is self deceiving, if not bewildering. For example, think of all the conflicts that have come about among the disciples concerning supposed legal systems as to how the Lord's Supper is to be carried out during the assembly. We are quite hypocritical. We give the table talk on grace, and then make sure that we proceed according to law as to how the emblems are to be served. Some are so legally oriented about ceremonies surrounding the Supper that they will set out the grape juice until it ferments into wine so it can be legally and scripturally served as wine.

If there is a legal ritual for assembly, then the assembly becomes a legal identity by which we judge whether one is in fellowship with the body. Sunday morning becomes the legal standard by which we judge one another in reference to the salvation of individuals. Where one sits on Sunday morning, according to legalists, determines one's eternal destiny. Maybe we need to stand back and take another look at the legalistic and sectarian spirit and behavior we have established in order to make a "five act of worship" the standard by which we judge the eternal destiny of individuals. Are we not hypocritical in trying to worship the God of grace by our strict legal definition of worship? Have we contradicted by our legal worship the statement, "by works of law no flesh will be justified" (Gl 2:16).

Do not think that we have gone off course on this matter. We have written these things in order to emphasize the apostasy to which some have gone in order to justify themselves before God according to law, while at the same time, refuse to walk in the light of the gospel after the "closing prayer." The more emphasis that is placed on the law of assembly (worship), the further we move from our responsibilities to minister to others after the "closing prayer." We believe that we can save ourselves by a legal worship, and then fail to lead the life of a disciple after our "legal worship." When "assembly laws" become that by which we judge our eternal destiny, then ministry will always take a second seat. It does because we trust in the legalities of our assemblies more than the behavior of our lives.

As disciples of Jesus, we are servants, and service takes place outside assembly. The Greek word that is commonly used in the New Testament to explain the servanthood of the saints is doulos. The doulos are the slaves of the field. There is no metaphorical meaning here. Slaves are slaves, whether they are Christian or unbelievers. Paul was a slave of Jesus (Rm 1:1). He had made himself a slave to all (1 Co 9:19). He preached himself to be a slave for Jesus' sake (2 Co 4:5). He was not a slave because he performed some ritualistic assembly, but because he behaved Jesus in his life. And so, he says to us, “Be imitators of me even as I also am of Christ” (1 Co 11:1). Owen Cosgrove once said,

A slave who balks most of the time, who gives halfhearted service and that only rarely, and who shows up only at dinner time is a poor excuse for a truly devoted servant.

Some people want to sit legally in a supposed “scriptural” assembly, but do no slave work outside the assembly. Some people want to concert themselves into euphoria, and thus justify their sainthood through ecstatic utterances, but are worthless to the needs of others. The problem with both legalistic and emotional religiosity is that both lean toward narcissism. They are self-centered and self-gratifying, while at the same time the adherents to such religiosity will walk by the beggar on the steps of the temple.

The legalist leaves his assembly, gratified that he has performed the correct rituals. The emotionalist leaves his assembly too exhausted to even notice the beggar. There is a throne in the life of every worshiper. Either we are sitting on it, or Christ is there. And if Christ is there, we need to remember these words:

Let this mind be in you that was also in Christ Jesus, who, being in the form of God, did not consider it robbery to be equal with God. But He made Himself of no reputation, taking the form of a bondservant ...” (Ph 2:5-7).

If a farmer stops planting and harvesting, he has lost his identity as a farmer. He ceases to be a farmer. If a carpenter ceases to work the wood and make the furniture, then he has lost the identity of a carpenter. He ceases to be a carpenter. If a disciple of Jesus ceases to serve others as a slave of Jesus, then he has lost his identity as a disciple. He ceases to be a disciple.

Chapter 8

A ROAD MAP TO SPIRITUAL POWER

The only road to spiritual heights is to first recognize our spiritual low. And in order to do this, we sometimes must go to a solitude place on a mountain or desert where we can be alone with God. We once had to make a very important decision concerning a major worldwide ministry. So we packed up our tent and headed for the Namibian desert. We stayed there for several days in prayer until a decision was made. There is something about places of solitude that help us reflect on ourselves and our abilities to do our ministry for God. We seek to grow spiritually. But we too often stumble over all the activities of the world that surround us. An activity-oriented life is not conducive to personal reflection.

One time during His ministry, Jesus took a multitude of people to a mountain. In the solitude of the environment, He delivered what is commonly referred to as the Sermon on the Mount. It was Jesus’ road map to spiritual growth. Unless we follow this map, we will never get to where we should be in our spiritual relationship with Him. Therefore, we must progress with Jesus as He takes us on an adventure of growing in the grace and knowledge of Him (2 Pt 3:18). He explains in Matthew 5:3-12 how to make this journey to the mountain peaks of spirituality in order to discover an intimate relationship with Him.

A. Spiritual poverty puts us on the road to spiritual growth.

“Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven” (Mt 5:3).

The first step to spiritual growth is to recognize how far we are away from our desired destination. Recognition of our spiritual poverty initiates our spiritual journey toward Jesus. In order to go down this road, we cannot come to Jesus with a notebook of good deeds. We cannot, as the rich young ruler, approach Jesus with a completed checklist of all the laws of God that we have kept (Mk 10:17-31). This is the reason why so many sit Sunday after Sunday in a legal assembly, but feel empty. They know something is wrong with their legal approach to worship, but they do not know what is wrong. We cannot begin our journey toward Jesus by checking off legal ceremonies of worship.

The rich young ruler came to Jesus with a checklist. He subsequently walked away from Jesus sad, as many walk away from legal assemblies that are intended to bring one closer to Jesus. We simply must never forget that law can take one only so far down the road of spiritual growth. If we seek to be as close as possible to Jesus in this life, we must realize how far meritorious law-keeping keeps us away from being where we so earnestly desire. When we realize we are lawbreakers, then, we will begin to experience that about which John was seeking to convey in the statement, “His commandments are not burdensome” (1 Jn 5:3). They are not burdensome when we understand that our obedience is not meritorious, but in appreciation of God’s grace (See 1 Co 15:10).

We can dutifully keep all the commandments, but still we must be on our knees confessing that “we are unprofitable bondservants ...” (Lk 17:10). After all the good deeds fail to bring atonement, and after all the law-keeping fails to bring the satisfaction of justification, we must ask Jesus the same question His disciples asked Him: “Who then can be saved?” (Mk 10:26). There is only one answer to this question. “With men it is impossible, but not with God” (Mk 10:27). With our performance of law, no one can be saved before God (Gl 2:16). With no amount of good deeds can one atone for his own sins (Rm 11:6). We simply cannot demand a spiritual relationship with God on the basis of meritorious law-keeping. And we cannot arbitrate with God with our notebook of good deeds. Mourning over sin in the pits of our own spiritual insufficiency leads to the discovery of grace. It is with this discovery that we begin our journey into the arms of God.

When we recognize and confess our spiritual poverty, then we are on our way. When we confess that our legal performance of law is flawed, then we start to reach out for grace. This is hard because we are so self-sufficient. Declaring spiritual bankruptcy is humbling, for we want to take pride in our good deeds and performance of law. Our arrogance pushes us to trust in our own abilities. Our culture teaches us to be winners in all things. But when we start our journey to spiritual growth, we must confess that we are spiritual losers.

In our present social-media generation, we have taken so many “selfies” (pictures of ourselves) that we have convinced ourselves that we ourselves are more important than others. We conclude that since we are the stars of our own little Facebook worlds, then certainly God needs us. He needs no glory in order to add to His. When He sees our shelves loaded with awards and trophies, surely, we conclude, God would accept us on the basis of how important we are. But when it comes to running the spiritual race for the prize, this is one time when we will always come in last at the finish line. We must come to the point in our lives when we wreck our lives into the wall of pride and pomp in order that we begin to understand that the objective of our desire in the realm of spirituality is a God thing, not an accomplishment of man.

When we recognize our spiritual poverty, and our inability to bring ourselves into the presence of God on the foundation of our performance of law or good deeds, then we start reaching out to God. It is then that we will come into the realm of His blessing. It is then that we will possess the kingdom reign of Jesus as He begins to reign in our hearts. His word will begin to be done on earth in our hearts as it is done in heaven (Mt 6:10).

We admire the great ministry of the apostle Paul. It was a ministry upon which the salvation of millions of souls will be in heaven. Not a week goes by that we do not read his Spirit-inspired writings. If one could successfully plead his case before God on the basis of meritorious works, then certainly Paul would have been a winner. But in all his works of ministry, he is the one the Holy Spirit chose to write the oracles of Galatians and Romans, which oracles proclaim the futility of doing good in order to save ourselves. As Paul’s own “works world” came crashing down after the Damascus road experience, he realized that only grace could put the pieces of his life together again.

Before the ink dried on the first seven chapters of Romans, Paul was about to inscribe the greatest literature ever written on the subject of grace. After proclaiming the insufficiency of our efforts to save ourselves according to law, he concluded chapter 7 with the outcry, “Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from the body of this death?” (Rm 7:24). Unless we come to this point in our lives, our spiritual growth will always be on a plateau of frustration.

No matter how important we may think we are in reference to kingdom business, no matter how puffed up we make our selves through the wearing of robes and gowns to set ourselves above the people, no matter how many degrees we have on our office walls, no matter how many titles we pronounce upon ourselves, no matter how many selfies we take of ourselves, each one of us must fall on our faces before God and cry out, “Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from the body of this death?”

B. Spiritual poverty produces mourning.

“Blessed are those who mourn, for they will be comforted” (Mt 5:4).

As Paul, who was in the midst of having revealed to him the climax of grace in Romans, we too must confess before God and mourn over our spiritual poverty (Rm 7:24). We must be brought to spiritual agony, tormented by our own insufficiency. It is only then that we can cry out as Paul, “I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rm 7:25). If we never humble ourselves before God and confess our spiritual poverty, then we will never begin the road to mourning over that which we cannot do in reference to drawing near to God. The mourning must begin before the comforting is given.

The road to closeness with God is covered with our tears. We mourn in frustration when we realize that we cannot dig ourselves out of our spiritual hole. We have seen light at the top of our pit of sin, but we have frustrated ourselves in trying to scale the slippery walls that are covered with our sins. So in our frustration, we cry out to Jesus to come for us.

Friends can never get us out of our dungeon of sin and into the presence of God. Worldly activities will never make the mournful sinner forget that he is so far away from God, that there is no human way to make our way closer to Him. We are so far down, only He can come and lift us up. The Corinthians were brought to this low by the judgmental words of the Spirit (1 Co 5:1,2). They were allowing sinful behavior to continue in their fellowship. However, they were obedient to the Spirit's call for repentance, and thus, they repented. The sinful man in their midst also repented. After everyone's repentance, the Spirit wrote, "For godly sorrow works repentance to salvation that is not to be regretted. But the sorrow of the world brings forth death" (2 Co 7:10).

If we mourn after the pronouncements of God, then there is salvation. But if we continue to satisfy spiritual poverty through worldly means, then there is only frustration. When we begin to sink into the stormy sea of life, as Peter in a tempestuous sea, the only recourse is, "Lord, save me!" (Mt 14:30). And when the Lord extends His hand to save us and keep us from drowning in sin and self-pity, it is not for a handshake. We grasp and cling to His hand. We never want to let go. We are never on our way to spiritual recovery until in desperation we can make the same outcry as Peter as he grasped for the saving hand of Jesus.

Our mourning over our lack of spirituality is the beginning to our spiritual recovery. Our mourning can never start too soon, for we never know when it will be too late. Does this mourning over our spiritual poverty ever end? Paul would answer, "But I discipline my body and bring it into subjection, lest by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be disqualified" (1 Co 9:27). If mourning ends, we do as John wrote, we "commit sin unto death" (1 Jn 5:16). We are doomed.

Mourning over sin is a demeanor of discipleship life. It is not a onetime recognition of sinfulness, and then immersion in water to wash away sin (At 22:16). In order to fully appreciate the comfort of the grace of God, we continue to be mournful over our own inadequately equate selves. It was for this reason that Paul continued to manifest his appreciation for the grace of God by the obedient behavior of his life. He wrote, "But by the grace of God I am what I am" (1 Co 15:10). Sins are washed away in baptism (At 22:16). But unless we walk in the light of Jesus' word, we will not have the benefit of His continual cleansing of our sins (1 Jn 1:7). It is for this reason, that we are comforted throughout our Christian lives because of our realization that by grace we are continually cleansed of our stumbles (See Ep 2:8; 1 Jn 1:7).

A tragedy in life may spark our mourning and repentance. But after that initial tragedy when we promised to commit ourselves to Jesus, there need be no continuing tragedies to keep us on the spiritual growth road. If it takes another tragedy to get us back on the road to recovery, then the first may be questionable. Once Jesus knocked Paul off a horse on his way to Damascus, that was it for the rest of his life (See At 9:1-19). He never turned back. He remembered what Jesus said, "No one, after putting his hand to the plow and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God" (Lk 9:62). We are sure that Peter never again wanted to hear the sound of a rooster crow. And Paul, probably with some apprehension he mounted horses the rest of his life.

C. Mourning produces meekness.

"Blessed are the meek, for they will inherit the earth" (Mt 5:5).

When we recognize our spiritual poverty, we are driven to mourn over our inability to perform that which would atone for our sins. In true mourning, somehow arrogance and pride are all swept away. The selfies on our facebook page seem to vanish. We realize that we are simply clods of dirt in which God has temporarily invested a spirit. When we join with others who are like-minded, there is no competition for who would be first. We have begun to discover the mind of Christ, "who, being in the form of God, did not consider it robbery to be equal with God" (Ph 2:7). It is a marvelous discovery. It is a discovery that is life changing. When we are brought to meekness, we begin to understand the purpose for our existence. We understand that we were created by Him and for Him (Cl 1:16).

Meekness is not synonymous with frailty. It is power under control. Moses was acclaimed by God to be a meek man. "Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men who were on the face of the earth" (Nm 12:3). Notice how the Holy Spirit wanted this great leader of a nation to be identified for posterity. In order to be "above," one has to go below. If we would pride ourselves with our own abilities to be "above" our fellow man, then we are following the ways of the world. If we entitle ourselves to be above other disciples, then we are seeking glory, not meekness. But if through meekness, others set us above, then we are on our way to spiritual greatness. Therefore, we will not seek the “chief seats” (Mt 23:6).

Meekness helps us understand the nature of the leaders whom Jesus would have among us. In response to James and John, and the other disciples who sought to compete for prominent positions after a worldly manner in order to exercise power, Jesus said, “And whoever of you desires to be first will be the bondservant of all” (Mk 10:44). As Moses, leadership among God’s people is through meekness. “But whoever desires to be great among you will be your servant” (Mk 10:43). This is not the world speaking. This is the One who said, “For even the Son of Man did not come to be served, but to serve, and to give His life a ransom for many” (Mk 10:45). The leader who seeks to lead through the delegation of responsibilities to others must caution himself if he is doing such in order to be served, or to make sure that the needs of others are being serviced.

The meek will inherit the earth simply because the earth will seek to follow them. It is only natural for men to follow the one who has the dirtiest towel (See Jn 13:1-20). When we meekly wash the feet of others through loving service, we seek to follow the God of the towel. And in so following this God, others follow our towel. The earth belongs to those who have made themselves the meek servants of the world. When the meek dedicate “themselves to the ministry of the saints,” the saints humbly submit to their service (1 Co 16:15,16). We are led by the meek, because it is they who service our needs.

D. Meekness produces hunger.

“Blessed are those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they will be filled” (Mt 5:6).

There is no desire to be filled, unless one realizes that he is spiritually empty. One does not recognize his spiritual emptiness unless he is meek of heart, and thus, is willing to accept spiritual filling from God. We cannot be filled with the Spirit if we are full of ourselves. One does not become meek of heart, until he mourns over his spiritual ineptitude and emptiness. And one does not mourn over his spiritual ineptitude until he confesses his spiritual poverty. It is then that we seek to fill the void of our emptiness with the word of God. Those who are not students of the Bible have a pseudo spirituality that is either controlled by another or sustained by self. The only thing that truly fills the emptiness of our soul is word from Him with whom we seek an eternal relationship. All other “fillings” only result in spiritualism. And when we are spiritualistic, we never know if we are right with our Creator.

The truly meek seek divine guidance. They hunger for the Bread of Life. Jesus fills our hunger. “I am the bread of life. He who comes to Me will never hunger. And He who believes in Me will never thirst” (Jn 6:35). The spiritually poor will find no real fulfillment until they find that which is above themselves. No amount of the world’s possessions can satisfy the inner yearnings of the one who seeks spiritual justification before His Creator. It is the way God made us. Men as C. S. Lewis, who wrote Mere Christianity, simply reasoned themselves out of atheism because they realized that there was fulfillment for their spiritual poverty only in faith. Paul wrote,

For the invisible things of Him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and divinity, so that they are without excuse (Rm 1:20).

If one would answer the natural call of the soul for his Creator, then he will find his way to God. God left enough evidence in creation to trigger one’s search for Him. Paul simply said that there is enough witness of God in that which has been created to direct one to begin his search in the direction of God. In 1976, Dr. Thomas B. Warren had a public discussion in Denton, Texas, with the world renowned atheist, Dr. Antony G. N. Flew. Flew argued his case the best one could in denying that intelligence permeated the universe, and thus was the origin of all life. Warren argued that it is more reasonable to believe on the basis that intelligence and design cannot be denied. Since that public forum decades ago, which drew up to five thousand people together to hear two respected philosophers debate the existence of God, Flew, in his recent conclusions concerning the intelligence embedded in the DNA of every cell, has reasoned that the existence of life cannot be accounted for on a naturalistic basis. And so, he has made his first steps toward belief. He has at least admitted that something was there, and here to create the intelligence that is embedded in the DNA of every cell. Do we see some “hungering” and “thirsting” from Dr. Flew in his old age?

“Hungering” and “thirsting” is an admission that we lack something in our inner soul. If we would relinquish to the “hungering” and “thirsting,” then we will find our way out of intellectual and emotional darkness into which we have so often entombed ourselves. We will find our way to the Bread of Life. And if we eat of the Bread, we will never hunger again.

One of the greatest illustrations of the yearning for spirituality in modern times took place after the Cultural Revolution of China. The Cultural Revolution was initiated by Chairman Mao Zedong of the Communist Party. It was launched in May 1966, and continued until its final demise in 1976. It was a movement to eradicate any form of capitalism and religion from society in order to establish the true Maoist policies of communism. A few years later in 1981, the Communist Party announced that it had eradicated the failed movement of Mao, declaring that the movement was ...

... responsible for the most severe setback and the heaviest losses suffered by the Party, the country, and the people since the founding of the People's Republic (11th Central Committee of the Communist Part of China, June 27, 1981).

And today there is no stopping of the revival of faith throughout China. It is a natural phenomenon of the swing of the spiritual pendulum of oppression to the free-will of the people to seek faith. As a result, faith is spreading like wild fire throughout the nation. The Cultural Revolution failed because it was a movement against the innate nature of man that was embedded by God in every soul since creation. When men strip themselves of pride and power, and are subsequently humbled to their knees, it is only then that the inner self is discovered. It is then that the journey begins to develop a spiritual giant. Oppressive governments may suppress this inner desire. But once the oppression is removed, society seeks to spiritually heal itself. As spiritual healing in society reacts to an oppressive past, society as a whole is on its way to making up for lost time.

The fountain of faith from which we must drink in order to reach mountain peaks of spiritually can come only from one source. “So then faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of Christ” (Rm 10:17). When speaking of spiritual growth, one thing is certain: Satan will seek to detour those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. One thing distinguishes true spiritual growth from spiritism. This faith originates from the word of God. If one seeks to grow spiritually outside the guiding principles of the word of God, then he will end up only religious, or worse, only “spiritual.” When we see people who are obsessed over Bible study, then we see people who are seeking to be more than simply religious. We see people who are searching for their Creator. Those who seek the creation only will end up with a religion they have created after their own desires. Those who seek the righteousness of God, end up with a faith that is based on the word of God.

The first stumbling block over which people usually fall on their quest for spiritual growth is to fall for the spiritual placebos of Satan. These detours come in many forms. Some have assumed that spiritual growth comes from a more organized religiosity. So creeds and catechism are written in order supposedly produce spirituality by making sure that the orders of “the church” are ritualistically obeyed. But such legal ordinances fail. They fail because it is the nature of ritual and order to stymie spiritual growth. If spiritual growth must be accomplished on the foundation of organized religiosity, then we will never reach our quest because we will always know that we are trying to orchestrate our own spiritual road maps to God.

Organized religion is burdened with an inherent system of death. The adherents know that the organization is man-made. They realize that their obedience to rituals is a meritorious effort that is based on their abilities to live up to their creeds. And if they have studied their Bibles enough to know that we are saved by grace, then they have also come to the conclusion that legal performances of man-made rituals and traditions will never atone for the sins over which we mourn. We must remember that the more ecclesiastically organized we become, the less spiritual we are. Ecclesiastical orders are an outward pretense to spirituality. This is true because we become so worried about keeping the ecclesiastical rites of our organization that we forget our spiritual well-being. At the end of the day, our spiritual growth is not based on inventing more orders of worship in order to become more spiritual. After we make our way through all the quagmire of religious orders, all that is necessary for spiritual sustenance is a little wine, a little bread and a book.

If we are to reach the spiritual heights to which we so earnestly desire, then only God can take us there. And the only way He can take us there is through His word. We must confess that the greatest spiritual ecstasy that came over us was when we spent ten hours a day deep in study of the word of God in order to write a commentary on the entire Old Testament. There is no word from the dictionary to which we could resort to explain the surreal emotional state of connection one has with God than when one is totally immersed in a study of the word of God. It is a feeling as if the world can simply pass by without notice. Social perils and international conflicts find no consideration in a mind that is whisked away into total communion with God. Our feeling was celebrated with the final period at the end of the last sentence. After that period was made, there was an inner urge to start it all over again. We long for that emotional environment, that suspended mind that was lifted above the affairs of this world and into the realm of a relationship with God that only His word can produce. We continue to hunger and thirst. We continue to involve our being in the ocean of His revelation.

You can go there too through the memorization of the Scriptures. We seem to have forsaken a culture that thrived on memorizing the word of God. For one example of the past, Fanny Crosby wrote almost 9,000 spiritual songs during her lifetime. By the time she was twelve years old, she had memorized the Bible books of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. She once wrote, “The Bible verses were like friends that cheered me up whenever I felt sad about not going to school.” And why could she not go to school? Six weeks after she was born, she was blinded because of medical malpractice. Since the time of her life in the nineteenth century, over 100,000,000 copies of her spiritual songs have been printed and sung worldwide. Many have been translated into hundreds of languages. Remember the following songs?

*All the Way My Savior Leads Me Blessed Assurance
Close to Thee
I Am Thine Oh Lord
Rescue the Perishing
Tell Me the Story of Jesus
To God be the Glory*

They were all written by a totally blind person who loved her Bible. Yes, we have fallen. We have fallen from an era when the word of God was most precious to our hearts. We feel it is time to call for a restoration to that which can satisfy our spiritual hungering and thirsting.

E. Hungering and thirsting produces mercy.

“Blessed are the merciful, for they will obtain mercy” (Mt 5:7).

It is at this stage in one’s adventure in spiritual growth that self-realization changes one’s spirit. This is the point in our journey where we encounter the signpost that reads, “Life Change Ahead.” We begin to understand what James wrote: “For judgment will be without mercy to the one who has shown no mercy” (Js 2:13). Those who realize that God has poured out His mercy on them, reciprocate with mercy toward others. This is the “stone-dropping” moment of spiritual growth. The judgmental crowd that surrounded a woman caught in the very act of adultery sought to trap Jesus with the question, “Now in the law, Moses commanded us that such a person should be stoned. But what do You say?” (Jn 8:5).

It was now time for reflection. Those who hunger and thirst after the word of God start looking in the mirror of the word of God. They look into the mirror of the word and see themselves (Js 1:23). Those who are not mourning over their sins, do not like what they see, and thus, they turn away (Js 1:24). But those who are remorseful over what they see, are changed forever. They are blessed in their change. “But he who looks into the perfect law of liberty and continues to abide in it, not being a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man will be blessed in his deed” (Js 1:25).

In the case of the those with stones in their hands, ready to cast them on the woman caught in adultery, Jesus said, “He who is without sin among you, let him be the first to cast a stone at her” (Jn 8:7). We can hear the stones drop with a thud to the ground as one-by-one the judges realized that they too were sinners.

But the unforgiving servant in a parable of Jesus was self-righteous and unforgiving (Mt 18:21-35). Once he had been forgiven a tremendous debt, he went out and found someone who owed him a trivial amount of money. He demanded, “Pay me what you owe” (Mt 18:28). The forgiven are often unforgiving. But the appreciative and mournful soul who has been forgiven so much, is always willing to pass on mercy to others.

God’s mercy and forgiveness in our lives obligates us. We are obligated to be merciful to others. Jesus taught the disciples to pray: “And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors” (Mt 6:12). It is for this reason that spiritual giants continue to grow. They realize that God’s mercy on them is contingent on their mercy that they extend toward others. By our mercy we extend to others we obtain the mercy of God. It is because His mercy is conditional that we are encouraged to remain on the road to mercy.

F. Mercy produces purity in heart.

“Blessed are the pure in heart, for they will see God” (Mt 5:8).

The merciful person starts to understand His creator who has extended mercy toward him. It is the same as having a loving spirit. “We love because He first loved us” (1 Jn 4:19). Therefore, “he who does not love does not know God, for God is love” (1 Jn 4:8). The loving person can “see” God, because he understands the nature of the God of love. Righteousness, faith, love and peace are to be characteristics of “those who call on the Lord out of a pure heart” (2 Tm 2:22). And thus, “to the pure all things are pure” (Ti 1:15). Paul reminded Titus, “But to those who are defiled and unbelieving, nothing is pure”

(Ti 1:15). But those who are of a pure heart can understand (“see”) God. They can see God because they are living the nature of God. And unless one lives mercy, he cannot understand the God of mercy.

The unbelieving and defiled do not understand who God is, for they create a god after their own unforgiving nature. Such was the spiritual problem of the scribes and Pharisees.

Woe to you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you are like whitewashed tombs and indeed appear beautiful outwardly, but within are full of dead men’s bones and of all uncleanness (Mt 23:27).

We place flowers on the coffin of the dead. In a similar way we often dress up in our “Sunday best,” but inwardly we are spiritually dead. Exterior beauty is no solution for interior death. But when one behaves mercifully toward others, then he begins his inward cleansing. It is then that he realizes that “the purpose of the commandment is love out of a pure heart, and a good conscience and a sincere faith ...” (1 Tm 1:5).

G. Purity of heart produces peacemakers.

“Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called the children of God” (Mt 5:9).

The Hebrew writer explains, “Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man will see the Lord” (Hb 12:14). Those who are of a pure heart understand the nature of God, and thus, they seek to establish peace among men as God brought peace between Himself and man through Jesus Christ. “For He [Jesus] is our peace, who has made both one ...” (Ep 2:14). Jesus not only brought peace between God and man, He also brought peace between all men. He “has broken down the middle wall of separation” between men, specifically between those who are of different cultures (Ep 2:14). If we would be a disciple of Jesus, therefore, we will be peacemakers, for such was the ministry of Jesus. Such was the ministry of God to man through Jesus.

Those who are characterized by the heart of God are peacemakers after the nature of their Father. Those who go forth to represent God, have shod their “feet with the preparation of the gospel of peace” (Ep 6:15). The peace was characteristic of the early disciples as they went forth to preach the gospel of peace between God and man. Their nature of peace even became their common greeting with one another. It was as Paul when he addressed the disciples in his letters: “Grace to you and peace from God ...” (Ph 1:2; see 1 Co 1:3; 2 Co 1:2; Gl 1:3; Ep 1:2). The early Christians went forth as peacemakers because they represented the God of peace (Ph 4:9). They were thus the children of the God of peace they proclaimed to the world.

The spiritual giants among us will be identified by their desire to bring peace, not contention and argument. While some reveal their immaturity through contention, those who began their spiritual journey to become peacemakers are revealed in times of conflict. When Paul wrote to Titus, he encouraged him to maintain his spirit of peace. When there were controversies concerning matters of opinion, Paul instructed that Titus should function as a peacemaker by not involving himself in meetings that produce contention.

But avoid foolish controversies and genealogies and contentions and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and worthless. Reject a factious man after the first and second admonition, knowing that such a man is perverted and is sinning, being self-condemned (Ti 3:9-11).

The peacemaker maintains peace by not showing up at the meetings that concern discussions over “unprofitable and worthless” controversies. He does not show up because such meetings generate more strife. “Avoid foolish and unlearned questions,” Paul wrote to Timothy, “knowing that they generate strife” (2 Tm 2:23). Sometimes peacemaking involves avoiding foolish meetings that are conducted over matters of nonsense. If one would judge a meeting to be over a matter of unprofitable and worthless discussions, then he would violate Paul’s instructions to avoid foolish controversies if he attended such a meeting. Those who would call such meetings are factious, perverted and sinning. They are self-condemned.

It is certain that when one has spiritually grown to be a peacemaker, he will be condemned by the contentious for not showing up at controversial meetings that are conducted by those who are sinning. Nevertheless, the peacemaker must remember that ...

... the servant of the Lord must not quarrel, but be gentle to all, able to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves, if God perhaps will grant them repentance leading to a full knowledge of the truth (2 Tm 2:24,25).

H. Peacemaking produces persecution.

“Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness’ sake” (Mt 5:10). “Blessed are you when people insult you and persecute you and falsely say all kinds of evil against you for My sake” (Mt 5:11).

The persecution of the peacemaker will come from two sources:

1. Persecution comes from the world: Jesus forewarned His disciples, “If they have persecuted Me, they will also persecute you” (Jn 15:20). “If the world hates you, you know that it hated Me before it hated you” (Jn 15:18). Jesus explained that because they did not conform to the ways of the world, then the world would pour out persecution upon them. “Because you are not of the world, but I chose you out of the world, therefore the world hates you” (Jn 15:19).

2. Persecution comes from the perverted: We must not conclude that the persecution of spiritual giants will only come from those who are worldly. The misguided religious leaders of Jesus’ day nailed Him to the cross. They were those who cried out to a Roman leader of the world, “Crucify Him. Crucify Him” (Lk 23:21).

Both Timothy and Titus were certainly persecuted when they did not show up at the meeting of those who sought to debate the meaningless issues of the perverted. Perverted debaters will most certainly slander their opponents when their calls for senseless controversies are not answered. When Timothy and Titus did not show up at the meetings over contentions and controversies, then certainly they were slandered because they followed the instructions of the Holy Spirit not to become involved in meaningless debates.

Spiritual giants must always keep in mind that those who call for meetings over senseless controversies, become arrogant when their pleas to debate are not heeded. They manifest their arrogance because they seek to impose their opinions on others through intimidation, or pronouncements that one is “dividing the church.” And since the sincere do not want to “divide the church,” they will often succumb to the proclamations of the perverted who are sinning and self-condemned. They will inadvertently allow the opinions of the arrogant to become law for the intimidated. The intimidated will often allow such by forsaking their freedom in Christ in order to please the opinionated person who seeks to either bind or loose his opinions. Those who spiritually grow in Christ, must expect the wicked tactics of the self-condemned to be launched against them.

When one’s journey of mourning has taken him from hopelessness in sin to the mountain peak of willingly being silent in times of persecution, then certainly he has reached the spiritual caliber of being able to kneel down, as Stephen, and say to his persecutors, “Lord, do not lay this sin to their charge” (At 7:60). It is then that we become “the salt of the earth” (Mt 5:13). We are then “the light of the world” (Mt 5:14). Jesus would conclude, “Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven” (Mt 5:16).

We conclude, therefore, that Jesus’ reference to “good works” in this statement is more than a reference to good behavior as a disciple. He was speaking of a demeanor of life. When the world observes the behavior of spiritual giants, they give glory to God who is the cause of our good life. True spirituality, therefore, will always bring glory to God, and not to ourselves. We must not, therefore, hide our spiritual behavior from those of the world. The world must know that there are spiritual giants in the land.

Chapter 9

BEAMING LIGHTS

It was once said, “An ounce of example is worth a pound of advice.” It is for this reason that people observe our behavior for six days throughout the week in order to determine if we mean what we profess on Sunday morning. Walking what we talk as Christians is a way of life. And until we walk our talk about being servants of Jesus, we are hypocrites before the world.

We know today that the plaster that was used years ago contained lime. Benjamin Franklin, as an early American farmer, tried to get his neighbors to use plaster to fertilize their fields in order to grow better crops. As most farmers, they were somewhat difficult to convince, for they depended on the “old ways of farming.” So with one of his fields, Franklin used plaster only on a certain part of the field. Once the crop grew, the neighbors could read where Franklin used the plaster. He had written with the plaster, “This has been plastered.”

Sometimes we need to use example, rather than words, in order to get the point across. At least this is what was behind Peter’s statement to wives who had unbelieving husbands: “... be submissive to your own husbands so that if any do not obey the word, they, without the word, may be won by the behavior [example] of the wives” (1 Pt 3:1).

Jesus said to “let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works ...” (Mt 5:16). The Holy Spirit says to young preachers to “be an example to the believers, in word, in behavior, in love, in spirit, in faith, in purity” (1 Tm 4:12). And shepherds must so live that they “have a good report from those outside ...” (1 Tm 3:7). Though we do not always live up to what we believe, at least those around us must see that we are making every effort to be like Jesus. We are giving our best to live Jesus as our light to the world.

We must not forget that simply because we do not live perfectly, this is not an excuse to hide our light. None of us is perfect. But every one of us is seeking to give it his best effort. If people are to understand what Christianity is, then they must see our efforts in action. Regardless of our imperfections in the specifics, there are at least some generics in shining our light before men that must identify us as disciples of Jesus.

A. The light of seeking God first:

Jesus said, “But seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness ...” (Mt 6:33). What sometimes happens in our lives is that we live the misinterpretation of what someone said, “Seek first the kingdom of men, and all righteousness will be added to you.” In the developed world this may be more typical of disciples than what Jesus actually meant. It might be good for the materialist to listen to the once famous and prosperous Paul after he realized that Jesus was Lord. “I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things” (Ph 3:8). Paul did not make this statement because he lamented over the loss of all things that he had as a Jewish Pharisee, which group of religious leaders were lovers of money (Lk 16:14). It was his transformed thinking that allowed him the opportunity to lose willingly everything for Christ. He footnoted the previous statement with the words, “I count them refuse so that I may gain Christ” (Ph 3:8). The Greek word for “refuse” is dung. Paul’s transformed mind led him to willingly discard what became repulsive to his transformed life. When that which we so treasure becomes repulsive as dung, then we know we have spiritually grown in our attitude toward the things of the world. There will always be a plateau of spiritual growth for those who clutch on to the things of this world.

We live in the world, and thus, we must use the things of the world to survive. This does not mean, however, that we obsess over the things of the world. It is always an inward struggle to live the spiritual example that the things of the world are not the priority of our lives. Paul wrote how to let go: “I have been crucified with Christ” (Gl 2:20). When one crucifies himself with Christ, he will transform in his mind how he sees the things of the world. Instead of laying up treasures on earth, one starts using the treasures of the world in order to lay up treasures in heaven. It is as Jesus said, “Do not lay up for yourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust destroy .... But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven ...” (Mt 6:19,20). Learning to let go of treasures on this earth is an indication of spiritual growth. It may be time to empty out our storeroom of treasures and have a garage sale. When we empty our storeroom of earthly treasures, it is then that we will feel a great sense of release from the confines of this world. We will never really be free until our storeroom is empty. This is what Paul wrote:

I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things. I count them refuse so that I may gain Christ (Ph 3:8).

We identify the spiritual giants among us by how empty we find their treasure room. But we must not confine “treasures” to worldly possessions alone. We must consider our focus and time. In a world where the cliché “soccer mom” is known throughout society, we know we might have some struggles as to where our focus is in reference to leading our children spiritually. We have raised up a generation where our mothers are more concerned about getting their children to their next ball game, than in getting them to the next assembly of the saints on time. Where are the “Bible class moms” among us?

In an economic society where the average citizen has been allowed to borrow beyond his ability to make payments on his house, have we betrayed what is really first in our lives? The recession of 2008 will go down in church history as the recession that revealed what some Christians really believed should be first in their lives. It was not the possession of a home, but the possession of a house that was far beyond one’s means for which to make the loan payments. We must never forget that our example to the world must reflect what Jesus said.

No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be devoted to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and wealth (Mt 6:24).

B. The light manifested through dress:

We hear few discussions today on the dress of disciples. It is as if Christians are now allowed to dress themselves in any manner possible. Some even believe that it is within the realm of freedom that Christians are allowed to dress in any manner, regardless if it is judged to be modest by the standards of the world. It is true that there is a great freedom in this area of Christian behavior. However, there are some key statements in Scripture that limit the manner by which Christians are to attire themselves in the public. This is particularly true in reference to the sisters. Since God created men to be sexually aroused through sight, we can understand why the Holy Spirit cautioned the sisters concerning their clothing before the public. It need not be mentioned that the manner by which a woman dresses herself is an indication of her spiritual presentation.

Peter instructed, “Your adornment should not be outward, as plaiting the hair and wearing of gold, or putting on of clothes” (1 Pt 3:3). The phrase “putting on of clothes” defines the meaning of the statement. Of course women should put on clothes. It would be obscene for them to be naked. Putting on clothes, therefore, is assumed. What Peter teaches is that the Christian sister should not “put on clothes” in a manner that draws attention to herself. She is not to advertise her body by the manner of her dress. She can wear gold, but she should not wear gold in a manner by which she draws attention to herself. She can plait her hair, but not in a manner by which she draws attention to herself. On the contrary, her presentation must “be the hidden person of the heart, with the imperishable quality of a meek and quiet spirit, which is precious in the sight of God” (1 Pt 3:4).

When Christian sisters dress to be precious in the sight of God, then they manifest to the world their spiritual demeanor. When a Christian sister dresses, she should ask herself, “Is this dress precious in the sight of God?” When Christian women dress in a manner by which they seek to use their bodies as a billboard advertisement for sexuality, then we know that their dress is not precious in the sight of God.

Paul instructed “that women dress themselves in modest clothing” (1 Tm 2:9). The word “modest” places a boundary on how women are to dress. Since there is such a thing as “modest,” then there is such a thing as immodest. We may differ in our opinion as to what is immodest, but the fact remains that there is immodest dress. The spiritual minded woman will seek to determine what is modest dress, and thus make a decision to stay within the boundary of modesty.

Since God created men to be sexually motivated through sight, then at least the Christian men have something to say in this matter. In fact, modesty is in reference to how the men feel about a woman’s dress, not what the women think. Christian sisters may think that a particular style of dress is modest to them, but the men may have a completely different view. When determining modesty, therefore, it is the brethren who are to determine the boundaries, not the sisters.

In the context of dressing modestly, Paul does give some guidelines. The Christian sisters must dress “with decency and sobriety” (1 Tm 2:9). Again, if there is clothing that is decent, then there is clothing that is indecent. Spiritual women seek to dress decently.

“Sobriety” refers to the attitude that the woman wants to reflect to the public through her dress. By the dress of the Christian woman, the public can determine the focus of the woman. If a woman craves the attention of others, then her craving is often reflected in the manner by which she dresses herself. This is where a Christian father or husband can advise a sister concerning her dress. Fathers who allow their daughters, or wives, to broadcast their bodies as objects of sexual arousal of other men are certainly failing in their duties as disciples of Christ.

In order to clothe oneself with decency and sobriety, Paul instructs that the woman should not present herself to the public with emphasis on “braided hair or gold or pearls or costly clothing” (1 Tm 2:9). The societies in which the Christian sisters lived in the first century were not much different than they are today. The Holy Spirit is admonishing the Christian sisters not to use braided hair, gold, pearls and costly clothing as a means to broadcast oneself as the queen of the party.

As Christians, we must focus on being “clothed with humility” (1 Pt 5:5). Our focus must not be on the outward clothing, but the inward heart of a godly sister. The Holy Spirit wrote, “For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ” (Gl 3:27). Our presentation to the public through clothing will reveal whether we have dressed ourselves with Christ, or whether we are still seeking to conform to the dress codes of the world. As baptized disciples, Christian disciples must “be renewed in the spirit of your mind, and to put on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness” (Ep 4:23,24). When a child of God awakes in the morning and prepares to clothe herself for the public, she must remember that when she was baptized, she “put on the new man” (Cl 3:10). The old man was washed away in the waters of baptism. And when the old man was washed away, then the new man must empty his closet of all immodest clothes.

C. The light of good habits:

Our habits reveal our spiritual character. They do so because bad habits are an indication that we have not brought everything of this world that may control us under control. It was for this reason that Paul wrote, “I discipline my body and bring it into subjection, lest by any means, ... I myself should be disqualified” (1 Co 9:27).

Every emotion and action of the Christian must be brought under control. And to do so, it takes a great deal of discipline. Discipline building can be fine tuned by fasting from some particular food we crave to eat or activity in which we like to engage. We once had a friend who was a military colonel. Playing golf with his military officers was a primary activity in which the officers of the base participated on a regular basis. One day my friend woke up and discovered that he had an obsession with playing golf. It was such an obsession that he neglected his family in order to play golf with his friends. When we met him several years after retiring from the military, he had not played one game of golf since. He said that golf had controlled his life, and as a Christian, there were more important things than the pleasures of golf. He was on a prolonged fast from golf.

Moses did not engage in the obsession of golf. But there were other pleasures in Egypt in which royalty could engage themselves in order to be entertained. But when he discovered his destiny, it was written about him: “By faith Moses ... refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter; choosing rather to suffer mistreatment with the people of God than to temporarily enjoy the pleasures of sin” (Hb 11:24,25). We are sure that “pleasures of sin” included habits that were ungodly. But if a particular habit is not ungodly, but controls one’s life, it can become ungodly if it hinders our relationships with others.

Habits reveal the focus of our lives. This is what Paul had in mind when he wrote, “Therefore, whether you eat or drink or whatever you do, do all to the glory of God” (1 Co 10:34). In another similar statement he said, “And whatever you do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus ...” (Cl 3:17). Now where would we place our habits, or our obsessions? If we are engaged in something that cannot be named under Jesus, or eaten in thanksgiving to God, then it is time to reconsider our habits. We all live with habits, but our habits must not inhibit our spiritual growth. The things that we personally enjoy should not control our lives to the point that we have no time to minister to the needs of others. Ministry means time, and if our time is consumed with ourselves, then we have no ministry time for others.

The Americans use mealie (maize) to cook what they call cornbread. Eating cornbread is great! The story was told that there was the man who ate cornbread in the morning for breakfast. He carried cornbread to work to eat at lunch. He snacked on cornbread. If there was no cornbread in the house, he would immediately ask his wife to make some cornbread. There is nothing wrong with cornbread, but it had become wrong for the “cornbread man” because he obsessed over cornbread. He needed to discipline his body not to crave cornbread.

Peter would exhort the “cornbread man” to add “to knowledge self-control, and to self-control patience ...” (2 Pt 1:6). Paul would admonish the “cornbread man” to be self-controlled (Ti 1:8), knowing that self-control is a fruit of the Spirit (Gl 5:23). And if self-control is a manifestation of the fruit of the Spirit, then one who is out of control with a habit is not manifesting the fruit of the Spirit in his life.

Sometimes our habits infringe on others, and thus become very selfish. Smoking is such a habit. Most nonsmokers will agree that smoking is not only a danger to one’s health, but it is also one of the most selfish habits a person can have. The smoker is more concerned about the enjoyment of his habit than those nonsmokers around him who have to breathe his leftover smoke. The first admonition the smoker violates is the Spirit’s instruction that we be considerate of others (Hb 10:24).

Romans 15:1 should be considered here: “We then who are strong ought to bear the weaknesses of the weak and not to please ourselves.” Any bad habit that infringes on another should be terminated immediately. Christianity is about relationships, and if we harbor a habit that may be right within itself, but infringes on the conscience of other brothers, then we have no right to continue the habit. In the context of Romans 15, strong brethren are given the responsibility to encourage weak brethren who still associated the eating of meat with pagan sacrifices. The strong had the right to eat the meat, but if they encouraged their weak brethren to eat against their conscience, then they were not walking in love. Christian relationships mean that “if your brother is grieved with your meat, you are no longer walking according to love. Do not destroy him with your meat for whom Christ died” (Rm 14:15). Paul concluded, “It is good neither to eat meat, nor to drink wine, nor do anything by which your brother stumbles” (Rm 14:21). This is good advice when considering those habits that infringe on one’s brother in Christ, or present an example that would steal away the time of a brother that should be devoted to others. If we persist in maintaining a habit that offends, then we are not walking in love. Paul wrote, “Happy is he who does not condemn himself in that thing which he approves” (Rm 14:22). Something may be right within itself, but if it hinders the spiritual growth of one’s brother then it should be suspended.

The story is told of a bird who became so hungry, that in order to satisfy his lust of the flesh and eat, he traded with a sly fox a feather for a worm. After the first trade, he immediately flew away. However, since the fox was the source of the worms, then the next day when the bird was hungry, he traded a feather for a worm. Instead of taking the time to hunt for a worm, he returned to the fox and traded another feather for a worm every day. When he had traded so many feathers that he could not fly away, the fox said, “Now I am hungry.” Habits have the habit of bringing us into the captivity of our own selves.

Our habits can build us up or brings us down. It is by the example of our habits that people determine where our focus is in life. Habits can identify whether our focus is on spiritual things, or things of this world wherein we seek to please ourselves above others. Decades ago someone once wrote,

You tell on yourself by the friends you seek,
By the very manner in which you speak,
By the way you employ your leisure time,
By the use you make of dollar and dime.

You tell what you are by the things you wear,
By the spirit in which your burdens bear,
By the kind of things at which you laugh,
By the records you play on the phonograph.

You tell what you are by the way you walk,
By the things of which you delight to talk,
By the manner in which you bear defeat,
By so simply a thing as how you eat.
By the books you choose from off the shelf,
In these ways and more you tell on yourself.
So there’s really not a particle of sense,
In an effort to keep up false pretense.

The Holy Spirit allowed Paul to use his life as an example for others to follow. “Be imitators of me even as I also am of Christ” (1 Co 11:1). But for some, it is what Montaigne said of himself, “Virtuous men do good by setting themselves up as models before the public, but I do good by setting myself as a warning.”

The Holy Spirit knew that we needed models to follow in order to exemplify Jesus in our lives. We follow Paul insofar as we see Christ in Paul. Every disciple of Jesus must understand that he is the example for someone to follow. Either the example will lead others closer to Jesus, or the example will give others an excuse not to go down our road. We do not live unto ourselves, and thus we become responsible for those who would follow us. We must always remember as some preacher said,

You can never tell when you do an act,
Just what the result will be.
But with every kind deed you are sowing a seed,
Though the harvest you cannot see.

We would be as Paul exhorted the Philippians, “Only let your behavior be worthy of the gospel of Christ ...” (Ph 1:27). And because Paul submitted his behavior to be worthy of the gospel, he could write, “Brethren, be followers together of me, and note those who so walk according to the example you have in us” (Ph 3:17).

D. The light of salted speech:

Someone once said, “Your manner of speech is an indication of your manner of life.” And true this is. Jesus said, “For out of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaks” (Lk 6:45). Our spirituality is manifested by the things we say, by the things we talk about, and by the jokes at which we laugh. It is our speech that either reaffirms our Christianity or betrays our hypocrisy. For some it is as James wrote, “Out of the same mouth proceed blessing and cursing” (Js 3:10). As disciples of Jesus, we know that such things should not be. But sometimes, the tongue “is an unruly evil full of deadly poison” (Js 3:8).

The only guard one has against an unruly tongue is to train our speech by our focus on the word of God. It is as Peter exhorted, “If anyone speaks, let him speak as the oracles of God” (1 Pt 4:11). When the word of God is on one’s mind at all times, then he will direct his speech according to the oracles of God. One can always determine if a person is a student of the Bible. His words and phrases in his speech continually reflect on the vocabulary of the Bible and events recorded in Bible times. If one is filled with the speech of the world, then his speech will betray him.

E. The light of submission:

The spiritual person manifests a spirit of submission to the needs of others. He has submitted to the will of God by being born again in the waters of baptism. As a disciple, he continually submits to the needs of his brothers and sisters in Christ, and those of the world in which he lives (Gl 6:10). It is as Jesus said, “And whoever of you desires to be the first will be the bondservant of all” (Mk 10:44).

The Christian’s life began with the call: “... submit yourselves to God” (Js 4:7). This life-style was initiated with our personal submission to God, but is carried over into every aspect of our lives. “Wives, be submissive to your own husbands ...” (1 Pt 3:1). Disciples are continually “submitting to one another in the fear of God” (Ep 5:21). “Obey those who lead you and be submissive” (Hb 13:17).

*I urge you, brethren, you know the household of Stephanas, that it is the firstfruits of Achaia, and that they have dedicated themselves to the ministry of the saints, that you submit to such, and to everyone who works with us and labors” (1 Co 16:15,16).

Need we go on? The spirit of submission is what characterizes those who seek to grow spiritually. If there is no submission, but only rebellion, then one has sacrificed his opportunity to grow spiritual for the sake of having one’s own way. Our example of submission to our God and the needs of His people, is one of the most powerful means by which we draw people to Christ. The spirit of submission develops our personality to be approachable. People are drawn to those who seek to submit to their needs.

The world believes that it is an oxymoron that leadership among the disciples of Jesus is by submission to those who are the greatest slaves. In the world, leaders take command by authority and position. But those who would lead among the submissive disciples of Jesus are those who dedicate themselves to submit to the needs of the submitted. Is this not what Jesus taught His disciples in Mark 10:42,43? When the disciples put his principle of submission into action, they truly turned the world upside down.

*You know that those who are recognized as rulers over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them. And their great ones exercise authority over them. But it will not be so among you. But whoever desires to be great among you will be your servant.

We know the spiritual giants among us by Jesus’ concluding statement on the subject: “And whoever of you desires to be first will be the bondservant of all” (Mk 10:44).

Book 62

Dead Preachers

For the sake of the present and future existence of our faith, Paul made one statement that should move us to search our Bibles. He wrote, “Now these things happened to them as an example, and they were written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the ages have come” (1 Co 10:11). We know that Jesus nailed to the cross the Sinai law that God had given to Israel. But in nailing the Sinai law to the cross, He did not assume that we should discard Old Testament history and wisdom. God raised up preachers (prophets) in the days of Israel’s rebellion. From the Holy Spirit-recorded documents of these preachers, we have a historical account of things that happened to God’s people from the beginning of time. From these people, God expects us to learn in order that we do not follow any example of their rebellion, but follow after those who remained faithful. Paul wrote to Christians in Rome, “For whatever things were written before were written for our learning ...” (Rm 15:4). Those things that happened then are often so strikingly similar to things we experience today. They are so similar that we are compelled as preachers to cry out for repentance. We feel compelled to cry out to a generation today that seems to be bent on the repetition of history. So we caution ourselves not to repeat the sins of the fathers. We see so many similarities between then and now that we should be on our knees in repentance in order to restore our souls to the Father who is bringing all things to a conclusion. Therefore, in order to keep ourselves in a spirit of restoration, we seek to listen to the dead preachers of the past who continue to live today through the record of their inspired documents.

It was the task of God’s prophets to keep Israel pointed in the direction of God’s purpose for the existence of Israel. In times of rebellion and apostasy, it was especially significant that the prophets preach a clear message of repentance and judgment to a people who seemed to be determined to go in their own direction, a direction of rebellion against the will of God. Though the prophets ministered the word of God throughout the history of Israel, the “writing prophets” ministered primarily after the dividing of the twelve tribes into two nations. In this division into two kingdoms, the ten tribes of the north were commonly referred to as Israel (the northern kingdom). The southern two tribes were referred to as Judah (the southern kingdom). The mission of the prophets was the following:

Yet the Lord testified against Israel and against Judah by the prophets and by all the seers, saying, “Turn from your evil ways and keep My commandments and My statutes, according to all the law that I commanded your fathers [at Mount Sinai], and which I sent to you by My servants the prophets (2 Kg 17:13).

A. The prophet:

The term “prophet” is probably one of the most confused terms used by modern-day religionists. When the term is used today, most people believe that reference is to someone who can tell us something that is going to happen in the future. And then there are those prophets today who presume to prophesy the end of the world. These religious charlatans come and go without their predictions of the end being fulfilled. Nevertheless, fickle people simply wait for the next prognosticator to come along in order to have their ears tickled with “end-of-time” predictions (2 Tm 4:3). And thus, the religious world today is “tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of teaching, by the trickery of men in cleverness to the deceitfulness of error” (Ep 4:14).

The presumptuous prophets of today find their validation in a misunderstanding of the ministry of the writing prophets of the Old Testament. When most hear the word “prophet,” they think of one who is foretelling the future. This was certainly true with some of the prophets whose writings are part of the Old Testament. However, this was only a small part of their ministry as a prophet.

The word “prophet” meant “a spokesman for God.” And as God’s spokesman, it was the work of the prophet to do what God intended him to do, as is explained in the preceding statement of 2 Kings 17:13. Prophets were to go among God's people in order to preach the commandments and statutes of the law that God revealed on Mount Sinai and delivered through Moses. Their ministry was in preaching and teaching. In reference to their call for repentance in the times of Israel's apostasy, they proclaimed the future captivity of the people if they did not turn from the error of their ways. This was not a new message. The prophets simply stated what God knew they would do, and thus, recorded the warning in the law (Dt 31:14-21).

During the days of Saul and David, there was a "company" of prophets who ministered the word of God to the people (1 Sm 19:20; see 1 Kg 20:41; 2 Kg 2:3). It was the work of the "sons of the prophets" to go among the people in order to teach, exhort and admonish. It was not their primary work to foretell the future. They spoke of destruction in the future only if the people moved away from the law of God (See Dt 31:14-21).

Because many today have determined that their ministry as a prophet is taken from the example of a few Old Testament prophets who wrote of future events, they conclude that the primary ministry of the prophet is to speak of future events. But this is a twisted understanding of the ministry of the Old Testament prophets. Though God gave "short term" prophecies to be fulfilled in order to confirm a prophet, the prophet's ministry was not in foretelling the future. It was in preaching the word of God to the people in order to encourage repentance. Those who did not know the Sinai law were not, and could not, be prophets of God. The same would be true today. Anyone who would presume to be a prophet/preacher today, but does not read and study his Bible, cannot be a prophet/preacher.

Almost all the prophets who moved among the people of God throughout the history of Israel never wrote one inspired piece of Old Testament literature. Throughout the history of Israel, there were hundreds of prophets. We have only a few whose prophecies of future things in the history of Israel were recorded. These written prophecies are a part of our Bible. But we should never think that this was the extent of the prophet's work in order to keep the people of God directed to the Messiah who was to come. Therefore, when considering the recorded prophets of the Old Testament, we must not conclude that what is stated in the writings of the recorded prophets was the primary message of the prophets. If we do this, then we will have a distorted view of the ministry of the prophets (preachers) as they worked among the people of God throughout the history of Israel.

It is interesting to note that most of the prophets were products of rural Palestine. When the twelve tribes entered the land around 1,400 B.C., every tribe was allotted a portion of land that they were to put into production for the livelihood of their families. God intended that Israel be a rural-farming society in which every person was to live off the land from the fruits of his own labors. The Levites were given the cities. The farmer/herdsman supported the Levites in their allotted cities. The rural economy of Israel went well for over 500 hundred years after the Israelites first settled in the land.

God called many of His prophets from their farms. He knew that the farmers and herdsman had remained close to Him in nature, and thus, the farmer/herdsman had the spiritual heart of where He wanted the people to be in their relationship with Him. The solitude of the farm culture produced a person whose focus was more on spiritual things, than the social-material overload of the city. And as this author has experienced, there is a connection with God through nature that is unique in farm life, and not available in the concrete jungles of urban centers. Urban centers produce a social and material overload that distracts from the simple life of the farm.

The farmer/herdsman's connection with the Creator is not something that can be produced as effectively in a complex social/business urban environment wherein inhabitants are struggling to survive. We feel that the unique rural personality that was developed in the solitude of nature was more suitable for God's use in representing Him before a people who had disconnected with Him. We affirm, therefore, that most of the prophets originated from the rural areas of Palestine. They were men and women who could write material as Psalm 23. These were words that could only come from a herdsman prophet, and thus, explain the relationship that God intends for each of us to have with Him.

B. Test of a prophet:

God knew that there would always be those who would rise up among His people and presume to be prophets for the people. Since the people would have a difficult time separating the false prophets from the true prophets, He gave two tests that would determine if one were a true prophet of God, or simply some self-proclaimed religionist who wanted to be someone special among the people. Since there are always too many of those who have too much pomp and pride, and thus, want to proclaim themselves to be a prophet of God, the people of God must always resort to these tests by which they can determine if a self-proclaimed prophet is a fraud, or truly one who is sent from God. If people today would simply use these two tests of a prophet, there would be few problems in sorting out the assortment of self-proclaimed prophets who stand up today and assume that they are speaking for God:

1. The foretold events of the future must come to pass: As you read through the following test by which a prophet was to be judged a true prophet, think of all those modern-day, self-proclaimed prophets whose prophecies of future events never came to pass. According to the following test of a prophet, they would be judged false prophets:

But the prophet who will presume to speak a word in My name that I have not commanded him to speak, or who will speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet will die. And if you say in your heart, “How will we know the word that the Lord has not spoken?” When a prophet speaks in the name of the Lord, if the thing does not follow or come to pass, that is the thing that the Lord has not spoken. The prophet has spoken it presumptuously. You will not be afraid of him (Dt 18:20-22).

The above was written by Moses before Israel went in to possess the land of promise. Before any prophets were raised up among them, they were given this test of a prophet. Many years later, after Israel had listened to hundreds of presumptuous false prophets, who eventually led them into captivity, God again reminded the people that the fulfillment of prophecy was the real test of a true prophet:

The prophet who prophesies of peace, when the word of the prophet will come to pass, then will the prophet be known that the Lord has truly sent him (Jr 28:9).

The historical context of this statement occurred when the false prophet Hananiah said there would be peace in the land. However, Jeremiah was saying that the Babylonians were about to conquer the city of Jerusalem. The people had listened to the false prophets for so long that it was too late to repent and escape the impending termination of the theocracy of Israel in the land of Palestine. Because they listened to the false prophets, they would never again reside as an independent theocratic nation in the land of promise. They would not because they listened to self-proclaimed prophets who spoke well of their rebellious behavior and beliefs.

We believe the same religious environment exists today among those who are obsessed with prophecies upon which to base their faith. There are too many self-proclaimed prophets today who presumptuously speak of future events. And because the people are so fascinated with these predictions, they will not, as the Israelites, turn away from the exciting stories about end-of-time predictions. When our faith is based more on what could happen in the future than what happened in the past on the cross, then we will go from one prophet to another in search of some validation for our faith.

The test to determine a true prophet is so simple. Regardless of the simplicity of the test, however, the test is ignored in the religious world today as it was ignored among the apostate Israelites during the latter years of Israel. The true prophets of God were given short-term knowledge of future events in order that they be validated as true prophets of God. But this opportunity was not given to self-proclaimed predictionists who claimed to be prophets. Nevertheless, the people still listened to the false prophets, rather than the true prophets of God.

When the people did accept false prophets who presumptuously spoke their predictions, God challenged these prophets to be brought forth before the people in order that their claims be tested (See Is 43:9,10). If what was spoken by a certain predictionist did not come to pass, then that person was a false prophet. And to emphasize the seriousness of presuming to be a prophet of God, false prophets were to be put to death (Dt 18:20-22).

Some will wonder why the people were so eager to listen to the false prophets. There is a simple answer to this problem about which the apostle Paul wrote.

For the time will come when they will not endure sound teaching. But to suit their itching ears, they will surround themselves with teachers who will agree with their own desires (2 Tm 4:3).

“Itching ears” means that the people seek to create a religion after their own desires. And in order to feel good in their religious behavior, they seek those who will condone their beliefs and behavior. Therefore, the people will surround themselves with those who proclaim that they are the prophets of God, and thus, these false prophets will speak those things the people want to hear. What Paul is saying is that presumptuous men will simply take advantage of the opportunity that is presented by people who no longer have a desire to be taught the sound teaching of the Bible.

We know when we are in apostasy, therefore, when there arises among us so many prophets (predictionists) who presume to be speaking for God. The presumptuous false prophet is only the manifestation of the apostate state of the people who no longer study their Bibles. The people find it easier to listen to some self-proclaimed prophet, than to open their Bibles and be noble minded as the Bereans who daily searched the Scriptures (At 17:11).

We must always keep in mind that there are some very crafty people in the religious world who have a great deal of skill in deceiving people. Therefore, in order not to be spiritually immature in the faith, and thus “tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of teaching, by the trickery of men in cleverness to the deceitfulness of error,” we must open our Bibles (Ep 4:14).

Those who have a tendency to be tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of teaching concerning prophecy must remember one very important point: If a Bible interpreter develops from his own interpretation some calculated theory that is unique concerning the signs of the times, or end of time, then we can be assured that he is wrong.

Understanding prophecy has always been a group matter, not an individual opportunity. Though the people of the Old Testament did not understand all that was revealed in a particular prophecy, they as a group at least knew that no one individual had an advantage to understand any particular prophecy. Prophecy was given for the benefit of the group to understand, not for any particular individual to interpret.

There was no such thing as inspired interpretation of the prophecies of the Old Testament. Neither does such exist today. If one would presumptuously assume that he has a particular insight into prophecy that others do not have, then we know that such a person is not interpreting prophecy according to the common means by which God intended the common person to read the prophecy and understand. Again, there is no such teaching as “inspired interpretation.” The Bible was written to common folks, who, upon study can understand the word of God (See 2 Tm 2:15). Some things may be hard to understand, but they are not impossible to understand (See 2 Pt 3:15,16).

The person who has a tendency to be tossed to and fro should remember all the presumptuous seers of the past who based their interpretation of prophecy on some presumed date of fulfillment. The date came and went without the fulfillment of the prophecy of some end-of-time event. One should ask himself if he is now tossed to another prophet in order to believe his presumptuous predictions of the end of the world.

2. Speak according to the will of God. This second test of a true prophet is objective. It is a solid foundation upon which one can determine if one is either a true or false prophet. A true prophet would never speak anything that was contrary to the already revealed word of God. A true prophet would always speak according to what Peter wrote: “If anyone speaks, let him speak as the oracles of God” (1 Pt 4:11).

God is not a God of contradictions. He would never speak anything that contradicted that which He had already revealed. In the early church, and in absence of the yet-to-be written New Testament books, the disciples were given the miraculous gift of testing the word of those who claimed to be spokesmen for God (1 Jn 4:1). As a result of this testing, some were proved to be liars (See Rv 2:2). When Peter made the statement, “If anyone speaks, let him speak as the oracles of God,” He had in mind a list of false prophets who had throughout history led the people of God astray with their presumptuous predictions.

As in the first century, we will always have this most powerful test of anyone who would claim to be a prophet of God. This test is particularly in reference to obedience to the gospel. Paul defined the gospel (good news) as the death of Jesus for our sins, His burial, and resurrection for our hope (1 Co 15:1-4). He also revealed that disciples are immersed in water (baptized) in order to obey the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus for the remission of sins (At 2:38; Rm 6:1-6). And if one does not obey the gospel for remission of sins, then he will be separated from God for eternity (2 Th 1:6-9). If one professes to be a prophet of God today, but does not teach this message of the gospel, then he or she is a false prophet! We should then listen to the words of Moses: “The prophet has spoken it presumptuously. You will not be afraid of him” (Dt 18:22). Any self-proclaimed spokesman for God who does not preach the gospel, and obedience thereof, cannot be a true spokesman for God.

We are blessed today with the written word of God. For this reason, every Christian can have a copy of the Bible by which to know the word of God and test those who presume to be teachers of the word. Having a copy of the Old Testament law was not always possible during the era of the Old Testament prophets. Therefore, the people could know the law only as it was taught them through the teaching ministry of the Levites and prophets. The preachers (prophets) were inspired to know the will of God, and thus, they preached to the people by inspiration. The Levites studied the law, and then they taught it to the people when the people came with their sacrifices.

In the first century, and before the writing and distribution of numerous copies of the New Testament Scriptures, the gifts of the Holy Spirit were given to the early disciples by the laying on of the apostles’ hands

(See At 8:18,19). One of these gifts was the testing of the spirits (1 Co 12:10). But when copies of the written Scriptures were circulated throughout the churches, there was no more the need of the directly inspired New Testament prophets. And thus, there was no more the need for the miraculous gift of testing the prophets (1 Jn 4:1; Rv 2:2). Every Christian today has the privilege and opportunity to test any prophet (preacher) by the New Testament that he has in his hand.

The fact that most people do not study their Bibles today has laid the foundation for many self-proclaimed prophets to arise and take advantage of the innocent. As long as people refuse to study the Bible there will always exist those opportunists who seek a following by leading others to and fro with their meaningless predictions. The only way to bring down the opportunistic prophet is to do what God's people of old did. They tested the prophets by the existing word of God. People today must be encouraged to study the word of God and test every self-proclaimed prophet. A finger on a passage and a smile on one's face will always lead to the vanquishing of false prophets.

C. Prophecy and Prediction:

During the era of the Old Testament prophets, prophecy was generally unique with the faith of Israel. Buddhism, and other religions that are not focused on the Bible, did not resort to prophecy in order to gain supporters or validate the faith of the supporters. The prophets of these religions were believed because the religion of the prophets was first believed. But with Israel, the prophets existed because the people had forsaken the law of God. In the religious world today, Christendom abounds with "prophets" who purport to pronounce teachings and end-of-time events outside the clear teachings of the word of God, but according to the religion of self-proclaimed prophets. The people believe such prophets because they believe the religion of the prophets.

We live in an era of predictionists, who, through their practice of deceiving their adherents into believing their assumptions, are eager to gain an audience for the benefit of financial gain. The definition of two words will help clear up most of the confusion, and thus, aid faithful truth-seekers to make a distinction between the true prophet of God, and the opportunistic and self-appointed predictionist. As we venture through a study of the prophets of the Old Testament, we must keep the following definitions in mind as the Holy Spirit sought to make a distinction between the true prophets of God and the false prophets who stood against God's men.

1. Prophecy: When forth-telling something in the future, the true prophet of God announced something that was often totally new and without any hints by immediate surroundings. In fact, when the Old Testament prophets announced events concerning the future, it was usually events that involved a new paradigm of how God would be working among His people. The new paradigm was so different, that the prophets' immediate audiences had a difficult time believing what the prophets were saying.

In the historical context of the writing prophets, the prophet usually proclaimed (A) that once the northern and southern kingdoms of Israel were terminated, a remnant of Israel would return to the promised land in order to identify again the people of Israel until (B) the new paradigm of the Messianic age of the Branch was revealed. The immediate audience could have hope in the prophecy of a remnant, but they had little understanding of the gospel age of the Messiah that was coming. And because they had little understanding of the coming of the Messiah, they did not understand the details of Messianic prophecies. The prophecies were understood only when they were fulfilled. The New Testament, therefore, is our "dictionary" of fulfilled prophecy.

2. Prediction: Prediction of future events is based on hints of surrounding events. The predictionist bases his proclamations of future events around the present circumstances in which he lives. For example, in 1994 we could have made the prediction that the African National Congress (ANC) would win all the elections of the country for the next twenty years. But our prediction would have been based on the fact that the country of South Africa was at least 75% ANC, and would remain close to that percentage for the next twenty years. If we had made the prediction based on the advantageous percentage of the ANC, then would we now be proclaimed a "prophet"? Some have self-proclaimed themselves to be prophets in a similar manner. What is unfortunate is that people know their Bibles so little that they cannot make a distinction between true prophecy and prediction.

Now when a predictionist becomes bold and arrogant, he will often make proclamations of events outside the indicators of his present circumstances. He will take his calculator or computer and go to the Scriptures in order to calculate the end of the world. Multitudes upon multitudes of such predictionists have plagued Christendom for centuries with their presumptuous postulations in reference to the end of times. But the calculated dates of supposedly end-time events have come and gone without being fulfilled. Nevertheless, faithful, if not gullible adherents to their favorite predictionists, buy the books and wait for the next prognosticator to come along and tease their imagination. Such is the religious world in which we now live, which religious world has existed since people have refused to use the Bible as the foundation of their faith.

In our study of the prophets, we must at least learn that the religious environment in which the true prophets of God lived, is similar to that in which we live today. There were more false prophets in existence throughout Israel at any one time than there were true prophets of God. In fact, the situation was so dire at one time in the history of Israel that the false prophets outnumbered the true prophets by a ratio of 850 to 1. One true prophet, Elijah, stood alone against the proclamations of 450 Baal prophets and 400 Asherah prophets who were working against him (See 1 Kg 18). The opposition is no less today as true preachers of the word of God stand against the horde of false predictionists who pass themselves off as prophets of God. We are willing to work with such ratios of opposition simply because we know that the word of God will always prevail over those prophetic practitioners who seek to inflate pomp and purse at the expense of a “itching-ear” people who are willing to be led about by crafty men (Ep 4:14).

D. Major and Minor prophets:

Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Daniel are considered the major prophets. They are classified as major only because of the length of their books, and sometimes by the length of their ministry. The minor prophets were often contemporary with the major prophets. When the major and minor prophets ministered at the same time in history, both delivered their message from different locations and to either the northern or southern kingdoms, though Jonah directed his message to Nineveh and Obadiah to Edom. The message of the minor prophets often complemented the ministry and message of the major prophets. The minor prophets had the task of delivering a short message to their God-ordained audience in order to warn the people of impending doom because of their state of apostasy. The major prophets ministered over a lengthy period of time in order to preserve the people from further digression into moral and social apostasy.

The minor prophets, whose writings we have in the Bible, ministered between about 786 to 400 B.C. Their ministry began before the dividing of the twelve tribes of Israel into the northern (Israel) and southern (Judah) kingdoms. They preached through the time of division after the death of Solomon, and then into the time when the Jews were taken into captivity. Their ministry extended through the Assyrian, Babylonian and Medo-Persian Empires. Their work among the Israelites concluded some time after the final return of captives to the land of Palestine in 444 B.C.

E. Message of the prophets:

There is a general pattern to the message of each book of the minor prophets. Within each book there is (1) a call for repentance in view of impending judgment, (2) a message of judgment and doom if there was no repentance, (3) a promise that there would be a remnant who would return to the promised land after the captivity, and (4) hope for a messianic future when God would consummate Israel with the coming of the Messiah.

Statements concerning these four points are scattered throughout the writings of the prophets. But one common theme of the message of the prophets permeates all the Old Testament. That message is the Bright and Morning Star that would eventually rise in the future of Israel. This would be the Righteous Branch who would signal the consummation of Israel through the revelation of the eternal plan of God to save man. Though this theme was difficult to discover by the immediate recipients of the prophets' message and ministry, the very reason for God's call of the prophets was to preserve an identity of Israel until the promises of the Blessing to the fathers was fulfilled in Christ (See Gn 12:1-4).

All the ministry of the prophets was to come to the climax of what Jesus stated to the apostles after His resurrection and immediately before His ascension to the right hand of God:

These are the words that I spoke to you while I was still with you, that all things must be fulfilled that were written in the law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms, concerning Me (Lk 24:44).

F. Preaching from the prophets:

The apostasy of the people of God from His word gave rise to the necessity of the prophets. The religious world today is not unlike the religious environment in which the prophets ministered.

My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge. Because you have rejected knowledge [of the word of God], I will also reject you so that you will be no priest to Me. Seeing you have forgotten the law of your God, I will also forget your children (Hs 4:6).

Because history often repeats itself in reference to our relationship with God through the knowledge of His word, what the prophets addressed during their day is often strikingly similar to situations throughout history. It is certainly true today. We believe, therefore, that the message of the prophets to God's people in the Old Testament should never be considered as simply good Old Testament literature. The prophets' message to those who are in rebellion against God will never be irrelevant in a world where there are those who refuse to know the word of God. When people stop studying their Bibles, then we know we are in the midst of a worldwide apostasy.

As disciples of Jesus who are venturing through the message of the prophets, our first response is to immediately examine social and religious structures today that are parallel to those that led to the fall of Israel. In the immediate historical setting of the prophets in their time, however, God would bring judgment on Israel through captivity. But now, God is waiting for the final doom that will arrive with the coming of His Son. The application of the principal message of the prophets, therefore, is relevant today as preachers stand up before the people with a call to repentance. And thus, the dead preachers of the Old Testament still speak today because their message has not lost its relevance (Hb 11:4). Such is what Paul wrote to Timothy:

All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness ... (2 Tm 3:16).

When Paul used the word "Scripture," reference was directly to the Old Testament Scriptures. It was true that he was writing Scriptures to Timothy (See 2 Pt 3:15,16). But the New Testament was simply added Scriptures to the canon of all Scriptures. So when Paul said that all Scripture is inspired, he was referring to the Old Testament Scriptures, which Scriptures were still profitable to Timothy for teaching, reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness.

Preachers today have the responsibility to remind themselves of the ministry of the preachers of the Old Testament because "whatever things were written before were written for our learning, so that we through patience and encouragement of the Scriptures [of the prophets], might have hope" (Rm 15:4). What happened to Israel as a result of their lack of repentance should be a warning to all those today who have forgotten the word of God.

Now these things happened to them [Israel] as an example, and they were written [by the prophets] for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the ages have come (1 Co 10:11).

If there is no repentance among those today who have followed after the crafty teaching of false prophets, then they too will go into the destruction of an eternal separation from God (2 Th 1:6-9). Israel went into a captivity from which only a remnant returned. Unfortunately, this is where the parallel message of the prophets ends for us today. There will be no remnant taken from captivity and returned to the land. What is coming for those today who have rejected a knowledge of the word of God is the following message of doom from Jesus: "Depart from Me you cursed into everlasting fire that is prepared for the devil and his angels" (Mt 25:41).

Chapter 1

JONAH

God sometimes uses the most unlikely people to accomplish His work. In the case of Jonah, He used someone who was proud, ethnocentric, stubborn, arrogant, self-centered, and a pouting nationalist. If Jonah were typical of the Israelites at the time of his mission in the early reign of Jeroboam II, then we would understand why the Israelites as a nation of priests failed in their national responsibility to minister the God of all humanity to the world.

A. Historical/social background:

At this time in history, around 780 B.C., Israel, the northern kingdom of ten tribes, had digressed to the attitude of what was characteristic of the attitude of the reluctant missionary Jonah. It was a time when nationalistic pride was on the rise, for during the reign of Jeroboam II, the northern kingdom had extended its borders to the extent they claimed during the reigns of David and Solomon. Once again, they had restored national pride and prosperity. But there was danger looming in the future, danger that would come upon them because of their departure from the law of God and any identity that they were the people of God. Their national pride would bring them down, for they trusted in themselves and not in God.

The book of Jonah is primarily about Jonah himself. God was working in preparation for the future, and thus, Jonah's mission and story were recorded by Jonah in order to remind Israel throughout the centuries to come, that God was still on their side regardless of their rebellion. As all Jews during these grand years, Jonah was certainly patriotic to his homeland, so much so, that he rebelled against his call to go to Nineveh to a people he knew one day would fight against his own people. God had asked him to pray for and preach to his enemy. Jonah found it very difficult to believe that God would forgive a nation that would within about sixty years wipe Israel from the face of the Palestinian map. His mission was just too emotionally difficult for him to accept. Jonah believed that God was asking too much for him to preach to a nation against which he felt so much resentment because they were Israel's enemy.

Jonah knew what would happen if he preached to those against whom he was so prejudiced. He later wrote, "For I knew that You [God] are a gracious God and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness, and One who relents from doing harm" (Jh 4:2).

And herein may be the reason for the mission of Jonah. It was a time in history when God was closing the book on the northern kingdom of Israel. This would eventually happen in 722/21 B.C. with the conquest of Samaria. Amos and Hosea were prophets sent to the northern kingdom who would immediately follow Jonah. The rebellious religious leaders in the north would run Amos back to his farm in Judah. They would slander and reject Hosea. It may have been a time in history, therefore, that God wanted Israel to know that the nation that He would use by proxy to terminate the northern kingdom of Israel, was more God-fearing at the time than Israel. As the story turned out, if the message that Jonah preached in Nineveh were preached in Samaria, they would have run Jonah out of town.

At the time of Jonah's commission to Nineveh, Nineveh was a city "wherein are more than 120,000 persons who cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand, and also many animals" (Jh 4:11). Since the great repentance took place in the city from the simple prophetic message that Jonah preached, then the repentance of the people of Nineveh would be a testimony against the rebellion of Israel. Nineveh repented, but Samaria did not. Jesus preached this message to His unrepentant generation of Jewish religionists:

The men of Nineveh will rise up in judgment with this generation and will condemn it, because they repented unto the preaching of Jonah. And behold, someone greater than Jonah is here (Mt 12:41).

So when Jonah eventually made his reluctant way to Nineveh, he preached a message of eight words: "Yet forty days and Nineveh will be overthrown" (Jh 3:4). And the result was that ...

... the people of Nineveh believed God. And they proclaimed a fast and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them (Jh 3:5).

The Ninevites knew that there was an impending danger of falling to their enemies. They repented unto the message of Jonah, whereas Jonah's own countrymen continued to rebel against the same message of obedient repentance. The people of God who had all the privileges and blessings from the time they were delivered from Egyptian captivity, should have been ashamed of their wayward ways. But they were not, neither in Jonah's time, nor during the ministry of Jesus. Subsequently, Samaria, the capital of Israel, was destroyed in 722/21 B.C. And in Jesus' day, Jerusalem, the capital of national Israel, was destroyed in A.D. 70. The religious and political scenarios were the same, both in the days leading up to the destruction of Samaria and the destruction of Jerusalem. When nations are patriotic in their own pride as a nation, but forget the God who led them to where they are, then doom lies in the future. No nation on earth has continued without end on earth.

B. Jonah preaches to us:

The record of Jonah's ministry is filled with lessons for us. This short four-chapter book is loaded with messages that should stir our lives into taking ownership of our mission to the lost, as well as checking our own attitudes toward the lost. We should find comfort in the fact that God is working in history in order to bring about His goals.

Jonah was the first missionary to the Gentiles, being the only Old Testament prophet of God who spoke exclusively to a foreign nation with a call to repentance. In his failures and reluctant successes, we are encouraged by God's work in his life in order to work in the affairs of this world to bring the Redeemer into the world through a restored remnant of Israel. Jonah's mission was a small piece of the historic puzzle that is quite encouraging when fitted in with God's work in history to bring His people to the cross.

1. God's presence is inescapable. God gave to Jonah the command to go, "but Jonah rose up to flee to Tarshish from the presence of the Lord" (Jh 1:3). But that did not work. We believe in an omnipresent God. He is not a God who is either here or there, but as Paul stated to the Athenian philosophers, "... in Him we live and move and have our being ..." (At 17:28). Any god we would create after our own presence would be a false god of location. He would be a god from whose presence we could flee as Jonah thought he could possibly flee from the God of Palestine. It may have been that Jonah had momentarily forgotten the message of one of his ancestral kings.

Where will I go from Your Spirit? Or where will I flee from Your presence? If I ascend up into heaven, You are there. If I make my bed in Sheol, behold, You are there (See Ps 139:7-12).

In his flight to Tarshish in Spain, Jonah was thinking as a human. He was possibly running more away from duty than God. If he could flee duty, then possibly, he might have assumed, he could flee the command of God to go to Nineveh. He momentarily forgot that God-given duty is not linked to any location. Palestine was not the home of God, and thus, when he fled Palestine he could not flee his duty.

Jonah knew better, for he knew he could not escape the presence of the God in whom he believed. He said as much to his sailing companions who were about to perish as he: "Take me up and cast me out into the sea. Then the sea will be calm for you. For I know that for my sake this great tempest has come upon you" (Jh 1:12).

It was not only the presence of God from which we might deceive ourselves into believing that we can flee, but His presence that is manifested by His power. The tempest of the sea was not an ordinary occurrence of nature at this particular moment in time. There was something about the ferocity of this storm at sea that even the unbelieving sailors concluded that "the gods" were at work. When Jonah finally confessed up, they too believed. "For the men knew that he fled from the presence of the Lord because he had told them" (Jh 1:10). Their belief was that each particular nation had its own personal god. As long as one was within the borders of his nation, then he was under the protection of his nationalistic god. If Jonah thought that he was fleeing from the presence of God by leaving Palestine, then Canaanite beliefs of Palestine may have damaged his theology.

When Jonah finally realized that he could not escape the presence and power of the God of the universe, then from the belly of the prepared fish he cried out in repentance (Jh 2). It was only in repentance that Jonah submitted to his destiny. And such is often the case in the lives of too many. It takes the depths of tragedy to awaken many of us to remorse over our struggle against God. In our mourning over our neglect of duty, we eventually relent to His destiny for us. Such was the case of the persecutor Saul when he looked into a bright light on a road to Damascus. Out of the light came the words, "Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting Me? It is hard for you to kick against the goads" (At 26:12). Saul needed to be shocked into reality. He knew the facts about Jesus. But he needed the addition of a personal encounter with Jesus in order for him to be set on the right road of going into all the world.

It may have been the same situation with Nineveh. The Ninevites knew the facts of their impending doom. They just needed someone from a respected nation to tell them so. Jonah knew this. He knew what would result from his short message. So he fled in order not to give them the opportunity to repent. He "kicked against the goads." So it took a storm at sea and a great fish to take him into the deep before he would cry out to God in repentance. It was then that he headed for Nineveh. After a similar experience, repentant Paul headed for Arabia and the Gentiles.

2. God-given duties are inescapable. Jonah's mission was given in one statement: "Go to Nineveh" (Jh 1:2). Jonah had two options: (1) Nineveh, which was the call of duty and destiny, or (2) Tarshish, the destiny of refusal to take ownership of one's duty. Any call to duty always has options to either neglect the call or accept one's duty. Jonah took the option to neglect duty. But when he did, he was ridden with guilt.

Jonah initially took the second option to flee to another location where gods did not make such demands. In taking this option of life, he went down to Joppa to find a route of escape (Jh 1:3). After finding a route of escape, he went down into the ship in order to sleep off his call to duty (Jh 1:3). And then, in the belly of the great fish, he went down to the bottom of the mountains in the sea (Jh 2:6). We must always keep in mind that when we neglect our duty as disciples of Jesus, it is always a road down.

Roads to victory always go up. But when we rebel against our duty to serve the Lord, the road always goes down. When we do not do that which we know we should do, there is always a sense of guilt that lies deep in our hearts. We seek to grow spiritually, but we always stumble over our guilt of not doing that which we know we should be doing. This is the problem about which John wrote the statement: "My little children, let us not love in word or in tongue, but in deed and truth” (1 Jn 3:18).

If we do not walk the commands of Jesus, then we will never be on the road that leads to spiritual victory. If we are true to our hearts, then we will do our duty as disciples of Jesus. When we claim to be disciples of Jesus, the old saying is always true: “Destiny calls.” Once we have worn ourselves out in dealing with the guilt of not doing that which we know we should, then it is time that we relinquish to our duty. And it is then that we start looking for opportunities by which we can follow our Lord into service. Paul explained, “Therefore, as we have opportunity, let us do good to all men, especially to those who are of the household of the faith” (Gl 6:10). Duty-oriented disciples start looking for opportunities to serve.

It is not that doing our duty delivers us out of sin. That is the job of the grace of the cross. But doing one’s duty does deliver us out of the den of despair and guilt. When we relinquish to service, we begin to understand what Jesus meant when He stood before His disciples with a dirty towel in His hand, and said, “If you know these things, happy are you if you do them” (Jn 13:17).

Now in reference to our duty that is parallel with Jonah’s, we too must figure out some way to go into all the world and preach the gospel. The goal upon which all our duty as Christians is based is to populate heaven. And to do this, we must preach the gospel to the world (See Mt 28:19,20; Mk 16:15,16). Most Christians are satisfied with sleeping in the bottom of a ship, while the ship goes down in the tempest of religiosity that is created after the desires of lukewarm Christians. Recent survey figures reveal that the Western church is going down in numbers. While “sleepers” sleep on church pews, the storm of a material life is taking down the ship into the depths of oblivion. We need sea captains today to cry out as the shipmaster did to Jonah,

What do you mean by this, O sleeper? Arise! Call on your God, if possible your God will be concerned about us so that we not perish (Jh 1:6).

Lest the ship sink, we must do as Jesus commanded the disciples, “Behold, I say to you, lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already for harvest” (Jn 4:35). “Therefore, pray to the Lord of the harvest so that He will send laborers into His harvest” (Mt 9:38). We must ask ourselves, “When was the last time we prayed that God send harvesters into the harvest?” It may be that as Jonah, we are reluctant to make this prayer because we feel that we might be the answer.

When all is said and done, we would conclude that there are three types of disciples. There are those row-boat disciples who just move along at their own leisure. There are sailboat disciples who are carried about by the wind of where the majority is going. And then there are steamboat disciples who have thrown in the coal (the Spirit), and now, are feeding off the power of the Spirit to get the job done. If one finds himself out of steam, and at the bottom of the sea, then it is time to cry out to God. If one is a rowboat or sailboat Christian, and thus content to be such, then we would suggest that he start looking out for a great fish encircling his boat.

3. God’s concern for the world cannot be ignored:

By chapter 4 in the book we learn why Jonah boarded the “ship of escape.” In his ethnocentric pride concerning his own nation, he confessed, “I knew that You are a gracious God and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness, and One who relents from doing harm” (Jh 4:2).

Jonah knew that if he preached to Nineveh, then God would spare the nation upon its repentance. But this was that great nation about which both Hosea and Amos said would eventually destroy his own nation. He could not, therefore, preach salvation to his enemies lest they repent and be spared. If they were spared, then they would be spared in order to bring God’s judgment on Israel. Jonah certainly thought that this would not be patriotic.

It was now time for an illustration that was simple, but effective in bringing Jonah to his spiritual senses. God did not explain the teleological (end purpose) for Jonah’s mission. He did not explain that upon Nineveh’s repentance, the captives of his own people would eventually end up in Assyrian captivity after 722/21 B.C. They would end up among a God-fearing people who were more righteous than Israel at the time of Jonah’s preaching. But at this time in his ministry, it was time to walk by faith in God, trusting that God had a purpose for sending him to Israel’s enemy.

And now we are beginning to understand why Jonah was sent to Nineveh. What else would we expect of a loving God who loved His people. He was preparing the spiritual bed for His people whom He would eventually send into Assyrian captivity in about sixty years. Jonah was sent to prepare the bed for a backslidden people who were less spiritual at the time than the nation into which they would eventually be led as captives. At least at the time of Jonah’s ministry, Nineveh repented and Samaria would not.

God illustrated His love for all people, without ever whispering one word to Jonah concerning the purpose of his mission. But the illustration of the gourd was enough to at least bring some spiritual sense to Jonah.

In chapter 4:6-11, Jonah was selfishly concerned about the gourd that brought him comfort, a plant for which he did nothing to plant and nurture. But God was concerned about the people and animals of Nineveh. Jonah certainly did nothing to earn the comforts of the gourd. But God had worked for centuries to create the great Assyrian nation. Jonah was concerned for a gourd which cost him no labor. God was concerned for a people who cost Him a great deal of preparation in order to eventually use them in proxy judgment against His rebellious people.

The theme of Jonah's ordeal is certainly expressed in John 3:16 with reference to God's love of all His creation:

For God so loved the world [Nineveh included], that He gave His only begotten Son, so that whoever believes in Him should not perish [by destruction in Nineveh's case], but have everlasting life (Jn 3:16).

4. Jonah was not unlike us. Jonah could not see the whole picture. God did not have to explain to Him that He was preparing the religious culture of the Assyrians in order to make things better for His people once they were led in captivity to Nineveh. Therefore, Jonah needed to walk by faith in the fact that God knew what He was doing. If Jonah had known what was going to transpire a little over sixty years later, then he may have been more willing to make the bed of captivity more comfortable for his descendants. But the fact that God asked him to walk by faith did not excuse his flight from his mission.

We too know some facts about what God is doing now for the future.

Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons. But in every nation he who fears Him and works righteousness is accepted by Him (At 10:34,35).

The irony of this statement is that it was made by a "New Testament Jonah." The very Jewish Peter believed that the Gentiles would eventually destroy his nation. He believed what Jesus said in Matthew 24 concerning the destruction of Jerusalem. The historical scenarios of both the Jewish Jonah and Jewish Peter were the same.

The early Jews, including Peter, were reluctant to preach to the Gentiles, especially to anyone who represented the Roman government. Cornelius was a centurion of the Roman army to whom God sent Peter (At 10:1). It took a special vision, and some argument from Peter, in order to get Peter into the Gentile house of Cornelius.

Peter possibly knew that within about twenty years this centurion would have to submit to his superiors in order to take up arms to destroy national Israel and Jerusalem in A.D. 70. No wonder it took a vision to get the Jewish Peter into the Gentile house of one who would be a part of the army that would lead to the destruction of his Jewish nation. We are sure that Peter at the time started reflecting much on the book of Jonah.

But Peter went to his "Nineveh," as Jonah to his. In both cases, God was working. In the case of Jonah's Nineveh, God was seeking to make the transition of Israel out of their homeland to a foreign nation as easy as possible. In the case of Peter's "Nineveh," God was preparing an escape for Christians who would be trapped in Jerusalem during the Roman siege of A.D. 70. According to historical records, there is no evidence that any Christian died in that siege, for Titus, Rome's commander in the siege, gave everyone in the city an opportunity to surrender. And many did. Would it not have been an overwhelming emotional outpouring of brotherhood when Titus stopped the siege for a period of time in order to allow many Jewish Christians in Jerusalem to hand themselves over to the Roman army. Most assuredly, some of the Jewish Christians walked out of Jerusalem into the loving arms of some of the spiritual descendants of Cornelius who were there as Christian Roman soldiers waiting for them. We must never think that God does not know what He is doing in taking care of His people.

For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, will be able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord (Rm 8:38,39).

Chapter 2

AMOS

The meaning of the name Amos defines the ministry of every preacher. The name means "burden bearer." Preachers have the burden to keep the word of God before the people, regardless of whether it is received or rejected (See 2 Tm 4:1-5).

Amos was a farm boy from Judah. He was a herds-man of sheep and goats in the small mountain village of Tekoa south of Jerusalem (Am 7:14). Because of his farming culture, we can understand why God called him to preach judgment to the cities of the northern kingdom of Israel. Since the cities often lead the culture of a nation, the task of preaching to the cities is the task of saving the nation. For this reason, God used a farmer preacher in order to get the city people back on track with the word of God.

As a herdsman, it is interesting to note how God called Amos. “And the Lord took me as I followed the flock and the Lord said to me, ‘Go, prophesy [preach] to My people Israel’” (Am 7:15). Though we do not understand what “took me” implies, we can assume that the moral degradation of the city society of the northern kingdom of Israel was enough to move the farmer preacher into action. His could have been the same emotion that cut through the heart of Paul when Paul first stepped foot in Corinth. “Paul was compelled in the spirit and testified ...” (At 18:5).

Amos was “taken” from his flocks around 760 B.C. and continued his ministry to 750 B.C. He began preaching in Bethel of the northern kingdom. But because of the straightforward nature of his message and preaching—as is the case with most farmer preachers—this did not last long. He was driven from the cities of the northern kingdom back to his homeland of Judah. Those who rejected his message, said to him,

Go, you seer. Flee away into the land of Judah and there eat bread and prophesy there. But do not prophesy again anymore at Bethel, for it is a sanctuary of the king and a royal residence (Am 7:12,13).

So off to the farm in Judah Amos fled. We assume that it was in Judah where he wrote the words of the book that is part of the Scriptures we now study.

A. Historical/social background:

There was peace among nations at the time of Amos’ ministry to the northern kingdom of Israel. Judah and Israel were at peace with one another. Under the reign of Jeroboam II (786-746 B.C.), the northern kingdom of Israel had secured its borders to as far north as Damascus. Under the kingship of Tiglath-pileser III, the Assyrian Kingdom was building up in the east. This would be the force of the east that would eventually be God’s proxy to bring judgment upon Israel. But at the time of Amos’ preaching, the northern kingdom, under the forty-year reign of Jeroboam II, was prospering. It was prospering to the point of establishing an economy that was close to what Israel experienced during the reigns of David and Solomon.

Unfortunately, the prosperity of the society created a morally digressed social environment that necessitated God’s call of Amos. Wealth had moved from the rural to the urban, and subsequently, the cities of the north were overpopulated with the rich. The rich in the cities “sold the righteous for silver and the poor for a pair of shoes” (Am 2:6). “They [the rich] pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor and pervert the way of the meek” (Am 2:7). Amos’ irony that they “pant after the dust on the head of the poor,” reveals the extreme to which the rich exploited the poor for their own prosperity. Their extreme greed manifested their social injustice.

Morally, “a man and his father will go in to the same girl to profane My holy name” (Am 2:7). God’s accusation against the society of the rich and oppressive and immoral was that ...

... they lie down by every altar on clothes taken in pledge. And they drink the wine of the condemned in the house of their god (Am 2:8).

The distorted economics of the society led to the corruption of the society. The control of the future of the nation rested in the hands of the rich. The rich were so powerful in controlling the economy of the nation that they economically exploited the poor. This digressed to the point that justice was twisted for the sake of the rich. Amos cried out, “You [rich] who turn justice to wormwood, and cast down righteousness to the earth ...” (Am 5:7). The minority rich, therefore, would face their judgment.

Therefore, because you trample on the poor and you take from him tribute of grain, and have built mansions of hewn stone, you will not dwell in them. You have planted pleasant vineyards, but you will not drink wine from them (Am 5:11).

In some places, the early church came into such a socioeconomic moral condition in the first century. James and Amos had audiences with similar dysfunctions. James condemned the rich Sadduceans among the early Christians with the words,

But you [rich] have despised the poor. Do not the rich oppress you and drag you into courts? Do they not blaspheme that noble name by which you are called? (Js 2:6,7; see Js 2:1-7).

When money becomes the standard by which a society determines the function of relationships, then all sorts of corruption destroys the society. The level of corruption of any society determines the level of focus that a society places on money. And in the case of the society with which Amos was dealing, bribes became the standard upon which judgments were made. Listen to what Amos said was happening in the society:

For I know your many transgressions and your mighty sins. They afflict the just. They take a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate (Am 5:12).

Because the economic culture of the people was based on idol worship, wherein the worshipers created a religion after their own greed, there resulted all sorts of economic injustices that prevailed throughout society. They became a society that was totally influenced by the Baal worship of the Canaanites, which idolatry centered around gold and greed.

We must not misunderstand the idol worship of Baal as simply a religious apostasy. Idol worship was directly connected to riches. In the absence of banks, idols were made from gold and silver. An owner's unique formation of his idol was known in the community, and thus, no one could steal a gold or silver idol simply because of the unique form of the idol identified its owner. So when the Old Testament speaks of idol worship, it was the worship of their riches, not simply some religious dogma that they had written and proclaimed. Paul explained this definition of idolatry in Colossians 3:5: "... put to death your members that are on the earth ... covetousness, which is idolatry." Idolatry in Israel was the coveting of the riches. This was manifested in their worship (covetousness) of their gold and silver idols.

In their wanton behavior and luxurious living, Amos' audience felt no remorse about the plight of the poor which the rich had created because of their greedy business dealings. The thinking of the rich became so corrupt that they had no empathy for the poor of the city, or those on the farms from where the rich drew their wealth. The farmers and herdsmen simply became the indentured servants of the city rich who had the power to determine the prices of all their labors and commodities. The rich of the cities simply sought ways by which they could continue their exploitation of the poor farmers and herdsmen who produced all the commodities for what God originally intended should be a rural nation of farmers and herdsmen.

Israel became an urban society that used the poor rural farmers and herdsmen for the sake of their own materialistic gratification. When a society digresses to the point where there is no consideration for those who produce the sustenance of the society, then the society becomes dysfunctional. Exploitation to feed greed becomes the culture of the economy. And in the case of the northern kingdom of Israel during the time of Jeroboam II, God judged that it was time to take this society out of existence because it no longer represented God among the nations. It was no longer a benevolent society that represented a benevolent God.

B. Amos preaches to us:

The message of Amos to Israel is relevant today. As the world moves into a greater separation between the rich and poor, no greater message could reveal what God thinks about societies that favor the rich over the poor, to the point that the poor are exploited for the sake of the rich. Amos' message is universal. It does not deal with one nation alone, for what was happening in Israel is often a national problem with many nations throughout the world today. In order to preach this message of God to the world, God instructed Amos to deal with all the nations, not just Israel. Though Israel majored in the sins that Amos pointed out, she was not alone in her socioeconomic inequities.

1. God sees sin wherever it is: He thus brought judgment on the nations around Israel for their sins against humanity. Amos first asked a question that we can answer: "If a calamity occurs in a city has not the Lord done it?" (Am 3:6). With this question, Amos leads us into concluding that the calamities that had befallen the nations were the work of God. God will judge Moab to the east and Judah to the south (Am 2:1-5). The Amorites would also suffer the judgment of God (Am 2:9). Judgment was pronounced upon Edom (Am 1:11,12). Though these nations eventually suffered the judgment of God, the lesson to us is that at the end of time judgment will come on this generation of nations, for God "has appointed a day in which He will judge the world in righteousness by the Man whom He has ordained" (At 17:31). "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, so that everyone may receive the things done in the body ..." (2 Co 5:10; see Jn 5:28,29).

2. God does not accept man-made worship: There seems to be a striking similarity between what God condemned through Amos concerning worship and much of what the religious world today masquerades as worship. The judgment of God in Amos 5:21-23 is direct and meaningful.

a. Assemblies for self: “I hate, I despise your feast days. And I will not take delight in your solemn assemblies” (Am 5:21). How could God hate and despise feasts and assemblies that He had commanded? The answer is that the people had mingled what God had commanded them to do with the pagan Canaanite practices that surrounded them. Their gatherings had become depraved because their feasts and assemblies were directed toward the satisfaction of themselves, and not an occasion to honor God. The deception of such self-gratifying assemblies was in the fact that the people felt good, but in reality, there was no focus on the God of heaven. Narcissistic assemblies are not for worship of God. If one comes away from an assembly for worship and says that he did not get anything out of the assembly, then he is narcissistic in his worship. His worship is vain. Worship is not about what we get, but what we give. It is not about entertaining our interests. It is about pouring our hearts out to God.

b. Legal offerings without remorse: “Though you offer Me burnt offerings and your grain offerings, I will not accept them. Neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts” (Am 5:22). In the Sinai law, they were commanded by God to make all these offerings (See Lv 2–7). They were commanded to make these offerings for sin. But when one persists in a walk that is contrary to the word of God, he is arrogant and self-condemned (See Ti 3:9-11). Any offerings in such a walk are useless. Keeping the legalities of what is commanded profits nothing if one’s heart is far removed from the command. Paul spoke of similar people when he wrote,

Let no man disqualify you of your reward by delighting in false humility and the worship of angels, intruding into those things that he has not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind (Cl 2:18).

Israel was guilty of a syncretism, that is, blending Canaanite Baal religion with those things they were commanded to do in the Sinai law. Paul explained:

These things have indeed a show of wisdom in self-made religion and self-abasement and neglect of the body, but not in any value in restraining the indulgence of the flesh (Cl 2:23).

Doing the legal actions of what God commands, while at the same time thinking about Baal, leads one to create a “self-made religion.” We only deceive ourselves into believing that God would accept our offerings when we are thinking about something that is foreign to the offer He desires. There is no acceptance by God of any legal obedience to religious rites without the heart of the worshiper. But also, legal religious rites are not made right before God by the good hearts of those who walk contrary to the word of God.

c. Songs that become only noise: “Take away from Me the noise of your songs, for I will not hear the melody of your stringed instruments” (Am 5:23). They had created a concert of instrumental noise that appealed to them, but was empty of their heart. They assumed that if their songs would appeal to them, then certainly they appealed to God. But in reality, what appealed to their ears was only obnoxious noise to God.

Apostasy is so easy in the area of music because of the appeal of music to the human ear. We feel good about the music, and thus, simply because Bible words about Jesus and God are placed here and there in the lyrics of the music, we assume that the music is according to the word of God. But Paul instructed, “Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs ...” (Cl 3:16).

If one has forgotten the word of Christ, then the teaching of the song becomes vain because we are not teaching the word of Christ in the song. And since Israel was in a state where the people had forgotten the word of God (Hs 4:6), then they could not determine if their songs were directed to God or Baal. The only way to determine if one is singing according to the word of God is to open the word of God and study.

It is so easy to develop assemblies around the noise of songs that are designed to appeal to the ears of the audience, but are not for the praise of God. When assemblies become narcissistic, then the lyrics of the songs are only an irritating and obnoxious noise to God.

What could be said of those in the northern kingdom of Israel at the end of their existence as a nation, was the same that Jesus said of the religious leadership of Israel during His ministry and the end of national Israel:

Well did Isaiah prophesy of you hypocrites, as it is written, “This people honors Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me. In vain they worship Me, teaching as doctrine the commandments of men.” For laying aside the commandment of God, you hold the traditions of men ... (Mk 7:6-8)

d. God does not honor indifference: “Woe to those who are at ease in Zion” (6:1). The text of 6:1-6 should awaken every idle Christian to the fact that when things seem to be economically fine for ourselves, we should be cautioned about lukewarmness settling into our Christianity. We remember the Christians in Laodicea who were in the same socioeconomic situation. The result of the social environment in which they lived was devastating to their faith. Jesus pronounced judgment upon them:

I know your works, that you are neither cold nor hot. ... because you are lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew you out of My mouth (Rv 3:15,16).

Prosperity often leads to indifference and lukewarmness in reference to our faith. Indifference to the needs of others often curses those who live within the cocoon of their own wealth. When such happens within a society, God says that the society has lost its heart. When such happens within the fellowship of the disciples of Christ, they may have a name that they live, but they are dead (Rv 3:1). Amos pronounced that these “will go captive with the first who go captive. And those who recline at banquets will be removed” (Am 6:7).

And what message would Amos have for the rich and famous who have no concern for the poor?

Hear this word, you cows of Bashan who are on Mount Samaria, who oppress the poor, who crush the needy, who say to their husbands, “Bring now, that we may drink.” The Lord God has sworn by His holiness, “Behold, the day will come on you when He will take you away with hooks and your posterity with hooks” (Am 4:1,2).

Israel became economically strong. In the movement of wealth in the economy, some became economically rich because of their exploitation of the poor, specifically the poor farmers and herdsmen who produced the sustenance for the nation. In the comforts of life, Israel’s spiritual house was morally and spiritually on fire, but they had no fire extinguisher. They had heart disease without life insurance. So of the rich, Amos wrote,

And I will smite the winter house with the summer house. And the houses of ivory will perish, and the great houses will have an end” (Am 3:15).

God thus warned,

Therefore, thus I will do to you, O Israel. And because I will do this to you, prepare to meet your God, O Israel (Am 4:12).

3. God warns before punishment: God is a just God. He does not punish without warning those He would punish. And Israel knew what their punishment would be if they forsook the Creator of their nation. God warned them of their apostasy before they entered Palestine after the wilderness wanderings (See Dt 31:14-22). He reminded them, “You only have I known of all the families of the earth. Therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities” (Am 3:2). And through the prophets, the warning came. “Surely the Lord God will do nothing without first revealing His plans to His servants the prophets” (Am 3:7).

And so it is with the world today.

And the times of this ignorance God has overlooked, but now He commands all men everywhere to repent, because He has appointed a day in which He will judge the world ... (At 17:30,31).

There is an end coming. Almost all religious faiths of the world have a concept of the “end of the world,” but not in reference to final judgment. The origin of the concept of an end may be far removed from the many statements concerning the end that are described in the New Testament. Nevertheless, there is still the belief among religious people throughout the world that this world will in some way come to an end.

It is in the context of God’s announced end of Israel that the statement was made, “Can two walk together, except they have agreed?” (Am 3:3). The context of this statement was that Israel was not walking spiritually in agreement with God. They strayed to their own path. God’s judgment was: “Yet you have not returned to Me” (Am 4:6,8,9,10,11). They had turned aside to walk with other gods. And because they were not walking in the commandments of God, their walk would lead to their end. So Amos cried out, “Prepare to meet your God, O Israel” (Am 4:12). No man can expect to walk with God into eternity if he is not walking with God on earth (See 1 Jn 1:7).

Amos pronounced a funeral dirge over the nation in chapter 5:1,2. In 722/21 B.C. the northern ten tribes of Israel would be taken into Assyrian captivity. As an independent nation, they would cease to exist. It would be almost two hundred years in 536 B.C. before a remnant of the northern kingdom would again set foot in the land of Palestine, but not as an independent nation. The good news was that in the years of captivity, idolatry would be totally eradicated from the religious culture of Israel.

4. God gives hope in times of judgment and calamity: One of the most significant prophecies of the Old Testament is found in Amos 9:11:

In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that has fallen and close up its breaches. And I will raise up its ruins and I will build it as in the days of old.

This prophecy is embedded in the hope that is given to the people who were destined for captivity. It is addressed to the northern kingdom, which ten tribes separated themselves from the temple of Jerusalem. But reference here was made to the “tabernacle of David,” though in the statement reference could also be to the temple that also represented the presence of God in Israel. However, we must keep in mind that the temple did not exist during the days of David. David had the desire to build the temple, but Solomon fulfilled his dream.

Until the temple was built by Solomon, the tabernacle was the tent that was moved throughout the tribal territories of Israel for four hundred years before the building of the temple. The tabernacle represented the presence of God among the people during the wilderness wanderings. It carried on with the same meaning during the time of its existence as it was annually moved throughout the tribal areas of Palestine. However, Solomon replaced the mobile tabernacle with the stationary temple. But the significance of the tabernacle and temple was the representation of God among all the twelve tribes of Israel. Amos’ prophecy of raising up the tent of the tabernacle looked past the time of the temple. It looked back to a time when all twelve tribes of Israel were equally united as one nation of people under God.

Because reference is made to the tabernacle, and not to the temple, we would not assume that there was a fulfillment of the prophecy in the rebuilding of the temple by Zerubbabel after the Babylonian captivity. The temple was certainly rebuilt, but in the prophecy of Amos God is pointing the audience of Amos far beyond Solomon’s temple. In this prophecy, God takes the minds of Israel far into the future, about 750 years from the time the prophecy was made by Amos.

About 750 years after Amos, and when James stood up among all those who were gathered in Jerusalem, and also about fifteen years after the beginning of the church in A.D. 30, the Holy Spirit reminded the people of God of the fulfillment of Amos 9:11. James proclaimed to the multitude of disciples,

And with the words of the Prophets agree, as it is written, “After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David that is fallen down. And I will build again the ruins of it. And I will set it up, so that the rest of mankind may seek after the Lord ...” (See At 15:15-18).

The tabernacle (tent) of God’s people at the time of Amos’ prophecy was eventually blown down by the winds of the sin of Israel. It was blown to the ground in captivity. But when Peter stood up on the day of Pentecost in A.D. 30, he announced the gospel message for the first time in history. On that day about 3,000 people were baptized into the body of Christ, and the presence of God among the people (the tabernacle) began to rise and spread into all the world (At 2:41). And indeed, the announcement of James was correct. The tabernacle of David (the church of the Son of David) had been raised up again from Israel’s remnant. It is now the witness unto all the world that God dwells on earth among His people (Mt 5:16).

Chapter 3

HOSEA

Little is known of Hosea’s early years. He was a prophet to the northern kingdom of Israel during times of great international turmoil. He was born in the north and his ministry began during the reign of Jeroboam II of the northern kingdom (770-749 B.C.). It extended into the reign of Hezekiah of the southern kingdom of Israel (728-697 B.C.). His ministry could have extended throughout the latter part of the reign of Jeroboam II, thus making his ministry one of the longest of the prophets. This made Hosea contemporary with both Isaiah and Micah who prophesied to the southern kingdom.

Hosea’s name means “salvation,” the same meaning as the names Joshua and Jesus. Since the ministry of Hosea extended through the fall of the northern kingdom, we assume that his name is also prophetic of the salvation of the remnant that would come almost two hundred years later with the return of the first Jewish captives in 536 B.C.

Hosea is considered the “apostle John” to the northern kingdom which was destined for captivity. In order that he understand how God felt that His love was betrayed when the people went after Baal, God commanded Hosea to marry Gomer. After the marriage, Gomer forsook Hosea and gave herself over to prostitution. Reardless of her unfaithfulness, Hosea, upon God's command, was willing to take her back as his wife in order to rebuild his marriage. Though Gomer had broken his heart, Hosea, as God, was willing to take again his bride because of his devotion to her (See Ez 23). Likewise, the remnant of Israel would be taken from captivity by God in order to be His bride once again.

Hosea fathered three children with Gomer (Hs 1:3-9). The first was named Jezreel, meaning "vengeance." The name was prophetic in that God would bring judgment upon the house of the wicked King Jehu. The second child was named Lo-ruhamah, meaning, "no pity." This name was also prophetic in that God would have no mercy on the existing Israelites who had forsaken Him for idol gods they had created after their own worldly desires. The third child was named Lo-ammi, meaning "not my people." This name was prophetic in that Israel had backslidden so far away from God that He could not claim them as His people. Because the northern kingdom (called "Ephraim" after the largest tribe) played the harlot, God cast her away into Assyrian captivity. The key word of this book, therefore, is judgment. Ephraim was doomed to termination. It would be as Amos prophesied, "The virgin of Israel has fallen. She will rise no more" (Am 5:2). It would be a tragic end to a beautiful story of a nation that had a special covenant relationship with the Creator of the universe. Israel would cease to exist as an independent theocratic nation of God in Palestine.

Those who assume that the present state of Israel in Palestine is a God-ordained state, need to take another look at the prophecy of Amos 5:2. An independent state of Israel does exist in Palestine, but it is not a nation state with which God has a special covenant relationship. The covenanted nation of Israel no longer exists. The possession of Palestine by the theocratic nation of Israel ended with the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities. This is what Amos was prophesying. The remnant of Israel that returned after the Babylonian captivity remained under the Sinai covenant and law until the coming of the Messiah. But the covenant ended in Christ as prophesied by Jeremiah (See Jr 31:31-33; Hb 8:7-13; 9:15). And when the covenant ended, then the nation ceased to exist as a special people in the eyes of God.

A. Historical/social background:

Because of the length of Hosea's ministry, he lived through the final years of the fall of the northern ten tribes of Israel, and the beginning of the fall of the southern two tribes. There was chaos in the leadership among the kings of the north prior to their fall. In the few years before he began to preach the end of Ephraim, Jehu had killed King Joram (2 Kg 9:21-28). Jehu also slaughtered the heirs of the wicked Jezebel and Ahab (2 Kg 9:30 – 10:28). Then came Jehoahaz (2 Kg 13:1-9) and Jehoash (2 Kg 13:1). King Jeroboam II finally brought some stability during his forty-one-year reign (2 Kg 14:23-29). It was sometime during the reign of Jeroboam that Hosea and Amos began together to preach the end of Israel. The people eventually ran the farmer preacher, Amos, back to Judah, but the local preacher, Hosea, continued to be God's representative in the north until and after the end of the northern kingdom.

It was after the death of Jeroboam II that the northern kingdom fell into a state of chaos among its leaders. After Jeroboam, Zechariah reigned only six months before he was murdered by Shallum (2 Kg 15:8-12). Shallum reigned only one month before Menahem deposed him (2 Kg 15:13-16). Menahem fortunately died a natural death, but only after ten years on the throne (2 Kg 15:17-22). However, during his reign, the Assyrian King Tiglath-pileser invaded Israel. After Menahem came Pekahiah who reigned only two years before he was murdered by Pekah (2 Kg 15:23-25). Pekah recruited help from the Egyptians to defend Israel against the Assyrians. He then made an alliance with Rezin of Syria in order to overthrow Ahaz of the southern kingdom, Judah. But Pekah was eventually murdered by King Hosea, who in turn paid tribute to the Assyrians in order that he might continue his reign.

Shalmaneser V, the king of Assyria, eventually arrested King Hosea, which began the fall of the northern kingdom. The successor to King Shalmaneser, Sargon, conquered the capital of the northern kingdom in 722/21 B.C., Samaria, and thus ended the existence of the ten tribes as an independent nation of God in the land of Palestine. The nation was gone forever as an independent nation, having given up their right to exist as a God-covenanted nation because they had forsaken the word of God. Nevertheless, God promised that only a remnant of the southern two tribes, with a remnant of the ten tribes of the north, would eventually be restored to Palestine. The remnant would return to the land in order to reestablish the identity of Israel. However, they would return to a land that no longer belonged to them. It would belong to the Medo-Persian Empire.

Hosea was a preacher for God during these years of international turmoil and moral decline. It was an era of history in which it was not easy to be a spokesman for God. It was a time of social chaos and religious confusion, simply because the Israelites had long ignored the word of God. In doing so, they as a whole ceased being the moral people of God. It was only when God rescued a remnant of Israel out of captivity that they were able to bring the Messiah into the world in fulfillment of the promises that were made to the fathers of Israel.

1. Social chaos: Instead of trusting in God for help, as they promised when they accepted the Sinai covenant at the beginning, Israel began to trust in their own strength and the strength of other nations. They thus forsook loyalty to God. They were guilty of Divine treason. They did not trust that God would deliver them from all their enemies.

Justice was perverted because bribery became the accepted means by which favors could be extracted from officials (Am 5:12). The prophet Micah explained the social conditions of the nation: “Her heads judge for a bribe and her priests teach for hire. And her prophets divine for money” (Mc 3:11). Micah added, “... the prince and the judge ask for a bribe. And the great one utters his mischievous desire” (Mc 7:3). They had certainly forgotten the law of the covenant that they accepted at Mount Sinai, for one of the laws of the covenant was: “And you will take no bribe, for the bribe blinds the wise and perverts the words of the righteous” (Ex 23:8).

When the culture of government falls into the evil of bribery, it has judged itself dysfunctional as a government of justice for the people. No fair judgment can be given in a culture of bribery. A culture of bribery always marginalizes the poor, for the poor do not have the means by which to bribe officials in their favor. A superficial democracy with a culture of bribery can exist only insofar as those in power can deceive the poor majority that the officials are for them. In a culture of bribery, the officials of the government have themselves at heart, and thus, use the people as the occasion to satisfy their lust for power and greed for gain. When a society curses itself with a culture of bribery, it has fallen out of favor with God.

Bribery is paying someone in order to have a favor done for the one who gives the bribe. Corruption is paying someone in view of the fact that the favor has been done. These two moral flaws make a society morally dysfunctional. Both practices handicapped individuals within a society, particularly the poor. Corruption is bribery that is masked in the guise of the misappropriation of public funds for selfish use. The greater the corruption of a nation, the more the government of the nation is out of favor with God, for it is a nation whose government is controlled by the love of money. It is a nation whose government has forgotten its responsibility to make sure that the people as a society take care of the poor. And any government that does not lead the nation as a whole to take care of the poor, is an unrighteous government in the eyes of God.

2. Religious corruption: Since Hosea began his prophetic ministry in times of national prosperity, everything in the function of the society was based on the exchange of money. Both civic officials and religious leaders did their work on the basis of extracting money from someone. They had all run greedily after the example of Balaam who sold his prophetic gift for money (2 Pt 2:15; Jd 11). When money becomes the moral standard by which a society functions, then the society becomes corrupt. Volunteerism and charity are very low in those societies where money is the moral standard by which the individuals of a society relate with one another.

Of the priests, God judged, “And as gangs of raiders wait for a man, so the company of priests murder in the way by consent, for they commit lewdness” (Hs 6:9). The religious culture of the Canaanites was well entrenched in the behavior of Israel by the time of Hosea’s ministry. The sensual cult worship of the Canaanites became the religion of the people. The fertility gods of Baal worship were initially instituted in the northern kingdom by Jeroboam I when the ten tribes separated from the south after the death of Solomon. Since the deities of the Canaanites were symbolized by the bull, Jeroboam I set up a bull altar in Dan and another in Bethel (1 Kg 12:28,29). Canaanite religion included occult rites of drunken parties, prostitution and wanton behavior by those who participated in all sorts of sexual sin. Even a century after the ministry of Hosea, prostitution and sodomy became associated with the temple in Jerusalem during the days of Hezekiah (2 Kg 23:7).

Hosea’s indictment of Israel was the description of a totally depraved social and religious culture.

*You have plowed wickedness. You have reaped iniquity.
You have eaten the fruit of lies, because you trust in your way, in the multitude of your mighty men* (Hs 10:13).

B. Hosea preaches to us:

All the social and moral degradation that existed during the days of Hosea was because the people were determined to live contrary to all that God would have them be. “And My people are bent on backsliding from Me” (Hs 11:7). When that which is considered to be right by a society, is actually contrary to the word of God, then the society has judged itself evil in the sight of God.

1. Destroyed for lack of knowledge of the word of God: All the social and religious calamity of Ephraim was the result of one thing.

My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge. Because you have rejected knowledge [of My law], I will also reject you so that you will be no priest to Me. Seeing you have forgotten the law of your God, I will also forget your children (Hs 4:6).

Their lack of knowledge of God through His word had gone to the extreme of rejection. They considered the message of Hosea and the other prophets a strange teaching. “I have written to him the great things of My law, but they were counted as a foreign thing” (Hs 8:12). It was evident that the priests among the people had certainly failed in their duty to teach the people the law of God (Lv 10:11). When those whom we presume should know their Bibles, stand before the people, but know nothing of the Bible, then we allow ourselves to be led astray into apostasy. And such we see prevalent throughout the religious world today. Pastors and priests around the world know little of the Bible. They are presumptuous to stand before the people and profess to be leaders of the people for God. They are as blind guides, leading the blind into destruction. It is as Jesus said: “They are blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch” (Mt 15:14).

The religious environment of Christendom today is not unlike the religious environment of Hosea’s day when the people were destroyed for lack of knowledge. It was not that they became unbelievers. On the contrary, they remained religious. In the absence of a knowledge of the law of God, however, they simply created a religion after their own desires that was void of the word of God. For example, when they became covetous of the things of the world, then they created a religion that soothed their guilt about being greedy. They thus felt guiltless when they exploited the poor for the sake of their own lusts. This is idolatry. Again, it is as Paul wrote that we put to death our “members that are on the earth ... covetousness, which is idolatry” (Cl 3:5).

2. Legal worship is useless. Hosea reveals what most legalists can never understand. Since the legalist feels that He is justified before God through his legal obedience to the laws of God, then he cannot understand why God would under any circumstances reject his obedience to law.

Legal obedience without a heart for God is vain. Legal obedience with a life-style of mercy to others, is also vain. God said, “For I desire mercy and not sacrifice, and the knowledge of God more than burnt offer- ings” (Hs 6:6). If one is not merciful to others, then he is not desired by God. If one does not have a knowledge of God’s word, then he is not desired by God. Mercy refers to our relationship with our neighbor, and a knowledge of God through His word refers to our relationship with God. Without either, legal obedience to commanded ordinances of worship are in vain. Having a knowledge of God through His word means that one is listening to God and learning His will.

Those who would be sought by God are those who are diligently seeking direction from Him through a study of His word. One cannot find God if he is not searching for Him through His word. If one does not obsess after God speaking to him through His word on earth, then certainly he will not be one of those who will listen to God throughout eternity in heaven. Bible study is mental preparation to be able to sit in the eternal Bible class of God in heaven. If one will not study his Bible on earth, then certainly he should not expect to be enrolled in the heavenly Bible class. When the Holy Spirit used the word “noble minded” when describing the character of the Bereans in their search of the Scriptures, He was defining the type of person God seeks to have in eternity (See At 17:11).

3. The sin of unfaithfulness: The first three chapters of Hosea detail Hosea’s marriage to Gomer and her subsequent unfaithfulness. Gomer’s sin was unfaithfulness, and thus this was the true life story that Hosea needed to feel in reference to Israel’s unfaithfulness to God.

When one quits loving God, he quits obeying God. When God made the Sinai covenant with Israel, His first command was the following: “And you will love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your might” (Dt 6:5). Jesus said to His disciples, “If you love Me you will keep My commandments” (Jn 14:15). Israel had fallen out of love with God. Unfaithfulness is simply defined as one falling out of love with God. John explained, “For this is the love of God, that we keep His commandments” (1 Jn 5:3).

Israel had fallen so far out of love with God that they forgot His commandments (Hs 4:6). In fact, His commandments had become a strange thing to them. John was very specific in reference to the connection between loving God and obedience to His commandments. “He who says, ‘I know Him,’ and does not keep His commandments, is a liar. And the truth is not in him” (1 Jn 2:4). The deduction from this statement would be that if one does not know the commandments of God, and yet professes to love God, then he is a liar. If one says he knows God without a knowledge of the commandments of God, then he is a liar. When Israel refused to listen to the word of God, they created a god after their own imagination who would listen to them. And since they lived among the Canaanite gods of Baal, they developed a corrupted concept of a god to whom they could dictate their desires to live immoral lives.

Christianity is defined by those who know the word of God, and out of love, seek to obey it to the best of their ability. Religiosity is simply carried on as one expresses emotional feelings in ignorance of the Bible. Thus one can be religious in total ignorance of the word of God, but he cannot be Christian. A good Buddhist monk can be very dedicated and religious without any knowledge of the Bible. But he is simply religious, not Christian. There is thus no true faithfulness to God when one is ignorant of the word of God. No matter how much one may cry out “Lord, Lord,” if there is no knowledge of and obedience to the word of God, then all such cries are in vain in reference to establishing a relationship with God (See Mt 7:21-23). Paul still said that Jesus is coming to take “vengeance on those who do not know God ...” (See 2 Th 1:7-9).

4. *The way of repentance and salvation: God instructed Hosea to take Gomer back after she had given herself over to harlotry. And Hosea did. The lesson God wanted to teach Hosea is that He is a loving and merciful God who will restore His relationship with Israel even though He had been betrayed. He would take back an unfaithful nation who gave Him up for the gods of the Canaanites. God wanted Hosea to walk in His shoes in reference to betrayal and restoration.

It was certain that the apostate Israelites would go into Assyrian captivity. They had manifested their unfaithfulness by committing spiritual adultery with idolatrous gods. Those immediate idolaters who were actually taken into the Assyrian captivity in 722/21 B.C. would never again see the land of milk and honey. They would die in captivity. But a remnant of their great, great grandchildren would be allowed to return to the land in 536 B.C. God would accept them back into His fold because they repented in their captivity.

Idolatry separated Israel from God, and it was idolatry that the Jews in captivity committed themselves never to be guilty of again. A father once told his son the story of how a sheep jumped through the hole in a fence and lost his way. The sheep was later found and brought back into the fold. The son commented, “Did the farmer patch up the hole in the fence?” Israel patched up the hole in their spiritual fence, and to this day idolatry has never been a problem with the faith of Israel.

We certainly serve a God who is beyond the limitations of our ability to forgive. When the Bible says of God, “Their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more” (Hb 8:12), we can trust that God chooses not to remember the unfaithfulness of those who once turned their backs on Him, but have repented. The apostle of love of the New Testament said of God,

If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness (1 Jn 1:9).

It is this God that Israel forsook for gods they created after their own material and sensual desires to follow wealth and wanton behavior. But upon repentance, it is this God who will accept anyone back into the fold of His love. This God is as Paul wrote:

Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God. How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out (Rm 11:33).

Paul would conclude, “I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities ... will be able to separate us from the love of God ...” (Rm 8:38,39).

Chapter 4

JOEL

We move now to the southern kingdom of Israel. Joel was a prophet of Judah sometime before either Jonah, Amos or Hosea, who were prophets to the northern kingdom. Some have believed that Joel’s ministry of the word of God was somewhere between 830 to 814 B.C. But in view of the message of Joel 2:28-32, and other prophetic statements of the book, a probable date would be sometime in the seventh century B.C., possibly after the fall of the northern kingdom, but before the fall of Jerusalem.

The name Joel means “the Lord is God,” and thus, the theme of the book corresponds to the Lord’s working in the history of His people in order to preserve a remnant for the future fulfillment of prophecy. Joel speaks of the great day of the Lord that was to come. And since Judah as a whole had moved into a state of apostasy that would ultimately lead to its doom, the “day of the Lord” meant judgment. It indicated a time when the people had to pay for their rejection of the Creator of their nation.

A. Historical/social background:

The environmental circumstances that laid the foundation for the preaching of Joel was a devastating locust plague that had just occurred throughout the land. This worst ever locust plague, combined with a severe drought, prepared the minds of the people to be receptive to the word of God. The “punishment” of hard times presented the right opportunity for God to send His prophet to an otherwise stiffnecked people who were bent on turning away from Him and His word.

As other prophets, Joel sought to turn Judah from their digression into sin that would eventually result in the termination of the nation. Though the final end of Judah would not come until a few years after his ministry, we see in the message of Joel that God was very patient with His people in preserving them as long as possible as an independent theocratic nation in their own land. They were warned of their first captivity in 601 B.C., and then again with a second captivity in 597 B.C. Nevertheless, the people were fast moving away from God, though the southern kingdom prophets as Isaiah, Micah and Obadiah, would delay the termination of the nation by their ministry of preaching.

The people were following the moral economic culture of religious compromise for material gain. This socioeconomic culture was introduced by Solomon who committed spiritual adultery with foreign gods for the sake of economic gain. Such a compromise almost always leads to the moral ruin of a nation. It was for this reason that Paul wrote to the Christians in Colosse, “Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth” (Cl 3:2). Invariably, when this priority of focus is reversed, people move away from God. And such did all the tribes of Israel in her final years. Because Israel was situated in the main trade route between Europe and Africa, they just could not resist the temptation to enrich themselves as traders of the north and south passed through Palestine on their journeys.

Through Joel, God did not want the people to think that the seemingly natural disasters of the locust plague and drought were the normal cycle of nature. The natural disasters were God-generated in order to stimulate a desire to return to His directions. They were calamities to prepare the people to hear the judgments of God (Jl 1 – 2:11). And since they were signs from God, God, through Joel, was issuing a call for repentance (Jl 2:12-17). But what is characteristic with God’s call for repentance is also a warning of impending doom if they did not repent. But with the coming judgment was a promise of a new world order in reference to God’s relationship with man (Jl 2:18 – 32).

What is unique about the message of Joel is that about twenty-seven of the seventy-three verses of the book are parallel in thought to other prophets. It is as if Joel wanted to remind the people what God had said through the other prophets. He wanted his audience to know that all the prophets were in harmony concerning the end of Judah and the theocratic existence of Israel in Palestine. He wanted them to understand completely the reason why they were being sent into captivity.

B. Joel preaches to us:

The message of Joel was directed specifically to those who were contemporary with him, and thus living through the calamity of the locust plague and drought. By the time he reaches the end of the book, he preaches one of the most significant messages in the Bible in reference to a paradigm change to the Messianic age of the gospel.

1. God sent natural calamity to encourage repentance. The statement of Joel 1:2 is significant in the sense that what to many in Judah believed was just a bad locust plague, was actually the direct working hand of God.

Hear this you old men, and give ear all you inhabitants of the land. Has this [locust plague] been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers?

It was as if the people were passing the plague off as the worst they had ever experienced, but not the intervention of God in nature. This is a significant point in reference to both natural and international events surrounding Israel in Palestine. Those natural calamities or international events among the nations were considered only the normal occurrence of historical events by the people who were living through them. The people were living normal lives, having no awareness that such events were the work of God in order to direct them on the right path, or to warn them of impending doom that was in their future.

These intervention acts of God through natural calamity and international affairs continued throughout the ministry of the prophets. We must understand, therefore, that it was only through the prophets that the people were made aware that such events were an act of God, not simply the natural occurrences of the world around them. They were the work of God to produce repentance, and thus delay their final termination as a theocratic nation in the land of Palestine.

So the locust plague of Joel's day was not just another natural calamity in Judah. It was an act of God. Joel's question in 1:2 was a call to them to ponder the catastrophe of the locust plague, and then come to the conclusion that God had His hand in the matter. And if God worked through the plague, then they must determine what God was trying to communicate to the people? This is where they needed to listen to the prophets.

Joel uses the locust plague metaphorically in order to reveal the future of an unrepentant Judah. He portrays the coming of the locust as a marching army into the land. The locust are the soldiers (Jl 2:7), with horses and chariots (Jl 2:4,5). The Assyrian army of locust marched in from the north to defeat the northern kingdom of Israel in 722/21 B.C. In 601, 597, and finally in 586 B.C., the Babylonians would march in from the north and take Judah into captivity. The final captivity of 586 B.C. would be the time when the temple and Jerusalem would be destroyed. This would be the date of the final termination of the independent theocratic nation of all Israel in Palestine. In the centuries to come, the land would be in the possession of the Babylonians, then the Greeks, and finally, the Romans.

Joel called on the people to gather for a solemn assembly in order that the end not come. If they repented, they would be spared.

Consecrate a fast. Call a solemn assembly. Gather the elders and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of the Lord your God and cry out to the Lord (Jl 1:14).

God continued to plead through Joel, "Now, therefore, says the Lord, turn to Me with all your heart, and with fasting and with weeping and with mourning" (Jl 2:12). They were called on to "rend your heart and not your garments" (Jl 2:13). They needed to remember the concept that Paul repeated to the Corinthians: "Godly sorrow works repentance to salvation that is not to be regretted" (2 Co 7:10). The people needed to do more than tear their garments in remorse over their sins. They needed to change their lives. Nothing short of total repentance would suffice in order to avoid of the judgment that was coming. They needed to do as Peter commanded Israel's generation during his time:

... repent and be converted so that your sins may be blot- ted out, in order that the times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord (At 3:19).

The repentant must keep in mind that there is a difference between being sorry for one's sin, and being saddened that one was caught in his sin. When we are caught in our sins, we often want to confess someone else's sin, and not our own. And thus, in ignoring our own sinful way of life, we fail to change our behavior. What God was calling on Judah to do was more than a conversion of the head. He sought for a conversion of the heart. Their behavior had to change.

The moral condition of Judah and Israel in Joel's day was prophetic of the religious conditions of Israel during the ministry of Jesus. In fact, Jesus quoted Isaiah, who spoke of the religious condition of Israel during Judah's time of apostasy, and applied it to the religious leaders of His day. Jesus applied the moral conditions of Joel and Isaiah's time to that of the religious leadership of the scribes and Pharisees.

This people honors Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me. In vain they worship Me, teaching as doctrines the commandments of men (Mk 7:6,7; see Is 29:13).

Jesus' call was the same as Joel and Isaiah: "I tell you, no. But unless you repent, you will all likewise perish" (Lk 13:2). They did not repent, and thus, they perished. They refused to repent and return to the word of God, and thus, they were destroyed, as Hosea said, "For lack of knowledge" of the word of God (Hs 4:6). That which happened to Israel of old, happened to the Israel that existed during the time of Jesus. The Assyrians and Babylonians terminated the independent theocratic Israel of old according to the prophecy of Joel and Isaiah. The Romans terminated national Israel of Jesus' day during the A.D. 70 destruction of Jerusalem. If those of Joel's day would have repented, God would have driven the invading armies into the sea (Jl 2:18-20). Unfortunately, neither Joel's Israel nor Jesus' Israel heeded the call to repentance.

Someone once said, "Real repentance thinks God's thoughts about sin and hates it; takes God's side against self and dies to it; turns to God Himself and serves Him." But when it comes to repentance and turning to God, it is more as Mason said, "If we put off repentance another day, we have a day more to repent of and a day less to repent in." The great Bible commentator Matthew Henry said, "True repentance is never too late, but late repentance is seldom true."

Joel gave the people of God the opportunity to repent in order to avoid national doom. Since he was calling for national repentance, those individuals who certainly did heed his call were outnumbered by the majority who determined the moral nature of the society. Regardless of efforts to repent on the part of the minority, the majority prevailed, and thus, the nation as a whole was terminated.

2. In view of no repentance, God announced the day of judgment. In Joel 2:21, there is a transition from a call to repentance to a promise of hope. Though the immediate generation of Joel's audience did not repent, and subsequently died in their national apostasy, there would be a generation born in captivity to repentant parents who would return to the land as a repentant remnant.

We must keep in mind that Joel and the prophets were addressing the people as a whole. Their messages were directed to the nation of people, not the individual citizens. It was the sin of the majority of the society that led to the captivities of both the northern and southern kingdoms, which captivities ended them up in Assyrian and Babylonian captivity. It was in captivity that they would nationally repent by forsaking all forms of idolatry. It would be then that they would experience the great time of glory that Joel announced: “Do not fear, O land. Be glad and rejoice, for the Lord will do great things” (Jl 2:21).

But before the “great things,” there would be a great national tragedy. Joel then introduces us to the judgment phrase, “the day of the Lord” (Jl 1:15; 2:11). The context in which this phrase is used defines the meaning. The day of the Lord is a day of judgment and destruction. It is a day of termination as a result of rebellion against God. In the prophecy of Joel, there would be a paradigm change in reference to God's work through Israel. God would change from working through national Israel to produce the new paradigm of salvation through the Branch who was to come. God now works through the new paradigm of the spiritual Israel in order to take the gospel into all the world.

Throughout the rest of the prophecies of the Old Testament, therefore, we must not forget this biblical definition of the day of the Lord. This is necessary because some modern-day “end-of-times” enthusiasts seem to conclude that the day of the Lord is always a reference to the final end of all things at the end of time. But in the historical context of Joel's introduction and use of the phrase, “the day of the Lord” was a time in time wherein God would bring judgment on His people, Israel, in order to move them into a new paradigm. The new paradigm would eventually be a time of faith and grace that would be manifested at the cross and announced on the day of Pentecost in A.D. 30. It was a phrase that was used in reference to God's work with Israel, not God's work with the human race. Therefore, when we see the phrase used in the Bible, we must first seek to understand what God was doing in time in order to preserve a remnant of Israel in order to usher in His redemptive work through Israel. In the New Testament the phrase “day of the Lord” is used in reference to the end of all things (See 1 Co 5:5; 2 Co 1:14; 1 Th 5:2; 2 Th 2:2; 2 Pt 3:10). The phrase is always used to express the finality of all things at the end of time.

In order to help us not to take the day of the Lord out of the historical context of God working through Israel in the Old Testament, Joel gives an interpretative hint to remind his readers that he was not talking about something that would take place at the end of time. “Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble, for the day of the Lord is coming, because it is close at hand” (2:1).

“Close at hand” in Joel's historical context meant that something would soon transpire. The captivity of the northern kingdom of Israel had already taken place. The phrase “at hand” indicates that Joel was preaching to the people just before the beginning of the fall of the southern kingdom. In 601 B.C., the Babylonians came from the north and took the first Israelites of Judah into captivity. This initial captivity was a warning, but it was a warning that the people did not heed. As Judah plunged further into moral degradation, the final judgment of God was “close at hand.” Joel's message referred to the final end of the last two tribes in Palestine, which tribes were about to be extracted from the land in 586 B.C.

3. In national restoration, God announces a new spiritual paradigm shift: One of the most significant prophecies of the Old Testament is Joel 2:28-32. It is significant because it points specifically to the time when God would reveal His purpose for the existence of Israel and the reason why He sent His prophets to Israel.

The purpose of the nation of Israel was to preserve a segment of world society in order to prevent what happened in Genesis 6:5: “... the wickedness of man was great on the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually.” Except for eight souls, the world population was destroyed by the flood of Noah's day because it had lost its purpose for existence, that is to populate heaven. Israel was made a nation that supposedly would not forget the God of heaven. The prophets, therefore, were sent to remind the Israelites of their Creator, and then preserve them until the coming of the Blessing that was promised to the fathers. From the time Noah and His family took that first step out of the Ark, all history was directed to the time when Jesus took His first step in bearing a cross to Calvary.

Peter's quotation of the prophecy Joel 2:28-32 on the day of Pentecost in A.D. 30 reaffirmed the purpose for the existence of national Israel, and the returned remnant. It also was a validation of God's work to bring the Redeemer into the world through Israel (At 2:17-21). Just before Jesus bowed His head in death on the cross, He declared, "It is finished" (Jn 19:30). There is more in that three-word statement than we usually assume.

Peter's quotation of the prophecy of Joel 2 establishes one irrefutable fact. The Holy Spirit was pronouncing the Joel 2 prophecy fulfilled by the events that took place on that day of Pentecost in A.D. 30. Any interpreter who would move the fulfillment of the Joel 2 prophecy past that time is simply twisting the prophecy to conform to his own speculations.

We must not be deceived. There are some crafty speculators in the religious world today who are skilled in Scripture manipulation to produce sensational pronouncements of future events. They are able to do their manipulations because of the fickle nature of many in the religious world who seek to hear something shocking about what may transpire among the nations of the world prior to the coming of Jesus. So Paul warned that we should grow up in our knowledge of the word of God in order that we "no longer be children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of teaching, by the trickery of men in cleverness to the deceitfulness of error" (Ep 4:14).

Peter's quotation of Joel 2:28-32 is from the Greek Septuagint, which was a translation from Joel's Hebrew. Our English translation of Acts 2 is from the Greek, and thus, there are some differences to translations from the Hebrew of Joel 2. We must remember that the Holy Spirit was the origin of Joel's original statement in Hebrew, as well as Peter's quotation from the Greek Septuagint. The Holy Spirit, therefore, sanctioned Peter's quotation, which quotation was inscribed as Scripture when Luke wrote the book of Acts. So when we study through the text of the prophecy in Joel, and its quotation in Acts, we understand that both contexts originated from the Holy Spirit.

a. Afterward: Joel used the word "afterward" to point his readers to a time that would follow the captivity. That about which he prophesied would take place after the Israelites had gone through the purification of the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities before they returned to Palestine as a remnant.

When considering the fulfillment of all prophecy of God's plan of redemption, we must always keep in mind the statement of Jesus when He began His ministry: "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand" (Mk 1:15). This was the fulfillment of all the prophecies concerning the time when God sent His Son into the world to finalize the eternal plan of redemption (Lk 24:44; Gl 4:4). It was the time when the remnant of Israel had already returned to Palestine. Therefore, the remnant was in Palestine awaiting the fulfillment of these prophecies and the hope of Israel (See At 26:6; 28:20).

b. In the last days: In referring to the prophecy of Joel 2, Peter stated, "And it will come to pass in the last days" (At 2:17). Joel's "afterward" was Peter's "in the last days." Therefore, the last days were in existence while the remnant was waiting for the coming hope of Israel. The last days were in existence at the time the prophecy of Joel 2 was fulfilled. And because the last days were in existence at the time of the fulfillment of Joel 2, any efforts to twist Joel's prophecy to refer to our time today is simply erroneous.

What is significant about Peter's statement is that he used the word "in." In other words, the events that Joel stated would transpire after the remnant returned to the land. This would be the time of the last days. It would be in these days that the fulfillment of the Joel 2:28-32 prophecy would take place. When Jesus said, "The time is fulfilled," we understand that God was consummating His plan for Israel by pouring out His Spirit on all flesh in Acts 2:1-4. In Peter's announcement to all nations in Acts 2 that the Jews now had the opportunity to be a part of the new spiritual Israel, we understand that the prophecy of Joel 2 was fulfilled.

Jesus' ministry was in the last days of national Israel. In these days, Peter announced in Acts 2 the new paradigm that all who were baptized into Christ were "neither Jew nor Greek" (See At 2:38,41; Gl 3:26-28). The announcement was made in the last days of national Israel, which days would be finalized with the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. Those who became a part of the new Israel came under the new law and covenant of Christ, while the old Sinai law and covenant that God made with national Israel on Mount Sinai was fading away (See Hb 8:13; 12:28).

When Peter used the phrase "in the last days," he was not referring to the beginning of the last days. He was speaking of finality, not beginning. And thus, Joel's prophecy was a prophecy of finality in which God would do great things. So Peter reminded his audience, "... this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel" (At 2:16). What we conclude from Peter's quotation of Joel 2, therefore, is that everything that is mentioned in the prophecy of Joel must find its fulfillment in the consummation of national Israel in the last days in which Peter and the other apostles lived. There is nothing left for enthusiastic eschatologists today to use in reference to the end of the world.

When Joel made the prophecy of Joel 2, he was comforting his immediate audience with hope that they would need after the “locust army” devoured Israel. The hope was for them, not for us today. We would not, therefore, steal their hope from the prophecy in order to generate some excitement today that the world is coming to an end according to the prophecy of Joel 2. Within the hope given to Israel at the time of Joel, Joel spoke of a new and exciting time when the Spirit would be poured out. Peter said that he and the apostles lived through that experience. And if Peter correctly interpreted the experience of Acts 2:1-4—and he did—then there is no time in the future when the Spirit will be poured out again as it was on the day of Pentecost in A.D. 30. Therefore, all of Joel 2:28-32 was in the first century, beginning with the outpouring of the Spirit in Acts 2:1-4.

Biblical interpreters must always remember that if they steal away the hope of a prophecy that was made to an immediate audience of an Old Testament prophet, they are accusing the Holy Spirit of giving a false hope to the people to whom the message was initially delivered. In fact, they are accusing the Holy Spirit of lying to the people because He was supposedly making the prophecy for us today, while leading the immediate audience to believe that the hopes of the prophecy were for them.

c. Pour out My Spirit: When Peter said “this is that” in Acts 2:16, the “this” referred to the outpouring of the Holy Spirit in Acts 2:1-4, and “that” referred to the prophecy of Joel 2:23-32. Peter connected prophecy and fulfillment in order not to leave any doubt in anyone’s mind that the prophecy of Joel 2 was fulfilled in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit in A.D. 30. In making this statement, he confines the fulfillment of the prophecy to the first century.

d. All flesh: The Holy Spirit would not be limited to the prophets as in the Old Testament era. At the end of the last days, the Spirit would be poured out on all classes of people as sons and daughters, old and young, male and female, and bondservants and free.

The prophecy of Joel must be understood as a contrast to what was experienced in Joel’s day to what would happen when the prophecy was fulfilled. The speaking of the word of God through the direction of the Holy Spirit was limited to a few prophets at the time of Joel’s ministry. These were prophets (preachers) who spoke the word of God to the people, though a vast number of false prophets presumed to be true prophets of God. But because the true prophets were gifted with the Spirit, they could speak to the people for God.

There were no circulated Bibles in those days. Only the prophets were circulated in order to verbally teach the people. But at the end of the last days, teachers, men and women, young and old, would go forth to teach the word of God throughout the world (Mt 28:19,20). It would no longer be that God spoke exclusively through the fathers (Hb 1:1). On the contrary, in every place there would be those who would teach the gospel.

e. Prophecy: There were few times when the Old Testament prophets actually spoke of future events. Speaking of the future was not the primary focus of their ministry. Such was only the conclusion to their sermons. When the prophets wrote their messages, they focused on recording those statements of future events that would transpire if there was no positive response to their message of repentance. They did this for the benefit of those who would come later and read what they had written concerning future events. It was on this basis, therefore, that the people fully believed that what the prophets wrote was from God. The primary work of the prophet was to speak forth God’s word, not to foretell future events. People today want to reverse this order in order to be some self-proclaimed prophet of future events. But if they would pattern their ministry after the ministry of the Old Testament prophets, then they would be studying and preaching the word of God in order that people understand and follow God.

f. Wonders: Joel 2:30-32 is a series of metaphors that explain what would be happening among world nations at the time of the consummation of national Israel in the last days. In Old Testament figures of speech, celestial bodies metaphorically represented earthly kingdoms. The fall of these bodies metaphorically represented the termination of kingdoms (See Is 13:9,10; 34:4; Ml 4:1,5,6). The sun represented the king of the kingdom. The moon and stars were metaphorical of the governors, princes and military leaders of the nations who received their light (authority) from the sun (king). Since they received their power from their king, when the king fell, therefore, they fell.

Isaiah’s prophecy against the Babylonian Empire in Isaiah 13:1-17 is a good example of how this metaphorical language of celestial bodies was used in reference to the fall of kingdoms. The context of this prophecy was specifically against the Babylonians. In verse 17 God said, “Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them [the Babylonians] ....” This one statement places all the pronouncements of Isaiah 13 in the context of God’s judgment of Babylon. We must understand the following statement of Isaiah in the context of God’s punishment of the Babylonian Empire, which Empire in history was eventually overthrown by the Medo-Persian Empire:

For the stars of heaven and its constellations will not give their light. The sun will be darkened in its going forth, and the moon will not cause its light to shine (Is 13:10).

Isaiah used the heavenly bodies as metaphors to picture the fall of the powers of the Babylonian Empire. Joel did the same in reference to the fall of many world governments at the time God would bring an end to national Israel, but begin a new and exciting spiritual Israel that would encompass the world (See Dn 2:44; 7:13,14).

At the time Peter stood up on the day of Pentecost in A.D. 30, the Roman Empire had brought one world kingdom after another to a close. The Roman Empire brought down governments throughout the world as it spread its power to conquer the nations of the world. It was a time whenever the Roman army returned to Rome, news went out to the residents of the Empire that another nation had been subdued and brought under the control of Rome. The constellations of governments throughout the world were falling, and thus it was the fullness of time.

But when the fullness of time came, God sent forth His Son, born of a woman, born under law (Gl 4:4).

In the prophecy of Joel 2:30-32, Joel was speaking of the termination of national Israel during the period of history when Rome was bringing down the constellations of world governments. The context of his prophecy was not of some supposed natural events that some would twist to indicate the end of the world. Joel was speaking to an immediate audience of Israelites who needed hope. The hope would be signalled by the outpouring of the Spirit. But when the hope was fulfilled, there would also be a termination. There would no longer be any kings and princes of national Israel. The old order of how Israel was governed at the time Joel spoke would give way to only one King, which King would reign from heaven over all things (Mt 28:18; Jn 13:2; Ep 1:20-23; see Dn 2:44; 7:13,14). There would be a termination of Israelite kings and princes on earth in order that Jesus be the only King of kings and Lord of lord of all things (1 Tm 6:15).

Joel 2:32 is a perfect picture of the Pentecost of Acts 2.

And it will come to pass that whoever calls on the name of the Lord will be delivered. For in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem there will be deliverance as the Lord has said, even among the remnant whom the Lord will call.

At the time the Spirit would be poured out, there would be a remnant called from the remnant. At the time of Joel's prophecy, God said that His people would go into captivity. However, He always promised that a physical remnant of Israel would return to the land before the coming of the Redeemer. A remnant of national Israel did return in 536 B.C. after the Babylonian captivity. It was this remnant that would wait four hundred years before another spiritual remnant would choose to be called out of the remnant of national Israel.

Luke recorded the following concerning the birth of this spiritual remnant that took place in A.D. 30 on the day of Pentecost: "Then those who received his word were baptized. And the same day [of Pentecost in A.D. 30] there were added to them about three thousand souls" (At 2:41).

This was only the beginning of the spiritual remnant. Luke also recorded, "And the Lord added to their number daily those who were being saved" (At 2:47). The spiritual Israel was born on that day of Pentecost in Jerusalem and continues to this day, growing as individuals volunteer to become citizens of the kingdom through their obedience to the gospel.

National Israel passed away in the birth of the new spiritual Israel of God. This is what the Holy Spirit wanted the judaizing teachers of Galatia to understand when He wrote the following:

For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek. There is neither bondservant nor free. There is neither male nor female. For you are all one in Christ. And if you are Christ's, then you are Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise (Gl 3:27-29).

Those who would claim that there remains a national Israel unto this day that is recognized by God, have denied what the Holy Spirit said in the preceding statement. There are not two Israels today who are God's people, one national and the other spiritual. All those who have been baptized into Christ today are of Abraham's seed and heirs of the promise that was made to national Israel when it was in existence. National, physical Israel, however, is gone in reference to the promises of God. National Israel fulfilled her purpose of bringing the promises to fulfillment. And when her purpose was fulfilled in Christ, she was no longer needed. In Christ ...

... there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondservant nor free. But Christ is all and in all" (Cl 3:11; see 1 Co 12:13).

4. There is no escape from judgment for sin: What the Holy Spirit said in 2 Corinthians 5:10 in reference to all men at the end of time was true of sinful Israel in time:

For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, so that everyone may receive the things done in the body, according to what he has done, whether good or bad.

The above passage was speaking of judgment at the end of time, but Joel's prophecy was speaking of judgment in time: "Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision. For the day of the Lord [judgment] is near in the valley of decision" (Jl 3:14).

The people of God would be judged for their sin, and subsequently, they would go into Assyrian and Babylonian captivity as punishment. But now, those nations that devastated the people of God would themselves be judged.

For behold, in those days and at that time, when I will bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all nations and will bring them down to the Valley of Jehoshaphat. And I will enter into judgment with them there for My people and for My heritage Israel whom they have scattered among the nations and divided up My land (Jl 3:1,2).

The name "Jehoshaphat" means "the Lord judges." The tables have now been turned. Those whom God used by proxy to judge Israel assumed that by their own power and will they conquered and scattered Israel. The Assyrians and Babylonians had no idea that God was using them to punish His people. But by the time God brings the remnant back into the land, the Babylonian Empire will have defeated the Assyrian Empire. The Medo-Persian Empire will have defeated the Babylonians (See Dn 2 & 7). The Assyrian and Babylonian Empires, therefore, will have gone out of existence as God's punishment of them for their arrogance against His people. Their extinction would be their judgment for gloating over their scattering of the people of God and land-grabbing of Palestine.

Joel's picture is of judgment of all those who had devastated the people of God during their years of judgment. Tyre, Sidon, Egypt and Edom, who joined in on the plunder of Israel, would also be taken down. They would reap the captivity that they had sown among the defeated Israelites.

Joel writes these prophecies for posterity. When the fulfillment transpired after the return from captivity that began in 536 B.C., then the nations of the world would know that God worked a marvelous thing with the preservation of the remnant of Israel. Embedded in the promise was that "Jerusalem will be holy, and there no foreigners will pass through her anymore" (Jl 3:17). No conquering nations would devastate Jerusalem again until God had consummated His purpose for the existence of Israel. It would be after the fulfillment of the prophecy of 2:28-32 that God would allow the Romans to destroy the nation in A.D. 70. However, no nation could touch the new spiritual Jerusalem, the church, that would be revealed from heaven. This new Israel would be victorious on earth, and then transition into eternal dwelling in the presence of God. No foreigners would pass through this Jerusalem, for this Jerusalem would be composed of all peoples of the world, who would become citizens through their obedience to the gospel (Mk 16:15,16; Gl 3:26-29).

Chapter 5

MICAH

Micah was a farmer preacher from the small village of Moresheth Gath about thirty kilometers from Jerusalem. Nothing is known about Micah except what is mentioned by him in his book, as well as Jeremiah's mention of him (Jr 26:18; see Mc 3:12). His ministry was in the countryside of Judah, and he was contemporary with Isaiah and Hosea (See Zp 3:19; compare Mc 4:1-4 with Is 2:2-4).

The duration of his ministry was somewhere between 738 to 700 B.C., during the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah of the southern kingdom. His ministry extended through the fall of the northern kingdom in 722/21 B.C. He thus had for his audience in the south, a vivid illustration of God's judgment. If they did not repent, they too would suffer the same consequences for apostasy as their sister to the north.

A. Historical/social background:

At the time of Micah and Isaiah's preaching, the socioeconomic structure of both the northern and southern kingdoms had changed. The two kingdoms had changed from being rural economies that were centered around the farming community, to being urban-oriented where the aristocrats of the cities economically exploited and marginalized the poor farmers. And since Micah was a farmer preacher in the rural areas of Judah, he was especially straightforward in his message about the economic injustices of the poor by the rich city dwellers.

In their message to Judah, both Micah and Isaiah had the example of the northern kingdom that was coming to an end, as a warning to the southern kingdom. These were not easy times concerning all international affairs. The winds of change were in the air, and thus, the international turmoil among the surrounding nations led to a very discomfoting feeling among the Israelite residents of Palestine of the day.

In 734-732 B.C., Tiglath-pileser of Assyria made war against the Syrians, Philistia, and the regions of Israel and Judah. In 734 the Syrians made an alliance with the northern kingdom in order to overthrow Ahaz of Judah. The reason for this was that Ahaz would not join in an alliance with the Syrians to fight against Assyria. Assyria had already conquered Galilee and Gilead. Their next military target was Samaria and Jerusalem.

The Assyrians were eventually successful against Samaria and the northern kingdom in 722/21 B.C. At the same time, they placed Judah under heavy tribute. But in 701 Hezekiah refused to pay any more tribute to Assyria, and in response, King Sennacherib sent his Assyrian army to Jerusalem. Isaiah was in Jerusalem at the time. He encouraged Hezekiah to be strong against the Assyrians, stating that they would not step one foot in the city (See 2 Kg 15:29 – 19:37; 2 Ch 29 – 32).

With the death of 185,000 of Assyrian soldiers outside Jerusalem in one night, Sennacherib was humiliated by God, and thus he returned to Nineveh. Nevertheless, Jerusalem continued to morally decay, which decay eventually led to her eventual fall to Babylon in 586 B.C.

The religious/social environment of Israel and Judah at the time of Micah's ministry, had become a society of people who were antagonistic of anything that represented the presence of the one true and living God. They were not unlike many societies today who have a disdain for anything pertaining to religion. In their moral digression, they went from tolerating religious people to scoffing those who would maintain any form of faith.

Culturally, the leaders had digressed to the point that they were haters of good, but lovers of evil. The prophet said of the leaders of the people, "You who hate the good and love the evil, who strip their skin from off them and the flesh from off their bones" (Mc 3:2).

When a society develops cultural norms that are contrary to the principles of the word of God, it is past repentance. It is past repentance because it has forgotten that to which repentance must be made. It is a society that has lost its moral conscience of what is right according to the word of God. Some individuals within the society may repent. Unfortunately, the majority who are behaving according to those principles that are contrary to the standards of the will of God, establish the identity of the culture. The repentant are thus working against the norms of the culture.

The behavior of wayward religious leadership was reflected in the injustices of their culture. The religious leaders were preaching profiteers, which may explain why many within the society rejected anything that had reference to faith in God's law. Micah wrote of the profiteering preachers, "If a man walking in the spirit and falsehood lie, saying, 'I will prophesy to you of wine and of strong drink,' he will even be the spokesman to this people" (Mc 2:11).

The preachers were not unlike some today who will promise a miracle for a contribution. They will proclaim, "God will bless you," if you will only drop in the money as the collection coffer passes by. The people were not so much the victims of the profiteering preachers, but they sought for themselves those who would soothe their consciences by preaching what they wanted to hear. They were as those about whom Paul wrote:

For the time will come when they will not endure sound teaching. But to suit their itching ears, they will surround themselves with teachers who will agree with their own desires (2 Tm 4:3).

This is the spirit of idolatry. One first lives according to his own lusts, and then he creates a god in his mind who condones his unrighteous behavior. He then seeks for a preacher who will soothe the desires of his heart and validate the unrighteous behavior of his life. If he cannot find such a person, then he rejects all religion.

These were times in which it took brave men to stand up and represent God. It was the worst of times to be a preacher. We are sure that the Hebrew writer reflected on times as these when he wrote of those preachers who had to endure them.

And what more will I say? For the time would fail me to tell of ... the prophets, who through faith ... stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword. And others were tortured ... others had trial of mockings and scourgings ... bonds and im- prisonment ... were stoned ... sawn asunder ... slain with the sword ... afflicted, tormented ... (Hb 11:32-38).

Regardless of the trials of the day, the farmer preacher Micah boldly pronounced the judgment of God against both Israel and Judah (Mc 1 – 3). After the pronouncement of judgment, there was a message of hope (Mc 4,5). And finally, there was a message of salvation for a remnant who were born of those who had lost their way before the captivities in their own rebellion against God (Mc 6,7). After the captivities, there was a way home to the land of promise, but also a way home to a renewed fellowship with the eternal God their forefathers had forsaken. It was by the grace of God that a remnant of Israel was to return in order to reestablish the identity of the people of God.

B. Micah preaches to us:

There are two principal lessons that come to us from the pen of Micah. One is in reference to giving hope to the people of God who were going into captivity, and the other is in reference to the behavior of life that God desires that the restored remnant maintain in order to represent the heart of God among the nations of the world.

1. Micah reveals the new paradigm of peace:

As finite biblical interpreters who are subject to know only that which has transpired in our past, and what is happening in our present. And because we are so limited, we must not question the foreknowledge of God.

Foreknowledge is a realm of awareness that is beyond our wildest capabilities. But with God, knowing the future is only natural. And because God sees the future, He is working in the events of the present in order to carry to an end the purpose for which He created the world. And the purpose for which He created the world is to populate heaven. We must never forget this teleological purpose for which this world is here.

By understanding the purpose for which Israel was created in the midst of a world population of free-moral and finite beings, we can understand why God was so patient with Israel in her apostasy. It was not that God failed to foresee Israel's apostasy. It was that He worked with their apostasy in order to accomplish the destiny of Israel for the world. God thus did not deal with Israel out of frustration, for He knew they would backslide.

God's work with His rebellious children was as a loving Father dealing with children who were struggling to deal with their own spiritual frailties. His work with their frailties eventually gave birth to the Redeemer of the world, which Redeemer would accomplish the destiny for which the world was created. And according to the ministry of the prophets, everything was working according to His foreknowledge and plan. This is why we do not discover any frustration by God in the messages of the prophets. We see a loving Father working with the best He could find among humanity in order to produce a faithful remnant through whom He could bring the Redeemer into the world. The entire effort was a revelation of God's grace.

In fact, as we contemplate the entirety of the messages of all the prophets, we are almost driven to conclude that God's attention was always to focus on a remnant of faithful people. He has always worked with faithful men as Abraham and Noah in order to begin again a spiritual lineage of faithfulness. After the captivity of Israel, He worked with the faithful Jewish remnant that would stand ready in the first century to receive into their arms the Bright and Morning Star who was born in a barn in a small village of Palestine.

God built a nation upon a promise that He made to Abraham (Gn 12:1-4). Through this nation, He was not only bringing the Redeemer into the world, but also taking the message of the Redeemer into all the world. Through the captivities of the twelve tribes of Israel, He was laying the foundation for the international opportunity that the gospel later be preached to all the world.

We have written of this in other books (See The World As It Is, ch. 7, Biblical Research Library, Book 56). In Micah's prophecy of 4:1-3, we see God's plan for world evangelism being set up as captives from the northern and southern kingdoms of Israel are scattered throughout the world. Through these exiled captives, God was establishing His people throughout the nations of the world in order to implement the strategy of Micah 4:1-3 (See also Is 2:1-4). We must not, therefore, see the captivities as a national tragedy of Israel. On the contrary, we must see in the captivities the eternal plan of God to preach the gospel to the world. By understanding this strategy, we come to the context of the prophets with the knowledge that God was allowing history to play out in time that which He already knew would happen.

The apostasy of the seed of Abraham was not a surprise to God. He knew it would happen. In fact, because of the nature of men to rebel against God, we now assume that in a world where there are always conflicts between nations for power and territory, it is revealed why God sought to establish a nation through a man as Abraham, by whom He would bring the Redeemer into the world. We understand that through the remnant of this nation, the gospel would be preached throughout the world.

Since God knew Israel could not remain nationally faithful, He was actually using the remnant of the faithful who would come from Abraham as the means by which the promised Blessing would go into all the world. Individuals can remain faithful as Abraham. But it is impossible for nations as a whole to remain faithful. And because God knew this, He foreplanned the use of an apostate nation to bring both the Blessing into the world, but also to take the Blessing into all the world. At least when we survey the history of Israel, this is what happened. If we think that this was all a surprise to God or historic coincidence, then we are being quite naive concerning the omniscience of God. So in the prophecy of Micah 4:1-4, we need to see this taking place in history according to the foreknowledge of God. And while we study through this remarkable prophecy, we must not forget one humbling statement of Paul:

Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God. How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out (Rm 11:33).

a. In the last days: Joel said that these things would take place “afterward” (Jl 2:28). Peter quoted Joel 2:28 and said that he and the other apostles were in the last days of the existence of Israel when the Spirit was poured out (At 2:1-4,16,17). Therefore, Micah and Isaiah were looking to the time of the consummation of national Israel, which consummation took place four hundred years after the Babylonian captivity. It would be in these days when God would initiate His worldwide plan for world evangelism. It was the last days of national Israel, but the beginning of the spiritual Israel that came into existence when the first person was baptized into Christ on the day of Pentecost in A.D. 30.

b. Mountain of the house of the Lord: “Mountain” is a metaphor that refers to government power. In this case, the power of God’s heavenly government would be established above all governmental powers on earth. The promised Blessing would ascend to the heavenly throne, from which He would exercise all authority over all things (Mt 28:18). Daniel expanded on this meaning in his prophecy of this event that took place in the last days of national Israel.

And in the days of these [Roman] kings the God of heaven will set up a kingdom that will never be destroyed. And the kingdom will not be left to other people. It will break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms. And it will stand forever (Dn 2:44).

Daniel further explained the One who would ascend unto the Father. His reign would be from heaven, not on this earth (See Dn 7:13).

And there was given Him dominion and glory and sovereignty, so that all peoples, nations and languages should serve Him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion that will not pass away. And His sovereignty will not be destroyed (Dn 7:14).

This would happen in the last days of national Israel. It would be a time, as Micah said, when “He will teach us of His ways and we will walk in His paths” (Mc 4:2).

c. House of the Lord: Paul explained that the new house of God was the church of our Lord (1 Tm 3:15). It was a spiritual house of all those who would come into the presence of the Lord through their obedience to the gospel (Gl 3:26-29). The meaning here is parallel to what Amos prophesied, and to what Peter stated was fulfilled in the establishment of the body of Christ in A.D. 70 (See Am 9:11; At 15:15-18). The one universal house of God was established in the last days of national Israel.

d. People will flow unto it: People from all nations, not just Israel, would come into the house of the Lord. This would be the result of the early disciples’ going into all the world and preaching the gospel to every creature (Mt 28:19,20; Mk 16:15,16). In this flow of humanity, people from all walks of life, not just those of the remnant of Israel, would come into the house of the Lord. God’s promise to the remnant was that they would be the first to establish the spiritual house of the Lord by their obedience to the gospel. But at that time, the Gentiles would also be grafted in through their obedience (See Rm 9-11). It would be a house composed of all nations, not just those of Israel.

e. Let us go up to the mountain of the Lord: During the regular Passover/Pentecost feast, Jews came to Jerusalem from the nations to which they had been scattered during the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities. On the Pentecost of A.D. 30, there were Jews in Jerusalem from at least sixteen nations (At 2:9-11). It was on this particular Passover/Pentecost that God had a surprise for these sojourners, for this was the beginning of a new spiritual paradigm of God’s work with the faithful of the world.

This part of Micah’s prophecy is worded as if the one making the proclamation is outside Jerusalem. It is stated in the same manner in the parallel statement of Isaiah (Is 2:3). After the Pentecost of A.D. 30, the first converted Jews returned to their synagogues throughout the nations from which they came. In their synagogues they announced that the Messiah had come. They thus urged their fellow Jews that the following year when they went to the Passover/Pentecost, that they too should go with them to Jerusalem. We are sure they were reading this prophecy to the Jews in the local synagogues in order to convince the people to go.

It may have been that a greater number of Jews went to the A.D. 31 Passover/Pentecost feast than the one in A.D. 30. At least this would have been typical of God's mission to always begin small and then work through the few in order to go to the masses. This also helps us to understand why the apostles stayed in Jerusalem for at least fifteen years after the A.D. 30 Passover/Pentecost, for they were still there in Acts 15. Every year a new group of sojourning Jews came to hear the confirmed word of the apostles (Mk 16:20). And every year those who were baptized into Christ went into all the world when they returned home. By A.D. 61,62 Paul affirmed that the gospel had gone into all the Roman world (Cl 1:23). God had laid the foundation for world evangelism by scattering His people into all the world through the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities. He then sent His people into all the world with the gospel in order that the world might be delivered from the captivity of sin.

f. The word of the Lord went from Jerusalem: The fulfillment of the Joel 2:28-32 passage was in the last days of national Israel. This took place in Jerusalem. It was initially manifested when the Spirit was poured out on the apostles on the day of Pentecost in A.D. 30 (At 2:1-4). The gospel was then announced publicly for the first time. The house of God was established with all those who were present when the audience on that day of Pentecost obeyed the gospel (See At 2:41; Gl 3:26-29). As a result of the outpouring, the Spirit went to all who were baptized in the name of Jesus (At 2:38). From this original beginning, the first disciples went everywhere preaching the gospel (At 8:4). All these beginnings were in fulfillment of what Jesus had said to His disciples during His ministry.

Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer and rise again from the dead the third day, and that repentance and remission of sins would be preached in His name among all the nations, beginning at Jerusalem (Lk 24:46,47).

2. Micah reveals the righteous behavior that God requires. In chapter 6, Micah presents questions concerning himself as an individual. The questions lead us as individuals to what we would present to God in order to have a relationship with Him.

Micah begins by asking questions concerning obedience to legal commands that were required by God under the Sinai law. “With what will I come before the Lord and bow myself before the High God?” (Mc 6:6). After this initial question, Micah takes us through a series of those Sinai law offerings that were to be offered for one's sin. “Will I come before Him with burnt offerings, with calves a year old?” (Mc 6:6). Micah's question would call for a negative answer. And then he moves into hyperbole. “Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousand rivers of oil? Will I give my firstborn for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul?” (Mc 6:7). And again, the answer would be no. The debt of our sin is so great that we cannot be absolved with legal offerings. Our spiritual bankruptcy is so deep that we cannot repay with ten thousand sacrifices. We simply have no spiritual savings to pay ourselves out of bankruptcy. We can offer no security on our own behalf. The assets we have are useless in taking away the sin that stands between ourselves and God. We are hopelessly lost because of our spiritual inadequacies.

The conclusion to which Micah wants us to come is that legal obedience to either God's commands, or the offering of man's inventions, will not obligate God to forgive that which separates us from Him (Is 59:1,2). Any relationship that a man would have with God can only be through the offering of His grace. There is no such thing as legal atonement, either in obedience to law or by the offering of assets and deeds.

When we come to the conclusion that we are so far away from God that there is no possible way to make our journey back to Him on our own, then we are humbled to mourning over that which separates us from Him. And in our mourning over our inabilities, our sin, we are blessed (Mt 5:3). We are blessed when we seek God's way back. What God desires is an obedient walk with Him in the realm of His righteousness. He does not seek legal obedience through offerings, for in such the heart is often lost. But if the heart is first offered, then the obedience will follow. It is not the offering that brings the heart close to God. The heart must precede the offering through mourning. And when the heart is close to God through mourning over our sin, the offering naturally follows. Our close walk with God is manifested through our mourning.

“He has shown you, O man, what is good and what the Lord requires of you, but to do justly and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God?” (Mc 6:8).

This would be Micah's reference to Deuteronomy 10:12,13, when God stated to Israel in their very beginning what He required of them:

And now, Israel, what does the Lord your God require of you, but to fear the Lord your God, to walk in all His ways, and to love Him, and to serve the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul, to keep the commandments of the Lord and His statutes that I command you this day for your good?

a. “Do justly”: There is no prejudice in justice. Justice is without respect of persons. There is no partisan spirit expressed in justice. In the implementation of that which is right, favoritism to friends and family has no part. Justice is blind to that which would disqualify it as justice.

Dictionaries define justice to be that which is morally right and good. It is doing right in our relationship with God and man. When defining the character qualities of those who would lead the body of Christ, it is not surprising that the Holy Spirit would say, “For an overseer must be ... just ...” (Ti 1:7,8). He must show an example of doing right with people.

In some translations the word “righteous” is sometimes used for justice. Joseph, the husband of Mary, was “a righteous [just] man” (Mt 1:19). Because of his obedient relationship with God, he was just in his relationship with others. Those who are just (righteous) are those who live in a just manner with their neighbors. If one would live righteously (justly) with his neighbors, then he must do that which is right toward his neighbor.

b. “Love mercy”: In the context of Matthew 9, Jesus rebuked the self-righteous Pharisees in reference to this principle of attitude and life that God requires of His people. When socially despised tax collectors, and those the Pharisees considered “sinners,” “came and sat down with Him and His disciples” (Mt 9:10), the Pharisees questioned why He would eat with such people. Their question was based on their judgment that tax collectors and “sinners” were in no possible way justified before God.

Jesus’ rebuke of the Pharisees was indirect, but also in some ways, direct. “Those who are healthy do not need a physician, but those who are sick” (Mt 9:12). The Pharisees thought that they were “healthy” before God because of their legal obedience to the law and their self-imposed religious traditions (See Mk 7:1-9). Those they proclaimed to be sinners and spiritually sick were such because of their lack of obedience to the Pharisees’ strict traditions surrounding the law of God. If they were spiritually sick, as the Pharisees so claimed, then Jesus justified His ministry to them on the basis of what certainly the Pharisees would claim to be correct. The sick do need the physician.

However, Jesus’ statement was a judgment against the Pharisees. Since they believed that they were legally healthy, then actually they were the ones who were spiritually sick. Those who do not mourn over their spiritual bankruptcy are spiritually sick. The problem is that they do not realize that they are sick. And thus, Jesus challenged the Pharisees with the statement, “But go and learn what this means, ‘I desire mercy and not sacrifice,’ for I did not come to call the righteous, but sinners” (Mt 9:13). Those who mourn over their sins know what Jesus meant. It is they who can hear the call of Jesus.

When we realized that we can never obey the law perfectly, then we understand that Jesus came for us. When we understand that through works of law no person can be justified before God, then we know that Jesus came for us. When we mourn over our spiritual sickness, then we rejoice over the coming of our healing Physician. It is then that our lives are transformed. It is then that we are blessed: “Blessed are the merciful, for they will obtain mercy” (Mt 5:7). If we would be identified as having “the wisdom from above,” then we will be “full of mercy” (Js 3:17). It is only when we are full of mercy, because we mourn over our own sin, that we will have assurance when we are presented before Him. “For judgment will be without mercy to the one who has shown no mercy” (Js 2:13). Alexander Pope was right when he worded the following for all of us:

Teach me to feel another’s woe,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I do others show,
That mercy be shown to me.

It is a merciful spirit that would lead us to repeat the words of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow:

Being all fashioned of the selfsame dust,
Let us be merciful as well as just.

c. “Walk humbly with God”: James explained what Micah had in mind. “Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and He will lift you up” (Js 4:10). Arrogance leads us to believe that we can direct our own walk. We can make it on our own by doing it our way. We lead ourselves to believe that we need no lifting up by God if we can lift ourselves up. It is for this reason that “God resists the proud, but gives grace to the humble” (Js 4:6). A self-lifted person feels no need for Divine upliftment.

Our mourning over our inability to justify ourselves before God through either law-keeping or good works should move us to cry out for mercy from God. This is where Israel went wrong. They had puffed themselves up in their own religiosity, and thus felt self-justified. There was no mourning over sin, for they saw themselves as just in their own eyes. The curse of the spirit of idolatry is that when one creates a religion that conforms to his own desires, then he feels no reason for mourning over laws that are not a part of his idolatrous religion. If by chance there is some area where guilt is felt, then the created religion is revised to conform to the desires of the idolater so he will feel no guilt.

When one establishes the standards for his own religiosity, then he feels no need to repent. This is especially difficult for those religious groups that function on the foundation of emotional subjectivity. The objective standard for direction through the word of God has little place in such religions. If it feels right, such religionists believe that it must be right. The result is that religion has been established on the subjective foundation of feeling, not on an objective conclusion from what is stated in the word of God.

Subjective religion is thus defined as an idolatrous religion because one's own emotionality has become the standard of atonement for sin. And thus, adherents to such religions show up every Sunday to atone for their sins through emotional hysteria. They go home feeling good and validated because they experienced self-atonement through an emotional experience of losing control or "speaking in tongues." But worship is not an emotional outburst for self-atonement. Worship results from knowing that we have continued atonement (cleansing) by the blood of Jesus because we are walking in the light of His word (1 Jn 1:7). Worship is our response to God for what He worked for us, not what we have worked for Him.

Micah's plea to Israel in Micah 6:8, therefore, was that of Peter whose ministry was also to Israelites. "Yes, all of you be submissive to one another and be clothed with humility, for God resists the proud and gives grace to the humble" (1 Pt 5:5). God cannot give grace to those who do not feel that they have need of it. The proud are self-justified. And the self-justified feel that they need no grace. So Peter and Micah's plea to the self-justified would be, "... humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God so that He may exalt you at the proper time" (1 Pt 5:6).

If anyone would seek to be lifted up to God, he must never forget that only God can do the lifting through His grace. When the humble saint realizes this, then he begins a walk of fellowship with God.

If we say that we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie and do not practice the truth. But if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship with one another and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanses us from all sin (1 Jn 1:6,7).

One of the most beautiful endings of all the prophets through whom God pronounced judgment on His backslidden children, is Micah's statement of 7:18-20. It is the identity of the character of God. In one verse we find comfort in our hour of grief over our sins.

Who is a God like unto You, who pardons iniquity and passes by the transgression of the remnant of His heritage? He does not retain His anger forever because He delights in mercy (Mc 7:18).

Chapter 6

OBADIAH

Obadiah was a prophet to the relatives of Israel, the descendants of Esau. He was a prophet who was specifically chosen to announce the termination of a culture of people and nation. Edom would be added to the graveyard of nations because of how he treated his brother, Jacob.

A. Historical/social background:

In the historical planning of God to bring into Palestine His chosen people through whom would eventually come the Messiah and Savior of the world, God surrounded Israel with the descendants of Abraham. With Edom to the south, Moab and Ammon to the east of the Jordan River, and the descendants of Terah, Abraham's father, to the north, God in His eternal wisdom sought to build a buffer of faith around the children of Israel from the invading influence of pagan nations. He gave Israel the most strategic trading route of the ancient world. And so Israel was established in the land of Palestine until the coming of the One through whom the world would be blessed (See Gn 12:1-3).

But as we know, Israel failed to carry out her responsibilities of the covenant. In reference to the buffer nations, Edom became one of the most insidious adversaries of Israel because of a legacy of resentment that was embedded in the culture by the father of the nation, Esau. And now at the time of the prophets, it was time for the buffer nations to also pay the price for not maintaining their purpose to protect their brother Israel through whom the Redeemer would be born into the world. The price that they would pay would be their extinction from history, while the remnant of their brother, the Israelites, would return as a people to the land of promise after paying for her own sin. The remnant of Israel would still bring the Redeemer into the world, but the Redeemer would come into a world where the relative nations through Abraham would no longer exist.

The animosity between the sons of Israel (Jacob) and sons of Esau dated back to an event when the mother of Jacob used deception to steal away the blessing that would come naturally to the firstborn (Gn 27). In the deception, Isaac unwittingly gave the blessing to Jacob, instead of his firstborn, Esau. Esau subsequently migrated from the land of promise into a territory south of Palestine that was eventually called Edom (Gn 25:30; 36:1,8). The animosity that Esau held against Jacob became the cultural identity of the Edomites, and thus, throughout the centuries the Edomites expressed an unforgiving spirit toward the sons of Jacob.

The lesson from history is that a culture of the people is based on the events of the history of the people. If unfortunate events in the history of any society have developed cultural traits that are contrary to the word of God, those cultural traits must be sacrificed for the betterment of the people in the present. No one has a right to disobey the word of God with the justifying statement that “this is our culture.”

Culture must always be sacrificed for obedience, which thing the Edomites were not willing to do. They culturally could not get over losing the blessing of the birthright of Esau their father because Esau’s father, Isaac, had been craftily manipulated. They were always jealous that they could have been resting in the land of milk and honey instead of the desert territory of the Sinai Peninsula. Combine their loss of the blessing from Isaac with the foolishness of Esau’s selling of his birthright to Jacob for a pot of porridge. Instead of blaming their father Esau for selling his birthright for a pot of porridge, they took out their resentment on the house of Jacob (Gn 25:29-34). Regardless of Esau’s misfortunes, it was always in the plan of God to work through Jacob, and not Esau. It may have been that they could not accept this fact, even though the prophets said that “God loved Jacob,” but turned Esau away (Mt 1:2,3; Rm 9:13).

The descendants of Esau subsequently ended up in the region south of Palestine. When the children of Jacob came out of Egyptian captivity on their way to the land of promise, Edom refused to allow them to pass through their land, possibly thinking that it could have been them whom God could have been blessing with the land of milk and honey (Nm 20). It had been over four hundred years since their father had sold his birthright to Jacob, but they just could not move on. Because the Edomites were relatives of the Israelites, God did not allow Israel to war against the Edomites. If He had, then they could have possibly become an extinct nation before they had a second chance to prove their purpose. Nevertheless, punishment would be reserved for the centuries to come because they did not consider the need of their brother. The preaching of Obadiah was of the time when Edom had to reap her punishment.

Edom’s enmity against Israel was so great that they fought against the Israelites during the years that Israel worked to drive out the Canaanites from the land of Palestine. About 350 years after Israel’s conquest of the land of Palestine, David eventually subdued the Edomites, and Solomon kept them in check throughout his reign. But in the days of King Ahaz (2 Ch 28:16-18), Edom rebelled and continued to be an antagonist against the Israelites. God thus called Obadiah because He was determined that it was time to take this nation from the history of nations of the world.

The theme of the prophecy of Obadiah is the complete destruction of the nation of Edom for his sins against his brother to the north. God announced the reason why they were to be destroyed (vss 1-14). He then revealed that the day of the Lord would mean the future preservation and glory of Israel, but the termination of Edom (vss 15-21). The remnant of Israel would live on in history in order to complete her destiny for her creation as a nation. But Edom would pass from history because he failed to complete his purpose to be a buffer nation for his brother.

B. Obadiah preaches to us:

God’s judgment against Edom teaches two lessons: (1) God reveals the sin that pride generates, and thus, pride is the downfall of those who believe that they are secure. (2) God reveals His feelings concerning the indifference of those who could help in the time of another’s troubles, but would rather sit idly by and do nothing.

1. Downfall through pride: The capital of Edom was the naturally protected city of Petra. Petra was seated at the end of an entrance way through clefts that were over 200 meters (700 feet) high. The temple of the Edomites that was at the end of the entrance, was carved into solid rock. The narrow entrance way to the temple and city was about a kilometer and a half long and twenty meters wide. This was the only access to the city. The city was impenetrable by enemies. It was only natural, therefore, that the Edomites took great pride in their defenses and existence as a nation that had existed for four hundred years before the arrival of the recently freed Israelites at their border.

The Edomites were too proud and resentful to allow the Israelites to pass through their land on their way to the land of promise, which they believed should have been theirs. They were confined to living in a desert region of the Sinai peninsula, when the descendants of Jacob were headed for the land of milk and honey. It was a land they could have received if the Israelites' father, Jacob, had not cunningly jilted their father, Esau, out of his blessing as the firstborn. It was just too much for the Edomites to show mercy and forgiveness to their brother, the Israelites. Their pride and unforgiving spirit was their downfall, and eventually, their resentment toward their brother led to their doom. God judged them,

The pride of your heart has deceived you, you who dwell in the clefts of the rock, whose habitation is high, who says in his heart, "Who will bring me down to the ground?" (vs 3).

Though they resided in a secure location, God, through Obadiah, said He would condemn them, "though you exalt yourself as the eagle, and though you set your nest among the stars, from there I will bring you down" (vs 4). So the final verdict of their sin would be, "For your violence against your brother Jacob, shame will cover you and you will be cut off forever" (vs 10).

They would suffer the consequences of pride and arrogance. Someone said, "That which first overcame man, is the last thing man overcomes." Their unforgiving spirit had brought them to a destiny of doom and their pride kept them under the sentence of termination until their end. They were a nation that proved the statement, "Pride goes before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall" (Pv 16:18).

The problem with the Edomites' pride was that it led them to do all sorts of evil throughout their history. Solomon wrote, "Only by pride comes contention" (Pv 13:10). We wonder if Solomon's statement was not made specifically of the Edomites whom he at the time kept under subjection. At the time of their subjection by Solomon, they needed to remember his statement, "A man's pride will bring him low, but honor will uphold the humble in spirit" (Pv 29:23).

God's message through Obadiah to the Edomites was the same as the Holy Spirit's to some arrogant Corinthians: "... let him who thinks he stands take heed lest he fall" (1 Co 10:12). When it comes to comparing ourselves with ourselves, Paul's following advice was from the Spirit: "For if anyone thinks himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceives himself" (Gl 6:3).

We seek to be disciples of Jesus. Being a disciple means that we seek to emulate in our lives the life of Jesus. In doing this, there are some very important things about Jesus' life that we must consider if we would be His disciple.

If we take pride in our position in life, or some self-appointed rank among the disciples, we must remember that Jesus was a carpenter's son (Mt 13:55). If we take pride in our wealth, we must remember that the Son of God did not have a place of His own to lay His head at night (Mt 8:20; Jn 1:46). If we take pride in the fine clothing with which we attire ourselves to parade before others on Sunday morning, we must remember that Jesus had no looks that would draw people to Him (Is 53:2). And if we would associate with the rich, famous and powerful in order to promote ourselves, then we must remember that the One after whom we would call ourselves a disciple was a friend of tax collectors and sinners (Mt 11:19).

And before we paste our Bible diplomas on the walls of our offices and take pride in our educational status, we need to remember what the Jews said of Jesus: "How has this Man become learned, having never been educated?" (Jn 7:15). Lest we preach our own knowledge, we must remember His example: "I speak to the world those things that I have heard from Him" (Jn 8:26). And before we seek to seat ourselves in the chief seats before a grand audience, we need to remember that the One after whom we would call ourselves a disciple, "poured water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel with which He was girded" (Jn 13:5).

And if our thirst to be accepted is so great that we would compromise our behavior and beliefs, then we must remember that our friend Jesus "came to His own and His own did not receive Him" (Jn 1:11). In fact, "He was despised and rejected by men" (Is 53:3). When we are so confident in our own abilities and knowledge, we must remember what He said while on earth: "I can of My own self do nothing" (Jn 5:30). And when we want to presumptuously do our own will, we must remember His behavior in reference to His Father. "I do not seek My own will, but the will of the Father who sent Me" (Jn 5:30).

And finally, if we would be His disciple, then we too must follow Him to a cross. “He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross” (Ph 2:8). If there is pride anywhere in our efforts to be a disciple of Jesus, surely we will fail to attain unto our desires. When Paul said, “Let this mind be in you that was also in Christ” (Ph 2:5), he was speaking in the context of our Disciplier, “who, being in the form of God, did not consider it robbery to be equal with God” (Ph 2:6).

It is unfortunate that the world seems to be moving into a generation of religionists who are “me-deep” into themselves. It is a generation that is consumed with itself, and thus, a generation whose thinking is totally contrary to the spiritual nature of the God who humbled Himself from heaven, and then, allowed Himself to be humiliated to the cross.

2. Judgment based on indifference: God’s judgment of Edom was clear. “For your violence against your brother Jacob shame will cover you and you will be cut off forever” (vs 10). Their violence was that they joined in with the enemies of Israel in the final days of Israel’s calamity.

In the day you stood on the other side, in the day that the foreigners carried away captive his forces and foreigners entered into his gates and cast lots on Jerusalem, even you were as one of them (vs 11; see 2 Kg 8:20-22; 2 Ch 21:8-10).

When his brother was in trouble, Edom chose to be neutral. And so, “he who gloats over calamity will not be unpunished” (Pv 17:5). Edom not only gloated over the calamity of Israel, but he also “cast lots on Jerusalem” (vs 11). Edom participated in taking spoils from his brother. Edom should not “have spoken proudly in the day of their distress” (vs 12). But when their brother was fleeing the calamity of Judah, the Edomites delivered them up to their captors (vs 14). As the Edomites had done to Israel, so it would be done to them.

For the day of the Lord is near on all the nations. As you have done, so it will be done to you. Your reward will return on your own head (vs 15; see Jr 49:7-11; Ob 1-9).

Times often come in our lives when we must choose between that which is right and that which is wrong. If we choose to be neutral, we have chosen that which is wrong. It is as Jesus said, “He who is not with Me is against Me. And he who does not gather with Me scatters abroad” (Mt 12:30). When we must choose between the world and God, then we cannot remain neutral.

No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be devoted to the one and despise the other (Mt 6:24).

It was the sin of the Laodicean church to remain indifferent. Their indifference judged them to be a lukewarm group of disciples (Rv 3:15). Therefore, Jesus judged them with the statement, “So then, because you are lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew you out of My mouth” (Rv 3:16).

The day of the Lord, therefore, meant that Jacob would be saved, but Esau would be spewed out. The Edomites found themselves fighting against the people of God, and in so doing, they found that they were fighting against God. And when one finds himself fighting against God, he knows that he will lose. This was Gamaliel’s advice to the early opponents of the apostles. He cautioned the Jewish religious leaders,

You men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what you intend to do concerning these men [the apostles] (At 5:35). And now I say to you, stay away from these men and let them alone. For if their purpose or this work is from men, it will come to nothing. But if it is from God, you cannot overthrow it, lest you even be found fighting against God (At 5:38,39).

Chapter 7

NAHUM

The name Nahum is a shortened version of the name Nehemiah. The literary style of the book of Nahum is poetic. It is poetic prophecy of the downfall of Nineveh, and thus, the conclusion of the Assyrian Empire.

A. Historical/social background:

During the final years of the northern kingdom of Israel, Assyria became God’s judgment by proxy of His people. God used the Assyrians to judge the northern kingdom, but now it was time for Assyria to be judged. Through Nahum, God pronounced the termination of this empire, which termination eventually came when the Babylonians, Medes and Scythians formed an alliance and conquered Nineveh in 612 B.C. Nahum had prophesied that Nineveh would fall as the city of No (Thebes, Egypt) that the Assyrians themselves had overthrown in 663 B.C. As they arrogantly assumed that it was by their own power that they conquered the people of God, God used other nations to judge them.

Contemporary with Jeremiah and Zephaniah, Nahum ministered the word of God during times of great international turmoil. The book was written somewhere between 663 and 612 B.C. The wicked reign of King Manasseh of Judah ended in 641 B.C. After Manasseh came Amon, and then the good reign of Josiah (639 - 608 B.C.).

The Assyrian military behaved cruelly toward their enemies in order to terrorize their enemies into surrendering. In 722/21 B.C., they conquered Samaria, the capital of the northern kingdom of Israel. In the same campaign they took forty cities of Judah. According to the records of King Sennacherib of Assyria, the Assyrian army took over 200,000 Israelites into captivity. These captives were sold to the general population of the country of Assyria in order to pay the wages of the soldiers. But that was in 722/21. It is now over one hundred years later. Judgment time had arrived for Assyria.

The Assyrian records of archaeology depict captives being staked to the ground and skinned alive by the Assyrian soldiers in order to terrorize their enemies. The military was a cruel culture within itself, not unlike some of the descendants of the same people today who thrive on creating terror among their enemies through cruelty. The Assyrian soldiers took pride in the fact that they could terrorize a population by their cruelty. The more people they terrorized into surrendering, the more money they made when they sold their captives back home.

This helps us understand why Nahum wrote with excitement concerning the fall of the Assyrian military. When King Sennacherib brought his soldiers up against Jerusalem during the days of Hezekiah, 185,000 of the cruel soldiers were judged and killed by God. The soldiers were judged for their cruelty of Judah's sister nation to the north which the Assyrians had just overthrown.

We do not judge the people of Assyria, therefore, by the cruelty of the Assyrian military. However, by the time judgment was pronounced through Nahum, it seems that the general population had regressed into much of the moral degradation from which they had repented in the days of Jonah over one hundred years before. The repentance of Jonah's ministry was only temporary, but it was sufficient in order to prepare the way for the thousands of Israelites who came their way as captives after the 722/21 B.C. defeat of the northern kingdom. But Nahum now speaks of the end of the nation of Assyria, which end would take place a little over one hundred years later in 612 B.C. The final blow would be delivered in 605 at the battle of Carchemish (Jr 46:2; 2 Ch 35:20).

B. Nahum preaches to us:

Both Nahum and Zephaniah prophesied of the end of Nineveh (See Zp 1:1; 2:13). In the first part of the book, Nahum paints a poetic picture of the majesty of God (Nh 1:2-15). The last half of the book is a graphic poetic picture of the overthrow of the Assyrians (Nh 2:1 – 3:19).

In all the judgments that God made against the Assyrians, His judgment was justified on the basis of the statement, “I will make your grave, for you are vile” (Nh 1:14). When cultures become vile, they lose their right to exist in the global community of nations. Therefore, in reference to God's just judgment of the Assyrians, Nahum preaches to us today the following lessons:

1. God's vengeance will come upon the wicked.

Those who would fight against God's people should memorize the beginning of Nahum's book concerning the outpouring of God's judgment.

God is jealous and the Lord revenges. The Lord revenges and is furious. The Lord will take vengeance on His adversaries and He reserves wrath for His enemies (Nh 1:2).

Those who would terrorize God's people through cruelty need to be aware of the One who will eventually terrorize them with just vengeance. At the end of national Israel, and during the ministry of Jesus and the apostles, when the religious leaders of the nation had themselves digressed to using terror and threats against Jesus and His disciples, it was again a time for God's vengeance to be poured out. When Jesus spoke of the termination of national Israel in A.D. 70, He said of the days, “For these are the days of vengeance ...” (Lk 21:22). They were days of vengeance on an apostate Israel who persecuted the new spiritual Israel of God, the church. God would use the Roman army to bring vengeance on those who persecuted the early disciples.

Until the final end of national Israel, God reminded the early Christians to leave vengeance to Him. In their desire to render vengeance to their persecutors, Paul reminded the persecuted Christians, “Dearly beloved, do not take revenge ...” (Rm 12:19). Instead, they were to “give place to God's wrath” (Rm 12:19). When considering whose responsibility it is to render vengeance on those who persecute the children of God, we must always remember that this is God's business. It is not the business of the people of God. So Paul reminded the Christians in Rome of what the Lord said, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay" (Rm 12:19; see Hb 10:30).

In the years to come, Rome would unleash cruel persecution against Christians. The persecution began with the personal vendetta that Nero unleashed against Christians during the 60s, but this would lead to state persecution by Rome that would be terminated only by the Edict of Toleration at the beginning of the fourth century A.D.

Until the time when God determines that He should unleash His vengeance, persecuted Christians should do the following: "If your enemy hungers, feed him. If he thirsts, give him drink, for in so doing you will heap coals of fire on his head" (Rm 12:20). In other words, "do not be overcome by evil, but overcome evil with good" (Rm 12:21).

Christians must always remember what God included in the Sinai law that He gave to Israel: "To Me belongs vengeance and retribution" (Dt 32:35). Therefore, we must remember that Jesus is coming "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on those who do not know God and who do not obey the gospel ..." (2 Th 1:8). God is storing up vengeance for the last day. Those who would lift their hand against God's people must remember that "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Hb 10:31). If one does fall into His hands, he will suffer "the vengeance of eternal fire" (Jd 7).

The tragedy of the story of Nineveh is that 150 years before Nahum, the city had repented as a result of the preaching of Jonah. At that time, the nation had a heart for God. The repentance of the Nineveh population took place during Jonah's ministry. But over one hundred years later, the Assyrians had backslidden into the degradation they were in before the arrival of Jonah. In the prophecy of Nahum, it seems that after about 150 years, the majority of the Ninevites had digressed to a state of moral degradation that justified their termination as a nation in 612 B.C.

2. A just God must bring vengeance on the wicked.

The righteous seek to live righteously before God. If God is to reward justly the righteous, then there must be punishment for the unrighteous. God would not be fair if He rewarded the unrighteous with the same reward with which He rewarded the righteous. The justice of God, therefore, stands on the fact that vengeance will eventually be poured out on the unrighteous. God is a just God. He is just because He will eventually pour out vengeance on the unrighteous.

One hundred and fifty years before, a generation of Ninevites repented at the preaching of Jonah. But those who repented failed to pass on to their descendants a repentant heart. At the time of Obadiah's pronouncements, it was now time for the nation to reap the reward of unrighteousness. God had been merciful to Nineveh during the time He used them in proxy judgment upon the wickedness of the northern kingdom. However, the mercy and longsuffering of the Lord had come to an end a little over one hundred years after the fall of the northern kingdom of Israel (See Ex 34:6). It was now time for Assyria to suffer the vengeance of God.

3. God works among the nations. The minor prophet Nahum reveals a major work of God among the nations of the world. We would conclude from the rise of the Assyrian Empire that it was a magnificent nation among the nations of the world. Assyria had conquered great nations throughout the Middle East, reaching as far south as Thebes in Egypt. From the Assyrian archaeological artifacts that have been preserved to this day, it was a nation that made its mark on history from Egypt to India.

At the zenith of its power and domination of the Middle East, a lone man about whom we know nothing, other than what we read in his book, arises alone and pronounces the fall of the great Assyrian Empire. At the time Nahum wrote these words, the people surely mocked his statements concerning the fall of such a great empire. There were no hints in the Assyrian Empire of impending danger. False prophets would base their predictions on current events. But a true prophet was known by the fact that when he pronounced judgment against a particular nation, the nation itself was at the time of the prophecy often at the zenith of its power.

What the people did not realize at the time of Nahum's prophecy was that it was God who was working among the nations for the preservation of His people and evangelization of the world. And in order to accomplish this work, the Assyrian Empire had to go. It had to go in order to allow the rise of the Babylonian Empire.

We must see the 200,000 Israelites that Assyria took into captivity at the fall of Samaria in 722/21 B.C. as the beginning of an international network that God was setting up to take the name of His Son into all the world. The captive Israelites were sold throughout the Assyrian Empire. In their captivity, there was repentance on the part of Israel. But also, they maintained their identity as the sons of Abraham until the time when God would bring only a remnant of their great, great, grandchildren back to the land of promise. With a remnant of the captives of the Babylonian captivity, they too would return to Palestine as a remnant in 536 B.C.

During the Passover/Pentecost of A.D. 30, those of Israel who remained in the land of their captors would come as a remnant of all Israel to Jerusalem from as far south as Egypt and Ethiopia to as far east as India. And when the Messiah showed up in history, His gospel message would be carried back to Israelites in all these countries to which the initial captives had established themselves in anticipation of the coming Messiah. God was working among the nations during the ministry of the prophets, not simply to pronounce judgment upon those who fought against His people, but also to turn the work of Satan against himself for the salvation of people throughout the world. When we read of kingdoms as Assyria and Babylonia, therefore, we must understand that God was working among these nations in order to bring about the preaching of the gospel to the world.

Chapter 8

HABAKKUK

Nothing is known of Habakkuk outside the book that carries his name in this book of the Old Testament Scriptures. He was a prophet of Judah, having a name that means “love’s embrace” or “he who embraces.” He was possibly a Levite in Jerusalem who was in the company of the musicians (See Hk 3:19). Most Bible students have concluded that his ministry occurred during the rise of the Babylonian Empire, possibly at the beginning of the Empire. He was contemporary with the prophets Jeremiah, Huldah and Zephaniah, and thus ministered the word of God during the reigns of Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim (612-605 B.C.).

A. Historical/social background:

At the time Habakkuk ministered the word of God, the temple was still standing in Jerusalem (Hk 2:20; 3:19). And in view of his statements in 1:5,6, it seems that the Babylonian Empire was still developing in the east as a major power of the Middle East. The Empire rose to prominence once it defeated the Assyrians in 612 B.C., and the Egyptians at the battle of Carchemish in 605 B.C. This was a major battle of the Middle East for it signalled a change in Middle East empire dominance from the Assyrians to the Babylonians.

At the time of Habakkuk’s ministry, the “wicked” in 1:4 is probably a reference to the Chaldeans (Babylonians). The northern kingdom of Israel had already fallen, and because of the digression of the southern kingdom into the same moral degradation and social injustices as her northern sister, Habakkuk warns of the Babylonians who would eventually terminate the independent theocracy of the southern kingdom. This eventually took place in 586 B.C. This ended forever the presence of Israel in Palestine as an autonomous free state.

B. Habakkuk preaches to us:

The unique dialogue of the book is in the style of God giving a message to Habakkuk for the people to ask in complaint to God. The primary complaint that the people would offer to God is in reference to the suffering of the people. The people complained as to why their prayers were not answered in the midst of great suffering. In reference to their suffering at the hand of the unbelievers (the Babylonians), the people complained concerning why God would use unbelievers to bring suffering upon the believers.

There is no answer given to either the people or Habakkuk as to why God would use the unbelievers to punish His people. The fact that the unbelievers would prosper at the expense of the believers, leaves a question in the minds of the people that is not specifically answered by God. God’s only answer is that He is God, and thus, His people must have faith in Him that He knows what He is doing in the affairs of the nations of the world.

In the first two chapters of the book, Habakkuk is perplexed concerning the violence and sin of the people. The people had lost their moral identity as the people of God because they had forsaken the direction of His law. Though it was not revealed to Habakkuk how God would cure His people of their idolatry, Habakkuk wondered why the wicked were not punished (Hk 1:2-4). Habakkuk complained,

Why do You show me iniquity and cause me to behold injustice? For plunder and violence are before me. And there are those who raise up strife and contention (Hk 1:3).

God’s answer was that He was about to bring the Chaldeans (Babylonians) from the east in order to bring judgment upon Judea (Hk 1:5-11).

God’s answer to cure the sin of the people perplexed Habakkuk. So Habakkuk complained again:

Why do You look on those who deal treacherously and hold Your tongue when the wicked devours the one who is more righteous than he? (Hk 1:13).

Habakkuk had a difficult time understanding why God would use the unrighteous to punish His people who were more righteous than those who would bring judgment upon them (See Hk 1:12-17). But Habakkuk needed to be patient. God would eventually bring the proud conquerors, the Chaldeans, into judgment for their mistreatment of His people (Hk 2:1-20).

Though Habakkuk is perplexed concerning the work of God among His apostate people, and the proxy judgment of the Chaldeans who would bring God's judgment on His people, he defines the judgment of God in a poetic theophany (appearance of God) that justice will be done. And thus Habakkuk concludes the book by giving His allegiance to God, regardless of his inability to understand all that God does in His relationship with His people (Hk 3:16-19). In reference to the work of God among those of the world, and the necessity that believers trust in Him, there are two very important lessons that Habakkuk still preaches today.

1. The suffering of the righteous affirms the justice of God. As Job, Habakkuk presented what to many unbelievers is the primary argument against the existence of the God in which the Christian believes. It has been said that these two Old Testament personalities reflect on what is referred to as the evidence for the atheist. The argument is this: The Christian believes in an all-benevolent God who is all-powerful (omnipotent). Now if God is all-benevolent, and yet allows evil and suffering to exist, and is not able to relieve the righteous of evil and suffering, though He might will to do so, then He is not all-powerful. And, if God is all-powerful, and can relieve the righteous of evil and suffering, but does not, then He cannot be benevolent. Therefore, the atheist concludes, the God of the Christian does not exist. He cannot exist since He would be a logical contradiction between being benevolent and omnipotent at the same time. This supposed dilemma for the believer was presented millennia ago by Epicurus (341-270 B.C.) in his Aphorisms:

The gods can either take away evil from the world and will not, or being willing to do so cannot; or they neither can nor will, or lastly, they are both able and willing. If they have the will to remove evil and cannot, then they are not omnipotent. If they can, but will not, then they are not benevolent. If they are neither able nor willing, then they are neither omnipotent nor benevolent. Lastly, if they are both able and willing to annihilate evil, how does it exist?

The atheist simply replies to the above that the believer's God is a logical contradiction, and thus, cannot exist.

And indeed, the believers of old struggled with this supposed logical contradiction. Elijah questioned why God would allow suffering to come upon the widow of Zarephath who had helped him survive. "O Lord my God, have You also brought evil on the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?" (1 Kg 17:20). And Gideon questioned, "... if the Lord is with us, why then has all this happened to us?" (Jg 6:13). And finally, Job was left in question as to why he was allowed to endure so much suffering when he had sought to live righteously before God (See Jb 10:1-3). Habakkuk wondered why God would look on those who were evil, but allow suffering to come upon the righteous by the works of the evil (Hk 1:13). There are answers to this supposed contradiction concerning the Christian's belief in a benevolent, omnipotent God. Consider the following:

a. The atheist must answer the reason as to why good exists in a totally material world. The dilemma for the atheist is that if all that exists is matter in motion, then he must explain from where good originated among human organisms that supposedly evolved from innate matter. The believer must answer the question as to why evil exists in a world that was created by a benevolent God. But the atheist must answer how there could be benevolence in an amoral material world without the existence of a benevolent God.

b. We must confess the limits of our knowledge and understanding. God answered Job and Habakkuk in a manner that forced both to reflect on their inability to know all that God was doing to work out His plans according to His will. God questioned Job concerning who he thought God was in his infinite knowledge. If God is who He reveals Himself to be in the world around us, then we must understand that our knowledge is limited concerning the purpose of all things. In our limited knowledge of how God is working all things together for His purpose (Rm 8:28), the finite must trust the Infinite. It is sometimes as Herbert Farmer concluded, "Christianity has never claimed to take the sting out of evil by explaining it, but rather by giving victory over it."

We can understand the necessity of the existence of evil and suffering. James essentially stated that we can understand to the point of even rejoicing when we fall into different trials (Js 1:1,2).

If we could understand as God, then we would be God. Therefore, we must content ourselves with the limited knowledge we have of things in order to trust in Him who is working His plan through the existence of the temporary in order to take us into the eternal. But we must be clear on this matter in reference to Christian belief. We can understand enough about this matter that we can trust that God is working all things together for our good.

The atheist must not assume that we are here dodging a supposed logical contradiction, nor that we have our heads in the sand. To say that we do not understand all that God is and does is not a weakness in the theology of the believer. The fact is that if there is a God—and there is—then we must suppose that we do not fully comprehend the totality of who He is, or the extent of His ways. His ways, as Paul wrote, are simply past finding out (Rm 11:33). If we were to understand all that God is and does, then He would be a god who was limited to the limits of our imagination. And if He were limited to our thinking, then truly He would only be a god of our invention. He truly would not exist, and the atheist would win the argument.

c. The believer must determine that which is actually good or evil. Simply because something brings pleasure does not mean that it is good. That which brings pleasure can often be evil. Ask a drunk driver who has just ruined his life with alcohol.

Pain does not always indicate that something is evil. Our body expresses pain in order to protect itself. It is sin, not suffering, that is the only real evil. It is obedience to God, not fleshly pleasure, that is the only real good. However, rebellion against God brings all sorts of evil and suffering into our lives (See Gl 6:7). We would not conclude, therefore, that all suffering is evil. We cannot attribute to God the result of the consequences we suffer when we violate His principles within the environment we live.

d. Wrong reactions sometimes confuse our definitions. A bee sting may bring pain, but the bee must protect the honey. The same sun that causes a sunburn, also produces vitamin D in the body. When defining that which is suffering, we must consider the fact that natural laws of both the organic and inorganic world are necessary for the existence of order and the continuation of life on earth. The balance of nature and the circle of life are processes of life that are necessary to continue life as we know it. If we violate the laws of nature, and subsequently suffer for our violations, we cannot define our suffering as evil. The same gravity that keeps us from floating into space is the same gravity that will cause death if one were to leap from a ten-story building.

Natural laws are necessary for the preservation of life. Natural laws are necessary for the continuation of the universe of which we are a participant. When the laws that hold the universe together are violated, there is suffering. But we cannot assume that this suffering is an argument against the Creator of these laws. In fact, the existence of the laws of order are an evidence that the eternal Designer of order does exist. At least this is what Paul affirmed in Romans 1:20:

For the invisible things of Him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made ....”

e. A free moral individual cannot exist without being in an environment that allows choice. God is love, and in order for Him to pour out His love on those whom He created, the created must be able to respond with love. Robots express no love. There would be no meaning in preprogrammed individuals who would supposedly love their Creator. There is no such thing as programmed love. Therefore, man must be a truly free-moral individual in order to express true love.

But being truly free to make moral decisions of love comes with a tremendous risk. It comes with the risk that the individual can freely make the worst possible decisions to be evil. However, this truly free individual can also make the best decisions to do good. And in order to make either decisions to do evil or good, the free-moral individual must be placed in an environment wherein choices can be made to the extremes of either good or evil. So we wonder how many evil decisions are made within this environment that lead to war, and theft, and a host of other evils with which the righteous must endure. God cannot be blamed for the evil that results from the bad decisions that are made by free-moral individuals who choose to do evil.

We believe that God created the best of all possible environments in which a truly free-moral individual can dwell. We can think of no better environment. So in order for the God of love to bring individuals of this environment into eternal dwelling with Him, He was willing to take the risk of doing that which only love can do. Love must create. Love must be poured out in creation in order that eternal reward can lovingly be given to those who have suffered through the ordeal of an environment that often goes wrong because some free-moral beings make bad decisions. Such is the cost of love. But in view of this cost, the reward for those who truly make the choice of obedience to their Creator has to be something awesome beyond the imagination of the created. We believe that both Habakkuk and Job came to this conclusion, for both decided to walk by faith in the One who had control over all things. They were content to exist in what may appear to us to be a flawed environment, than not to exist. They concluded, therefore, that it is better to believe than disbelieve.

The awesomeness of the reward possibilities far outweigh any suffering we must endure in order to receive the crown. Paul was right: “For I consider that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that will be revealed to us” (Rm 8:18).

f. God can do only that which can be done. He cannot create round squares. Likewise, a truly free-moral individual could not exist without being in an environment in which he could not choose between right and wrong. And so we wonder as to how much evil exists in this world where free-moral individuals have chosen to do evil. But if we would argue that it would have been better for God not to create, then we would ask if it would be better to have existed with the possibility of eternal existence with a loving Father, than not existed?

Then consider also the definition of God. Can a loving God exist without creating a free-moral individual who has the choice to respond to love with the statement, “I love you, too”? We exist because God is love. We exist as free-moral individuals because of the action of true love on the part of God. God could not be love if we did not exist. And thus, the fact that we do exist as loving creatures is evidence that a loving God does exist.

If we concluded that it would have been better for God not to create, then we would be atheists in reference to the God in which we believed. A god who would not create would certainly not be a God of love. To think that a God of love who would not create that which would respond with, “I love You, too,” would truly be the god of a logical contradiction.

2. The just will live by faith. Because Habakkuk concluded that God had all things under control, though he did not understand the teleology of God’s plan, he was willing to live by faith. In 2:4 he wrote, “But the just will live by his faith.”

Habakkuk 2:4 is an incredibly important statement simply because of the contexts in which it is quoted in the New Testament. It is a statement that expresses the very foundation upon which the believer has a relationship with God.

In Romans, Paul argues against the legalistic Jewish brethren who would impose on the disciples of Jesus the necessity of being justified before God by law-keeping. Paul comes to the following conclusion after arguing his case against meritorious justification by works of law:

And if by grace, then it [salvation] is no more by works, otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it is by works, it is no longer grace, otherwise work is no longer work” (Rm 11:6).

Paul’s conclusion concerning self-justification was clear: “... by works of law no flesh will be justified in His sight ...” (Rm 3:20).

Paul’s arguments in Romans, that we are saved by faith through grace, brought his readers to the conclusion of Habakkuk 2:4: “For in it [the gospel] is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith, as it is written ‘The just will live by faith’” (Rm 1:17).

In Galatians, Paul is also arguing against the same legal theology that was promoted by some in Rome. Paul’s aggressiveness in the book of Galatians inferred that Christianity was in danger of losing its identity if the judaizing teachers of the area had their way by enforcing legal obedience to law as a means by which one is justified before God. So Paul was direct when he approached Peter at a time when Peter manifested in his behavior that which was contrary to the grace of the gospel:

... knowing that a man is not justified by works of law, but by the faith of Christ Jesus, even we have believed in Christ Jesus so that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by works of law, for by works of law no flesh will be justified (Gl 2:16).

In the context of this statement against legal justification, Paul quoted Habakkuk 2:4: “But that no one is justified by law in the sight of God is evident, for ‘the just will live by faith.’” (Gl 3:11).

In Hebrews, some who had been Christians for several years were intimidated into returning to the Sinai law that was given to Israel. Though the Roman and Galatian disciples were not moving away from Christ in this manner, they were imposing a system of law-keeping on the disciples that was contrary to the grace of the gospel. The Hebrew Christians were thinking about abandoning Christ for the Levitical priesthood of the Sinai law. So again in the same context of legal justification that Paul addressed in both the Roman and Galatian letters, the Hebrew writer quoted Habakkuk 2:4: “Now the just will live by faith. But if any man draws back [to law], My soul will have no pleasure in him” (Hb 10:38). So the Hebrew writer concluded his arguments against drawing back to justification by law by stating, “But we are not of those who draw back to destruction, but of those who believe to the saving of the soul” (Hb 10:39).

Habakkuk 2:4 reveals that salvation has always been based on faith and grace. Ephesians 2:8 is a New Testament passage, but the principle has always been true since the creation of Adam, the first free-moral person. “For by grace you are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God.” From the beginning of time, salvation could never be of ourselves. All have sinned (Rm 3:23). And the wages of sin is separation from God, and thus, death (Rm 6:23). And because we sin, we have no atonement for sin that originates from within ourselves. We cannot offer good deeds for our imperfect obedience.

The offer of good deeds in atonement for lawbreaking has led to all sorts of evil among religionists, which evil prevailed throughout the Dark Ages of humanity. Men offered money in order to have the right to sin. Such was called “the sale of indulgences,” meaning that one could indulge in sin if money were paid to the church. Similar beliefs are often seated in the minds of many religionists today who believe that their salvation is based on an equal-arm scale system of salvation. In other words, one’s sins of the day can be atoned for tomorrow by being a better person tomorrow than today.

Habakkuk wanted Israel to understand that God’s creation of the remnant of Israel was based on grace. Those nations that God used to judge Israel were terminated. They would no longer exist in the world. And though Israel was given so much, but gave up for sin all her advantages, she would still survive as a remnant. This is the grace of God being played out in history. If God had handed out to them that which they deserved, then there would have been no remnant to receive God’s grace into the world through the cross (See Ti 2:11). The existence of the remnant is a manifestation of the grace of God. Instead of rightful national extinction, there was undeserved and unmerited salvation from national extinction. It was because of grace that grace was revealed.

Chapter 9

ZEPHANIAH

According to the genealogy that is stated in 1:1, Zephaniah was in the lineage of the Davidic kings. He was a prophet to Judah, ministering sometime during the restoration of King Josiah (690 – 640 B.C.). He was a prophet of love and judgment, and thus describes the judgment of the great day of the Lord that would eventually come to the southern kingdom of Israel. However, in the context of a dim future, Zephaniah gives hope for the future glory of the people of God.

A. Historical/social background:

Judah’s sister to the north had already been taken into Assyrian captivity in 722/21 B.C. The Assyrian Empire grew until it reached its zenith under the reign of Assurbanipal. However, when he died in 626 B.C., the empire began a rapid decline. At the same time in history, and under the kingship of Nabopolassar, the Babylonian Empire was rising to the south of Assyria. A major battle between the Assyrians and Babylonians eventually took place in 612 B.C., which battle marked the beginning of the end of the Assyrian Empire. After the battle, a remnant of Assyrians fled to the city of Carchemish in order to join forces with the Egyptians. However, the Babylonians pursued them, and at the battle of Carchemish in 605 B.C., the Assyrians were finally subjected to the rule of the Babylonians and the Egyptians defeated. The Babylonians were now the prominent empire of the Middle East, which empire God would later use to bring judgment on Judah.

It was during these years when the Assyrian Empire was coming to a close that Josiah became the king of Judah (2 Kg 22). He was the young king of restoration. After a copy of the book of the law was found during some reconstruction work on the temple, Josiah set his course to eradicate Judah of foreign gods and idols, and restore the offerings according to the law of God. In order to do this, he had to destroy everything that was associated with idol worship.

And they broke down the altars of the Baals in his [Josiah’s] presence. And the images that were on high above them, he cut down. And the wooden images and the carved images and the molten images, he broke in pieces. And he made powder of them and scattered it on the graves of those who had sacrificed to them. And he burned the bones of the priests on their altars and cleansed Judah and Jerusalem (2 Ch 34:4,5).

Josiah initiated a great restoration to the authority of the law of God throughout Judah. And because of his zeal to restore Judah, God promised that he would go to his grave in peace, meaning that no one would usurp his authority as king. Neither would Jerusalem suffer the invasion of the Babylonians during his lifetime (2 Ch 34:28).

Being a young and zealous person, however, Josiah met his death in battle with Pharaoh Necho who came up from Egypt to help the Assyrians in their war against the Babylonians. In 609 B.C., and in his efforts to stop Necho from joining the forces with a remnant of Assyrians, Josiah was killed in battle (2 Ch 35:20-25). His legacy of restoration, nevertheless, was recorded in 2 Chronicles 34:33:

Then Josiah took away all the abominations out of all the country that belonged to the children of Israel. And he made all who were present in Israel to serve, even to serve the Lord their God. And all his days they did not depart from following the Lord, the God of their fathers.

Josiah's restoration was too brief to change the religious culture of the people. Only in his days did the people serve the Lord. When he died, Judah's spiritual and moral behavior plummeted. It was only twenty-three years after his death that God terminated the theocratic nation of Israel in Palestine. In 586 B.C. the Babylonians besieged and conquered Jerusalem, and the last captives of Israel were taken into captivity. This date ended forever the independent theocratic state of Israel in Palestine. Though a remnant of faithful Israelites would return to the land after the Babylonian captivity, Palestine would after 586 B.C. always be an occupied land governed by foreign powers. Zephaniah's message of judgment and hope was proclaimed possibly during the latter years of Josiah's reign, for he prophesied of the great day of the Lord that was coming in only a few years.

Zephaniah stood up and proclaimed, "The great day of the Lord is near! It is near, and coming very quickly. Listen! The cry of the day of the Lord" (Zp 1:14). The day of the Lord was a day of judgment. And since it was only a little over twenty years in the future, it was near. Zephaniah was speaking of judgment in time. And for biblical interpreters, he defines the "day of the Lord" to be the judgment of God in time.

In his message to the people, Judah was charged with digression into sin (See Zp 1 – 2:3). She would be judged for her rebellion against God. However, Zephaniah also speaks against the surrounding nations who inflicted suffering on the people of God (Zp 2:4-15). Once God had judged all the nations that brought suffering on His people, He would restore a remnant of His people to their land. While all the surrounding nations would be terminated from history, Israel would survive (Zp 3).

B. Zephaniah preaches to us:

Zephaniah preaches to us through the fall of Jerusalem. His message is negative, and thus, it is given as a warning to God's people throughout history that we should learn from her ways in order to avoid the judgment of God (See Rm 15:4; 1 Co 10:11). The reasons for God's judgment of the people is outlined in one verse: "She does not obey the voice. She does not receive correction. She does not trust in the Lord. She does not draw near to her God" (Zp 3:2).

These four statements of judgment are linked. In her rebellion, the people did not obey, receive, trust, and thus, draw near to God. The lack of obedience is a sign of not accepting the directions of God, and thus, one is not trusting in the Lord for guidance. And in such a state of rebellion, there is no relationship with God.

1. "She does not obey the voice." God faithfully raised up preaching prophets in order to detour His people from leaving Him. Through the prophets, He sought to guard them from following after their own self-imposed religiosity. But they would not listen to the voice of the prophets (2 Kg 17:13). The same scenario developed again among some of God's people about six hundred years later with the early church. Zephaniah's contemporary audience was refusing to hear the voice of the preaching prophets, and during the time of the Hebrew writer, the same was taking place with some Jewish Christians who were refusing to hear the voice of Jesus. "God, who at various times and in different ways spoke in time past to the fathers by the prophets, has in these last days spoken to us by His Son ..." (Hb 1:1,2).

Those to whom the Hebrew writer inscribed these words were considering a return to the Judaism from which they had been converted through their obedience to the gospel. They had purified their souls in obedience to the gospel (At 22:16; 1 Pt 1:22). But they were seeking to go back under a system of law where there was no remission of sins through the blood of bulls and goats (Hb 10:1-4).

Josiah restored the authority of the word of God during his reign. However, though there may be a legal restoration to the law, the people must be obedient to the law from their hearts. Since Josiah's restoration did not continue, we learn that it takes more than restoring legal obedience to law in order to remain faithful. People's minds and hearts must be changed when there is a true restoration. It is as James wrote, "But be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving yourselves" (Js 1:22). One can hear the word of God, but if there is no obedience from the heart, then the hearing is useless.

With many in the end it will be as Jesus said, “Not every one who says to Me, ‘Lord, Lord,’ will enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he who does the will of My Father who is in heaven” (Mt 7:21). If one is not doing the “will of My Father,” then Jesus will eventually say to that person, “Depart from Me you who practice lawlessness” (Mt 7:23). Knowledge of the word of God without obedience will lead one to destruction.

2. “She does not receive correction.” Through the prophets, God sought to correct the error of their ways. But they would not receive His instructions. Their spirit of rebellion was manifested in the fact that they wanted to create a religiosity that conformed to their own desires. When one changes the focus of his life from God to mammon, he will change his religion. He will change his religion in order that faith takes second place to that which one would consider most important in his life. This is the foundation upon which Paul made the following statement:

For the time will come when they will not endure sound teaching. But to suit their itching ears, they will surround themselves with teachers who will agree with their own desires (2 Tm 4:3).

When God’s people stop studying their Bibles, they have passed the point of repentance, for they forget that to which they must repent. A refusal to learn what God wants in our lives is an indication that we have left a desire to allow God to direct our ways. The result is the example of backslidden Israel. God subsequently judged His people destroyed because of their lack of knowledge of His word (Hs 4:6). They remained religious, but their religion was created after their own desires.

Assemblies are filled with people today who sit and listen faithfully to prophets who speak no Bible, but are highly motivational in their “ear tickling” messages. Bible preachers preach the Bible. And one is a Bible preacher only when he preaches the Bible. When one refuses to follow the Divine road map to the obedient life, then there is no hope of restoration to the right ways of God. This was the general message of the prophets to Israel who had forsaken their focus on the word of God. Backslidden Israel simply looked for preachers (prophets) who would preach what they wanted to hear.

“All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable ... for correction, for instruction in righteousness” (2 Tm 3:16). But when one throws away his Bible, he will eventually be thrown away by God after hearing the words, “Depart from Me you who practice lawlessness” (Mt 7:23). Our primary motive for studying the word of God is to receive instruction by which we can have life. And our primary reason for hearing instruction from the word of God is to prevent ourselves from creating a religiosity that conforms to our own desires. Without instruction from God, we will lose our way, and subsequently, we will lose our salvation. No one can claim that he is following God if he is refusing to study the word of God.

3. “She does not trust in the Lord.” One shows his lack of trust in God by following after his own desires. And one knows that he is following his own desires when he has laid his Bible aside and studies it no more.

Jeremiah stated a truth in reference to man that is fundamental to this point: “O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself. It is not in man who walks to direct his steps” (Jr 10:23). The arrogant and proud do not believe this statement. But we must remember that this is the way God made man. If one would seek to trust in himself in order to establish his relationship with God, then he will be disappointed. There are no self-paved roads to God. As a free-moral individual, it is simply not possible for any person to devise any means by which he can morally direct his own way to God. When the honest and sincere person realizes this, it is then that he seeks to trust in God. But one must come to the realization that he cannot find his way to God without God’s road map, the Bible.

Trust in God must also find its way into our hearts in reference to all that transpires in the environment in which we live. The psalmist explains:

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore we will not fear, though the earth is removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea (Ps 46:1,2).

In the case of Zephaniah’s audience, the nations surrounding Judah were in chaos, and thus, the danger of the destruction of Israel was looming just over the horizon. The nation was in its final years as a nation. After the end, the people would remember all that the prophets had spoken to them over the last 150 years. But in order to delay the inevitable, it was a time when they needed to put their trust in God. Unfortunately, they put their trust in political alliances with other nations. They thought that through military power they could preserve their nation. But when God is working against a nation to bring it down, no military power will keep it from falling.

On the eve of their termination, the Israelites were putting their trust in the false pronouncements of false prophets and imagined gods. It was as Jeremiah preached in their final days: “This is your lot, the portion of your measures from Me,” says the Lord, “because you have forgotten Me and trust in falsehood” (Jr 13:25). The problem was that they “did not believe in God and did not trust in His salvation” (Ps 78:22). And because they did not trust in the salvation of God from all calamity, they would suffer from calamity.

4. “She does not draw near to her God.” If one does not obey the voice of God, then certainly he is not inclined to receive God’s correction. And because one is not inclined to receive the correction of the Lord, he is certainly not trusting in the Lord. The conclusion is that one is moving away from God. Israel had wandered so far away from the source of her origin that she could not find her way back. And because she could not find her way back to God, the prophets proclaimed that she no longer represented God among the nations. James possibly had their example of apostasy in mind when he wrote the following words: “Draw near to God and He will draw near to you. Cleanse your hands, you sinners. And purify your hearts, you double-minded” (Js 4:8).

5. God promises joy in the midst of judgment: Zephaniah closes his message with the sentiment that is expressed in the words of James 1:2: “My brethren, count it all joy when you fall into various trials.” Israel was about to fall into the various trials of captivity. However, embedded in the message of despair in captivity, there was the promise of restoration over which they could rejoice.

And I will save the lame and gather the outcast. And I will give them praise and honor in every land where they were put to shame. At that time I will bring you again, even in the time that I gather you. For I will give you fame and praise among all people of the earth when I return your captives before your eyes, says the Lord (Zp 3:19,20).

This was a promise that was to take them through the years of captivity. As Christians would eventually emerge from the years of Roman persecution, the captives were to remain faithful until God gathered them from the nations and restored them to the land. But as a nation of people they first had to endure tribulation, as John wrote to the early Christians: “And you will have tribulation ten days. Be faithful unto death and I will give you the crown of life” (Rv 2:10).

Though the Israelite captives who went into captivity died in the land of their captors, their descendants would be restored to the land, and thus perpetuate the identity of Israel. They would return to reestablish Israel in Palestine in hope of the Messiah to come. Zechariah’s message of hope was directed to these descendants. The comfort that Zechariah’s immediate audience gained from his message was that their grandchildren would be restored to the land. Their captivity would not be the end of Israel.

At the time of the end of Israel in the land with the Babylonian conquest, the Israelites did not understand all the purposes behind God’s work with them. Because He did not explain all the details, they needed to trust that He was working all things together for the good of those who would believe. When their descendants returned from captivity, they would be a different people, never more following after religions of the nations that surrounded them, for the nations that surrounded them would all be gone.

Chapter 10

HAGGAI

The captivity is now past. It is the time of restoration and rebuilding. The remnant, who are the descendants of the twelve tribes that were taken into both the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities, now begin the process of restoring themselves as Israel in the land of Palestine. It is the time for the fulfillment of the promise of God that a remnant of all twelve tribes would return. The freed captives thus begin the process of restoring the identity of Israel in Palestine in order that the promises concerning the Blessing that would come into the world would be fulfilled (See Gn 12:1-4).

A. Historical/social background:

The Medes and the Persians eventually overthrew the Babylonians, and subsequently took possession of all the previous territory that was ruled by the Assyrians, and then by the Babylonians. This vast territory extended from Ethiopia to India. All the territory was now the governing possession of the Medo-Persian Empire.

What is significant is the fact that the territories to which the ten northern tribes of Israel were taken in the Assyrian conquest were now under the control of the Medes and Persians. When King Cyrus of the Medo-Persian Empire followed his humanitarian policy that people would better serve the Empire if they were in their own homelands, he allowed those who were taken in former captivities to return to their original homelands. In the case of all the Israelite captives that were taken in both the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities, it was time to go home. Therefore, a remnant of Israelites from both the former northern and southern kingdoms of Israel were allowed to return their homeland of Palestine.

It is significant to understand the above because some have wrongfully concluded that those of the northern ten tribes of Israel were lost among the nations of the world, and thus, never returned as a remnant to the land Palestine as God had promised through the prophets. It is assumed by some that there are still ten tribes of Israel still lost among the populations of the world who will somehow make their way back to Palestine in a presumed millennial reign of Jesus on earth.

If there were ten lost tribes yet to be returned to Palestine, then the prophets lied to the people, both in reference to the promise of a return of the remnant, as well as in the fact that representatives of all twelve tribes of Israel were in Palestine at the time of the incarnation of the Son of God.

The prophets stated that only a remnant of all the twelve tribes would return. Hosea prophesied that Judah would come with Israel back to the land (Hs 1:11). All the children of Israel would return and seek the Lord (Hs 3:5). Isaiah prophesied that a remnant would come from Assyria, Egypt, Pathros, Cush, Elam, Shenar, Hamath and the islands of the sea (Is 11:11; see 19:23,24). Jeremiah prophesied that God would restore Judah and Israel (Jr 23:5-8; 29:14). Ezekiel prophesied that God would take His people from among the nations and bring them again into the land (Ez 36:10,24). The whole house of Israel would be united and returned (Ez 37:11,12,16).

In the context of Haggai and Zechariah, both prophets announced that the house of Judah and the house of Israel had been rescued from their former captivity of the Assyrians and Babylonians (Zc 8:13). It was a time now for the Israelites to be strengthened in the land (Zc 9:13-16). Zechariah reminded the people of God's promise of restoration: "I will also bring them again out of the land of Egypt and gather them out of Assyria. And I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon, until no place will be found for them" (Zc 10:10).

This was what was happening in history at the very time the first captives returned in 536 B.C. Haggai and Zechariah began their ministry of exhortation on the basis that the people had not yet completed the purpose of reestablishing the identity of the people of God in the land. This particular purpose was to signal to the world that Israel was back. And the best signal the remnant could give to the world was that their temple was rebuilt.

Haggai and Zechariah had been in Palestine for about sixteen years, but the temple still remained in ruins. They were probably very young men in 536 B.C. when the first captives returned to the land. God, therefore, waited until 520 B.C. to stir up the people by calling the two prophets into action. God gave the people time to act on their own, but they failed to act. Now it was time to get on with the work. It was time that the temple be rebuilt in order to establish the restored identity of Israel in the land.

If the identity of Israel was not restored, then the promises to the fathers could not be recognized as fulfilled when the Messiah came. God, therefore, raised up both Zechariah and Haggai to stir the people into action. Haggai stood up first to inspire the people to rebuild the temple. The date was 520 B.C. Within a month after the encouragement of Haggai, the foundation of the temple was completed. Soon after, Zechariah added his encouragement to the voice of Haggai (Zc 1:1-6). Of these events, Ezra recorded,

Then the prophets, Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied to the Jews who were in Judah and Jerusalem in the name of the God of Israel, who was over them (Ez 5:1).

This was the time when Zerubbabel "rose up and began to build the house of God that is at Jerusalem" as a result of the encouragement of the prophets (Ez 5:2). Zerubbabel was the leader of the first captives who returned in 536 B.C. Once he was encouraged by the prophets to accomplish the rebuilding of the temple, things started to happen.

After the initial captives returned to Palestine, they established the altar and sacrifices. But because of opposition from the locals, they stopped their work of rebuilding the temple. In the meantime, however, they built lavish houses for themselves (Hg 1:4). During this lapse in rebuilding the temple, the kings of the Medo-Persian Empire changed. Cyrus II, who allowed the first captives to return to the land, died in 530 B.C. (See Is 44:28; 2 Ch 36:23). He was succeeded by his son Cambyses II ("Ahasuerus" in Ez 4:6), who reigned from 530 to 522 B.C. Then came Darius I who encouraged the Jews to continue their reconstruction of Jerusalem (See Ez 5,6; Hg 1,2; Zc 1-6). It was in the second year of the reign of Darius I that Haggai and Zechariah stood up to both rebuke (Hg 1) and encourage the people to accomplish the mission of rebuilding the temple (Hg 2).

The construction on the temple had stopped because of opposition and confusion in authorization. Sheshbazzar had been appointed governor of Palestine by Persia (Er 5:14). But then some confusion concerning confirmation of the rebuilding was brought into question by those local residents who opposed the rebuilding of the temple (Er 5:16,17). A message was then sent to Babylon to the king in order to search for the original commission of Cyrus to rebuild the temple. Though the foundation of the temple had been laid, the people procrastinated in waiting for confirmation from Babylon. It was not until 520 that God had to raise up Haggai and Zechariah in order to spur on the people to get the job done. Though the records were found in Babylon that authorized the rebuilding, lethargy had already set in and the people lost their enthusiasm to rebuild (Er 6:1,2).

Procrastination and indifference had delayed the process too long, and now, it was time to move on with the work. Knowing what must be done, but failing to do it, is not good enough in the eyes of God. It is work well done that will be rewarded, not good intentions (See Mt 25:21,34-46).

B. Haggai preaches to us:

From the two chapters of Haggai, there are two very important lessons that must be preached to the people of God. Both lessons reflect on the nature of God's people in reference to their attitudes and behavior.

1. Discouragement does not justify idleness.

Twenty years before Haggai, the people were excited about returning to the land and rebuilding the temple. It was a dream come true after the seventy years of captivity. But opposition came from the local residents in Palestine who were left in the land by the Babylonians when the city fell in 586 B.C. There was much intermarriage between local Jews who were left from the northern captivity and those Gentiles who were imported into Palestine from other nations of the world (See 2 Kg 17:24-29). Therefore, the local residents were not true Israelites. They would later in history be called the Samaritans (See Mt 10:5; Lk 9:52; 10:33; Jn 4:9,39,40). At the time of Haggai and Zechariah, they were jealous of the Jews. They had lost their national identity through intermarriage. They thus stood in opposition to everything the Jews were doing to restore the identity of true Israel. This conflict played itself out during the ministry of Nehemiah.

It was difficult for the local residents to accept the fact that the Israelites, now called the Jews, had the task of reestablishing the identity of true Israel. They were intimidated by the fact that the returning remnant was so committed to identify again true Israel that they had put away their foreign wives in the land of their captivity in order to return to Palestine (Er 9). But the locals could not and would not do this. The commitment of the returned remnant was a daily sermon of their non-commitment. Subsequently, great opposition by the local residents discouraged the returned remnant. The opposition was so great that the Jews began to believe, "The time has not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built" (Hg 1:2). They led themselves to believe that it was not the responsibility of their generation to take ownership of rebuilding the temple. So they gave up the task, thinking that sometime in the future the job would be done by someone else.

By the time of Haggai and Zechariah, it had been sixteen years since the people had made any effort to rebuild the temple. As a result, indifference had set in and the people accepted the fact that everything should just remain as it is in order not to cause any future animosity with the locals.

However, their indifference toward building the temple did not discourage them from putting all their efforts into building fine houses for themselves. Haggai shamed them: "Is it time for you yourselves to dwell in your paneled houses and this house [of God] lies waste?" (Hg 1:4). The reason for the Lord's displeasure with them was simple. The Lord's house was "in ruins while each of you runs to his own house" (Hg 1:9). And now, according to the call of Haggai, it was time to repent of indifference and discouragement and get on with the task of rebuilding the temple. Some of them had made great sacrifices in order to return to Palestine to reestablish the identity of Israel. As stated previously, some had even made the sacrifice of putting away their foreign wives for this purpose (See Er 9). It was now time that their sacrifices not be wasted in idleness.

We must not confuse ourselves with the God-ordained task that they should rebuild the temple by thinking that God needed a house in which to dwell. "The God who made the world and all things in it, since He is Lord of heaven and earth, does not dwell in temples made with hands" (At 17:24). God needs no sanctuaries or church houses. What the temple signified was the restoration of Israel to the land. And unless they rebuilt the temple, the nations of the world would not believe that the remnant of God's people, as promised, had been restored to the land of Palestine.

The opposition of the local residents proved that they had moved on from this identity. And thus, they saw that the rebuilding of the temple would separate them from the returned remnant. Nehemiah specifically said to the locals,

Then I [Nehemiah] answered them [the locals] and said to them, “The God of heaven, He will prosper us [the returned remnant]. Therefore we His servants will arise and build. But you have no heritage or right or memorial in Jerusalem (Ne 2:20).

Nehemiah made a distinction between the locals and the returned remnant. In making this distinction, he was reaffirming the purpose of God to identify again that the remnant was the true Israel that was restored to the land. The locals, who had intermarried with the Gentiles, “had no heritage” with true Israel because they had lost their identity as Jews.

We would connect the building of the physical temple of God as a metaphor that signified the building of the spiritual house of God that would come many years later. At least both Amos and James made this metaphorical connection (Am 9:11,12; At 15:16,17). The spiritual house of the Lord was established in A.D. 30 on the day of Pentecost (1 Tm 3:15). It continues to this day as the witness of God’s presence among the people of the world. God used Zerubbabel to lead the people into action as a result of the motivation of both Haggai and Zechariah. Zerubbabel was of the Davidic lineage, and is named in the lineage of Jesus by both Matthew and Luke (Mt 1:13; Lk 3:27). However, when the remnant returned to Palestine, they had repented of their desire to have a king over them as the nations around them. Zerubbabel, therefore, only remained a leader among the people without assuming the position of a king. That position was reserved for the King to come. And when the rightful heir to the throne of David came, He built the house of God (See Mt 16:18,19; 1 Tm 3:15).

The spiritual temple of the Lord’s house today is faced with the same challenge as the physical house during the time of Haggai and Zechariah. If the spiritual temple is not organically functioning and growing, then it is dysfunctional and dying. It is simply the nature of the people of God that they should grow. But if there is no work, then the body is not fulfilling its purpose. Paul explained,

But speaking the truth in love, we may grow up into Him in all things, who is the head, even Christ, from whom the whole body being fitted and held together by what every joint supplies, according to the effective working of each part, causes growth of the body to the edifying of itself in love (Ep 4:15,16).

We must ask ourselves as someone said, “Are we launching out into the deep or dabbling around in the wading pool?” If we are dabbling, we must remember that a church that will not launch out will eventually go out of existence. Non-growth is a signal of death. And once non-growth sets in, indifference to work occurs.

Our faith cannot be void of works. “Even so faith by itself, if it does not have works, is dead” (Js 2:17). What James was saying is that a body that is not functioning is simply dysfunctional. It is dead. And thus, the only way to prove that there is life in the body is by a faith that is working through love (Gl 5:6).

Life must be demonstrated through an active faith. James challenged the indifferent members of the body, “Show me your faith without your works, and I will show you my faith by my works” (Js 2:18). His challenge was to show our connection with the body by our works. Works is the signal of life and connectivity with the body. The lack thereof is a signal of death. The body is not saved by its works, but without works it is not identified as the body.

The result of Haggai’s exhortation was that within four years—from 520 to 516—the people finished the temple. It is not enough to know that a job must be done. It is not enough to pray about getting the job done. What is important at the end of all planning and prayer is that we go to work in order that the job gets done. Eventually, we must hear announced, “And this house was finished on the third day of the month Adar, that was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king” (Ez 6:15). God does not reward plans and prayers. He rewards jobs in progress or jobs completed. Is this not what Paul said in the following statement? “Therefore, my beloved brethren, be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord” (1 Co 15:58).

The exhortation of Haggai and Zechariah to rebuild the physical temple of God in Jerusalem is one of the most misapplied statements of Scripture. Both the contextual and historical meaning of the prophets’ message are missed by those today who wish to construct some grand physical identity of the church of our Lord in their communities. The misappropriation of the message of these two prophets indicates a failure to understand that the temple of Jerusalem was physical and the temple of our Lord is spiritual.

We must not miss the metaphor of the New Testament writers who used the physical to illustrate the spiritual. Paul metaphorically spoke of the temple in 1 Corinthians 3:16: “Do you not know that you are the temple of God and that the Spirit of God dwells in you?” “You” in this verse means people, not bricks and mortar. The Spirit dwells in people, not bricks. And thus, the word “temple” is taken from the physical temple of the Old Testament in order to metaphorically refer to the spiritual body of Christ.

Both Amos and James help us understand the metaphorical use of the physical to symbolize the spiritual. Amos prophesied that the remnant of Israel would return and rebuild the tabernacle of God that had fallen down (Am 9:11,12). Though Amos referred to the tabernacle tent, not the physical temple of bricks, He still had in mind the reestablishment of the identity of the presence of God with the returned remnant in Palestine. When the remnant rebuilt the physical temple, it was a statement that Israel was back in business. However, when James quoted the prophecy of Amos in Acts 15:16,17, as he appealed to the gathered church in Jerusalem, he interpreted the prophecy of Amos 9:11,12 to refer to the church, the spiritual house of God (1 Tm 3:15).

What many today do not understand by misapplying the words of Amos, is that the first recipients of the message thought of something physical, but James interpreted it to refer to something that was spiritual. The prophecy, therefore, was metaphorical of the church, the spiritual temple of God. In fact, James’ quotation in Acts 15 of the Amos prophecy leaves little room for the interpretation of Amos 9 to refer to the Jews’ rebuilding of the physical temple after the Babylonian captivity in 536 B.C. There are other prophecies that cover that project. Nevertheless, we feel that the Jews had this prophecy in mind as they laid one stone upon another during the days of Ezra and Nehemiah when the temple was being rebuilt.

By the time of the events of Acts 15, the church had been in existence for about fifteen years. But there were no physical church buildings of the church until the early part of the fourth century. The church existed and grew rapidly, therefore, without the existence of any physical structures. Though the physical temple of Israel, and the early tabernacle, were the signal of the presence of God among the people of Israel, God meant that the spiritual body of His people, the church, be the signal today of His presence among the people of the world. To build a church building for the purpose of signalling to the people of a community that the church exists is to work backwards to something small, located and physical. It is often a backward step to focus the community on something physical and not spiritual. And those who do not have the privilege of building themselves an “identity” with a physical structure, therefore, are sometimes classified as not truly being God’s people in the community.

The more obsessed with the physical we become, the less we focus on the spiritual. In fact, in church growth studies, it is often true that the more people are obsessed with the physical building in which they sit, the less the building of the spiritual house becomes.

By the time of James, and the meeting of the church in Acts 15, the church was still identified as Jesus said it would be, that is, by loving people in action in their communities. By love in action the world identified those who were of the body of Christ (Jn 13:34,35). The early church was thus identified as people lovingly helping one another and others as servants (Gl 6:10). The members of the body were called Christians (At 11:26), or those of the Way (At 19:9). But never was the church identified by some physical structure on 5th and Main.

(Sometimes with zeal the leaders inspire their members within a village to build a “church building.” In wrenching the texts of Haggai and Zechariah out of their historical context, they exhort the members to build in order that the church be identified in the village by a structure, and thus signal to the local residents that the church is here to stay, though they see nothing as this in the church of the New Testament.

So the members gather wood poles and grass and build with zeal their “temple.” When it is completed, everyone sits proudly on benches, and then they wait for the people of the community to come. But Sunday after Sunday it is the same old group of builders who sit in the midst of their accomplishment, patting themselves on their backs that they have a “church building” as the identity that they are the true church in the village. But then they begin to wonder why God is not blessing them with multitudes to come to their new building since they sacrificed so much to build it. They even scratch around in their Bibles in order to find some “biblical name” to nail on the main post in order to convince the people that they were truly the church of the Bible.

And then one unfortunate day a bush fire ravages through the village. It devastates the village. Fathers, mothers and children run for their lives in order to escape the ravaging fire. All the huts of the village, with the grass church building, end up as a heap of ashes. Everyone is so discouraged and disheartened by the devastation.

So the leaders of the church stood up to encourage the members to build again the identity of the church in the village. But something changed in the hearts and thinking of some of the members. Certainly, there were those members who again started gathering poles and grass to rebuild their “temple.” They were convinced that if they could rebuild their church building before the other religious groups in the village, they would gain some of the members of the other groups.

But there were some members—and often only a few members—who realized that something was certainly wrong with their focus. They started listening to their hearts and not looking on something physical as the identity of the body of Christ. They asked themselves what Jesus would do in a situation as this. So they ignored the voices of those who were trying to usher all the members to rebuild a physical identity of the church. Instead, they started helping their neighbors rebuild their huts and lives. They went to work helping their neighbors collect poles and grass for their huts in order that their lives be put back together. They helped them find food and make sure that all their needs were served. They even gave them some of their own clothing.

The focus of the religionists identified themselves by first focusing on the burned down church building. But the Christians of the group thought first of their neighbors whose huts had burned to the ground and whose lives were devastated by the fire. The identity of the religionists was in their building, but the identity of the Christians was in their loving service to help their neighbors.)

When people start identifying the church by a physical structure, then we know that we have missed the point of Jesus' exhortation that we be identified by our love of one another and service to the communities in which we live (See Gl 6:10). In fact, the more we place emphasis on the building as the identity of the existence of the church in our communities, the less the church grows in the community. People may see a physical structure, but they feel love. Church buildings often become "sitting rooms" of the indifferent sick who are waiting on the call of the Great Physician. We must remember that the Physician is on call out in the fields of labor for those who have fallen because of their toil of love to help others. He is not in the "sitting room" answering the cry of those who would sing out, "Come now Lord Jesus and fetch us out of the midst of these bricks, or grass, or whatever."

2. Indifference breeds procrastination. In the beginning, the Jews became so discouraged by the local opposition that they led themselves to believe that it was not the right time to rebuild the temple (Hg 1:2). And once the discouragement spread among the people, the job that they knew they should do was simply put off for another time. And thus they convinced themselves that another day would do.

Paul exhorted the Corinthian disciples, "Behold, now is the acceptable time. Behold, now is the day of salvation" (2 Co 6:2). Someone once said, "The only things you can be sure of accomplishing are the things you do today." When we consider the task of building the temple of God today through the preaching of the gospel to the lost, there can never be any attitudes among us that tomorrow will do. But because of our procrastination, it seems that tomorrow is always going to be a busy day.

It is not that we need a prophet today to stir our spirits to work. We must listen to the dead preachers of the past. We must open our Bibles and listen to Haggai and Zechariah and others who stirred the people into action. We must follow the example of allowing the Lord to stir us up through the prophets. "Then the Lord stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel .... And they came and worked on the house of the Lord of armies their God ..." (Hg 1:14).

We must never allow opposition and discouragement to put us to sleep for Jesus. Lethargy is a sign of weakness for the Lord. We must always remember the encouraging words that the Lord said to Zerubbabel, "... be strong all you people of the land ... and work, for I am with you" (Hg 2:4). "Do not fear" (Hg 2:5). And to every Christian the Lord would say, "Be faithful unto death and I will give you the crown of life" (Rv 2:10). We must be faithful unto death, knowing that Jesus is with us every step of the way (Mt 28:20). And because of our acute sense of His awareness in our lives, we can "be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might" (Ep 6:10). As we stand before any task that must be done for the Lord, we must always remember the encouraging words that God gave to Joshua as he stood ready to assume the task of taking the land of promise for Israel:

Only be strong and very courageous so that you may observe to do according to all the law that Moses My servant commanded you. So do not turn from it to the right hand or to the left, so that you may prosper wherever you go (Ja 1:7).

Chapter 11

ZECHARIAH

There are several men in the Old Testament who had the name Zechariah. But the Zechariah who wrote this book of Zechariah was both a prophet and priest (Zc 1:7). He was the grandson of Iddo, who was one of the priestly families of Israel (See Ne 12:4,16). Both he and Haggai possibly returned to Jerusalem as young men with their parents when the first captives were permitted to reestablish Israel under the authority of the Persian king, Cyrus. This first return was led by Zerubbabel and took place in 536 B.C. It was not until sixteen years later in 520 that God called them to stir up the people to rebuild the temple which had been allowed to remain in ruins since the return in 536 B.C. Though the first returnees restored the foundation, opposition from the local residents led to discouragement, delay and indifference.

Zechariah 1:7 – 6:8 is a series of visions that are climaxed by the crowning of Joshua as a symbol of the Branch/Messiah who would build a future spiritual temple and reign as priest and king (6:9-15). In the section of 9:1 – 14:21, Israel's enemies are judged with the coming of the Prince of Peace (9:1-17). The evil shepherds that led Israel to spiritual ruin, would give way to God's leader (10:1-12). The Good Shepherd would be rejected by the flock, and then, He would suffer from the attack of an evil shepherd (11:1-17). Jerusalem is then in distress, and subsequently, looks to the One who was pierced (12:1-14). Prophecy is terminated when the Good Shepherd opens the fountain that cleanses sin (13:1-9). The series of visionary exhortations is then concluded by the judgments of the kingdoms of the world by God (14:1-21).

A. Historical/social background:

As with the call of Haggai, so was the purpose for the calling of Zechariah. Zechariah was called to encourage the people because of great things that were yet in their future. His was a series of visions that portrayed the glory of Israel if they completed their task of rebuilding the presence of God in Israel.

The first return of the remnant occurred in 536 B.C. Work started on the reconstruction of the foundation of the temple, but it soon ceased once the locals opposed their efforts. Their reconstruction efforts were idle for sixteen years until God called both Haggai and Zechariah in 520 B.C. to reignite the flame to work. So with the encouragement of the two prophets, and the leadership of Zerubbabel, the temple was completed in only four years after the people went to work.

B. Zechariah preaches to us:

Zechariah gave a message of prophecy of great things to come if the people completed the task for which they were commissioned to do upon their return. Since the message of the prophecies was directed to their immediate audience, it was not a message for us today of things in our future. We participate in the outcome of the fulfillment of the prophecies in that we now enjoy the blessings that came through the Branch who is now reigning as priest and king over all things.

It would be an interpretive mistake to steal away the message of prophetic hope that Zechariah gave to his immediate audience in order that we might speculate concerning supposed events in our future. In reference to our time, the Messiah has already come. The Branch has been revealed. He has offered His blessing of salvation to all the world.

The remnant that was enduring the hostility of the local opposition during Zechariah's ministry needed to hear a relevant message in prophecy for their encouragement in order that they have hope in their efforts to reestablish the identity of Israel in Palestine for the coming of the Branch/Messiah. Zechariah's prophecy of great things to come gave them purpose for rebuilding the temple, and later, purpose for rebuilding the walls of the city. The prophecies of the Messianic age encouraged them to build for more than just reestablishing national Israel. They were building for world salvation, though they did not fully understand all the implications of the prophecies that Zechariah made at the time. Nevertheless, they did understand enough in reference to the coming Branch that they were inspired to build.

1. Self-oriented faith does not please God. During Israel's seventy years of Babylonian captivity, and the sixteen idle years while the temple laid in waste, a religious culture developed among the people that was nationalistic and self-centered. In chapters 7 & 8, God saw through their legal religiosity by which they soothed their consciences. It seems that their fasting during the captivity was over the loss of their land and temple. It was somewhat void of mourning over their sin of rebellion. So God began His self awareness examination of their faith with a question: “When you fasted and mourned ... even those seventy years [while in captivity], was it actually for Me that you fasted?” (Zc 7:5). The question was a direct admonition of their twisted reason for fasting.

God knew that their fast was really over the destruction of Jerusalem. It was more about their nationalistic pride being bruised than their rejection of the one true and living God and His word. God awakened them to this reality by posing another question concerning their eating and drinking after their fast: “And when you ate, and when you drank, did you not eat for yourselves and drink for yourselves?” (Zc 7:6). Their faith became self-oriented. Instead of focusing on God through those things God commanded that should stir their thoughts of Him, they focused on their own appetites when they came together to feast.

They fasted because their nationalistic pride had been bruised by the destruction of Jerusalem. God’s judgment of their attitude was that they should have been mourning over their sin and crying out for a restoration of the word of God in their lives. God’s accusation was clear: “Should you not hear the words that the Lord has cried out by the former prophets when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity ...?” (Zc 7:7).

The lesson is pointed. When we are in mourning, we should search deep in our hearts and determine the real reason for our mourning. It is sometimes like the mourning of a criminal who has been caught. He mourns over the fact that he was caught, not over the fact that he was violating the law. In order to shock Israel into the reality of why they ended up in captivity, God reminded them that they not fall into the same moral degradation that their fathers did before the captivity. Through the former prophets before the captivity, God called on them to change their behavior and conform to His directions.

Execute true justice and show mercy and compassion everyone to his brother. And do not oppress the widow, nor the fatherless, the foreigner, or the poor. And do not allow any of you to imagine in your heart evil against his brother (Zc 7:9,10).

When these principles are violated, then it is time to fast. But their fathers had rejected these moral principles, and subsequently gave up their right to represent God among the nations. As a result of their rebellion, the nation of Israel was terminated in Palestine and the residents sent into captivity. It was as God said,

But they refused to hearken and turned a stubborn shoul- der. And they stopped their ears so that they would not hear. Yes, they made their hearts as flint, lest they should hear the law and the words that the Lord of armies had sent in His Spirit by the former prophets. (Zc 7:11-12).

But now things had changed. It was a time for rejoicing because God had returned the remnant to the land (Zc 8:1-17). Their fast that was for sorrow over the loss of their nationhood, should now be turned to “joy and gladness and cheerful feasts for the house of Judah” (Zc 8:19). If this is done, a marvelous thing will happen in their present and in their future. Their zeal to follow the instructions of God to rebuild the temple and city will be a signal to the world that God was again with His people. The oppressing nations that afflicted His people before the captivity were all gone. But since Israel was being resurrected after their destruction and captivity, they were a signal to the people of the world that God was with Israel as in the days of old.

In those days it will come to pass that ten men from every language of the nations will take hold of the garment of him who is a Jew, saying, “We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you” (Zc 8:23).

2. We must be inspired by hope to build for the future. One of the exciting messages of Zechariah is that it is a book filled with encouragement that inspired the returnees to restore the identity of Israel for the sake of God’s work that was yet in their future. The message of both Haggai and Zechariah was that the people should build, though they did not understand all the reasons for the building.

God discouraged their thinking about fasting over the loss of their past. It was now time to fast in hope of the future. Something was coming that would eventually reveal the purpose for which God originally established the nation of Israel. So through Zechariah specifically, and later through Malachi, God wanted the returnees to know that they must build with faith in the future.

God was working toward the consummation of national Israel, but this consummation (end) of Israel would be for the salvation of the world. When the immediate audience of Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi understood this purpose through prophecy, then with zeal they would have purpose in building. Their zeal was not based on simply building a physical structure in which they could take pride. Their building was based on the fact that they needed to identify again the nation of the fathers, in order that the promises to the fathers be fulfilled in the coming of the Branch/Messiah and the new paradigm of God's work among men. Embedded in Zechariah's message are several great prophecies in reference to the future when God would eventually reveal His eternal plan of salvation.

We must remind again those zealous futurists of today not to steal away this hope from the Jews to whom these prophecies of hope were first delivered. They were prophecies in reference to the restoration of national Israel after the captivity in order to usher in the Messianic age to come over four centuries later. They were not prophecies for us today that God is going to usher in another Messianic age or supposed millennial reign of Jesus on earth.

For us, the prophecies have been fulfilled. For the immediate audience of Zechariah, they were unfulfilled prophecies, but prophecies that contained hope for their future. Let us not selfishly steal away the hope of the prophecies from the first recipients in order that we might have some twisted speculation concerning our future. We need not make God a liar to them by stealing the hope of the prophecies from them in order to make the prophecies apply to us. Our encouragement from the prophecies is that God fulfilled them with the coming of the Messiah in the first century. We live in the time of their fulfillment.

Have you ever considered what was actually happening in the context of the expectant Berean Jews in the context of Paul's teaching in Berea that is recorded in Acts 17:11? We need to read carefully what Luke recorded concerning their reaction to Paul's statements that the prophecy concerning the Christ were fulfilled.

These were more noble-minded than those [Jews] in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind and searched the Scriptures daily to see whether these things were so.

The word "Scriptures" in this text refers to the Old Testament Scriptures, for the New Testament Scriptures were not yet written. In the context, Paul was teaching that the prophecies of the Old Testament Scriptures were fulfilled. The Jewish Bereans searched these Scriptures every day to see if what Paul was saying was true. If they determined that what Paul was saying concerning the fulfillment of the prophecies of the Scriptures in their time, then they would have considered him a false teacher, and subsequently, rejected him. But the text continues, "... many of them believed" (At 17:12). They believed that the prophecies were fulfilled in reference to Christ and His building of the temple (the church). They then believed that Jesus was the fulfillment of all the prophecies of the prophets concerning the paradigm shift from the old covenant to the new covenant of Christ (See Lk 24:44). If they had not believed Paul's teaching that all the prophecies were fulfilled, then they would not have believed Paul's message concerning the Lord Jesus Christ. Paul was not teaching the Bereans that God was leaping over them in the fulfillment of the prophecies to some time that was yet over two thousand years in their future.

The New Testament gives us hope in the fact that God will fulfill His promises that He has made specifically to Christians. Our faith is in Him to fulfill His promises to us because He fulfilled His promises to Israel before the cross. We remember Hebrews 6:18:

*... so that by two unchangeable things in which it is impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong encouragement, who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us.

We have hope in the promises that God has given to us in the New Testament because He fulfilled the promises He made to His people in the Old Testament. We have so much hope in the New Testament promises that we do not have to steal the hope of the promises that were given to God's people before the cross.

We must not forget what God stated through Zechariah in 13:2,3. It was a warning to any would-be prophets today who would presume to stand up and prophesy of future events.

"And it will come to pass in that day [our day]," says the Lord of armies, "that ... I will also cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land. And it will come to pass that when any would still prophesy [of the future], then his father and his mother who begat him will say to him, 'You will not live, for you speak lies in the name of the Lord.' And his father and his mother who begat him will thrust him through when he prophesies."

The seriousness of this statement cannot be over-emphasized. God is serious about those who presumptuously stand up and say they are prophets of future events, but are actually liars. He is so serious that if one does presume to be a prophet of future things, his parents were to do him some serious damage.

Regardless of this stern warning, however, it seems that we today still have to endure the nonsense of so many self-proclaimed prophets who are proclaiming the end of times. They make their lies concerning the future, nothing happens, and gullible people will still follow them. It is because people are as children tossed to and fro by every self-proclaimed prophet who would through prophecies concerning blood moons, eclipses and star alignments, predict future events. The supposed dates of prophecies come and go, while the prognosticators smile on their way to the bank after making millions of dollars on the sale of books that should have been burned as those in Ephesus (See At 19:18-20). We have found that regardless of the unfulfilled prophecies of the modern-day liars, people will still follow them. People are indeed gullible as what Paul wrote. They are as children tossed to and fro by every wind of teaching (Ep 4:14).

Nevertheless, the prophecies of Zechariah were very encouraging to the people to whom they were initially addressed. They are encouraging to us because we live on this side of their fulfillment. We know that Zechariah did not lie to the people. We read our New Testaments with joy because the Spirit testifies to the fact that every detail of the prophecies of Zechariah were fulfilled in the first century.

We must not miss the point of what God said in Zechariah 13:2,3. Since the prophets of future events would pass out of the land, the “prophets” of the New Testament were not prophets as those of the Old Testament. They were not in the business of making proclamations of future events. The gullible people of the Old Testament sought to listen only to false prophets of future events. God said through Zechariah that these prophets would no longer exist among His people. And since there would no longer be any Isaiahs or Jeremiahs, Daniels or Ezekiels, then there would never be among God’s people any foretelling prophets who would falsely assume to be a prophet of future events. Therefore, anyone today who would profess to be a prophet of future events is simply a liar to the people. He is not counted among God’s people.

When we read of the prophets of the New Testament church, therefore, we conclude that these were not prophets of future events. They were inspired teachers of the word of God in the absence of the written word of God (See Ep 4:11-16). When the word of God was eventually written and circulated among the disciples, there was no longer any need for inspired teachers among the people.

Zechariah’s message was filled with hope for the returned remnant. His message was filled with hope in the Messianic future of great things that was yet to come in their future. The following are some of the primary messages of hope that were given to those who faced great opposition in rebuilding the temple:

a. Zechariah 6:12,13:

Behold, the Man whose name is the Branch. He will branch out from His place, and, and He will build the temple of the Lord .... He will sit and rule on His throne. And He will be a priest on His throne. And the counsel of peace will be between them both.

This prophecy was for hope in a new priest and king to come. The Branch would be both a priest and king upon His throne. The Hebrew writer affirmed that this prophecy was fulfilled in Christ Jesus:

Seeing then that we have a great high priest who has passed through the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast to our confession (Hb 4:14).

Now consider that if Jesus were on earth, He could not be a priest. God had promised David that He “would raise up the Christ to sit on his throne” (See 2 Sm 7). This promise was fulfilled in that God raised up Jesus and seated Him at His right hand in the heavenly places to reign on the throne of David (See Ep 1:20-22; Ph 2:9-11). In the Hebrews 4:14 passage above, the verb is past tense. At the time the passage was written, Jesus was already our high priest after the order of Melchizedek (Hb 5:6; 7:14,21-28). It is at this time, therefore, that “we have such a high priest who is seated at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens” (Hb 8:1).

It was prophesied by Zechariah that Jesus would be both a priest and king on David’s throne. His function as a priest and king would occur at the same time. He is now a priest and king on His throne. Zechariah’s prophecy has been fulfilled.

Hebrews 8:4 presents a problem to those who say that Jesus is coming again in order to reign as a king on this earth. “For if He were on earth, He would not be a priest ....” If Jesus did come again to reign on this earth, then He would have to give up His priesthood. But He is a priest forever. He will never give up this intercession for us as our high priest. Therefore, we know that when Jesus does come again, He will not be coming to reign on this earth because He is our priest forever and will not give up His priesthood for us (See Hb 7:3,23,24).

God wanted Zechariah’s audience to understand that there was a new high priest coming, One who would not pass away. He would not pass away because He would also be a king upon the throne of David. And since the King now has all authority (Mt 28:18), He guarantees by His authority that He will be a priest while He reigns.

This hope was given to Zechariah and his contemporaries. Their kings and priests of the past were often morally corrupt, and sometimes simply wicked. But the kingship and priesthood of the Branch would be different. We are now living in the reality of Zechariah's prophecy that was fulfilled in Jesus. The prophecy will not be reversed in the future when Jesus comes again. He came first to become our priest. He is not coming again to give up His priesthood. He remains a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek, whose priesthood had neither beginning nor ending.

b. Zechariah 9:9:

Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion. Shout, O daughter of Jerusalem. Behold, your King is coming to you. He is just and having salvation, lowly and riding on a donkey, and on a colt, the foal of a donkey.

What Jesus did on His last trip into Jerusalem fulfilled this prophecy. The prophecy was quoted by Matthew in order to convince his Jewish readers that what Zechariah prophesied was fulfilled in Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem on the back of a donkey (Mt 21:5).

c. Zechariah 11:12:

Then I said to them, "If you think good give me my wages, and if not, refrain." So they weighed for my wage thirty pieces of silver.

In prophecy, it was often difficult to understand the meaning of the prophecy until the time of fulfillment. Since this statement was embedded in the context of prophecies concerning the coming of the Branch out of Israel, then the immediate audience assumed that there was some significance to it in reference to the coming Messianic age. At the time of fulfillment, therefore, when thirty pieces of silver were weighed into the hands of Judas who betrayed Jesus, the light bulb came on in the minds of the Jews (See Mt 26:15). They understood that Zechariah's statement was a prophecy of an event that would take place during the betrayal of the Messiah.

d. Zechariah 12:10:

Then I will pour on the house of David and on the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and of supplications. And they will look on Me whom they have pierced and they will mourn for Him as one mourns for his only son. And they will weep bitterly over Him like the bitter weeping over a firstborn.

We have no doubt about the fulfillment of this prophecy. John quoted it in John 19:37. It was Jesus they looked upon and over whom they mourned and wept. The prophecy was fulfilled in the crucifixion of the firstborn Son of God who came in fulfillment of the prophecy that God would set One upon the throne of David (See At 2:33-36).

e. Zechariah 13:7:

Strike the shepherd and the sheep will be scattered.

Previous to His betrayal and arrest, Jesus said to His disciples, "All of you will fall away this night because of Me, for it is written, 'I will strike the Shepherd and the sheep of the flock will be scattered'" (Mt 26:31). Since Matthew directed his book to the Jews, Jesus' Jewish disciples knew exactly to whom the prophecy of Zechariah referred. They then determined that Zechariah's statement was a prophecy of their behavior at the time Jesus was betrayed, for they all fled the scene.

Zechariah's prophecy of 13:1 explained the purpose for God's struggle throughout the centuries to preserve Israel until the coming of the Seed that would crush the head of Satan. "In that day there will be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness" (Zc 13:1). In that day, the day about which Joel prophesied in Joel 2:28-32, those who mourned over their sins could do as Peter instructed when all these prophecies were fulfilled in the crucifixion, resurrection and ascension of Jesus: "Repent and be baptized everyone one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (At 2:38).

All that God had worked to complete throughout the centuries, from the fall of Adam to the revelation of the Branch—the Redeemer—was fulfilled in Christ. We live in the era of enlightenment in reference to the fulfillment of these prophecies. We are blessed with the privilege to live in the time when we can enjoy the cleansing of our uncleanness through the blood of Jesus (1 Jn 1:7).

We cannot bypass the fulfillment of the prophecies of the Old Testament that were made specifically in reference to the Redeemer who came into the world over two thousand years ago. We must keep in mind that every effort to make the prophecies of the Old Testament bypass their fulfillment at the cross of Jesus, weakens the impact of their fulfillment and the joy that we experience today by their fulfillment in Christ. In the prophecies, God gave hope to the immediate recipients. Their hope, however, was not in reference to what would transpire at the end of the world. Their hope was in God's work to use them as the seed of Abraham to bring the promised Blessing of Abraham into the world for the salvation of all men.

Chapter 12

MALACHI

According to the content of this book, it was the last prophetic material that was written by the Old Testament prophets of God. Since the offering of sacrifices at the temple had carried on for some time before the book was written, including the fact that the returnees were still under the control of a Medo-Persian governor (Ml 1:8), the book was probably written sometime in the fifth century B.C., possibly during the ministry of Ezra and Nehemiah.

The name Malachi may have been a Hebrew noun, and thus, what was emphasized by the use of the word was the message of the book and not so much a specific prophet. The name is a shortened version of the name Malachiyah which means “the messenger of the Lord.”

Within the contents of the book, reference is made to three different messengers of the Lord: (1) If the name refers to an individual, then reference was first to the prophet, who was the messenger of the Lord in reference to the message of the book. (2) There is also the messenger of John the Baptist who would go before the Lord as one crying in the wilderness. (3) There was also the messenger of the Lord who would be the Messiah, the one who would bring both salvation and judgment.

A. Historical/social background:

Led by Zerubbabel, the first returnees settled in Palestine in 536 B.C. This initial group of returnees was joined by a second group under the leadership of Ezra who returned in 457 B.C. Another group returned in 444 B.C. during the ministry of Nehemiah.

The initial returnees completed the reconstruction of the temple. At the time of Malachi’s ministry, the sacrifices at the temple were being conducted (Ml 1:7-10; 3:8). Unfortunately, it was a time when their offerings were unacceptable to God because they offered them contrary to the law (Ml 1:8-10). They were offered by a people who performed the legalities of the offerings, but their heart was not right with God. Even the priests were neglecting their duties by not requiring that the people offer sacrifices according to the law (Ml 2:7,8). Add to this the fact that the people failed in their responsibilities to give tithes and offerings (Ml 3:8-10).

One practice in which they had involved themselves worked contrary to the very purpose for which God brought them back to the land as a remnant. They were putting away the wives of their youth and marrying foreign women (Ml 2:10-12). This may help us better understand the commitment of those who returned with Ezra. As an example of what God wanted, these returnees put away their foreign wives in the land of their captivity before returning to Palestine where their fellow Jews were involved in marriage with foreign women (See Ez 9). Since it was the mission of Ezra to restore allegiance to the law of God, we can only imagine the message that this small group of returnees preached to previous returnees who had married Gentile women. Ezra and his group sought to restore the identity of Israel in order that the promises to the fathers be known to have been fulfilled when the final Messenger of God came. But the locals were in the process of marrying into obscurity the identity of Israel.

B. Malachi preaches to us:

There are two principle messages that Malachi delivered to the people that are applicable to God’s people throughout history: (1) Malachi speaks of the sin of insincere worship whereby the people failed to comply with the spirit of obedience to the law of God (Ml 1,2). (2) Judgment comes upon those who backslide from the will of God, but the faithful will enjoy the promises of God (Ml 3,4).

1. The sin of insincere worship: Before God pronounced His judgment on their forefathers who lived before the captivities, He wanted to remind them that they were a chosen nation. What their forefathers had given up was not simply obedience to commandments, but the forsaking of a covenant of love. “I have loved you,” the Lord reminded them (Ml 1:2). He loved them long before the making of the Sinai covenant, for He loved them through the choosing of Jacob over Esau (Ml 1:2). And as history was played out in the nation of Edom, Esau’s descendants, Edom was judged to terminate as a nation of people. However, Edom’s brother, Israel (Jacob), remained alive in the remnant that returned to Palestine (Ml 1:3).

Regardless of any efforts on the part of the remnant of the Edomites to rebuild their nation, God said, “I will throw down” (Ml 1:4). They would be as God said, “The people against whom the Lord has indignation forever” (Ml 1:4). But the remnant of Israel would live on. Nevertheless, God had some things against the remnant at the time Malachi ministered God's judgments.

God's first judgment was against the religious leaders. They allowed the people to offer blemished animals as sacrifices (Ml 1:7). In doing so, they were saying to God, "The table of the Lord is contemptible" (Ml 1:7). If they offered such animals to the Persian governor who was over the land, he would be displeased (Ml 1:8).

In 1:11 it seems that Malachi moves into the future in reference to the name of God being glorified among the nations:

For from the rising of the sun even to the going down of the same My name will be great among the Gentiles. And in every place incense will be offered to My name and a pure offering. For My name will be great among the nations.

By spurring them to jealousy, and taking their minds beyond their Jewish heritage, God spoke of a time when His name would be great among the Gentiles. "In every place," as opposed to the location of the temple in Jerusalem, there will be offerings to God (See Jn 4:20,21). The name of the Father would be praised with sincerity among the nations, for all who would come into a covenant relationship with the Father would come on a voluntary basis as an individual.

The offerings of Malachi's audience were given grudgingly. Of their offerings, they said, "Behold, what a weariness it is" (Ml 1:13). Because their offering at the table was weariness, God said, "And you bring the stolen, the lame and the sick" (Ml 1:13). The priests who were given the responsibility to make sure the offerings were without blemish, were held accountable for the unholy offerings.

If you [priest] will not hear, and if you will not take it to heart to give glory to My name ... I will even send a curse on you, and I will curse your blessings. Yes, I have cursed them already because you do not take it to heart (Ml 2:2).

The problem was that the religious leaders did not follow the example of Levi. God said of Levi, "... he feared Me and was afraid before My name" (Ml 2:5). When religious leaders have no fear of violating the law of God, they will allow the people to establish their own laws. God exhorted the religious leaders, "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law from his mouth. For he is the messenger of the Lord of armies" (Ml 2:7). The leaders should know the law of God in order that the people have a source of knowledge from God. But when the religious leaders do not know the law of God, they are under the following indictment from God:

But you have departed out of the way. You have caused many to stumble at the law. You have corrupted the covenant ... (Ml 2:8).

2. Emotional worship without obedience to the law is worthless. God judged the insincere with the following words:

*And another thing you do: you cover the altar of the Lord with tears, with weeping and with crying out, inasmuch that He does not regard the offering anymore, nor receive it with goodwill from your hand (Ml 2:13).

No matter how many emotional tears one may pour out before God in worship, the worship is in vain if one is not obedient to the word of God. Their worship was in vain because they had brought before the Lord blemished offerings that were contrary to the law. They had created an offering of worship after their own desires, and not according to the word of God.

This concept of worship carried on unto the time of Jesus, for Jesus judged the religious leaders of His day with the words, "In vain they worship, teaching as doctrines the commandment of men" (Mk 7:7). If one would offer worship to God today according to his own desires, his worship is vain if it is not according to the word of God. Human emotionality is no replacement for obedience to God's word.

Jesus said that many will cry out ...

... Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Your name, cast out demons in Your name, and performed many wonderful works in Your name? (Mt 7:22).

And indeed, there are many religious people today who pose as Christians by doing many mighty works in the name of Jesus. But Jesus' answer to self-justified religionists, as indicated in the preceding cry of some worshipers, is judgment: "And then I will declare to them, 'I never knew you. Depart from Me you who practice lawlessness'" (Mt 7:23).

Such was the scenario of the vain worship that was administered by the religious leaders of Malachi's day. The people could claim that they did the offerings. However, the offerings were not according to the law. They offered animals that were blemished, and thus, not acceptable to God. Their tears, with the offering of blemished animals, did not validate before God that they were sincere worshipers. Sincere worshipers are validated as such because they offer worship according to the word of God.

The same principle still holds true in reference to worship of God today. One may plead his case that he has performed many wonderful works, but if his works (worship) are not according to the word of God, then they are lawless works in reference to pleasing God. One cannot do lawless works with tears and expect the works to be accepted by God.

Those who do not know the word of God cannot offer worship that is according to the word of God. This truth is embedded in the statement of Jesus in John 4:24: “God is spirit, and those who worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth.”

The lesson is that we do not come to God on our own terms. We come to Him on His terms, and the only way to know His terms is through His word. Worship and service is not a one-way street. It cannot be our way to Him. It is a two-way street. He first comes to us through His word, and then we go to Him according to His desires.

3. God hates divorce: The remnant of Jews was still in a covenant relationship with God (MI 2:10). However, some of those of the remnant were doing something that violated the covenant of the fathers. Malachi explained. “For Judah has profaned the holiness of the Lord that he loved and has married the daughter of a foreign god” (MI 2:11).

If one married another who was not in a covenant relationship with God, Malachi judged, “May the Lord cut off from the tents of Jacob the man who does this ...” (MI 2:12). They were putting away the Jewish wife of their youth in order to marry a Gentile woman (MI 2:14). They were thus dealing treacherously with the brides of their first marriage. God was continuing the development of the identity of Israel through the marriage of one Israelite to another, but they worked against this purpose by marrying foreign women (MI 2:15).

The people were in the process of annihilating the existence of Israel through their marriage of women who were not in a covenant relationship with God. It is interesting to note that if a Jew married a Gentile, such did not automatically sanction the Gentile to be a Jew. It was the marriage of a Jew to a Jew by heritage and genealogy that validated the continuation of the offspring as Jews in a covenant relationship with God. But their divorce and marriage to foreign women was becoming so common, that the identity of Israel was again on the brink of obscurity.

Influenced by the local people of the land who had intermarried, the returnees were adopting the local culture of intermarriage. If such continued, there would be no national Israel four hundred years later that could be identified as Israel. And if there was no Israel at the time of the coming of the Messiah, then there would be no proof that the promises made to the fathers were fulfilled. So the solution to the problem was clear: “I hate divorce,” God said. Stop the divorce of the wives of their youth and the problem of destroying the identity of Israel would be solved.

4. Justice will not be detoured. Some complained, “Where is the God of justice?” (MI 2:17). There was a day of purification coming. We are not told in the context exactly who this messenger of justice is, but we are told that when He comes, He will rectify the problems that are described in the first two chapters. Since He is coming to His temple (MI 3:1), we thus assume that reference here is to Jesus who would come as a refiner’s fire. When He comes, it will be a time of great purging.

Then I will come near to you for judgment. And I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers and against the adulterers and against perjurers and against those who exploit wage earners, the widow and the fatherless, and those who turn aside the foreigner and do not fear Me (MI 3:5).

The purpose for the purging of sin was to restore the people again to the will and work of God. The purging, therefore, was a means to identify again the nation in preparation for the establishment of the new spiritual Israel. Out of the purging would come a new Israel that would be purified by the fire of judgment.

5. Cessation of God robbers: “Will a man rob God? You have robbed Me” (MI 3:8). The sin of their robbery is based on the fact that they had within their power the opportunity to hold back that which actually belonged to God. While the tithe was under their control, it still belonged to God. The robbery took place when they used the tithe that belonged to God for something that satisfied their own desires. The robbery, therefore, was not simply in the fact that they did not give the tithe. It was also in the fact that they used what belonged to God for their own selfish means.

They robbed God of two things: (1) tithes and (2) offerings. Tithes would refer to the ten percent that they were obligated to give in support of the Levitical priesthood. Offerings were in reference to the animals without blemish from their flocks, and grain, that they were also commanded to give to the priests. They held back on their tithes, and offered blemished animals as offerings.

Their robbery was in not giving the ten percent as they should, but also in giving the blemished animals to

God. They offered animals that not even the Persian governor of the land would accept. Therefore, when one would consider giving his junk to the Lord, he should think twice. Can you imagine the Philippian disciples sending with the things they offered to Paul in prison, old coats full of holes and sandals with worn soles? (See Ph 4:18).

If Malachi's audience rectified their tithes, animal and grain offerings according to the law, then God would make it known among the nations that they were truly His people.

Bring all the tithes into the storehouse so that there may be food in My house, and test Me now in this, says the Lord of armies, if I will not open to you the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing on you so that there will not be room enough to receive it (Ml 3:10).

We must note in this context that the priests were not doing their job in making sure that the people made their offerings according to the law. Nevertheless, the people were still obligated to keep the law in reference to tithes and offerings, regardless of the neglect of the priests. Simply because the priests failed in their duties did not justify the people to rob God by not giving what they were obligated to give.

The problem may have been more with the stingy people, than with the priests. The priests, who received the insufficient grain and blemished animals, simply succumbed to the selfishness of the people. In this scenario, Malachi wrote to the priests to stop accepting insufficient offerings from the people. The people were rebuked for not giving the required tithes in support of the priests. In reference to bringing the worst animals to be offered to the priests, the priests were commanded never to receive blemished animals again.

6. The promise of deliverance through consumption: Chapter 4 is indeed a prophetic picture of rectification. There was a day coming that would burn as an oven (Ml 4:1). We see in these words the termination of those who would in their pride reject the "Sun of Righteousness." The generation about which Malachi speaks is identified by the words of Jesus in reference to the religious leaders of His day:

You are of your father the devil, and the desires of your father you want to do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and does not abide in the truth because there is no truth in him (Jn 8:44).

These were the proud and arrogant religious leaders which Jesus brought down by the example of those who humbly submitted to Him. The religiously proud of Jesus' day simply could not do what the Holy Spirit required:

Yes, all of you be submissive to one another and be clothed with humility, for God resists the proud and gives grace to the humble (1 Pt 5:5).

Malachi 4:3 surely spoke of the time when God would bring down the wicked among His people. At the time of the fulfillment of this statement, the Israel that existed was filled with a wicked religious leadership that would eventually crucify the Messiah.

The proud eventually led the nation of Israel to extermination in A.D. 70 at the hand of the Roman Empire. Malachi stated concerning the coming Messenger:

And you will tread down the wicked, for they will be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I will do this, says the Lord of armies (Ml 4:3).

Until that time came, Malachi encouraged his readers to "remember the law of Moses" (Ml 4:4). It would be that law that would carry them through to the time when God would do the following: "Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and terrible day of the Lord (Ml 4:5).

And Elijah came as the voice of one crying in the wilderness.

In those days John the Baptist came preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Mt 3:1,2; see Is 40:1-3).

And so, it was now time for the dead prophets of Israel to preach their faith to the new spiritual Israel of God.

Book 63

New Creation

Jesus created us, “for by Him all things were created” (Cl 1:16). And if we would ask why, then the Holy Spirit would reply, “All things were created through Him and for Him” (Cl 1:16). But when we consider all the blemishes we have created in our lives, we wonder why He would create that which would be the origin of so much evil and suffering in an environment that was created for the habitat of a truly free-moral person. The answer is that He had to create us. God is love, and it is the nature of love to pour out affection on that which can respond, “I love You, too.” We are atheists in reference to any entity as a hermit god. Of necessity, therefore, the Son of God created us in order that He might pour out His love on us. And that He did. So in order to be objects of love, we were created with the ability to make a choice to either love or not to love. We were placed in an environment that allows these choices to be made. If we were not in an environment that allowed choices to be made, then we would not be truly free. We would simply be preprogrammed robots who could express no love in return for His love for us. Adam was created pure, as pure as every infant that comes into this world. We too are born pure and free. But our freedom leads us to make choices that separate us from our Creator. Before He created the world, Jesus knew we would sin, and subsequently separate ourselves from Him. Therefore, He had a plan for sin before the dust became a living soul. He had a plan wherein that which was created could be born again, recreated in Him a new creation in order that our fellowship be restored to Him in eternity. This is the thrilling story of the good news (the gospel) that was revealed on a cross outside Jerusalem and celebrated at an empty tomb. Through His death, burial and resurrection, He revealed the way by which all His creatures could be created anew in Him if they would follow Him to the cross, to the tomb, and thus, experience the glory of being resurrected as a new creation to walk in newness of life. It is truly an exciting adventure to study through the New Testament in order to discover the inspirational jewels of His plan to love us into eternity. And as we see that love, it is encouraging to see the response of the early new creations in Christ carry on throughout the world.

The skeptic Descarte had something else in mind than spiritual matters when he made the statement, “I think, therefore, I am.” What he should have been thinking was, “I think, therefore, I sin.” Every living soul should cry out as Paul, “Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from the body of this death?” (Rm 7:24).

We sin ourselves into death. We cannot help ourselves. It is simply being human, the way we were created as free-moral individuals. We were not created sinners, nor with the taint of sin. Our freedom to make choices simply allows us the opportunity to be the best we can be, but it also allows us to make the worst decisions possible to bring sin and suffering, not only into our own lives, but also into the lives of others. We are truly wretched. Paul’s words were not an exaggeration of what we can become.

We do not conclude that the Son of God failed to know what sinners we would become in a world that offered all sorts of opportunities to think and do evil. He knew the risk before the first grain of dust was transformed into flesh. He knew that with the creation of a truly free individual there would come a tremendous risk. That risk was the loss of a beautiful infant growing into adulthood, and then going into sin, and subsequently lost forever. It is as a parent who invests everything possible in a child, but then the child wanders away. Jesus knew that there were no guarantees that all His created creatures would choose to remain in fellowship with their Creator.

So with the risk, and to guard against a truly free person making bad choices, Jesus embedded within our psyche the option of not choosing evil. It is called conscience. In order to stand just in condemning the wicked, but rewarding the righteous with eternal glory, our Creator laid the responsibility for eternity upon the shoulders of each individual who should at least follow his own conscience. With conscience, therefore, came the responsibility that one must take ownership of his eternal destiny. Conscience must send one on a journey to discover his Creator. This was the road of adventure Paul sought to set us on in Romans 1:20:

For the invisible things of Him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and divinity, so that they are without excuse.

Our Creator knew that in our arrogance and rebellion, we would go wrong. It is not that we inherently seek evil, but the options to satisfy our own lusts often overcome our desire to do that which is right. We ignore our conscience and go wrong. We trash all the evidence of His existence that is irrefutably embedded in the created world (Se Ps 8; Rm 1:20). We are thus in trouble, for it is not possible for sinful creatures to dwell in the presence of God.

We would not think that we were created hopeless beings who are always stained with sin. God would be fiendish if creation occurred without an opportunity for reconciliation. Therefore, in order to remain a truly free-moral individual, we must take ownership of the opportunity of His offer for reconciliation, just as we took the opportunity to sin.

Taking ownership of our eternal destiny was made possible through our Creator's love offering that should draw unto Him those who seek to stand right before their Creator. Reconciliation was a matter of revealing an open demonstration of love, and then allowing our conscience to take it from there. And no matter how wretched we could become in sin, He, through His demonstration of love and grace, could create us anew. It would be creation all over again, not of the physical, but of the spiritual. We could once again be a new creation. Here is how the Holy Spirit worded it:

Therefore, if any man is in Christ, he is a new creature. Old things have passed away. Behold, all things have become new (2 Co 5:17).

In another statement He gives an expanded explanation.

Therefore, we are buried with Him through baptism into death, that just as Christ was raised up from the dead through the glory of the Father, even so we also might walk in newness of life (Rm 6:4).

The new creature (creation) that walks in newness of life is not something that is created by the legalities of our performance of His law. Neither is it bargained for or bought by the offering of our good deeds. And just in case we might claim our newness in Christ as our gift to ourselves, the Spirit again said, "For neither circumcision accomplishes anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation" (Gl 6:15). Since we cannot "circumcise ourselves into Christ," then it is our challenge to discover how to become a new creature according to the road map of God.

In order to be created anew, Jesus again must remain our Creator. We cannot declare to be new creations by the power of our works, or the work of our declaration to "receive Jesus." Creation is the business of God. And unless we want to steal away from the Son of God the work of creation, then we need to throw ourselves into His word and discover how He creates us anew in Him. We are new creatures only when He declares that we are such. "Sinner's prayers" reveal repentance. But new creatures are created by the Son of God, not by the meritorious words of a declared "sinner's prayer."

Jesus is the origin of all creation. He was the origin of the material world (Cl 1:16). And now, He is the origin of the new creation. Those who have washed themselves in His blood come forth from the waters of burial with all their sins washed away (At 22:16). It is He who cleans us up with His blood. It is He who keeps us clean by His blood (1 Jn 1:7). We can take no credit for the washing, though we have relinquished ourselves to the burial. The burial is our part, but the washing is all His. For this reason, He must be given all glory for the newness of life in which we walk because His cleansing of our sins does not stop when we have dripped dry after baptism.

Our gratitude inspires our discipleship. We continually walk in the light of His word in order to be continually cleansed by His blood (1 Jn 1:7). This is the rewarding life of being a disciple of Jesus. Our confidence is not in ourselves, but in the power of His blood to keep us continually as new creatures in His presence.

As we journey through His description of the new creatures we have become, we are taken on an inspirational journey that always ends in joy. The more we understand the nature of this new creation that walks in newness of life—this is us—the more we are encouraged to continue our journey into eternity in His loving arms. In other words, the more we live the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, the better we understand all that He did for us. Our adventure in living the gospel, therefore, is an opportunity to understand the gospel. As we grow in the grace and knowledge of the incarnate Son of God, the better we understand His sacrifice for us.

Chapter 1

NEW CREATION

New creatures are found this side of the edge of much water, dripping wet after being created new by the blood of Jesus. In fact, John the Baptist needed so much water to clean up dirty souls that he “was baptizing in Aenon near to Salim because there was much water there” (Jn 3:23).

As one reads through the New Testament, he will always discover new creatures just this side of a body of water, for the Holy Spirit wrote that one’s sins are washed away in the cleansing waters of baptism (At 22:16). If there is such a thing as “washing” and “cleansing” in reference to our sins—and there is—then water must be involved in our regeneration to become a new creature. It takes more than the water of tears in repentance to produce a new creature. Therefore, when we are reading through our New Testaments in reference to new creatures, if we do not infer water, then we have not connected all the dots that lead to the new creation. If one has hydrophobia, he will simply not experience creation anew in the blood of Jesus.

New creatures in Christ have been granted freedom because they have relinquished themselves to burial, and subsequently, to cleansing. It is as Paul wrote, “But God be thanked that though you were the bondservants of sin, yet you have obeyed from the heart that form of teaching that was delivered to you” (Rm 6:17). This “form of teaching” was explained by Paul in the same chapter of Romans 6. The Roman disciples were “buried with Him [Christ] through baptism into death,” and thus, they walk in newness of life (Rm 6:4). In reference to the bondage of legal religiosity, Paul wrote to the Galatians that the new creation has been set free from the necessity of self-atonement through either perfect law-keeping or meritorious deeds. He wrote, “Stand fast therefore in the liberty by which Christ has made us free, and do not be entangled again with a yoke of bondage” (Gl 5:1). New creatures in Christ are not such legally. They are those who have been set free by the grace of God.

When we speak of new creations, we speak of those who have been set free from the bondage of sin by their response to the grace of God. They are free from the bondage of legal religiosity, by which one would seek to keep law perfectly in order to save himself. New creatures are free, not from law, but from the necessity of keeping law perfectly in order to be in a saved relationship with God.

A. New creatures are set free from the bondage of sin:

The Holy Spirit explained, “For if we have been united together in the likeness of His death, we will also be in the likeness of His resurrection” (Rm 6:5). When one looks back and before his obedience to the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, he can see an old dead man on the other side of the water that was in the bondage of sin. It was an old man filled with guilt, but now he is a new man in Christ. He is a new creation because his sins were washed away by the blood of Jesus at the time of his immersion (At 22:16).

One is a new creation in Christ only when he allows himself to be taken to the cross with Jesus, and then allows himself to be laid in a tomb of much water in order to be raised to walk in newness of life.

One is not a new creature in Christ before he has experienced the overwhelming experience of water for the remission of sins. Paul asked some disciples who needed to be reminded of this matter, “Or do you not know that as many of us as were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into His death?” (Rm 6:3). One is new only when the old is dead. And since one is new this side of the water, then he was dead in the bondage of sin before the experience of going down into much water with Christ Jesus.

B. New creatures are set free by a resurrection from death:

Before one’s resurrection with Christ from the waters of baptism, he was “dead in trespasses and sins” (Ep 2:1). One is as the Ephesians who were dead in trespasses and sins when they “walked according to the ways of this world” (Ep 2:2). In order for the old man to die in order to give birth to the new, there must be a burial. In Romans 6 Paul makes Christ’s resurrection a pledge of God for the resurrection to come. If we have been “united together in the likeness of His death, we will also be in the likeness of His resurrection” (Rm 6:5). If we do not participate in the first resurrection from the grave of water, then we certainly cannot participate in the second resurrection from the grave of death when Jesus comes again.

The first resurrection from the grave of water is the guarantee that one will not experience the second death in being resurrected to eternal destruction (Jn 5:28,29). The Spirit revealed, “Blessed and holy is he who has part in the first resurrection. Over these the second death has no power” (Rv 20:6). Those who have experienced the first resurrection from the waters of baptism are blessed. They are holy before God. They are holy because of what God does at the point of the first resurrection. Ananias reminded a prospective candidate who knew that he needed to become a new creature, “And now why are you waiting? Arise and be baptized and wash away your sins, calling on the name of the Lord” (At 22:16).

Some statements in the New Testament are so simple that it is with great difficulty that some are able to understand them. The problem is not in the simplicity of the statements, but in the tremendous doctrinal prejudice by which simple statements of teaching are approached. We must never underestimate our desire to read into simple statements previous erroneous beliefs.

The washing away of sin in baptism is one of those simple statements. Until one is baptized, he is not made holy by the washing away of sins through faith. We cannot be blessed and holy if we have not experienced a resurrection with Jesus from death. And we cannot be holy unless we wash away our sins. Acts 22:16 is a simple statement that sins are washed away at the time of one’s baptism into Christ. The life of being a new creation, therefore, starts when our sins have been washed away. And our sins are washed away at the time we join with Jesus in the burial of baptism. Only then is Jesus able to make one a new creature.

C. New creatures are set free from death through sin.

Once one is resurrected from the grave of much water, he is free from sin, but not free from sinning. What moves one to the cross and grave with Jesus is one’s remorse over his sins. Those who mourn over their sins realize that they have lived a life of rebellion against God. They are thus ridden with guilt, but realize that they cannot atone for their rebellion by meritorious works. The truly repentant, therefore, is ridden with guilt until he finds a solution to be reconciled again to his Creator. It is at this point of repentance, therefore, that the repentant seeks a solution for the guilt of his sin. This explains what Peter meant in the following statement:

The like figure whereunto even baptism does also now save us—not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the appeal of a good conscience to God—through the resurrection of Jesus Christ (1 Pt 3:21).

One cannot appeal to God for a good conscience unless he does what God requires one to do in order to be cleansed of sin. In other words, we will never have a good conscience before God unless we change our behavior to comply with God’s instructions on how we are to be made right before Him.

Some would declare their own salvation before God through a “sinner’s prayer,” or a statement of accepting Jesus into one’s heart. But we must remember that one repentantly comes to God because he has realized that he was living contrary to the will of God. He was living a life of establishing his own rules. But when one comes to God in repentance, he must seek and obey God’s rules. One cannot continue to establish his own rules in reference to the washing away of sins, and then feel that he is in compliance with the will of God. It is God who makes the rules.

Becoming the new creature in Christ demands that we find our way to this newness of life according to the road map of God, not according to our own inventions. Repentance is all about His way, not our way. Following His way to our own salvation means that we cannot make any detours from God’s road map in order to go back to our old way of rebellion. Regardless of how many people have taken the detour of self-declared salvation, we must remember that the road is in a traffic jam with those who do not “the will of My Father who is in heaven” (See Mt 7:15-23).

D. New creatures are set free from self.

The manner of burial with Jesus in water is symbolic of our total sacrifice of self to follow Jesus. Discipleship involves following Jesus. It involves following Jesus to the cross, to the grave, and then to the resurrection. Jesus led the way to our discipleship by selflessly going to the cross for us. He looks from the cross and says, “Follow Me.”

From the time of His death on the cross, to the time of His resurrection, His body was totally in the hands of those who took His body from the cross, prepared it for burial, and then placed it in a tomb. He was totally selfless from the time He spoke the words from the cross, “It is finished,” to the time He walked out of the tomb after His resurrection. If we would manifest our discipleship of Him, then we must follow Him by relinquishing ourselves to others in the same manner.

Everyone who would be a disciple of Jesus must relinquish himself to the hands of another for burial. Paul expressed this in the verb tense of Romans 6:4. He wrote, “Therefore, we are buried with Him ....” The verb is passive, meaning that the subject is being acted upon.

The repentant sinner relinquishes his body to the one who buries him in the water. It is a behavior of selflessness. As Jesus allowed His body to be placed in the hands of those who buried Him in a tomb, so the repentant sinner who wishes to follow Jesus must do the same in order to be buried in the waters of baptism. And herein is the promise if one allows himself to be so “handled” for burial: “For if we have been united together in the likeness of His death, we will also be in the likeness of His resurrection” (Rm 6:5). When we allow ourselves to be buried with Jesus, we are following Jesus’ example in that He allowed others to bury Him in a tomb.

Jesus continued His selflessness even in His resurrection. It was the Father who raised Jesus from the dead (Ep 1:20). It is no different with the one who is buried with Jesus. While in the tomb of water, one must, as Jesus, relinquish himself to the one who would raise him from the grave of water. We must entrust ourselves to one who would not leave us in the tomb of water, but would raise our body from the grave. As Jesus trusted in the Father not to leave His body in the tomb, so we must do likewise.

New creatures are new because they have relinquished themselves to God (faith) to take care of their sin problem. They have also trusted in another who lowers their bodies into a tomb of water, and then, brings them forth from the grave. Being a new creature is selflessness from the very beginning of one’s journey with Jesus at the time of baptism. The new creature has left his self on a cross with Jesus. It was for this reason that Paul could later write,

I have been crucified with Christ. And it is no longer I who live, but Christ lives in me. And the life that I now live in the flesh I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me (Gl 2:20).

Baptism could never be a work of law. The emblematic union by which one joins with Christ in baptism could never be degraded to a simple performance of law in order to obligate God to produce salvation because we legally obeyed law. It is for this reason that baptism is not for infants or children. It is for those who understand that they are relinquishing their will to God’s will. The spiritual union by which one joins the Son of God in baptism is not something that is comprehended by babies. New creatures know who they are because they know what they have done in joining with Jesus at the cross, the tomb, and the experience of the resurrection. Only those who through faith would voluntarily relinquish their bodies to another for burial, and to God for life, are candidates for burial with Jesus.

E. New creatures are set free from doubt in order to walk by faith.

2 Corinthians 5:1-10 is about faith in God to clothe us with a new habitation for eternal dwelling. When one comes forth from the tomb of water, his resurrection is emblematic of a physical resurrection that will take place when Jesus comes again (See 1 Th 4:13-18). One goes down into the tomb of water because of faith in God who will resurrect him in the future in order to inhabit a new body. It is in this context that Paul wrote the statement, “For we walk by faith, not by sight” (2 Co 5:7). We walk by faith in God that He will provide a new habitation for us.

The beginning of faith is manifested when one seeks to be born again through the waters of baptism. It is then by faith that one walks with Jesus in life and in hope of the resurrection that is to come. Our faith is in what John promised: “... it has not yet been revealed what we will be. But we know that when He [Jesus] appears, we will be like Him ...” (1 Jn 3:2). New creatures who dwell in an earthly body will eventually be raised to indwell a body like Jesus.

Walking by faith means turning from those things about which we are doubtful concerning our future. When our faith leads us to the cross and grave with Jesus, it carries us on in hope of a bodily resurrection that is yet to come. If one allows himself to be distracted from that which is to come by focusing on that which is of this world, then he will not participate in the resurrection to life that will happen when Jesus comes again. Our walk by faith, therefore, must be pure of anything that would distract us from total faith in the promises of God.

The walk of the new creature is one of faith. And since our walk is by faith, we must protect our faith from those things that are of this world. Therefore, “if you then were raised with Christ, seek those things that are above ...” (Cl 3:1). “Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth” (Cl 3:2). New creatures are heavenly minded, though they are presently earthly bound. Those who walk according to the mind of Christ, walk according to the gospel that was revealed to the world through Jesus. And because the Christian lives in gratitude of the gospel of Jesus, his or her mind is focused on those things that are above. Gospel-driven disciples are heavenly minded, and thus, they are seeking those things that are above. They are seeking heavenly things simply because He who was originally in heaven was incarnate in the flesh of man in order to seek and save us.

Chapter 2

NEW COVENANT

How could we ever conceive of the concept that an individual human being could have a personal covenant relationship with the God of the universe? It is something that is simply incomprehensible in its fullest details. But such we have as new creatures in Christ.

In a covenant relationship with God, there are conditions and blessings. The blessings include what God promises if we are faithful to the conditions of the covenant. The conditions (law) are those stipulations that must be kept in order to enjoy the blessings. Our example of those who did not keep the conditions is the history of Israel. In fact, Paul admonished that “these things [of Israel’s history] happened to them as an example, and they were written for our admonition ...” (1 Co 10:11). Israel’s rebellion against the conditions of their covenant with God were written in order that we be admonished not to follow after their example of rebellion.

The covenant that God made with Israel at Mount Sinai was never meant to be a covenant without end. The covenant was referred to as a “perpetual covenant.” But read carefully the condition for the perpetuity of the covenant.

Therefore, the children of Israel will keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations as a perpetual covenant (Ex 31:16; see Lv 3:17).

Israel’s keeping of the Sabbath was their sign to the world that they were in a special national covenant relationship with God, and their keeping of the Sabbath was one of the conditions for their keeping of the covenant (Gn 17:11). “Perpetual” meant that the covenant would last until its intended end. This end would be in Christ. The generations of Israel ended in Christ, where “there is neither Jew nor Greek ...” (Gl 3:28). Therefore, Israel had to keep the Sabbath until God ended the covenant.

When a Jew was baptized into Christ, the Sabbath covenant came to an end for him. This is what Paul meant when he wrote that one was dead to the Sinai law and covenant by the body of Christ (See Rm 7:1-4). The generations of Israel as a whole ended when the first announcement was made that one could be baptized into Christ and into a new covenant relationship with God. This announcement was first made in A.D. 30 on the day of Pentecost (At 2:38). The Sinai law and covenant were subsequently nailed to the cross (Ep 2:15,16; Cl 2:14), and the offer of the new covenant was made to all men with the first announcement of the gospel on the day of Pentecost in Jerusalem in A.D. 30.

Israel would last until their generations ceased, which they did in A.D. 70 with the destruction of Jerusalem. It was then that all the genealogical records of Israel were destroyed in the destruction of the temple. Within a generation or two after the destruction of Jerusalem, no Jew could prove in writing that he was a Jew. And since the generations were intended by God to end in A.D. 70, then the Sinai covenant came to a close. It came to a close with all Jews who were baptized into Christ. Because of the cross, all men are now dead to the Sinai law and covenant (Rm 7:1-4).

After the Pentecost of A.D. 30, when a Jew came forth from the waters of baptism, his newness was more than being washed of all sin. His newness was also in the fact that he was in a new covenant relationship with God, for the old Sinai covenant had passed away.

A. Prophecy of a new covenant:

The story of the transition from the old covenant to the new was first prophesied by Jeremiah at the end of national Israel in the land of Palestine. As the Babylonian Empire came down on Jerusalem in 586 B.C. to terminate Israel’s ownership of their homeland, Jeremiah prophesied of a new covenant that was coming. The Jews to whom he made the prophecy were certainly discouraged by the termination of their right to the land of Palestine. God wanted the Jews to know that eventually they must move on from the past into the future. Through Jeremiah, therefore, God encouraged Israel with something new that was in their future:

*“Behold, the days are coming,” says the Lord, “that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah, not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt, which covenant they broke, although I was a husband to them,” says the Lord. “But this will be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days,” says the Lord, “I will put My law in their inward parts and write it in their hearts. And I will be their God and they will be My people. And they will no longer teach every man

this neighbor and every man his brother, saying, ‘Know the Lord,’ for they will all know Me, from the least of them to the greatest of them,” says the Lord. “For I will forgive their iniquity and I will remember their sin no more” (Jr 31:31-34).

It is significant to notice some very important points that distinguish the covenant that God made with Israel as a nation and the new covenant that all new creatures now have with God in Christ.

1. Israel and Judah: Since Jeremiah was speaking to the divided kingdom of Israel, which would return 536 B.C. as a united remnant of all Israel after the Babylonian captivity, the promise was made in a way that his audience would understand that the new covenant would apply to all Israel. What was not revealed in the prophecy was that the new covenant would not only be offered to the remnant of Israel as a whole, but to all mankind. This fact would be understood only when the new covenant was offered to everyone who obeyed the gospel.

2. A new and different covenant: Israel was a nation that was in a national covenant relationship with God. Covenants between either individuals or nations are always initiated by God. In the case of the covenant that Israel had with God, it was initiated by God when they as a nation of people, came out of Egyptian captivity. But a different covenant was coming that would not be a national covenant. It would be a covenant that God would establish with individuals who would volunteer to come into a covenant relationship with Him. The new covenant would have no reference to nationality since its ratification in one’s life would be voluntarily and individually accepted.

3. Prior knowledge of law before the establishment of a covenant relationship: When Israel was at the foot of Mount Sinai after they came out of Egyptian captivity, they knew nothing of the national covenant that God would establish with them. Neither did they have any knowledge of the law of the covenant. After they were informed concerning the covenant through Moses, they then had to be taught the law of the covenant which God revealed to them through Moses.

This would not be the case with the new covenant. Before one would come into a covenant relationship with God in the future, he would already know the law of the covenant because he would be taught the law before the covenant was individually established with him. He would not have to be taught to know the conditions (law) of the covenant as the Jewish children of the Sinai covenant had to be taught the law of God as they grew up in Israel.

Jeremiah prepared the Jews of the future to be ready for a change in how one would live in a covenant relationship with God. The new covenant would be received on a voluntary basis. The beginning of the fulfillment of Jeremiah 31:31-34 was first by Jesus with the statement, “It is written in the prophets, ‘And they will all be taught of God.’ Therefore, everyone who has heard and has learned from the Father comes to Me” (Jn 6:45).

Those who would be taught of the new covenant, would come to Jesus in order to establish voluntarily a personal covenant relationship with the Father. Individuals would first be taught, and then they would come into Christ.

At the foot of Mount Sinai, individual Israelites had no choice but to come into a covenant relationship with God, for the covenant was established with the nation. The individuals of the nation had to come into a covenant relationship with God because of God’s former promise to Abraham, that from his seed a great nation would come (See Gn 12:1-4). But with the new covenant, it would be different. Those who would come into a new covenant relationship with God would do so individually and on a voluntary basis.

B. Establishment of a new covenant:

When Jesus stood before His disciples on the night of His betrayal, and at the end of His earthly mission, all of the disciples surely thought of the prophecy of Jeremiah 31:31-34 when Jesus said, “This cup is the new covenant in My blood which is poured out for you” (Lk 22:20; 1 Co 11:25). Jesus spoke of a new covenant, and thus the Sinai covenant that God had made with Israel was to become old with the establishment of the new. New creatures are now “servants of the new covenant” (2 Co 3:6). And if we are servants of the new covenant, then we are to be obedient to the new conditions of this new covenant, not the conditions of the old covenant, one of those conditions being the Sabbath.

During His ministry, Jesus was leading the people to the new covenant by teaching the people the way of life of the new covenant. After His ascension, His disciples continued teaching. It would be the teaching that Jesus is the Christ and Son of God who would draw men unto Himself. Upon a voluntary basis, those who believed in Jesus would individually come into a covenant relationship with God. The obedient would already know the conditions of the covenant before they signed their agreement with God at the time they obeyed the gospel. Therefore, when one became a new creature through the waters of baptism, he already knew the conditions of the covenant. The obedient now walk in newness of life because they are walking in a new covenant relationship with God in Christ.

Paul makes a “progressive statement” in Romans 6:4. We are “buried with Him through baptism into death, that just as Christ was raised up from the dead through the glory of the Father, even so we also might walk in newness of life.” One is baptized to wash away sins (At 22:16). One is baptized for remission of sins (At 2:38). But these are onetime responses and blessings on the part of the believer at the time he is buried with Christ in baptism. But when one comes forth from the grave of water, Paul states that we “walk in newness of life.” “Walk” is an ongoing process. Though remission of all past sins in baptism is a one-time event, walk is continuous. Therefore, “walk in newness of life” after one is resurrected from the waters of baptism includes more than having one’s sins washed away at the time one is baptized.

We must remember what Jesus said on the night of His betrayal: “This cup is the new covenant in My blood which is poured out for you” (Lk 22:20). Now consider the walk about which John wrote in 1 John 1:7: “But if we walk in the light ... the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanses us from all sin.” There is certainly a cleansing of past sins at the time one is buried with Christ (At 2:38; 22:16). This cleansing is by the blood of Christ. But when one comes into a new covenant relationship with God, there is continual blood cleansing that follows one as he walks in the light (1 Jn 1:7). One is baptized to become a new creature, but he is kept new by the blood of the covenant, into which covenant relationship one has been baptized. It is really a beautiful thing.

In order to reassure the Hebrew Christians that they were under a better covenant, the Hebrew writer quoted Jeremiah 31:31-34 in the context of the leading statement: “For if that first covenant had been faultless, then no place would have been sought for the second” (Hb

8:7). It was not that the first covenant was flawed. The Hebrew writer explained, “For finding fault with them ...” (Hb 8:8). The problem was with those with whom the covenant was made. A holy covenant was established with Israel, but the people were at fault because they had not volunteered to receive the covenant, and thus, they did not consider obedience as serious as they should have.

With the new covenant, however, those who volunteer to walk in the light with Jesus, are continually cleansed by His blood. New creatures stay new under the new covenant because of the blood of Jesus, not because they live faultless lives. Therefore, the Jewish Christians to whom the Hebrew writer addressed his message could rejoice in the concluding statement: “In that He says, ‘A new covenant,’ He has made the first obsolete” (Hb 8:13).

It was impossible for the blood of animals under the old covenant to take away sins (Hb 10:1-4). The effectiveness of being cleansed by blood all changed with the coming of the new covenant. We have come “to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaks better things than the blood of Abel” (Hb 12:24). The old covenant was inaugurated with the sprinkling of the blood of animals (Ex 24). But the new was inaugurated with the blood of the Son of God. It was by “His own blood He entered once for all into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption” for all who would be drawn to Him by the appeal of the cross (Hb 9:12). New creatures were cleaned up by the blood of Jesus at the time of their obedience to the gospel. They are continually washed up by the blood of Jesus as they walk in newness of life in the light. It was for this reason that the Jews could not be identified as new creatures in reference to the offering of the blood of animal sacrifices. Their cleansing by the blood of Jesus happened only when Jesus died on the cross (See Rm 3:25).

Chapter 3

NEW ATTITUDES

New creatures have a positive mental attitude about life. They stand out as beaming lights in a crowd. It is obvious why Peter stated that they must be ready to give an answer to everyone who asks them concerning their hope (1 Pt 3:15). People are going to ask concerning their hope because of their positive attitudes about life. They are just different, but different in a good way.

Ever wonder how Paul and Silas captured the imagination of all the other prisoners while they were sitting in a Philippian jail, possibly with a sentence of death hanging over them? In a Roman prison one was not sentenced to five, or ten or twenty years in jail. He was held in a holding cell (jail) until it was determined whether his offense demanded death or life. If it were an offense that did not demand death, then he was set free. And there in jail Paul and Silas were singing their hearts out to God (At 16:25). So you can imagine what was going through the minds of the other prisoners who thought that they might be sentenced to death. We could assume that there was a great deal of 1 Peter 3:15 inquiries going on that Luke did not record in Acts 16.

It is simply the nature of new creatures in Christ to “rejoice in the Lord always ...” (Ph 4:4). And Paul wrote that statement while in prison again, a prison in Rome itself. When we understand that we are more than conquerors through Christ (Rm 8:37), and that we can do all things through Christ (Ph 4:13), then we as new creatures cannot help ourselves but to have a positive mental attitude.

There are two emotional attitudes that are inseparable in reference to what one might consider world-oriented thinking. Both mental attitudes steal the joy from the life of a new creature. These would be the spiritual thieves of depression (or, despair) and fear. Depression is usually the result of our fears in reference to our situation in life, and despair is our presupposition that our present situation will get worse. The beauty of the gospel (good news) is that the new creature is such because of the focus of his attention. His focus is on heavenly things that are above. This focus, therefore, is the cure for both depression and despair.

When Paul reminded the Corinthians of the gospel that they had received and obeyed, he also reminded them of the emotional security that their obedience to the gospel produced. He said they received the gospel “... in which you stand ...” (1 Co 15:1). The word “stand” is a metaphor that refers to our emotional state of being because we have established a good conscience toward God in our obedience to the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus. We stand on the firm foundation that Jesus did die for us, that He was truly raised, and that He is coming again to take us home. The gospel is the emotional foundation upon which the new creature is mentally secure. We can be so mentally secure that we can sing in prison when unjustly accused.

Colossians 3:1 is the continuing commentary of the metaphor “stand.” “If you then were raised [from the waters of baptism] with Christ, seek those things that are above ....” When one stands on the security of his obedience to the gospel, then his whole state of thinking is refocused. Instead of focusing on one’s self, which thinking eventually leads to depression and fear, one’s mind is directed toward what God did for him through the cross. It is the difference between trusting in one’s self for salvation, and trusting in the grace of the gospel.

A. Obedience sets us free.

New creatures are set free from despair through their obedience of the gospel. As new creatures, we should always be those of the morning. We may go to bed at night with a day of worry on our minds, but when we awaken in the freshness of the morning, it is a new day and our mental attitude is revived. Instead of a momentary feeling of a refreshed mental attitude, Christians should carry their morning attitudes throughout the day. The new creature awakens with the mental attitude, “This is the day that the Lord has made, we will rejoice and be glad in it” (Ps 118:24). We can rejoice and be glad in every day because we are in the grace of God.

We must never forget that Christianity is a faith of joy. When Paul wrote the following statement, he was expressing the mental state of mind of the Christian: “Rejoice in the Lord always. And again, I say, rejoice!” (Ph 4:4). This is the psychology of Christianity. Christians have a faith of joy because they know that there is a God who is working for their cause, and in answer to their prayers (See Rm 8:28). Jesus encouraged His disciples, “Ask and you will receive so that your joy may be full” (Jn 16:24). Christians are “strengthened with all power according to His glorious power, for all patience and longsuffering with joy” (Cl 1:11).

Happiness is the definition of Christianity because of the nature of the faith that secures the emotional being of the Christian. Happiness happens when we maintain a distant relationship with the temporary things of this world by walking in a close relationship with God. Paul explained, “... I have learned in whatever state I am to be content” (Ph 4:11). He was more specific with the statement, “If we have food and clothing, with these let us be content” (1 Tm 6:8). So the Spirit’s encouragement would be that we “... be content with such things as” we have (Hb 13:5). It is as someone once said, “Happiness is not having what you want, but wanting what you have.”

B. Faith conquers fear.

New creatures conquer fear with faith. It is interesting how many times in the New Testament the phrase “do not fear” is used. “... do not fear those who kill the body ...” (Mt 10:28). “Do not fear. You are more valuable than many sparrows” (Mt 10:31). “Do not fear, Zacharias ...” (Lk 1:13). “Do not fear, Mary ...” (Lk 1:30). “Do not fear, for behold, I bring you good tidings ...” (Lk 2:10). “Do not fear. From now on you will catch men” (Lk 5:10). “Do not fear. Only believe ...” (Lk 8:50). “Do not fear, Paul” (At 27:24). The last words from Jesus were, “Do not fear. I am the first and the last” (Rv 1:17). We get the point.

There was good advice in a pamphlet entitled Attitudes Unlimited that was distributed a half-century ago to encourage people who were apprehensive about their future:

Count your blessings, not your troubles. Live with your joys, not your fears. Cultivate the courage to dare. Dare to make that first decision toward banishing fear ... all fears. Dare to tackle that job you were afraid to handle. Dare to think creatively. Dare to organize your thoughts. Dare to become completely obsessed with a worthwhile objective. Dare to develop mastery over your emotions.

Not bad advice. This is the “newness of life” about which Paul wrote when one comes forth from the waters of baptism. This is focussing one’s mind on those things that are above. This is the impetus that generates the joy of the Christian life. This is the new creation that God produces through one’s obedience to the gospel. It cannot get any better on earth than this. Therefore, when in difficult times, we should simply do what someone advised, “When you get to the end of your rope, tie a knot in it and hang on.”

The best is always yet to be for the disciple of Jesus. We must keep in mind what Laine said, “The shadow falling across your path may be that of your ship coming in.” Remember what one godly king wrote, “Yes, though

I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil” (Ps 23:4).

Some curse themselves with “spiritual acrophobia.” Acrophobia is the fear of heights. God said to Moses in reference to what He had done for Israel in delivering them out of captivity, “I bore you on eagles’ wings and brought you to Myself” (Ex 19:4). And such God did for us when we were raised and cleansed through the waters of baptism. We have been raised into heavenly places on eagles’ wings. We are brought into a realm wherein we reign with Christ in heavenly places (Rm 5:17). And thus, we must not be afraid of the spiritual heights to which God will take us in our lives. We must not fear to fly as high as possible because we are afraid of spiritual heights.

There will be times when we will fall. But we must remember that we are in the care of God who will lift us up every time. Therefore, “humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and He will lift you up” (Js 4:10). He will lift us up on eagles’ wings in order that we reach the joy of heavenly heights. Since we have been raised with Him from the tomb of water, we will focus our minds on those things that are above, which means that we must allow God to take us into His presence as saints on eagles’ wings. Therefore, we will walk by faith in Jesus, for when He comes, He will take our resurrected and changed bodies up to meet Him in the air (1 Th 4:13-18). If we have any acrophobia in our thinking, it would probably be best to deal with it before His coming.

Chapter 4

NEW SAINTS

New creatures are living saints. Some religious groups reserve sainthood for the departed. But sainthood is a pre-death reality in the eyes of God. We find comfort in the words of the Holy Spirit that were directed to one of the most dysfunctional groups of disciples in the first century: “.. to the church of God that is at Corinth, to those who are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints ...” (1 Co 1:2).

Anyone who has read the letter to the Corinthians might be puzzled concerning this statement. There were the arrogant, the selfish, the immoral, and the spiritually competitive among these disciples. It could only be by grace that the Holy Spirit would consider them saints of God. But such they were, and so are we with all our spiritual dysfunctions. Nevertheless, we are the saints of God. Glory hallelujah!

Sinners are called by God “unto His kingdom and glory” (1 Th 2:12). “For God has not called us to impurity, but in holiness” (1 Th 4:7). We have been called through the gospel (2 Th 2:14). And by our obedience to the gospel, we have been washed in the blood of Jesus (At 22:16). The newness of life in which the Christian walks after baptism is a saintly walk as a new creature. We must conclude, therefore, that sainthood is a work of God, not man.

In our efforts to be perfectly obedient to God’s law, we still sin (Rm 3:23). And since we cannot atone for our own sin through good works, (Rm 3:20; Gl 2:16), then we would be hopelessly impure in sin if it were not for the grace of God. But thanks be to God that the cleansing atonement of Jesus came into the world through the cross. We are now washed in the blood of the Lamb (Rv 1:5). And for this reason, we are not saints before God by our own declaration, or even some declaration of the church. It is God who has declared us to be saints as He sees each of us through the blood of His Son.

Since saints exist as such in the eyes of God, then it is His divine declaration of our sainthood that motivates our continued walk with Jesus (Compare 1 Jn 1:7). We define the new creation by understanding the walk of a saint. Our acrostic for S A I N T would be: Sanctification, Activation, Imitation, Nobility, Thanksgiving.

A. Sanctification:

The word “sanctify” means to be set apart. When someone was sanctified in the Old Testament, he was set apart for a specific function and made holy to the Lord. And such were the Christians in Corinth. They were set apart from the world through their obedience to the gospel. Some of them were previously thieves, covetous, drunkards, revilers, extortioners, and a host of other sinful characters who were not presentable to God (See 1 Co 6:9,10). But in reference to their former life-style in sin, Paul wrote, “Now such were some of you. But you were washed. But you were sanctified...” (1 Co 6:11). They were washed in the new birth of the waters of baptism in order to be new creations (At 22:16). In order to be a sanctified saint, therefore, one must be washed in the blood of Jesus. And since one is baptized to wash away sins, then he becomes a saint by the declaration of God at the time He remits our sins (At 2:38).

When we consider the former life of Saul as a persecutor of the family of God, we can understand that with urgency Ananias said to him, “And now why are you waiting? Arise and be baptized and wash away your sins...” (At 22:16). There are no saints in sin. There are saints who sin, but there are no saints living in the rebellion of sin. When one’s sins are washed away in obedience to the gospel, he is declared by God to be a new creature. Being a new creature and a saint are synonymous. And since one is born of the water, and thus washed in the blood of Jesus, there are no saints outside the cleansing blood of Jesus (1 Jn 1:7).

The gospel record of John was written to produce belief in Jesus (Jn 20:30,31). It was not written to reveal all the information that was necessary that one do in order to become a new creature. For example, the word “repent” is not in the book of John. John’s purpose for writing was the same purpose for which Paul made the statement of Acts 16:31: “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and you and your household will be saved.”

Belief in Jesus is the beginning of one’s journey to sainthood. Both John and Paul were addressing idolatrous unbelievers, and thus, the initial message to such people was belief in Jesus. The Philippian jailor subsequently responded to his belief in Jesus: “And immediately he was baptized, he and all his household” (At 16:33).

Paul had spoken the “word of the Lord” to the household of the jailor. In the “word of the Lord,” there was the teaching of John concerning the new birth. Jesus had said, and John recorded, that one had to be born anew in order to enter the kingdom (Jn 3:5,6). Such was John’s reference to being born of the water and spirit in order to be a new creature, and thus declared by God to be a saint by His “washing away” of our sins. This is what the Philippian jailor understood he had to do.

When one is obedient to this truth of the gospel, he is sanctified by the blood of Jesus. “Sanctify them by Your truth,” Jesus prayed to the Father, “Your word is truth” (Jn 17:17). Jesus set Himself apart from heaven in order to sanctify those who would accept the truth of the cross and His resurrection. “And for their sakes I sanctify Myself [from heaven] so that they also might be sanctified through the truth” (Jn 17:19). In one statement, Peter connected all that John wrote, and what Jesus said in reference to sanctification by one’s obedience to the truth of the gospel:

Seeing you have purified your souls in obeying the truth in sincere love of the brethren .... having been born again, not by perishable seed, but imperishable, by the word of God that lives and abides (1 Pt 1:22,23; see Gl 2:5,14; Cl 1:5).

One must not misunderstand Peter’s statement, “purified your souls in obeying the truth.” This cannot be a reference to a catechism of teaching. Our problem is that we sin against teaching (law). Law is our problem. “There is none righteous [according to law], no, not one” (Rm 3:9:10). All have sinned against the teaching (law) of God (Rm 3:23). Therefore, there can be no purifying of our souls by perfect obedience to law (Rm 3:20; Gl 2:16).

The purification of our souls can only be realized when we are obedient to the truth of the gospel. And the truth of the gospel is that Jesus died for our sins. He was buried, and on the third day raised from the dead. This is the truth of the gospel. Therefore, in being buried with Him in the waters of baptism, one obeys the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus (Rm 6:3-6). Saints, therefore, have been sanctified by their obedience to the truth of the gospel, which truth is the death of Jesus for our sins and His resurrection for our hope.

Saints are those who have followed the word of God that directs one on how to become a sanctified saint. Saints have been born again because of the truth that the word of God reveals concerning the gospel and obedience to the gospel. And without obedience to the truth of the gospel, one has only eternal doom in his future (See 2 Th 1:6-9).

B. Activation:

Someone once said, “Service is the rent we pay for the space we occupy on earth.” In reference to discipleship as a new creature in Christ, we would say that “service is response we give for the grace by which we are saved.” If we would remain in the “space of grace,” then we must serve because of grace. Paul reminded the Ephesian disciples, “For by grace you are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God” (Ep 2:8). But in the same context two verses later, he said, “For we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works ...” (Ep 2:10). So how can the two statements be reconciled?

The answer is that it is the gift of grace that stirs the Christian into action. It is not that any meritorious actions bring us into the realm of God’s grace. It is in the realm of His grace that we work out our “own salvation with fear and trembling” (Ph 2:12). And since it is God’s grace that activates the saint into action, it is as Paul reminded the Philippians, “... for it is God who works in you both to will and to work for His good pleasure” (Ph 2:13). When we work in response to grace, then it is God working in us through our appreciation of His grace. Paul explained this connection between grace and action by referring to his own life. “And His grace toward me was not in vain, but I labored more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God that was with me” (1 Co 15:10). It is grace that moves the saint into service. It is grace that causes thanksgiving (2 Co 4:15). Therefore, our workmanship in Christ is in thanksgiving for what we have as a new creature.

Sometimes it is like the young man who went to a local company looking for work. The prospective employer said, “We don’t have enough work to keep another person busy.” The prospective young employee replied, “But you must have. You don’t realize how little work I can do.” Such folks should not apply at the local church of God’s saints.

Jesus gave Himself for His body in order that He might “purify for Himself a special people who are zealous for good works” (Ti 2:14). As every leader of the church would agree, the church is often full of willing people. There are those who are willing to work out of thanksgiving for their salvation. But then, there are those who are willing to let others do the work for them.

The nature of the thankful new creature is explained by Paul in the following words:

And let us not become weary in doing good, for in due time we will reap if we do not give up. Therefore, as we have opportunity, let us do good to all men, especially to those who are of the household of the faith (Gl 6:9,10).

New creatures are “fervent in spirit” (Rm 12:11). It is their nature to work because of their thanksgiving for what they have. In reference to working in order to support oneself, the Spirit admonished some of the disciples in the church of Thessalonica, “... if anyone is not willing to work, neither let him eat” (2 Th 3:10). There is a principle in this statement. It is the principle of work. However, it is sometimes true that a brother’s work is never done, especially since some have to also do the work of the lazy brothers. It is like having a government job in some places in Africa. One has a government job, not to work, but to receive a paycheck. (More later.)

C. Imitation:

New creatures imitate the One after whom they call themselves a disciple. The Holy Spirit explained, “For to this you were called, because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example that you should follow in His steps” (1 Pt 2:21). It is our belief that Jesus is the Son of God that motivates us to follow in His steps. The less we are in step with His example, the less we appreciate who He is and what He will do for us in eternity (Compare 2 Th 1:6-9).

Jesus once stood before His disciples with a dirty towel in His hands. That towel was marred with the filth He had just washed from the disciples’ feet. The disciples had been walking the dirty streets of Jerusalem in the mire of animal manure during the Passover feast. We can only imagine that their feet were not a pretty picture during the occasion when Jesus ...

... rose from supper and laid aside His garments. And He took a towel and girded Himself. After that, He poured water into a basin and began to wash the disciples’ feet, and to wipe them with a towel with which He was girded (Jn 13:4,5).

After the disciples recovered from the shock of what Jesus did, Jesus said to them, “If I then, the Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another’s feet” (Jn 13:14).

Puzzled and perplexed, we are sure the disciples were looking at one another with expressions that communicated their lack of understanding of what just transpired. They knew the custom of washing feet. As Jews, they had washed thousands of feet. But on this occasion, the One they confessed to be the Son of God, the Creator of all mankind, was on His knees washing the feet of those whom He had created. Gods, they surely reasoned, just did not do such things. Since there was debate among themselves on this very occasion as to who was the greatest (Lk 22:24), Jesus jolted their prideful assumptions for positions with the statement, “For I have given you an example that you should do as I have done to you” (Jn 13:15). We know they learned their lesson, for after Acts 2, they grabbed their towels and started looking for dirty feet.

If one thinks that he is too important among the disciples to wash manure from the feet of his brothers and sisters in Christ, then he is only pretending to be a disciple of Jesus. There are no true disciples of Jesus who have clean towels. If one’s towel smells like manure, then we assume he is following the example of the “God of the towel.”

Paul once made the statement concerning his sacrificial life, “I have become all things to all men so that I might by all means save some” (1 Co 9:22). This is exactly what Jesus did for us. “He made Himself of no reputation, taking the form of a bondservant and being made in the likeness of men ...” (Ph 2:7). In order to imitate His Master, Paul started with the things of this world. He wrote, “What things were gain to me, those things I have counted loss for Christ” (Ph 3:7). He explained to the Philippians the extreme to which he emulated in his life that which he saw in the life of Jesus: “... I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord ... I count them refuse [Gr., dung] so that I may gain Christ” (Ph 3:8).

We consider the sacrificial life of Paul because of what the Holy Spirit allowed him to say in 1 Corinthians 11:1. “Be imitators of me even as I also am of Christ.” If the life of Paul is an imitation of Christ, then we can better understand why the Holy Spirit allowed him to write thirteen letters of the New Testament, in much of which he explained his behavior after Jesus. One might excuse himself by saying that Jesus, as the Son of God, lived the perfect life to which we might aspire, but never reach. But when the Holy Spirit revealed the example of Paul as an imitation of the life of Jesus, then we are without excuse.

D. Nobility:

The small child of a father once asked her father, “Daddy, who was Hamlet?” The father responded, “Dorothy, you should know these things and not be so ignorant of great men as this. Bring me the Bible and we will read about Hamlet.”

There is one verse in the Bible wherein the Holy Spirit explains the character of nobility.

These were more noble-minded than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind and searched the Scriptures daily to see whether these things were so (At 17:11).

If we were to ask God who He considered to be noble people, His response would certainly be the example of the Bereans in the above statement.

Noble-minded people are those who seek information from their Creator. They are those who are fearful of becoming ignorant of the word of God, for in becoming ignorant of His word, they condemn themselves to destruction (See Hs 4:6). It is for this reason that they are diligent to present themselves “approved to God as a workman who does not need to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth” (2 Tm 2:15). In the eyes of God, there are no noble-minded people who are not students of the word of God.

Nobility in the sight of God is not something that is inherited from our parents. It is forged on the anvil of following in the steps of Jesus, and fine tuned after the word of God. When one walks in the steps of Jesus, his experience molds him into a shining new creature who is fit for the use of the Master. Life may be as a grindstone, but life for a saint polishes one’s character into being the right stuff for eternal dwelling. Experiencing life grinds the word of God into the behavior of the saints.

E. Thanksgiving:

It is interesting to note that when Paul described “perilous times,” he said that some would be “unthankful, unholy” (2 Tm 3:2). Some would become “unsaintly” and take for granted what they had in Christ. When Paul wrote of a time of “ungodliness and unrighteousness” in human history, he described the people of the time in the following words: “... even though they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful” (Rm 1:21).

The body of saints is defined by the members’ thankfulness to God for all that God has done for them through the cross. For this reason alone, Paul wrote that the Colossian disciples “be thankful” (Cl 3:15). And why be so thankful as a saint of God? Paul again explained: “I thank my God always for you for the grace” of God that was given you in Christ Jesus, that in everything you were enriched by Him ... (1 Co 1:4,5). Paul was thankful for what the grace of God caused among the Corinthian disciples. “For all things are for your sakes, so that the grace that is reaching many people may cause thanksgiving to abound to the glory of God” (2 Co 4:15).

When we see a group of saints, we are thankful for the grace of God, for it was through the grace of God that they were able to become saints. When we realize that the saints are “enriched in everything,” then we are “caused” to give thanksgiving to God (2 Co 9:11).

As new creatures in Christ, the saints are to be known for their spirit of thanksgiving, for without the grace of God we would not be saints. It would be only natural for Paul to remind the Philippian disciples that even their prayers should be coated with thanksgiving.

Do not be anxious for anything, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let you request be made known to God (Ph 4:6; see Cl 4:2; 1 Th 1:2; 2 Th 1:3; Pl 4).

In Christ, we abound with thanksgiving (Cl 2:7). Thanksgiving is simply the nature of those who understand all that God has done for them through Jesus. We should not only be a body of people who are truly thankful for all that God has done for us through Jesus, but also all He will do for us when Jesus comes again (See Rv 7:12). If one would ever ask why the saints should be thankful, one passage of Paul would give the answer:

Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord (Rm 7:24,25).

So we would conclude, “Thanks be to God for His indescribable gift” (2 Co 9:15).

Chapter 5

NEW LABORERS

Christians are recognized in the community as new creatures because they manifest in their lives the newness of their blood-washed souls. The personality of the one who comes forth from the world and walks in the cleansing blood of Jesus is changed. The demeanor of his behavior reveals an inner newness that cannot be concealed. This newness is expressed primarily in one’s behavior of service in reference to his relationship with others. It is a new life-style of loving care by which one has refocused his entire life off himself and on others. Because Jesus focused on him through the cross, the new creature emulates in his life that “mind of Christ” that was revealed in the selflessness of Jesus going to the cross (See Ph 2:5-11).

One of the most exciting statements made in the Scriptures was written by Nehemiah in reference to the efforts of the motivated Jewish returnees who had returned from captivity. In their efforts to complete the task of rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, Nehemiah wrote, “The people had a mind to work” (Ne 4:6). The Israelites had a mind to work in the absence of any knowledge of the cross. If they so worked in an absence of the cross, then what amazing things can happen through us because of our motivation by the cross. They had a mind to work to build something that was only physical because of their faith in what God had planned for their future. We have a mind to work to build something that is spiritual because of what God did for us in the past. And what God did for us in our past is a far greater motivation than what Israel had by faith in what God would do in their future. We believe in the reality of the cross, while they only believed in the shadow of that which was to come.

Those were exciting days in Israel. The walls of Jerusalem had laid in ruins for years. But with the motivation of Nehemiah, the people were stirred into action. The people had fallen into indifference as someone said of some idle Christians, “Too many people itch for what they want, but are unwilling to get out and scratch for it.” It took Nehemiah to remind the people of their responsibility to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. Once the people were stirred, they determined to get done that which they knew they should do.

The problem that faces most church leaders is the inactivity, or indifference, among those who have digressed to believing that “church attendance” is the standard by which one is to be considered faithful. People often develop the theology that church attendance is an evidence of faithfulness because they are doing nothing outside the “hour of worship.” Churches that are over concerned about the legalities of the ceremonies of assembled worship are often those churches that are composed of members who do little for Jesus outside the “hour of worship.” When our assembly is relegated to being our only “service” for Jesus, then we call it “worship service.” It is actually “attendance service” that is substituted for service that should take place outside our assemblies.

When people develop such a theology concerning their service to the Lord, they are like blisters. They show up only after others have done all the work. But if we are to be the type of new creatures that defines the nature of discipleship, then there must be more actions and less factions; more workers and less shirkers; more backers and less slackers; and according to Paul’s exhortation in Galatians 6:5, more burden bearers and less tale bearers. The simple fact is that if one is not a cross bearer here on earth, he will not be a crown bearer in heaven.

When Jesus challenged His disciples with a vision of the task that stood before them, He knew that they had to take ownership of the purpose for which He came into the world. So at the very beginning of His ministry, He challenged His disciples with an awesome vision: “Behold, I say to you, lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already for harvest” (Jn 4:35).

Harvest time is no time for idleness. It is a time to lay one’s hands to the effort of harvesting the grain before it falls to the ground. It is a time of urgency, such as was embedded in Jesus’ statement, “We must work the works of Him who sent Me while it is day. The night is coming when no one can work” (Jn 9:4). And since the time is short for every laborer in the vineyard, then there is no time for apprehension. “No one,” Jesus said, “after putting his hand to the plow and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God” (Lk 9:62).

We too often become diverted, detoured, delayed, and then just downright discouraged. Someone once calculated the average time that an individual would give to certain functions of his life if he were to live to be 70 years old. This would be a total life time of 613,200 total hours. Of this, 204,400 hours are usually spent in bed. 204,400 hours are used in one’s work or occupation. On the average, 76,650 hours are spent in eating. 76,650 hours are spent in dressing, bathing, shaving, etc. And for the normal person, 40,130 hours are used for recreation, relaxing, TV and video games. This would leave the average person with 10,920 hours to spend in worship if he were to attend a church assembly three times a week. If we departmentalize our lives according to these average figures, then God is in competition with a host of distractions. Actually, He is on the bottom of the list. It is of little wonder then, that we often hear the complaint of those who offer excuses not to become involved in the work of God, “I just don’t have the time.”

In this context, some statements of various verses of Scripture immediately come to mind. As disciples of Jesus, “we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works ...” (Ep 2:10). We are to be “a special people who are zealous for good works” (Ti 2:14). And in your zeal for Jesus, you are to “work out your own salvation ...” (Ph 2:12). All of us are to be “fervent in spirit” (Rm 12:11). And thus, we are to guard against becoming lukewarm, lest we be spewed out by our Lord (Rv 3:15,16).

Regardless of so many exhortations in Scripture concerning the zealous function of our lives to lift up our eyes and look on the fields of opportunity, we usually digress into being one of three types of bones. We are often “wish bones,” that is, we are always wishing that someone else would do the work. Or, we are “jaw bone” disciples, that is, we are all talk and no work. And sometimes we become “knuckle bone” disciples, that is, we knock what everyone else is doing in order to justify our own laziness. But what we should be is “back bone” disciples who bear down and get the job done.

The Holy Spirit used two Greek words in order to identify the working nature of those who have become new creations in Christ. When Paul said that he labored “abundantly” because of the grace of God that moved him into service, he used two words in his letters that give us a great deal of insight into what God expects of us as disciples of Jesus.

A. Agonizing for Jesus.

The Greek word agonizomai is the Greek word from which we derive the English word “agony.” It was the word used in the Greek games to explain the agony by which one competed in the games in order to win, or the strain one exerted to complete a race. The word was also used to refer to a woman who agonized in labor pains to give birth.

With such intensity, Paul labored. “For this purpose I also labor [agonizomai], striving according to His working that powerfully works in me” (Cl 1:29). If we searched through our Bibles in order to find one verse to explain the seriousness by which we should take our work for Jesus, this would be the passage. Discipleship to Paul was not a “Sunday morning worship service.” This unfortunate present-day definition of service is to our shame when we compare our lives to the apostle Paul. Can you imagine Paul boasting about what a great “worship service” he had over in Ephesus, or Corinth, or Philippi? It is interesting to consider the things in which we take so much pride, and those things for which we work so hard to perfect.

Paul once used competition in athletic games to define what a Christian should be in his dedication to the Lord: “And every man who strives [agonizomai] exercises self-control in all things” (1 Co 9:25). And then he made the application to his own life: “Therefore, I thus run, not with uncertainty. I thus box, not as one who beats the air” (1 Co 9:26). In order to live the life of “agonizomai,” Paul reprimanded the Corinthians by his own example,

But I discipline my body and bring it into subjection, lest by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be disqualified (1 Co 9:27).

Now we understand why the Holy Spirit gave the apostle Paul the right to say, “Be imitators of me even as I also am of Christ” (1 Co 11:1). If the Holy Spirit gave any one of us the right to make this statement in Scripture, would the church be better or worse if they followed our example?

We would certainly conclude that Paul strove in his life to manifest his tremendous appreciation for the One who cleansed him of the sin of his persecution of the family of God. With great agony in service, Paul labored in thanksgiving for the Lord. We believe that Jesus had this struggle in mind as He prepared His disciples during His ministry for those things that were to come. “Strive [agonizomai] to enter in through the narrow gate.” He exhorted them, “For many, I say to you, will seek to enter in and will not be able” (Lk 13:24). “Not-be-able” means that if one does not agonize to enter, he will never make it.

Some will just excuse themselves by saying that they are too old to enter the field of labor. But they need to remember that Michaelangelo did his best painting when he was past 80. Thomas Edison was still inventing even at 90 years of age. Tennyson wrote Crossing the Bar when he was 80. Verdi produced Falstaff when he was 80, and Ava Maria when he was 85. We are never to grow too old to labor in the vineyard. Anna was in her eighties, but was still in ministry, the ministry of prayer and fasting (Lk 2:36,37).

Harland Sanders was retired at the age of 65. He was penniless and on social security. But he had a chicken recipe. So he drove from restaurant to restaurant in America, trying to convince restaurants to use his secret recipe for frying chicken. It is told that he visited over a thousand restaurants before someone agreed to use his recipe. The recipe caught on, and after years of Kentucky Fried Chicken, Colonel Sanders is known worldwide for selling the staple meat of society in the developing world. Who has not visited KFC? One is never too old to “agonizomai” an idea into world-wide success.

The translation of agonizomai in 1 Timothy 6:12 is weak when the English word “fight” is used. Paul wrote, “Fight [agonizomai] the good fight of the faith.” What he meant was “agonize in the good agony of the faith.” As saints of God, we are certainly involved in an intense struggle against all evil as we agonize to harvest the white fields. The intensity of our warfare is with agony.

At the end of his life of struggle, Paul concluded, “I have fought the good fight” (2 Tm 4:7). What he meant in his use of the Greek word “agony” was that he struggled; he agonized in his conflict “against the rulers, against the powers, against the world forces of the darkness of this age, against spiritual hosts of wickedness in high places” (Ep 6:12). And if anyone would agonize in the spiritual war against the host of wickedness of this present world, then he must armor himself according to Paul’s instructions of Ephesians 6:13-17. The agony of the struggle against evil is so fierce that it takes spiritual armor to survive the conflict.

Every Christian soldier is needed if we are to conquer the forces of evil that prevail against the body of our Lord Jesus Christ. Every talent of every disciple must be mustered into action. Benjamin Franklin wrote in his Poor Richard’s Almanac some very meaningful words:

For the want of a nail, the shoe was lost,
For the want of a shoe, the horse was lost,
For the want of a horse, the rider was lost,
For the want of a rider, the battle was lost,
For the want of a battle, the kingdom was lost—
All for the want of a horse shoe nail.

Unfortunately, when discussing these matters with ourselves, all of us know of those who are simply “church attendees.” They are “missing nails” who are needed to win the battle against Satan. They do not engage the enemy daily in their labor in the kingdom. It is as someone questioned concerning the whereabouts of Jack at the local factory.

“Where’s Jack?”, one worker questioned, “Is he sick?”
“Nope, Jack isn’t working here any more.”

“Is that so,” replied a fellow worker. “I wonder if management has anyone in mind to fill the vacancy Jack left?”

“Nope,” was the reply, “When Jack left he didn’t leave any vacancy.”

We often wonder if a great number of the “attendees” at the “worship service” never showed up again, if there would be any vacancies left in the work of the Lord.

B. Wearing out for Jesus.

In 1 Corinthians 3:8 Paul used the Greek word topos that is translated “labor” in most translations: “Now he who plants and he who waters are one, and each will receive his own reward according to his own labor [topos].” The Greek word topos that is used in this statement means “to wear out in work.” According to Paul’s use of the Greek word topos, we are to be wearing ourselves out in the work of the Lord.

There is a reason why disciples of Jesus labor so hard for their Lord. The discipleship of the Thessalonians is a good example. Paul used the word topos when he called to remembrance the tremendous labor of some disciples in Thessalonica who had been Christians for less than a year. “We give thanks to God always for you all ... remembering without ceasing your ... labor [topos] of love ...” (1 Th 1:2,3). The Thessalonian Christians wore themselves out in preaching the gospel, not only in their area, but also in missions to other areas. The intensity of their labor of love was defined by Paul in the following statement:

For the word of the Lord has sounded forth from you, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith toward God has spread abroad, so that we do not need to speak anything (1 Th 1:8).

Paul was in Achaia when he wrote the preceding statement to the Thessalonians. Before he arrived in Achaia, after leaving Thessalonica, the faith of the Thessalonian disciples had already reached Achaia. “Labors of love” will cause such things to happen.

The point is that our obsession in our faith should be so radical that our labor of love should result in the gospel going into all the world. Our labor of love should be so profound today that two thousand years from now people should be reading about our zeal just as we read about the dedication of the Thessalonians. What will be the legacy of our labor of love?

Old preachers once told the story of one brother who continually complained that he was always tired from his labors. He was so worn out that he should have been exhorted with the statement, “And let us not become weary in doing good, for in due time we will reap if we do not give up” (Gl 6:9). Nevertheless, the brother was persistent in his complaints. So the preacher told him, “Keep on working, my brother, for when we die we will have our rest.” The brother despondently replied, “It would be my luck that when I die, the Lord will come the next day and I will have to get up again.”

Remember the parable that Jesus introduced with the statement, “For the kingdom of heaven is like a landowner who went out early in the morning to hire laborers for his vineyard” (Mt 20:1)? We call it the “Parable of the Laborers” because it identifies those who would labor in kingdom business (See Mt 20:1-16). If any would be a part of this kingdom, labor is understood. Christianity is not a passive faith. It is not a retirement center. When one is created new in Christ, it is his objective that everyone around him be so created. At least, this is what the Thessalonian disciples concluded.

But there is a problem. There seems to be a number of people who would seek citizenship in the kingdom, but they show up only for the “worship service.” Christianity, however, is not confined to “working” through some ceremony on Sunday. New creatures are identified by what they do, not by where they sit. There is no labor happening when we sit idly on a bench, pew, or stump listening to a sermon, or singing a few songs. Labor takes place in the field. Jesus reminded His disciples,

The harvest truly is plentiful, but the laborers are few. Therefore, pray to the Lord of the harvest so that He will send laborers into His harvest (Mt 9:37,38; see Lk 10:2).

When we discover where the harvest takes place, then we will discover where all the new creatures in Christ are to be located.

We have heard few prayers in our assemblies that are according to the above mandate of Jesus in reference to that for which we should pray. The reason the request is not made for more laborers is because there are too many “Sunday morning” Christians who believe that if they made the prayer, they might be the answer.

Kingdom business is about laboring strenuously for the Lord. The vision of John in Revelation 14:13 paints the literary picture of those who would dare be disciples of Jesus:

Then I heard a voice from heaven saying, “Write, ‘Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from now on.’” “Yes,” says the Spirit, “so that they may rest from their labors, for their works follow them.”

No person can expect to receive any rest from Jesus when He comes again if he is doing no labor in the harvest fields. If our Christianity has backslidden into an idle churchianity that is ceremonially performed in some assembly on Sunday morning, then we are in trouble according to what the Spirit just revealed through John. There will be rest in heaven only for the weary, not for the wimpy. If one has no works that will follow him, then he should not expect to be led into the rest of eternal glory. If one is not working hard enough in order to need rest, then heaven's rest will pass him by.

We must keep in mind that we can lose our rest to come if we fall into the disobedience of laziness. “Therefore, let us labor to enter into that rest lest anyone fall after the same example of disobedience” (Hb 4:11; see 1 Th 2:9; 2 Th 3:8). If we remain steadfast in the Lord, then we know that our labors are “not in vain in the Lord” (1 Co 15:58; see Lk 10:7).

Regardless of their situation when the book of Revelation was written, at least the disciples in Ephesus labored for Jesus. In the message of the angel to the church of Ephesus, they were commended, “And you have perseverance and patience. You have labored for My name's sake and have not become weary” (Rv 2:3). These disciples remembered what was written to the Hebrew disciples:

For God is not unjust to forget your work and labor of love that you have shown toward His name, in that you have ministered to the saints, and still are ministering (Hb 6:10).

We continue to labor and suffer for Jesus because He only is the Savior of the world (See At 4:12). “For to this end we both labor and suffer reproach because we trust in the living God who is the Savior of all men, especially of believers” (1 Tm 4:10). When one considers the horribleness of hell, the length of eternity, and the glory of heaven, then he must be driven to the lost with the gospel of Jesus. If one is not, then he should give up the name Christian, for Christians are disciples of Jesus who are laboring in the harvest field.

If we are not laboring for the Lord, then we have signalled to others that the Lord is not in us. Paul wrote, “For this purpose I also labor, striving according to His working that powerfully works in me” (Cl 1:29). Paul again revealed concerning his motives, “... but I labored more abundantly than they all, yet not I, but the grace of God that was with me” (1 Co 15:10). This is why he could say, “And it is no longer I who live, but Christ lives in me” (Gl 2:20). People recognize that Christ is in the new creature because of the zeal by which one lives for Jesus every hour of every day.

The problem often arises that some are so lazy for Jesus that they must boast in another man's labors. This is what happened in Corinth when some sought to take credit for the labors of Paul and others to minister to the Corinthians (See 2 Co 10:15). But if one would prove himself to be a servant of God, he must personally do so with his own labors. Remember these words? “But in all things approving ourselves as servants of God ... in labors ...” (2 Co 6:4,5). We will not receive a reward because of the labors of others. Remember, each disciple “will receive his own reward according to his own labor” (1 Co 3:8; compare Jn 4:38).

We must never forget the final call of Jesus when He comes to take His laborers home into their eternal rest:

Come to Me all you who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest (Mt 11:28).

We are not sure, but when Jesus comes again, He will probably not show up on Sunday morning, and for obvious reasons.

Chapter 6

NEW SOLDIERS

The New Testament pours forth a river of metaphors by which the Spirit seeks to lift our minds from the physical world into the realm of the spiritual nature and work of those who have enlisted their allegiance in the warfare of Jesus. Words as “sons,” “living stones,” “branches,” and “pilgrims” are all words of the world that are used to define the spiritual relationship that new creatures have with God. But one of the most graphic metaphors is the word “soldier.” Inherent within the earthly definition of this word is militant warfare. But since it is used as a metaphor, then reference cannot be to carnal warfare when used to define the warfare of the Christian. In other words, there is no scriptural justification for a Christian to take up arms to advance his faith. As soldiers in the Lord's army, we are engaged in spiritual warfare.

For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war according to the flesh. For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but powerful through God for the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ (2 Co 10:3-5).

The word “soldier,” and all words that explain the function of a soldier of this world, help us to understand metaphorically the militancy of the Christian who is engaged in conflict with evil. Our songs highlight our emphasis on the metaphors that are used to define our war with evil. We sing “Onward Christian Soldiers” and “Soldiers of Christ Arise” in order to spur ourselves on as soldiers in the Lord’s army. We put on the whole armor of God in order to survive in our spiritual battle against the wiles of the devil (See Ep 6:10--17). By engaging the enemy of all unrighteousness, we use truth to war against error, right to prevail over wrong, and good to suppress evil. As soldiers of Christ, we are engaged in a spiritual conflict. We have already been given the victory by our Commander. It is thus our task to stay in the battle because we have already won the victory. This was the message of the entire book of Revelation that was written to encourage Christians who were suffering from those who persecuted them as family of God:

These will make war with the Lamb and the Lamb will overcome them, for He is Lord of lords and King of kings. And those who are with Him are called and chosen and faithful (Rv 17:14; see 19:19-21).

As soldiers of Christ, we have assumed several responsibilities in order that we fight the good fight of the faith. If any soldier fails to take ownership of his responsibilities, then he, as a soldier of Christ, will certainly fall from the battle. We must always remember that only one fourth of the seeds that were sown in the Parable of the Sower brought forth fruit. The rest were either devoured, scorched, or choked (See Mt 13:3-9). It was only those seeds that fell on good ground that were able to withstand the elements of the environment in which they were sown (Mt 13:8). And so it is with every soldier for Jesus. If one is to survive as a soldier in the Lord’s army, then he should seriously consider the following:

A. Be recruited.

Soldiers in many nations of the world are recruited through conscription. When a young person becomes a certain age, he automatically has to serve in the army. But in many countries of the world today, conscription has given way to volunteering. The military of the United States, for example, is a military that is composed entirely of those who have volunteered for service. And so it is with the Lord’s army. There is no conscription against one’s will. The Lord wants only those who will volunteer to serve. An army that is composed of volunteers is far more excited to carry out their duties than an army that is composed of conscripted soldiers.

The message of recruitment goes out to those who would volunteer for the Lord’s army. When the repentant hears this call, he willingly relinquishes his will to the Master to whom he enlists for service. When potential recruits realize that they are on the wrong side of the spiritual war against all wickedness, they seek to volunteer for service. When some were “cut to the heart” in Jerusalem in A.D. 30 because they behaved contrary to the work and will of God, they cried out, “Men and brethren, what will we do?” (At 2:37). In other words, they were asking where they could sign up for King Jesus who was reigning on David’s throne. When shaken by surrounding circumstances, some pleaded, “Sirs, what must I do to be saved?” (At 16:30). And to such volunteers, the recruiting officer replied, “And now why are you waiting? Arise and be baptized and wash away your sins ...” (At 22:16). Sign with water on the dotted line.

It was the message of the gospel that God used to call all men to volunteer for the army of His Son. God calls people “unto His kingdom and glory” (1 Th 2:12) by the gospel (2 Th 2:14). When repentant volunteers step forward with faith, they are told clearly what they must do to become a part of the body of God’s army. “For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one body ...” (1 Co 12:13; see At 2:38, Rm 6:3; Gl 3:27). Volunteers must make a behavioral declaration in obedience to the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus in order to be of the Christ to whom they are giving their allegiance (See 1 Co 1:12,13).

Because new recruits in the Lord’s army make a choice to volunteer, then the nature of the army of God is defined by the service of the soldiers. There can never be any barracks for the soldiers of Christ. Being a soldier in the Lord’s army means that one is always on duty. The repentant believer has volunteered to serve, and thus, he is continually volunteering to serve others.

We have found that some have missed the point that the culture of the army of God is volunteerism. If one does not volunteer his life, he certainly is not a soldier in the Lord’s army. Sometimes the lack of volunteering is revealed by those who will not preach the gospel unless they are supported. Others have viewed the army of the Lord as an opportunity for employment. Others have volunteered to join, but only if they were given a job. They misunderstand the culture of the army of God. It is not what one gets as a recruit, but what one gives. There can be no beggars in God's army. What one gives in service is explained by the Holy Spirit in Romans 12:1: "Therefore, I urge you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service."

We must not forget that Jesus is continually recruiting volunteers for His army on earth. He said the same in His last words of revelation to all men:

Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If anyone hears My voice and opens the door, I will come in to him and will sup with him, and he with Me (Rv 3:20).

B. Be spiritually fit.

After being inducted into an army, a new soldier is enrolled in boot camp in order to prepare for battle. A soldier must be in top physical condition in order to war according to the disciplines of battle. Discipline, therefore, must be instilled in every soldier. Every recruit is thus trained in discipline in order that desertion not occur when the new recruits engage the enemy. New recruits must start their training to live in a new paradigm of resistance to protect their nation against any possible enemies.

In order to prepare as a spiritual soldier in the spiritual conflict in which the people of God are engaged with Satan, there must be preparation for battle. God knows that those who are new in the faith should not be thrown into the heat of the battle until they have been disciplined to endure the harsh blows that Satan will deliver. The "spiritual boot camp" of the army of God is emphasized in the following points:

1. Spiritual growth is necessary in order to transition into the new spiritual paradigm. When one comes forth from the grave of baptism as a new creature in the army of God, his new birth experience does not miraculously change his character and personality. He is not "fully grown" immediately when reborn. The new birth to become a new creature is the beginning of a process of growth. It is a process that is explained by Peter's statement: "But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Pt 3:18). New recruits are to "grow up into Him in all things" (Ep 4:15). The new birth is the beginning of one's growth in all things that are necessary for the spiritual battle in which we are engaged as the children of God.

We do not know the exact time line of Paul when he transitioned from being a persecutor to a promoter of Christ. He miraculously encountered Jesus on the Damascus road sometime between A.D. 40 and 42 (At 9:1-19). He then volunteered for service by having his sins washed away in baptism (At 22:16). After he was baptized, he went into Arabia, and then returned to Damascus (Gl 1:17). After three years in Damascus and Arabia, he went to Jerusalem where he stayed for about two weeks (Gl 1:18). He then returned to his home in Cilicia, and eventually came into Syria (Gl 1:21). And after some years, "Barnabas went to Tarsus [of Cilicia] to look for Saul [Paul]" (At 11:25).

Barnabas fetched Paul out of Tarsus in order to bring him to Antioch of Syria. Barnabas needed help in teaching the new Gentile Christians of Antioch. After another trip to Jerusalem (At 12:25), and a year teaching in Antioch, it was not until Acts 13:1-3 that the Holy Spirit eventually called Paul to the great mission of going to the Gentiles. From the time of his new birth to be a new creature in Damascus, to the time he was called in Antioch in Acts 13, it could have been as long as seven years. God knew that Paul had to grow out of the old way of life of Judaism in which he was culturally and theologically steeped for so many years. God gave Paul time to grow into the person he needed to be in order to send him on his first mission journey.

We must grow into greater works in the kingdom. God is patient during these years of transformation. Others are doing the work while we are growing to accept greater challenges. The more one prepares himself, the greater the work that will be given to him by God.

2. Grow into leadership. When the Holy Spirit inscribed the spiritual qualifications for one to be an elder (bishop) among the sheep of God, one of the qualifications was negative. Those who are to be considered for such a ministry must not be new converts. The reason for this is that the new convert has not yet spiritually refined his personality and attitudes after the word of God. The Spirit wrote in the midst of giving qualifications for elders, "He must not be a new convert, lest being puffed up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil" (1 Tm 3:6). In the same context of spiritual growth, Paul instructed Timothy, "Lay hands hastily on no man" (1 Tm 5:22). If great responsibility is given to novice Christians, then they can be "puffed up with pride," and thus fall into the condemnation of the devil. New Christians, therefore, must be patient until they grow into greater ministries.

3. Time must be given to lay aside behavioral sin that holds one back from spiritual growth. One of the tasks of the new recruit into the army of Christ is to start the process of changing one's character. This process continues throughout the rest of our lives as soldiers in the Lord's army. To older Christians, the Holy Spirit instructed, "Let us lay aside every weight and the sin that so easily entangles us, and let us run with endurance the race that is set before us” (Hb 12:1). The task of a new recruit in Christ is to “put off all these: anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy speech out of your mouth” (Cl 3:8). When one volunteers for the Lord’s army, he begins a process of spiritual transformation. The process begins by understanding that new creatures are always changing for the better. Even when they are old they are still being transformed into the image of Jesus (Rm 12:2).

4. Put away the past and push toward the future.

When one comes forth from the grave with Jesus, he must never look back to his life before his new birth. The “good old days” must be viewed as days of darkness wherein one walked in sin. Jesus exhorted, “No one, after putting his hand to the plow and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God” (Lk 9:62).

“Looking back” means taking part in those practices of sin that one gave up when he was born anew in Christ. When one transitions into the army of the Lord, he must give up those things that identified him as a “sinner.” If one continues to look back on his former way of life, then he will be hindered from spiritually prospering in his new life for the future.

John wrote to Gaius, “Beloved, I pray that in all things you may prosper and be in health, just as your soul prospers” (3 Jn 2). The greatness of Gaius was that he continued to prosper spiritually. He was not one to look back to the old man of sin who was nailed to a cross and buried in a grave.

5. Study the manual on warfare. “Be diligent to present yourself approved to God as a workman who does not need to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth” (2 Tm 2:15). One is not spiritually growing if he is not studying His Bible. Since our faith is built on the word of God, then our faith grows as we grow in the knowledge of God’s word.

We live in an era wherein there has been a deceptive backsliding from a Bible-based faith to an experientially based subjective religiosity. Paul wrote, “So then faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of Christ” (Rm 10:17). As long as our faith is based on the word of Christ, then we will continue to be directed by Christ. However, in the world of Christendom, there has been a change from a word-based faith to a subjective relationship-based faith. In other words, people first define their religiosity by their relationships with others, and then they consider the word of God.

It is assumed that if one has good relationships with others in a religious context, then it is assumed that one’s faith is strong. It indeed can be strong, but one’s faith is based on the wrong priority. It is based on one’s personal relationships with people, not the word of God. Cults have strong relationships, but the faith of those within the cult is questionable. The stronger one’s faith is based on his friends, the more he is in danger of moving away from the word of God. This is true because our friends will often lead us away from the word of God if their faith is also based on relationships instead of the word of God.

When our faith is based on people, it is based on a foundation that is constantly changing. The foundation changes because people change. When all the individuals of the group change, then they as a group change. If our faith is based first on people, and then the word of God, we will drift with the group because our faith is not first based on the word of God. If we are forced by the group to move in the direction of the group, then we are a member of a very traditional group, or possibly a cult.

If our faith is based on the unchanging word of God, then our friends can change, but our faith will not because it is based on the word of God. It may be the case that the group moves so far away from the word of God that the word-based individual must move away from the group. We must keep in mind that our relationship with God is not dependant on our relationship with others. We may have to be as Noah who alone remained faithful in a wicked world. Our relationship (fellowship) with others must first be based on the word of God. This relationship (fellowship) with others begins with our common obedience to the word of God. This is what John wrote in 1 John 1:3:

That which we [the apostles] have seen and heard we declare to you so that you also may have fellowship with us, and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ.

Therefore, “if we say that we have fellowship [a relationship] with Him, and walk in darkness,” John wrote, “we lie and do not practice the truth” (1 Jn 1:6). “But if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship [a relationship] with one another ...” (1 Jn 1:7). Our relationships (fellowship) with one another must first be based on our common walk in the light of the word of Christ. If our fellowship is simply based on being good friends, then we are in trouble of being led away from Christ. If our allegiance is first to the group, then we will go where the group goes. And a group that is ignorant of the word of God is moving away from God. We must keep in mind that there is no greater thing than the relationship (fellowship) that the new creature has on earth than the church of our Lord.

C. Be committed.

Since one volunteers for service in the armed forces of a nation, then it is presumed that he is patriotic to the nation he seeks to defend. If there is no patriotism, then one has simply sought for and acquired a “military job.” But when the “job soldier” engages the enemy, he will betray his country by desertion. It is imperative, therefore, that every soldier be disciplined with faith in the country he has volunteered to protect.

Webster’s Dictionary defines “treason” to mean, The betrayal of a trust .... The offense of attempting by overt acts to overthrow the government of the state to which the offender owes allegiance or to kill or personally injure the sovereign of his family.

Judas Iscariot was standing in the audience when Jesus said, “And whoever does not bear his own cross and come after Me, cannot be My disciple” (Lk 14:27). Judas could not do this. He involved himself in a scheme that led to the killing of the “sovereign of his family.” For whatever motives, he betrayed his discipleship to Jesus because of motives that were treasonous to the commitment Jesus called on all His disciples to make. It was no hyperbole of commitment, therefore, when Jesus said the following to His disciples:

He who loves father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me. And he who loves son or daughter more than Me is not worthy of Me. And he who does not take his cross and follow after Me is not worthy of Me (Mt 10:37,38).

Soldiers in the Lord’s army must remember what one wise person said, “The man who moves the world is the man the world cannot move.” If we are not committed (patriotic) to Christ, we will betray Him when times get tough. It is an axiomatic truth that there will be more conversions to Christ when His soldiers are more committed to the cause of Christ. Such was essentially the meaning Paul wanted to convey to Timothy in the following exhortation:

You therefore endure hardship as a good soldier of Christ Jesus. No man engaged in warfare entangles himself with the affairs of this life, so that he may please him who enlisted him as a soldier (2 Tm 2:3,4).

D. Be trained.

Soldiers who do not continually keep themselves physically fit will be weak in the field of conflict. Our muscles maintain their strength only when they are constantly used. The assumption is, therefore, that soldiers are constantly in training in order to be ready for battle.

In reference to soldiers of Christ, they should be in great spiritual shape because they are continually in battle. From the time they become new creatures in Christ, they are in constant conflict with the forces of evil. They grow stronger because they stay in the heat of the battle.

In his first letter, Peter reminded his readers, “... as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word so that you may grow up to salvation” (1 Pt 2:2). He followed this exhortation with a spiritual mandate in the second letter: “Grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pt 3:18). If one does not feast on the word of God in order to grow spiritually, then he has consigned himself to spiritual death.

Spiritual growth is a process that is carried throughout the life of a spiritual soldier because of the demands of the battle. We must understand that as new creatures we are not at any one time in our lives at a stage of growth that we want to be. There must always be a sense of feeling that we are not what we ought to be. Therefore, we must anticipate what we are going to be. But in this process of spiritual growth, we can always be thankful that we are not what we used to be when we lived in sin.

Spiritual soldiers must always remember that it is “God who works in you both to will and to work for His good pleasure” (Ph 2:13). He works in us through His word. It was for this reason that apostles, prophets, evangelists and shepherd/teachers laid the foundation upon which we exist as a fellowship of soldiers today. These ministries of the word were set forth by God “for the equipping of the saints for the work of ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ ...” (Ep 4:12).

We minister the word of God in order that every “man of God may be complete, thoroughly equipped for every good work” (2 Tm 3:17). When one allows the word of God to equip his character as a spiritual soldier, God is given the credit for the equipping. The Hebrew writer wrote to his readers that they must allow God to equip them “in every good work to do His will, working in you what is well-pleasing in His sight ...” (Hb 13:21).

E. Be skilled.

Every soldier must be skilled in how to use the weapons of his warfare. And being skilled assumes that one must receive training in how to use a particular weapon. One then maintains his skill in the use of his weapon by continual practice.

In Ephesians 6 Paul said to “put on the whole armor of God so that you may be able to stand against the schemes of the devil” (Ep 6:11). The armor for the soldiers of Christ includes truth, righteousness, the preparation of the gospel, the shield of faith, the word of God, and the helmet of salvation (Ep 6:14-17). The successful soldier of the Lord will be skilled in the use of every article of armor. This assumes that he remains in the battle against the schemes of the devil in order not to grow weak in the use of his armor.

In order to remain effective in one’s war against the schemes of the devil, he must continually use the weapons of the Christian’s warfare. Paul wrote to Timothy, “And the things that you have heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit to faithful men who will be able to teach others also” (2 Tm 2:2). If there is no continual teaching and being taught, then our stand against false teaching will become weak. To be able to engage the enemy means that we have been enabled by the word of God. Every soldier must be in some Bible class or Bible study in order to learn the word of God. If there are no Bible classes among a group of saints, then it is a spiritually weak force against Satan. In fact, if there is no continual study and teaching of the Bible among some groups, the band of disciples are usually held together only by a musical band on Sunday morning, and not the teaching of the word of God.

We know when we have found a group of soldiers of the cross when we step into a Bible class where people have their Bibles open in order to enable themselves with the word of God. We know we have attended the assembly of a Timothy when we leave with a better knowledge of the word of God. The curse of “cheerleading” preachers is that they stand before a group of people who are weak in the word. The people are faithful to the assembly only as long as the cheerleader entertains them for a moment of ecstasy. Some have wondered why “concert assemblies” have become so common throughout Christendom today. The answer is in the fact that the people have become tired of cheerleading preachers who preach no Bible. The people have simply sought another “spiritual” placebo in order to keep coming to an assembly.

Concert assemblies with all the electronic gadgets and cheerleading preachers who know no Bible, are far from what the New Testament says is a spiritual-oriented assembly of the saints. It is the word of God—the things that Paul taught Timothy—that equips us to stand against Satan. We need more Bible preaching and less concerts. And when we talk about assemblies, we need only a quiet time with one another in order to meditate over the oracles of God in our relationships with one another. If we attempt to substitute anything but word from God to equip the saints to be skilled in the war against Satan, then we will fall far short of being skilled in the weapons of our warfare.

What makes Christianity so powerful in a world of false religions is that the focus of the Christian is on the spiritual, and not on the carnal. Paul wrote of this to the Corinthian disciples who had been diverted to focus on carnal matters:

For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but powerful through God for the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ (2 Co 10:4,5).

In order to “pull down strongholds” of ignorance, we must know our Bibles. In order to “cast down imaginations,” we must have a knowledge of the word of God. In order to “cast down every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God,” we must have a knowledge of the true and living God who is defined in the Bible. In order to “bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ,” we must be obsessed with the word of Christ in order to preach what one must do to obey the Son of God. It is for these reasons that assemblies of the soldiers of Christ that do not focus on teaching the word of God are a work of Satan to keep people ignorant of their Bibles and unprepared to engage him in battle. Satan knows that if he can keep Christians excited about entertaining themselves, then he can lead them wherever their ignorance of the Bible will allow them to go.

The atomic weapon of our warfare against all that Satan would launch against us is the Spirit-inspired word that has come to us from God by the work of the Holy Spirit. The reason for this is the spiritual power by which God intended that the written word have in the preparation of His spiritual army.

For the word of God is living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow, and able to judge the thoughts and intents of the heart (Hb 4:12).

F. Be disciplined.

If we were a soldier in the military of a nation, but became unruly, we would be court martialed. No military of any nation can maintain an effective defense of the nation if it is filled with undisciplined soldiers. And so it is with the army of the Lord.

We admire Paul for the discipline by which he conducted his life, and thus, was successful in his ministry. The secret to his success was self-discipline. He wrote, “But I discipline my body and bring it into subjection, lest by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be disqualified” (1 Co 9:27).

A good soldier will discipline his mind to focus on his duties as a soldier. This is what Paul instructed Timothy to do when he wrote, “No man engaged in warfare entangles himself with the affairs of this life ...” (2 Tm 2:4). If one would be a good soldier in the Lord’s army, then he must do as the Spirit wrote to the Colossians:

If you then were raised with Christ [from baptism], seek those things that are above, where Christ is sitting at the right hand of God. Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth (Cl 3:1,2).

A disciplined soldier in the Lord’s army is one who is obsessively focused on his purpose as a soldier of the Lord. He does not allow his attention to be diverted by the things of this world. He may use the things of the world to support himself, but worldly things do not have priority in his life.

Gaius disciplined his life according to spiritual priorities. John prayed for Gaius that in all things of the world he might prosper, but the prosperity in the things of this world was to be “just as” he spiritually prospered (3 Jn 2). As long as our spiritual prosperity is on the top of our priority list, then we will have no problem with controlling the prosperity of the world. This will take great discipline. But it is essential as good soldiers of the Christ to seek kingdom things first by keeping our minds on those things that are above (See Mt 6:33). In the context of John’s prayer that Gaius prosper in all things, Gaius was using “all things” under his control to support evangelists who were preaching the gospel (See 3 Jn 5-8).

G. Be courageous.

What good would a soldier be in the heat of battle, if he runs from the battle. Valor should be synonymous with being an effective soldier in any army.

We would conclude from Paul’s statement in Romans 1:16 that he was a soldier of valor: “For I am not ashamed of the gospel ....”

We must remember that “God has not given us a spirit of fear, but of power and of love and of a sound mind” (2 Tm 1:7), “Therefore,” Paul wrote, “do not be ashamed of the testimony of our Lord ...” (2 Tm 1:8).

Peter and John boldly preached Jesus in the heart of the religious world of Judaism. The religious leaders of Jerusalem subsequently “called them and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus” (At 4:18). But Peter and John answered these misguided religious leaders, “Whether it is right in the sight of God to give heed to you more than God, you judge” (At 4:19). Every disciple of Jesus must take a bold stand as this. And then, every disciple must boldly reply to such religious opposition as Peter and John did to their religious opposition: “For we cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard” (At 4:20).

Later in the same environment of religious opposition, some religious leaders again “strictly commanded” that the apostles not teach in the name of Jesus. But the apostles boldly replied, “We must obey God rather than men” (At 5:29).

The greatest opposition that the soldier of Christ has comes from those who think they are doing the will of God, but are actually opposing those who are walking contrary to their religious traditions. It was those who represented the traditions of the Jews who opposed Jesus throughout His earthly ministry. It was this opposition that eventually nailed Him to the cross. Therefore, if we oppose someone’s teaching, we must first check our own beliefs with the word of God. It may be that we too are opposing the preaching of Jesus because we are defending only our traditions, and not the Bible (See Mk 7:1-9).

Being a disciplined soldier of the cross assumes that we will receive opposition. When Jesus used the cross as a metaphor to explain the extent to which one must go in order to be His disciple, His immediate disciples knew exactly what He meant. There was no misunderstanding on their part when He said, “And whoever does not bear his own cross and come after Me, cannot be My disciple” (Lk 14:27). It was religious opposition that resulted in His going to the cross. The same will often take the soldiers of Jesus to their crosses.

The Romans executed criminals on crosses. But there was more to the crucifixion than the actual nailing of one to a cross. The one to be crucified was to carry his own cross to his own execution. It was like one having to dig his own grave. It was a judgment of humiliation before execution. Most of the immediate disciples of Jesus had certainly witnessed someone who was humiliated by carrying his own cross to his own crucifixion. It was surely a horrible sight to behold. And when Jesus made the preceding statement concerning the bearing of the cross of discipleship, a knot probably developed in the stomach of many of those who were following Him. If discipleship means bearing a cross to crucifixion, then one should think twice before enlisting in the Lord’s army.

The reason for the call of such tremendous commitment from Jesus was explained when He concluded the context of His teaching on commitment in Luke 14. “Salt is good,” Jesus said. “But if the salt has lost its saltiness, how will it be seasoned? It is neither fit for the land nor for the dunghill. It is thrown out.” (Lk 14:34,35). A soldier who has no valor is worthless in this war in which we are involved against the evil of this world.

Every one of us must realize that we will stand in judgment beside the one who made the following statement to some disciples who were less committed:

*What do you mean by weeping and breaking my heart?
For I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus* (At 21:13).

This same man would conclude, “Finally, brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might” (Ep 6:10). We must not forget “that the lake that burns with fire and brimstone” is reserved for the cowardly (Rv 21:8).

H. Be a servant.

Good soldiers know how to suffer in serving. The purpose of a soldier is the preservation of the nation that he has committed himself to defend. Soldiers have thus given themselves to defend the nation at all costs. Suffering in service reveals the commitment by which they seek to serve their country.

The danger of becoming a lukewarm soldier is that he will be tempted to compromise in the midst of conflict. It is for this reason that Jesus was ready to spew out the Laodicean disciples (Rv 3:15,16). The only guard against becoming lukewarm is to serve continually. Christianity is like riding a bicycle. If one does not keep pedaling, he will fall off. In reference to service, Christianity is not “on again, off again.” One is continually serving because of his total sacrifice of himself to Christ (Gl 2:20). If he stops working, he will fall off.

The Christian is engaged in spiritual warfare. There is no time to lay down one’s weapons or armor. The time for rest will come at the end of our lives. It will then be as Paul said of his own life: “I have fought the good fight. I have finished my course” (2 Tm 4:7). Only when we can speak of our fight in the past tense can we finally lay down our armor. It is only when we have fought the good fight that we are allowed to lay down in eternal rest. So it was with Paul when he wrote his final words in prison before his beheading.

When one becomes a new creature, he has committed himself to love (serve) the Lord his God with all his heart, soul, mind and strength (Mk 12:30). He has committed himself to love (serve) his neighbor as himself (Mk 12:31). This is a life-style of commitment. It is not something from which a disciple takes a furlough. Being a disciple is a lifetime commitment to serve others. Therefore, while in our conflict with those who are enemies of the cross, we press on. Even in prison, Paul would not be detoured from engaging the enemy.

Brethren, I count not myself to have laid hold. But one thing I do, forgetting those things that are behind and reaching forward to those things that are before. I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus (Ph 3:13,14).

I. Be a comrade in Christ:

Soldiers must be disciplined in team work. There must be a strong sense of camaraderie among the soldiers in order that the army remain focused on the enemy and not on one another. In the army of the Lord, the team work of the soldiers is maintained through forgiveness. If there is an unforgiving spirit among the soldiers of Christ, then there can be no camaraderie in our war against evil. Our battles among ourselves will take our focus off the enemy (See 2 Co 11:20; Gl 5:15).

Unfortunately, many soldiers in the Lord’s army have fallen victim to being the unforgiving servant about whom Jesus spoke in a parable in Matthew 18:21-35. When we think we are in the right at a time when we have actually wronged others, we are often very quick to start making judgments concerning the one we feel has supposedly wronged us. But as illustrated in the parable, the unforgiving servant forgot how much he had been forgiven.

In fact, the extreme amount that the unforgiving servant was forgiven by the king makes senseless any debt that he might extract from his own debtor. If the magnitude of our forgiveness by God does not inspire us to be merciful to others, then our newness in Christ is tarnished. Jesus concluded the parable with the statement, “So likewise will My heavenly Father do also to you, if each one of you does not from the heart forgive his brother” (Mt 18:35).

If we would pray for forgiveness from the Father, then it is our responsibility to forgive those who wrong us. This was the prayer that Jesus taught His disciples. “And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors” (Mt 6:12). Our forgiveness by the Father, therefore, is conditional. “But if you do not forgive men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses” (Mt 6:15). Therefore, “If anyone has a complaint against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also should you” (Cl 3:13).

Forgiveness is not for the benefit of those who have offended us. It is for the benefit of our own mental attitude. If we are unforgiving of those who offend us, then our spirit of unforgiveness will boil up within us and develop a bitter spirit. It is for this reason that Jesus said, “... if your brother sins against you, go and tell him his fault between you and him alone. If he hears you, you have gained your brother” (Mt 18:15). Jesus did not condition our forgiveness of our offending brother on him coming to us and saying, “I’m sorry.” The offended must take the initiative and go to the offender.

But “if you bring your gift to the altar, and there you remember that your brother has something against you, leave there your gift before the altar and go your way. First be reconciled to your brother ...” (Mt 5:23,24). If one is the offender, then he too must head in the direction of the one he has offended. The offender and offended must meet one another on the road as they approach one another for reconciliation. When it comes to brotherhood, the desire to always seek reconciliation should typify the identity of the disciples of Jesus.

Chapter 7

NEW WALK

God challenged Israel with the statement, “Can two walk together, except they have agreed” (Am 3:3). The metaphor of the statement is profound. In the context, God was pronouncing the judgment that Israel was out of step with His will. They were walking in the wrong direction. In fact, because they were so out of step with His will, they were spiritually moving backward and not forward.

David was specific when he defined how we are to walk with God:

Lord, who will abide in Your tabernacle? Who will dwell in Your holy hill? He who walks uprightly and works righteousness and speaks the truth in his heart (Ps 15:1,2).

Walking together assumes that two people are in harmony with one another. They speak the truth to one another. It means that there is a relationship between the two parties as they make progress in the same direction. They have the same goal and purpose. Jesus explained this in reference to those who would be new creatures in Him.

I do not pray for these [apostles] alone, but for those also who believe in Me through their word; that they all may be one; even as You, Father, are in Me and I in You, that they also may be one in Us, so that the world may believe that You sent Me (Jn 17:20,21).

Noah was one who walked with God (Gn 6:9). The result of his walk was the salvation of himself and his family. John explained this in reference to the Christian’s walk with God: “If we walk in the light as He [God] is in the light, we have fellowship with one another and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanses us from all sin” (1 Jn 1:7).

We too can walk with God. The result of our walk with God is fellowship with Him and the continual cleansing of our sins by the blood of His Son. The condition for this privilege and blessing is that we live in harmony with the will of God. This means that God must establish the footsteps in which we walk. We do not have that right.

The behavior of the new creature in Christ is identified by one’s life-style of obedience to the will of God. Paul exhorted the new creatures in Ephesus to “walk as children of light” (Ep 5:8). Since we often need some definition concerning what “walking as children of light” means, throughout the New Testament the Holy Spirit explains the steps we must take:

A. Walk in love.

The new commandment of Jesus was based on the extreme by which He loved us. The extreme of His walk for us defines the nature of our walk with one another. “A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another, as I have loved you, that you also love one another” (Jn 13:34).

Walking together in love as Jesus loved us is the signal to the world that we are the disciples of Jesus (Jn 13:35). The intensity of our love for one another was defined by Jesus who gave His life for us. It is a “new love” (new commandment) by which His disciples were to love one another. Paul explained,

*Therefore, be imitators of God as dear children. And walk in love as Christ also loved us, and gave Himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God as a fragrant aroma (Ep 5:1,2; see Jn 3:16).

If we would walk with Jesus in love, then we will manifest our love for Jesus by sacrificially loving one another as Jesus loved us. And in our imitation of Jesus' love for us, we as new creatures are to love one another with the intensity of a selfless sacrificial love. John explained, "For this is the message that you heard from the beginning, that we should love one another" (1 Jn 3:11). This statement was prefaced with John's exhortation, "Whoever does not practice righteousness is not from God, nor the one who does not love his brother" (1 Jn 3:12).

Jesus explained that sacrificial love is the new commandment. John followed with the explanation that the lack of sacrificial love alienates one from the God of love. Therefore, the lack of sacrificial love in our lives manifests that we are not walking with God if we do not sacrificially love our brother. One is simply not righteous before God if he does not manifest in his life the sacrificial love by which God so loved the world through Jesus (Jn 3:16).

It is significant to note that neither Jesus nor John defined discipleship by one's conformity to a legal catechism of law. It is love, not law, that identifies those who have transitioned out of a walk of unloving darkness. The problem with a legal approach to a relationship with God is that one comforts himself with a catechism of law that he has prescribed as acceptable obedience. He can thus maintain the legal system of his catechism without sacrificially loving his brother.

The sincerity of Jesus' love for us was in the fact that it was not a love that was poured out on the basis of law. As created beings from the dust of the earth, we deserved no love offering from God. This was the foundation upon which the Spirit stated, "But God demonstrates His love toward us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us" (Rm 5:8). The awesomeness of this action on the part of God was that He loved us when we deserved no love.

There was no law that Jesus should go to the cross for those whom He had created. It was love, not law, that took Him there. Nothing has changed in His definition of the love by which we are to love one another. We are to love, not because of law, but because of the manner by which He sacrificially loved us from the cross. It is this love in our lives that reveals that we are from God. It was this intensity of love that ended Jesus on a cross for our sins. If one does not walk in the love by which Jesus loved us at the cross, then he is not from God. He is not a disciple of the One who sacrificially gave Himself selflessly for us.

It may be easy to love only our brothers. But the behavior of the love that Jesus manifested on the cross was far beyond the brotherhood love about which Peter spoke when he wrote, "Love the brotherhood" (1 Pt 2:17). The nature of the love that was defined by the cross is revealed in Paul's statement of Romans 5:10: "For if while we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more, having been reconciled, we will be saved by His life." The love by which the new creature is identified is a love that extends to our enemies just as Jesus' love reached out to us when we were His enemies.

So it was not a suggestion when Jesus said, "... love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, so that you may be the children of your Father ..." (Mt 5:44,45). The disciples who first heard these words would later understand the extent to which Jesus went to reconcile us to God. We were enemies of Jesus through our sins, but He still showed up at the cross.

Was Jesus asking for too much? If we would so conclude that He was, then we need to remember that we once lived as "enemies of the cross" (See Ph 3:18). We "were formerly alienated and enemies" of Jesus by our wicked ways (Cl 1:21). But when we were enemies of Jesus, "God sent forth His Son, born of a woman, born under law, in order to redeem those who were under law ..." (Gl 4:4). Remember the following heart-warming action of what God did for us while we were enemies of the cross? "But God demonstrates His love toward us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us" (Rm 5:8). Because of what God did for us while we were enemies of all righteousness, we can never object to Jesus' exhortation that we love our enemies as He loved us.

Someone once said, "Faults are thick when love is thin." The revelation of our lack of love for our enemies is often manifested in our constant criticism of the behavior of others. When we walk in love for our enemies, however, we understand that the door to the human heart is always opened from the inside. If we would open this door, as Jesus opened ours, then it is through love that we would have an opportunity to share Jesus with our enemies.

Phosphorus glows in the dark. As we live in a world of darkness, we must never forget that the darkness is an opportunity for our love to glow. So in our anticipation of a glorious future, we do not forget what Peter wrote in his final letter:

And we have more certain the prophetic word, to which you do well to take heed, as to a light that shines in a dark place, until the day dawns and the morning star arises in your hearts (2 Pt 1:19).

We are thus committed to shine as bright as possible as we live in this dark world of sin. We are committed to loving people into eternal glory with us. And because of our hope of residing in the eternal light of our Father, we will walk in love.

B. Walk by faith.

We would remind ourselves of what Paul proclaimed to every new creature in Christ: “For we walk by faith, not by sight” (2 Co 5:7). It is sometimes as the wise old statement, “Unless there is within us that which is above us, we will soon yield to that which is about us.” The Hebrew writer exemplified the necessity of walking by faith: “But without faith it is impossible to please Him, for he who comes to God must believe that He is and that He is a rewarder of those who diligently seek Him” (Hb 11:6).

This is not a mental faith that simply accepts the existence of God. It is an active faith of both mind and heart that is manifested through behavior. It is a faith that signals that we are diligently seeking God. It is as James challenges every disciple: “Show me your faith without your works, and I will show you my faith by my works” (Js 2:18). In other words, “Show me your diligence for God without an active faith, and I will show you my diligence for Him by my faith that works.”

Walking in faith means that we are totally reliant on God for what we are in Christ. This fundamental teaching is in the introductory statement of Paul in his discourse on grace in Romans: “For in it [the gospel] is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith, as it is written, ‘The just will live by faith’” (Rm 1:17).

We are new creatures in Christ because we acted on our faith in Jesus. We proved our faith in Him by our obedience to Him. This did not make our obedience to His will meritorious. To say that we were meritoriously baptized because it is commanded (At 2:38), is to maintain a weak understanding of our obedience of faith (Rm 1:5; 16:26). This was the legal misunderstanding that Paul addressed in the letter to the Romans. His conclusion for us in reference to meritorious salvation was explained in the statement, “Therefore, we conclude that a man is justified by faith apart from [meritorious] works of law” (Rm 3:28). One is not justified by meritorious obedience to keep law perfectly, but he cannot be justified apart from obedience that results from our faith response to do that which is commanded by Jesus. A limited faith that allows one to either ignore Jesus’ example or commands, is simply a dead faith.

If one cannot make a distinction between meritorious works of law and obedience of faith, then he will never understand the Christian’s walk by faith. We live in a time when many religionists are so obsessed with any hint of meritorious obedience, that they have thrown out of their theology all references to obedience. We have in these days an unfortunate and fruitless theology of walking by faith only. If in the word “walking” there is any reference to obedience, the “faith only” advocates often cry out, “Meritorious.” But it would be good for such folks to make this cry to James who was dealing with the same “depart-in-peace” people who were likewise resistant to obedient expressions of faith (Js 2:16). To such “faith only” people, James frankly stated, “You see then that a man is justified by works and not by faith only” (Js 2:24). And why? “For as the body without the spirit is dead, so also faith without works is dead” (Js 2:26).

We would suggest that those who are quick to cry out “meritorious” in reference to obedient faith, should read again James’ exhortations and definitions of the faith that is pleasing to God. Disciples of Jesus walk by an obedient faith, without which one cannot be pleasing to God (Hb 11:6).

It was an obedient walk of faith in response to the will of God that kept the Old Testament heroes in fellowship with God (Read Hb 11). Their obedient walk of faith manifested their trust in the promises of God. Our faith manifests the same today. We walk “... in hope of eternal life which God, who cannot lie, promised before time began ...” (Ti 1:2). “This hope we have as an anchor of the soul ...” (Hb 6:19). Our “faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen” (Hb 11:1).

C. Walk in the light.

John stated that Christians are “walking in the light” (1 Jn 1:7). As he progressed in the book of 1 John, he referred to the will of God with terms as the truth, the light, and finally, the commandments of God. Walking in the light in 1 John 1:7, therefore, is a reference to walking in the realm of God and His will.

New creatures in Christ were once walking in the darkness of sin. But in the new birth, God “has delivered us from the power of darkness and has transferred us unto the kingdom of His dear Son” (Cl 1:13). Sin is darkness because it is a realm of behavior that is outside the sovereign will of God. In the realm of darkness, we “were dead in trespasses and sins” because we were walking “according to the ways of this world ...” (Ep 2:1,2). But as new creatures in Christ, this walk was changed.

We were once as the Ephesians about whom Paul wrote, “For you were formerly darkness, but now you are light in the Lord. Walk as children of light” (Ep 5:8). We were darkness because our former way of life constituted the darkness of sin in the world. But when we turned to a walk in the light of God, we turned to representing before the world the light of God. Jesus explained: “I am the light of the world. He who follows Me will not walk in darkness, but have the light of life” (Jn 8:12). When we walk with Jesus, we have His light by which we light up those around us.

Because we are disciples of the One who is the light of the world, our walk in His light is an advertisement of His light. Christians are the reflection of Christ to a world that continues to be in the darkness of sin. Of His disciples, Jesus said, “You are the light of the world” (Mt 5:14). His disciples would be as He was in the world: “As long as I am in the world,” Jesus said of Himself, “I am the light of the world” (Jn 9:5). However, when He left this world, His disciples continued to be His only light in the world as long as they walked in His light. As new creatures in Christ, we have been entrusted with the light of Jesus.

As Paul and Barnabas went from city to city on their first mission journey, they realized the light-bearing responsibility that was laid on their shoulders as disciples of the Light. They rebuked those Jews who rejected them with a statement concerning their God-given responsibility to be the light of Jesus to the world: “For so has the Lord commanded us, ‘I have set you to be a light of the Gentiles so that you should be for salvation to the ends of the earth.’” (At 13:47). Every disciple of Jesus carries with him the same light-bearing responsibility. In a world of darkness, and as the light of God in the world, the disciples of Jesus offer hope to the world. They are the light of the world as they reflect the light of the One who leads their lives.

D. Walk in the Spirit.

New creatures reveal the light of God through their walk in obedience to the will of their Father. Paul explained:

For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, has shone in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Christ (2 Co 4:6).

The knowledge of the glory of God is revealed through the walk of those who walk in the light of God’s will. This would be walking in the knowledge of the Spirit-inspired word of God (2 Tm 3:16). Paul explained this walk to be as one led by the Spirit: “For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God” (Rm 8:14). “If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit” (Gl 5:25).

In the context of Jesus’ statement that we let our light shine before the world (Mt 5:16), reference was not to a boastful display of one’s works. Reference was to a behavioral life-style that manifested God before the world by those who have obeyed Him. When we let our light shine, we are manifesting to the world that we are being led by the Spirit of God. And being led by the Spirit means that we are obediently walking according to the Spirit-inspired word of God. Though such a righteous life-style is not empirical evidence that God is working through us, the fact is that if we were not living the righteous life people would not conclude that God is working in us. People know that God is working in us when we do His will.

There are no side roads to the “leading of the Spirit.” In other words, the Spirit does not lead parallel to the road map of His direction through His written word. All objective leading by the Spirit comes to us through the inspired written word of the Spirit (2 Tm 3:16). Following the Spirit through His word is objective, that is, we read and walk. For this reason, one can walk in the light with confidence when led by the Spirit through the inspired word of God.

However, if there is a supposed direct and subjective leading of the Spirit through nudges and intuition that are separate from the written word of God, and is also contrary to the written word, then this leading would be false. If the leading is subjective, then one is left to his own declarations as to what the Spirit is supposedly doing in his life. And if one must personally declare his leading by the Spirit, then one can only give a personal testimony of the Spirit’s work in his life. Such a testimony cannot be used as an evidence to others that the Spirit is working in one’s life. We must keep in mind that many good people who have not obeyed the gospel, give their own testimony that the Spirit is leading them. But the Spirit does not work in the life of those who have not obeyed the gospel, otherwise the promise to “receive the Holy Spirit” in Acts 2:38 has no special reference to the baptized believer.

The Spirit of God indeed works in the life of God’s new creatures, but His leading is never contrary to what He has written. And certainly, if one would claim to be led by the Spirit, then we must assume that this person has been born again of the water (baptism) and of the Spirit (Jn 3:5). Any leading by the Spirit is reserved for new creatures in Christ.

It is the word of God that reveals the light of our Father. And it is our obedience to His Holy Spirit-inspired word that manifests the glory of God and the realm of obedience in which God's children walk. The psalmist wrote, "Your word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path" (Ps 119:105). Since it is not in us to direct our own ways (Jr 10:23), then our only option for walking with God in confidence is to walk in the light of His word. By our walk in His word, we manifest that we are His sons since we are obedient to Him as our Father.

This explains the meaning of the following prophecy that Paul quoted from Ezekiel that was made in reference to those who would be born into Christ: "I will dwell in them and walk in them. And I will be their God and they will be My people" (See Ez 37:26,27; 2 Co 6:16). John's commentary of this walk is easy to understand: "And this is love, that we walk according to His commandments. This is the commandment, that as you have heard from the beginning, you should walk in it" (2 Jn 6). This was Gaius' "walk in truth" (3 Jn 3), and also the apostle John's greatest joy (3 Jn 4). Christians are those about whom the Spirit wrote,

There is now, therefore, no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus, who do not walk according to the flesh but according to the Spirit (Rm 8:1; See Ep 2:10).

We objectively walk according to the Spirit when we live according to His directions. We can only know the direction in which we must walk by reading His road map.

E. Walk in obedience.

In reference to the preceding points, the following explanation of our walk with God would be redundant. Nevertheless, when the metaphor "walk" is used in the Bible, all reference is to something that involves obedience. "Walk" can never be metaphorical of some mysterious sensation that might come over us. It can never refer to some supposed inner urge of the Spirit that is not reflected in obedience. "Walk" is an action word, not a justification for spiritualism or an inactive faith. It is an action word that explains something we do, not what the Holy Spirit does. Walking assumes that we have taken ownership of our behavior, and thus, we will give account of our behavior before God (2 Co 5:10).

Paul wrote, "But God be thanked that though you were the bondservants of sin, yet you have obeyed from the heart that form of teaching that was delivered to you" (Rm 6:17). Teaching is inert if it is not put into action. An outline of scriptures on a piece of paper is worthless if there is no walking in life of the teaching of the Scriptures. Before outlines of teaching change lives, the teaching must get from the head to the heart. The Roman disciples had been delivered the outline. However, the teaching was brought to life only when they were obedient to what the Spirit wrote in the book of Romans.

Some fall into a deceptive religiosity in reference to our obedient walk with God. Some believe that they are walking with God as long as they have memorized a code of teaching, but do not necessarily respond by living the teaching. This would be a "faith only" belief in the sense that as long as one has faith in a correct doctrine, then he is saved without any behavioral response to what he knows. The error of this "faith only" religion is that we are not saved by knowledge, but by our walk (See Jn 13:34,35; 2 Co 5:10).

Other "faith only" folks refuse to make any outline of teaching, lest they be constructing some legal form of obedience by which they might be meritoriously justified before God. The error of these "faith only" folks is in the fact that their faith supposedly replaces any obedience from the heart to that which God commands. These are those who believe that obedience to any "form of teaching" is not necessary for one's salvation.

In both of the above theologies the adherents have difficulty in putting their faith into action. One relies on his knowledge of the truth, while the other relies on his fear of being meritoriously justified by obedience. The non-response of either group to any form of teaching has led them to have difficulty in getting the truth of God into a heart response. Both groups fail to understand that Christianity is a behavior of life that is guided by the word of God.

We would remind any "faith only" people that faith without works is dead (Js 2:17). Those the Holy Spirit used to be examples of faith in the greatest chapter of the Bible on faith, were those who responded with obedience to their faith in God. "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place that he would later receive as an inheritance, obeyed" (Hb 11:8). "By faith Noah ... prepared an ark ..." (Hb 11:7). "By faith Abel offered ..." (Hb 11:4). In view of these heroes of faith, we must conclude that obedience is a manifestation of a faith that is pleasing to God. Those who would eliminate obedience from faith should take their argument to Abraham, Noah and Abel, for it is beside these obedient fathers of the faith that we will all stand in judgment.

New creatures stay new because they walk in the light. In their walk in the light, the blood of Jesus keeps them new. If they would by chance terminate their walking, their cleansing by the blood of Jesus would also terminate. And because we know this, we keep on walking. We keep walking in order to stay new.

Chapter 8

NEW RESPONSIBILITIES

With the blessing of being created new in Christ, there comes new responsibilities. When Jesus spoke of bearing our own cross, He had more in mind than negative feedback from opposition that would result from living the life of a new creature. He bore a cross for us. That cross was more than a few hours on the cross itself. He bore the cross of Sonship from the moment of the cry of a newly born infant in a barn in Bethlehem to the time He bowed His head in death. In the garden, and before He assumed the responsibility of the old rugged cross outside Jerusalem, He prayed to the Father, “Your will be done” (Mt 26:42). And it was done to the moment He looked into heaven and said, “It is finished” (Jn 19:30). With the same willingness that Jesus relinquished His will to the Father, we too must bear our burden by relinquishing our own will to others. This is the cost of the cross, and thus the definition of discipleship as a new creature in Christ.

In Galatians 6:1-5, Paul concluded the letter to the disciples in Galatia with exhortations concerning discipleship responsibilities. He wrote, “Bear one another’s burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ” (Gal 6:2). It is the responsibility of all new creatures as a community of believers to help one another. “We then who are strong ought to bear the weaknesses of the weak and not to please ourselves” (Rm 15:1). We might ask why we have the responsibility to bear the burdens of our fellow new creatures. The answer is in our common obedience to the gospel and our character development for eternal dwelling. Therefore, “let every one of us please his neighbor for his good, to his edification” (Rm 15:2).

Bearing the burdens of others is the responsibility of following in the example of the One after whom we call ourselves disciples. Every day we remember the statement of Jesus, “Your will be done.” Paul explained this responsibility: “For even Christ did not please Himself...” (Rm 15:3). When Jesus bore the cross, it was a selfless act of not pleasing Himself, but acting on behalf of others. There can be no such thing as narcissistic discipleship. If we believe that we are the stars of our own little worlds, then we have not discovered the nature of Christianity. Christianity is never about us, but always about others. And when we have others first in our order of priorities, the serendipity is that we minister to our own spiritual well-being. This is precisely what Jesus meant when He made the following statement while holding a dripping towel in His hands that was marred with the dirt of His disciples’ feet: “If you know these things, happy are you if you do them” (Jn 13:17).

In Galatians 6:5 Paul turns to using a different word than the one he used in verse 2 in reference to the burdens (responsibilities) we bear as new creatures. The “load” one is to bear in verse 2 refers to a heavy load of responsibility. The Greek word in verse 5 refers to the burden a soldier must bear. In his duty to serve, a soldier has the responsibility to bear his own armor. In bearing our own responsibilities, we also have the responsibility of covering the back of our fellow soldier. In fact, bearing our own responsibilities includes being responsible for our brothers and sisters in Christ.

And so it is with the soldiers of Christ as new creatures. When one becomes a Christian, he must take ownership of burdens that must be born. This means every disciple must assume the responsibilities to do all that is included in being a disciple of Jesus. There are no freeloaders in the body of Christ. If one is not assuming his responsibility as a disciple, then he is dysfunctional as a member of the body.

One must be careful not to be guilty of that about which Jesus judged the religious lawyers of His day: “Woe to you lawyers also! For you load men with burdens hard to bear, and you yourselves do not touch the burdens with one of your fingers” (Lk 11:46). The religious lawyers of Judaism were binding legal requirements of obedience on the people that were hard to bear, which burdens they themselves could not bear.

There will always be those who will bind where God has not bound. For example, some bind the teaching that one must be present at a certain number of assemblies of the saints in order to be considered “faithful.” Others bind certain ceremonial procedures of assembly by which the Lord’s Supper is to be served. We have always been fascinated with the inconsistency by which some, in their ignorance of the Scriptures, have bound that the bread must be served before the fruit of the vine in the Lord's Supper. They have never considered the historical fact of Luke's record of the event that Jesus first served the cup, then the bread, and then the cup again (Lk 22:17-20). The list could go on as legalistic lawyers make it their duty to bind burdens where God has not bound.

But there are other ways one can bind burdens on others that are difficult to bear. It can be that when one does not assume his responsibility of being a responsible disciple, he too loads a burden on other brothers that is hard for them to bear. Lazy disciples, for example, are always a burden to someone else.

Those who will not assume their responsibility to bear the burdens of discipleship cannot be disciples. In fact, the Holy Spirit said the following in reference to those who would not work at a job in order to support themselves financially:

Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you withdraw yourselves from every brother who walks disorderly and not after the tradition that he received from us (2 Th 3:6).

The tradition that Paul and his fellow traveling evangelists left with the Thessalonian disciples was that he and those with him “worked with labor and hardship night and day so that we might not be a burden to any of you” (2 Th 3:8). In the historical context of Paul's statements, there were some who had quit their jobs, and thus, had become a financial burden to the church. If one becomes a financial burden to the body, then he is to be put out of the body. He is to be disfellowshipped because he is not assuming his responsibility to work with his own hands to support himself.

As a disciple of Jesus, we have assumed burdens that come with our new relationship with God. Becoming a new creature is not like joining a social club wherein one simply shows up on Sunday morning to keep up his membership. Burden bearing means work, and work means assuming responsibilities. It means that we must engage in the ministry of the saints. This was the ministry for which Stephanas and his family were known, for they had “dedicated themselves to the ministry of the saints” (1 Co 16:15). The following are general areas of responsibility that one must assume personally as a disciple, as well as general areas of ministry to others:

A. Responsibility of faithfulness.

Faithfulness means that one assumes the responsibility to act on the opportunities that have been set before us as disciples. It means taking ownership of our discipleship. If taking ownership costs us something, then this is the cost of discipleship we must pay. For example, if one has the opportunity to buy a Bible by which he would be further taught in the word of God, then he must personally buy the Bible. He must not expect someone else to take ownership (buy) to buy a Bible for us, for it is our personal responsibility to take advantage of opportunities that are set before us. This is being faithful to Jesus as His disciples. Someone who owns a cellphone, but clamors to others to give him a Bible, is not taking ownership for his spiritual growth and discipleship.

It was not coincidental that Jesus presented three parables at the end of His ministry concerning faithfulness in taking ownership of our discipleship. Each parable explains a different aspect of the responsibilities that we must bear if we would be saints prepared for eternal dwelling.

1. Parable of the virgins (Mt 25:1-13): Jesus explained the nature of two groups of people in reference to their preparation for the coming bridegroom. Five virgins were defined as foolish because of their lack of acquiring that which would guarantee their preparation for the coming of the bridegroom. Their lack of preparation resulted in their being left. They were foolish simply because they did not assume their responsibility to provide for themselves that which would allow them to be prepared.

The wise virgins assumed their responsibility to be prepared. They had bought for themselves extra oil for their lamps, and thus, did not expect someone else to give them the oil, as did the foolish virgins. They were wise in that they foresaw a delay of the bridegroom, and thus took ownership of being prepared by acquiring extra oil.

Jesus concluded the parable by saying, “Therefore, watch, for you know neither the day nor the hour” of the coming of the bridegroom (Mt 25:13). New creatures have the responsibility to be prepared at all times for either their end in this life, or the end of all things. And being prepared means that we must assume the responsibility of preparing ourselves. We must not think that we can borrow from others in order to be spiritually prepared for Jesus.

2. Parable of the talents (Mt 25:14-30): In view of the outer darkness that is coming, Jesus metaphorically illustrated His coming as a master who delivered into the hands of his bondservants a number of talents. Five talents were given to one bondservant, two to another, and only one to the last. The assumption was that each bondservant would be faithful by assuming his responsibility to use the talents to the advantage of the master. Unfortunately, only two bondservants were faithful in their responsibilities. The one-talent bondservant simply buried his responsibility, while giving the excuse that he was afraid of the master. The master judged this individual with harsh words: “You wicked and lazy bondservant ...” (Mt 25:26). If one is not responsible in using those opportunities given to him, then he is wicked and lazy.

3. Parable of sheep and goats (Mt 25:31-46). This is the parable of assuming the responsibilities that come with discipleship. When presented with the opportunities to serve, those on the right hand were faithful in their service. The Son of Man then said to them, “Come, you blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world” (Mt 25:34).

However, those on the left hand were not responsible disciples in their service of others. To these it was said, “Depart from Me you cursed into everlasting fire that is prepared for the devil and his angels” (Mt 25:41). These had refused to accept the burden of service, and thus, they were not worthy of any reward. When speaking of discipleship in the kingdom, reward always presupposes service.

When one becomes a new creature in Christ, he must take ownership of his responsibilities as a new creature. For example, Jesus said, “But I say to you, that every idle word that men will speak, they will give account for it in the day of judgment” (Mt 12:36). As a new creature in Christ, we are responsible even for every foolish word that might come from our mouths.

When our brother is falling under the load of a difficult burden in his life, it is the responsibility of other brethren to faithfully aid in bearing his burden. Paul exhorted, “Bear one another’s burdens ...” (Gl 6:2). Each disciple has the responsibility of bearing the burdens of those who have fallen under their burdens (See Gl 6:1). When Paul listed the fruit of the Spirit in Galatians 5, he listed one fruit to be “faithfulness.” This use of the word “faithfulness” was not in reference to faithfulness to God, but faithfulness to one another as members of the body. We must always be there for our fellow brother in Christ. Paul wrote, “Let each one not look out merely for his own interests, but also for the interests of others” (Ph 2:4). This is Christian faithfulness. Christians can never live isolated lives in reference to the brotherhood of believers. There is simply no such thing as a hermit Christian.

Faithfulness means that one is steadfast, or consistent as a disciple throughout his life. One’s faithful consistency in behavior allows him to be a rock of steadfastness for others. It is as John revealed: “Be faithful unto death and I will give you the crown of life” (Rv 2:10). We must “not become weary in doing good, for in due time we will reap if we do not give up” (Gl 6:9). New creatures must always keep in mind what Paul said in 1 Corinthians 15:58: “Therefore, my beloved brethren, be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord.”

New creatures are new in behavior because they have obeyed the gospel (Gl 3:26-29). They are “in Christ,” and thus their labors are not in vain in reference to the reward that is coming for the faithful. If we keep our minds focused on the reward that results from faithfulness to God, we will not become weary in doing good. We are thus steadfast in the Lord because our labors are profitable for eternal purposes. When enduring the trials of this world, every new creature must remember the encouraging words of James: “Blessed is the man who endures temptation, for when he is tried, he will receive the crown of life that the Lord has promised to those who love Him” (Js 1:12).

B. Responsibility of growth:

The book of Hebrews was written to those who had been disciples for a number of years. It was not written to novice Christians. The problem the Hebrew writer approached was that the Jewish Christians to whom the letter was addressed were being intimidated by their hostile Jewish environment in the latter years of national Israel. The hostility of Jewish zealots against Rome eventually generated the anger of Rome. God used this anger to unleash His proxy judgment against national Israel which eventually led to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. This termination of national Israel was the fulfillment of the Old Testament prophets who said that Israel would come to a close. But during the few years leading up to the end of national Israel, there was a great deal of intimidation by the zealot Jews who sought to gain independence from Rome.

In the middle of all the political turmoil of the day, some Jewish Christians were on the verge of relinquishing to the social pressure of the nationalistic Jews. They were on their way back to Judaism from which they had been previously set free through their obedience to the gospel (See Gl 5:1). The fact that they were even considering a return to the Sinai law and sacrifices was because they had not grown in the knowledge of the fullness of Christ. It was in this context that the Hebrew writer wrote the stern rebuke of Hebrews 5:12:

For though by this time you ought to be teachers, you have need that one teach you again the first principles of the oracles of God. And you have come to need milk and not solid food.

This is one statement that should never have to be written to those who have been Christians for some time. The problem of apostasy with these Jewish Christians was that they failed to keep studying the Scriptures in order to grow to be teachers. This may shed some light on what the Jewish Peter said to some of his fellow Jews about three years before the fall of Jerusalem: “But grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pt 3:18).

We think that both Hebrews and 2 Peter were written to Jewish Christians immediately before the end of national Israel in A.D. 70. Some Jewish Christians had already succumbed to the nationalistic movement of Judaism as dogs returning to their own vomit (See 2 Pt 2:20-22). Both the Hebrew writer and Peter sought to stop the flow of Jewish Christians back to Judaism. Some Jewish Christians had succumbed to the intimidation of the zealot Jews, and were thus giving up their total faith in Jesus.

The embarrassing rebuke of the Hebrew writer assumes that there must be growth in knowledge of the word of God. There must be growth to the point that there is absolutely no other option but Jesus Christ. If there is no growth, then one is in the process of backsliding from Jesus into his former religiosity. And herein is the problem with many who vainly cry out, “Lord, Lord” and pretend to be dedicated to Jesus. They seek to substitute a vigorous assembly that is patterned after the religions around them for a knowledge of what Jesus desires. We must not be deceived into thinking that colorful assemblies are a substitute for a knowledge of Jesus. Some religious groups have given up a knowledge of the word of God, and thus, seek to validate their faith by a liturgical concert on Sunday morning that is often in competition with the group down the street. The group that has the best band wins out. But narcissistic assemblies can never produce the acceptable faith that is to be based on the word of Christ (Rm 10:17).

If there is no growth in the word of God, then there is a slow death. The process of death is so slow that few wake up to the fact that they have created a religion that takes the place of a faith that is based on a knowledge of the word of God (See Hs 4:6). They replaced a word-based faith with a religiosity that is validated by the extreme emotional outpouring of the adherents. This was the case with the Jewish opposition to Jesus during His earthly ministry.

Jesus ministered among religious Jews who had rejected the commandment of God in order that they might keep their traditional religious behavior (Mk 7:9). This religion was so foreign to what God administered to Israel through the Sinai law, that Paul, who was previously zealous in the religion, later, after his conversion, referred to the religion as the “Jews’ religion,” or Judaism (Gl 1:13). Would Paul write of some religions today as the “African’s religion,” or the “Philippine’s religion,” etc.?

Our lack of spiritual growth is often manifested in the childish ways by which we conduct ourselves with our brothers in Christ. At least this was the problem with some of the disciples in Corinth. Paul indirectly rebuked them with the statement, “When I was a child I spoke as a child. I understood as a child. I thought as a child. But when I became a man, I put away childish things” (1 Co 13:11). When one behaves as a fifty-year old child among his brethren, then he is a child who has not put away childish ways. When we conduct our worship to God in a way that is pleasing to our children, then we have gone backward, not forward. Those who are mature in Christ do not worship as children.

As a baby yearns for milk, so should new creatures yearn for the word of God in order that they may spiritually grow. “As newborn babes,” Peter exhorted, “desire the sincere milk of the word so that you may grow up to salvation” (1 Pt 2:2). Notice that Peter used a simile in reference to our yearning. One is not to be a child, but as a child who yearns for milk. Those who are adults, but are as children, are such because they have not yearned for the word of God. The simile is used in reference to the yearning of the disciple who seeks to grow. One’s maturity in Christ is revealed by his yearning for the word of God. If there is no yearning, then there is no spiritual growth in the word of God.

When one who has been in the faith for years is tempted to fall back into the ways of the world, or to a previous false religion out of which he came, then he has not taken ownership of his responsibility to grow in the knowledge of the word of God. If one is fearful of teaching others what he knows about the Bible, then he has not accepted his responsibility to study his Bible in order to have the confidence to teach. There is no excuse for not growing in the faith. If one does not spiritually grow, then he has not taken ownership of his faith. If one does not study his Bible, then he is a new creature in the process of becoming old.

C. Responsibility of self-control:

Taking responsibility of our faith involves self-control over our attitudes and behavior. Self-control is to be exercised over the totality of our behavior, both in the physical realm, as well in the emotional. Paul continued to exercise self-control over the desires of the flesh: “But I discipline my body and bring it into subjection ...” (1 Co 9:27).

James focused on the most difficult part of our behavior that we must bring under control. “For every kind of beasts and birds ... is tamed and has been tamed by mankind. But no one can tame the tongue” (Js 3:7,8). He wrote, “It is an unruly evil full of deadly poison” (Js 3:8). It is an unruly evil that must be brought under control, for “every idle word that men will speak, they will give account for it in the day of judgment” (Mt 12:36).

In reference to self-control, Jesus went deeper into the heart of man. He said, “... whoever is angry with his brother will be in danger of the judgment” (Mt 5:22). And, “whoever looks at a woman to lust for her has already committed adultery with her in his heart” (Mt 5:28). It may be easy to exercise self-control over one’s behavior. But it is most difficult to dig deep into our hearts and discipline our thoughts and intents. Nevertheless, it is the challenge of the new creature to grow in self-control of his thoughts. And according to Hebrews 4:12, there is only one way this task can be accomplished in reference to the will of God: “For the word of God is living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing of the soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow, and able to judge the thoughts and intents of the heart.”

If one does not know the will of God concerning how we must think in his heart, then certainly he cannot control himself according to spiritual matters. Those who do not know the word of God often use the thinking of the world as the standard by which they judge their attitudes and actions. For new creatures in Christ, however, the world is not the standard of Christian thinking and behavior. The Christian’s standard is the word of God, for it is only the word of God by which Christians seek to guide their innermost feelings and intentions.

D. Responsibility of service:

When one becomes a new creature in Christ, he has joined himself to a group of slaves who are daily looking for someone to serve. The community of new creatures is defined by those who have dedicated themselves to serve the needs of one another (See 1 Co 16:15,16). The behavior of this community was explained by Jesus: “But whoever desires to be great among you, let him be your servant” (Mt 20:26).

In order that there be no misunderstanding among His disciples, Jesus went beyond the use of the word “servant,” to the slaves working in the field. “And whoever desires to be first among you, let him be your bondservant” (Mt 20:27). The Greek word for “bondservant” is doulos. This is the word for slave. The community of God, therefore, is a community of slaves. This community is thus defined as a culture of service, not superiority; humility, not haughtiness.

E. Responsibility of brotherhood:

When Peter said to love the brotherhood, he was taking our love to a vast worldwide body of people (1 Pt 2:17). We might view our responsibility to love and serve into two realms of application:

1. Community of priests to the world: As Israel of old, the church is a community of priests (1 Pt 2:9). Israel had the responsibility as a nation of priests to exercise their duties as priests to the rest of the world that would pass through Palestine.

So also must the church of priests who are new creatures in Christ. We are not priests simply to ourselves, but to the world around us. When the world needs comfort, we must be there for those who need comfort. When the world needs prayer, we must be there as mediators to God on their behalf. When those of the world fall into unfortunate circumstances, we are to be priests of God ministering to their needs (Gl 6:10). This is the nature of the brotherhood with whom every new creature in Christ has a priestly part. Someone wisely wrote, “The best exercise for the heart is to reach down and pick somebody up.” So we will love our neighbor as ourselves as we look for opportunities to carry out our priestly duties (Mt 19:19).

2. Community of priests to themselves: Every saint of God is in service as a priest to other saints. When God sequestered the attention of Cain concerning the whereabouts of Abel, his brother, Cain responded to God, “Am I my brother’s keeper?” (Gn 4:9). And the answer is Yes!

As Cain was to be the keeper of his physical brother, every brother in Christ is the keeper of his spiritual brother. In the world of sin around us, it is simply unnatural for the strong to protect the weak. Animals devour the weak. Politicians overcome the weak. Society as a whole often ignores the weak. But in the community of God, it is natural to protect the weak. Brethren are to “receive him who is weak in the faith ...” (Rm 14:1). “We then who are strong ought to bear the weaknesses of the weak ...” (Rm 15:1).

Our concern for one another is as someone wrote, “We are not put on this earth to see through one another, but to see one another through.” So it is true as another said, “A man is never so tall as when he stoops to help another.” New creatures in Christ must start their journey on how they can care for others as they were cared for as novice Christians. It is the responsibility of every disciple to become strong in the faith in order to be able to care for the weak.

Chapter 9

NEW RIGHTEOUSNESS

The Hebrew writer spoke of the “new and living way that He [Jesus] has consecrated” for us (Hb 10:20). This is the “way of righteousness” into which one is born as a new creature in Christ (2 Pt 2:21). It is a new and living way because of the blessing of the righteousness of God, as well as our walk in His righteousness.

In Ephesians 6:14 Paul exhorted Christians to “put on the breastplate of righteousness.” This exhortation is in the context of his statement to “take up the whole armor of God so that you may be able to withstand in the evil day ...” (Ep 6:13). In the context of the verb tense, “having done,” Paul’s exhortation is that we stand on what has already been done for us. The Ephesians had girded themselves with the truth, for they obeyed the truth of the gospel. They had shod their feet with the gospel of peace. And in this context, they had put on the breastplate of righteousness. Because these things had already been done in their lives at the time they came into Christ, they were to stand on this firm foundation.

According to Greek dictionaries, the word “righteousness” means integrity, virtue, purity of life, uprightness; correct thinking, feeling and behavior. All these attributes refer to something for which those who possess them are responsible to maintain, and in which to spiritually grow. Paul reflected on righteousness as our defense when he made the statement, “But in all things approving ourselves as servants of God ... in the armor of righteousness ...” (2 Co 6:4,7). In the context of this statement, it seems that Paul set forth his behavior as proof of his servanthood before God. His defense was his obedience.

The word “righteousness” refers to doing that which is right in the sight of God. It is this righteousness that new creatures do. But the righteousness of God is something that God does for us when we are born again as new creatures in Christ. This is the “imputed” righteousness whereupon God makes us new creatures through the cleansing blood of Jesus. It is imperative that we make a distinction between the righteousness we do, and the righteousness that God gives as a blessing in reference to our obedience of the gospel. The context in which the word “righteousness” is used will define which righteousness is under discussion.

The unbeliever must seek the righteousness of God that comes through obedience of the gospel. The believer must take ownership of the righteousness by which he is approved to be a servant of God. If one is an unbeliever, he must seek the righteousness of God. If he is a believer, he must live righteously before God.

A. Seek the righteousness of God:

Romans 10 is Paul’s conclusion to his argument about the futility of unbelieving Israel to obtain the righteousness of God. “For they [Israel] being ignorant of God’s righteousness and seeking to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God” (Rm 10:3). Israel sought the righteousness of God through their own means of law-keeping. And in doing so, they established their own righteousness, that is, their own system of law by which they sought to be justified before God. But they were mistaken in their efforts.

“For Christ is the end of law for righteousness to everyone who believes” (Rm 10:4). Paul added, “For with the heart man believes unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made to salvation” (Rm 10:10). The righteousness of God is not acquired through meritorious works of law, but through faith. Since it is “the righteousness that is of faith,” then it is not attained by meritorious obedience (Rm 9:30). Paul reminded his readers, “But Israel, who followed after the law of righteousness, has not attained to the law” (Rm 9:31). Israel did not attain unto the righteousness of God, “because they did not seek it by faith, but as if it were by works” (Rm 9:32).

The righteousness of God is in being right before God. But since all have sinned and fallen short of perfect law-keeping, then no one can attain unto the righteousness of God through meritorious works of law. In reference to law-keeping, “There is none righteous, no, not one” (Rm 3:10). It is for this reason that we seek the righteousness of God through our trust (faith) in God to provide His grace through our Lord Jesus Christ. His righteousness is not demanded through our keeping of law, but graciously given as a result of our obedient response to the sacrificial offering of His Son.

But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the Prophets, even the righteousness of God that is by the faith of Jesus Christ to all those who believe ...” (Rm 3:21,22).

Therefore, all new creatures who have been baptized into Christ are “justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus” (Rm 3:24). All those who would seek the righteousness of God in Christ, must do that which brings one into Christ (See Gl 3:26-29).

We thus seek to be “found in Him,” Paul wrote, “not having my own righteousness that is from law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness that is from God by faith” (Ph 3:9). We thus seek His righteousness, but we seek it on His terms (Mt 6:33). In our obedience to His terms we fulfill the meaning of Jesus’ statement in the beatitudes: “Blessed are those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they will be filled” (Mt 5:6).

B. Workers of righteousness:

We seek the righteousness of God in order to become new creatures by His grace. But once we come into Christ, we are responsible to be workers of righteousness, or doing that which is right before God. This is the devoted life about which Peter commended Cornelius: “But in every nation he who fears Him and works righteousness is accepted by Him” (At 10:35). The Hebrew writer spoke of those heroes of faith, “who through faith conquered kingdoms, worked righteousness ...” (Hb 11:33). So Paul exhorted Timothy, “But you, O man of God, ... follow after righteousness ...” (1 Tm 6:11). “Pursue righteousness ...” (2 Tm 2:22).

When one works righteousness, he is identified as one who has been born of God. “If you know that He is righteous, you know that everyone who practices righteousness has been born from Him” (1 Jn 2:29). There is, therefore, no “faith only” business among the new creatures in Christ (See Js 2:14-26). The “practice of righteousness” is not meritorious, but living in obedience to the One who made them righteous through the blood of Jesus. For this reason, John cautioned, “Little children, let no one deceive you. He who practices right- eousness is righteous, just as He is righteous” (1 Jn 3:7).

Doing that which is right in the sight of God is the signal of discipleship according to John’s definition. “Whoever does not practice righteousness is not from God, nor the one who does not love his brother” (1 Jn 3:10). Practicing righteousness is a life-style. It is walking in the light as Jesus is in the light (1 Jn 1:7).

In our behavior of doing that which is right, Jesus cautioned His disciples about their behavior. The religious leaders during His ministry wrongly sought to be righteous according to law. But Jesus said that the righteousness of His disciples must go beyond law-keeping. Since they were to be motivated by love (Jn 13:34,35), then their righteousness must not be limited to law. Jesus expressed this truth in the following statement: “For I say to you, that unless your righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, you will not enter the kingdom of heaven” (Mt 5:20).

Unless our love takes us beyond the limits of law, we are not practicing the righteousness of the God of love. God did not “so love the world” through law (See Jn 3:16). His love for us was through grace, not law. In the same manner, if we would practice the righteousness that goes beyond law, then our righteousness will exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees.

C. Preachers of righteousness:

To define the righteousness that we preach, the Hebrew writer stated in the context of his rebuke that his readers should be teachers of the word, “For everyone who partakes of milk is unskilled in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe” (Hb 5:13). When one is skilled in the righteousness of God, then he is knowledgeable of His Bible. Paul explained, “All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable ... for instruction in righteousness” (2 Tm 3:16). One is instructed in righteousness when he studies to show himself approved before God (2 Tm 2:15). Since the word of God is that which instructs one in righteousness, then those who do not know the word of God cannot attain unto the practice of righteousness.

It is the word of righteousness that Noah preached to his generation. Noah was a “preacher of righteousness” (2 Pt 2:5). And for this reason, he “became heir of the righteousness that is according to faith” (Hb 11:7). Noah became the heir of righteousness because he preached the will of God to the people. In doing the same, the disciples of Jesus can increase the fruit of their righteousness. “Now He who provides seed to the sower and bread for food will supply and multiply your seed for sowing and increase the fruit of your righteousness” (2 Co 9:10).

Bringing forth fruit from our righteousness involves our proclamation of the righteousness of God to the world. This point is clearly revealed in Paul’s explanation of how the Gentiles attained unto the righteousness of God through the preaching of the gospel. He begins with a series of questions:

How then will they [Gentiles] call on Him in whom they have not believed? And how will they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how will they hear without a preacher? (Rm 10:14).

These questions must stimulate within us a Noah’s faith that should move us to preach the righteousness of God. Paul concluded his series of questions with another question: “And how will they preach unless they are sent?” (Rm 10:15). The Hebrew writer commended Noah for being a preacher of righteousness, and thus an heir of the righteousness of God. Paul blessed the feet that would take every new creature into all the world with the word of righteousness: “How beautiful are the feet of those who bring glad tidings of good things” (Rm 10:15).

It is in this context of preaching the word of righteousness that Paul made the statement, “So then faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of Christ” (Rm 10:17). When we preach the righteousness of God (grace and faith), faith springs forth in the hearts of those who hear. And without this faith, the unbeliever is not motivated to respond with obedience to the good news. It is for this reason that we must do today what the early disciples did in the first century: “Their sound went into all the earth and their words to the ends of the world” (Rm 10:18).

D. Persecuted for righteousness:

In the beatitudes, Jesus explained the journey of the transformed life from the time of mourning over one’s sin to the time when one lives righteously before God (Mt 5:1-12). He concluded that the world would not appreciate the one who gives up the ways of the world. One’s righteous living will intimidate and embarrass those of the world.

Jesus’ final words of the beatitudes were words of encouragement for those who dedicated themselves to live the life of the righteous new creature: “Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness’ sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven” (Mt 5:10). The righteousness of the new creature shames those who walk in the world. And for this reason, Paul encouraged Timothy, “Yes, and all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution” (2 Tm 3:12). If one would choose to live the life of righteousness, then he will suffer persecution (1 Pt 4:16).

Those who persecuted Paul and Barnabas were labelled by Paul to be enemies of all righteousness. The enemies were such because they were “full of all deceit and all fraud,” and thus, they were the “enemy of all righteousness” (At 13:10).

Because of persecution from the enemies of righteousness, some early Christians turned back to the pollutions of the unrighteous. They again entangled themselves in the ways of the world. Peter wrote of such backsliders: “For it would have been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than having known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered to them” (2 Pt 2:21). The way of righteousness in a world of deceit and fraud is a way of persecution.

If the new creature endures the persecution, he will receive the crown of life (Rv 2:10). Those who are persecuted for righteousness sake must always remember the promise of the Holy Spirit:

Blessed is the man who endures temptation, for when he is tried, he will receive the crown of life that the Lord has promised to those who love Him (Js 1:12).

E. Judged by righteousness:

God has appointed a time when He will judge the world through Jesus. We must all stand before Him in order to give account of our deeds (2 Co 5:10). God “will judge the world in righteousness by the Man whom He has ordained” (At 17:31). Those who are unrighteous before God should be in fear of this coming judgment. At least Felix believed enough in the prophets that Paul’s speech before him stirred his conscience. “Now as he [Paul] reasoned about righteousness, self-control and the judgment to come, Felix became frightened ...” (At 24:25).

Those who have given themselves to trust in the grace of God need not be terrified of the coming judgment. They know, “*that as sin has reigned in death, even so grace might reign through righteousness to eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rm 5:21). The righteous must never forget what Paul, in the final hours of his life, never forgot:

*Finally, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, will give me at that day, and not only to me, but also to all those who have loved His appearing (2 Tm 4:8).

Book 64

Character For Christ

On Friday evenings in Cape Town, South Africa, one can drive through some communities and smell the luscious aroma of lamb chops being cooked on coals in backyards. The scent of a feast is in the air. It is a smell that is most welcoming, so much so that one is encouraged to rush home and do the same. There is such an appeal to the aroma that one can sense the community of those who are participating in the feast, desiring to join in the fellowship.

Paul wrote, “Now thanks be to God who always leads us in triumph in Christ and manifests the aroma of His knowledge through us in every place” (2 Co 2:14). When one is filled with the aroma of the knowledge of God, there is an appeal to his character that draws others. It is an appeal that is so strong that when others get a sniff of the aroma, they are drawn to its origins. They are so drawn that they seek to be as that to which they are drawn. We understand, therefore, what Jesus meant when He said, “Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven” (Mt 5:16). When God is working in us, He is appealing to others to come His way through us. The aroma of Christ that goes out from our behavior encourages others to seek that which makes us who we are.

The scent of Christ should be so strong in our character that others should be driven to inquire concerning what makes us who we are. This was certainly in the mind of Peter when the Holy Spirit moved his hand to write, “But sanctify Christ as Lord God in your hearts and be ready always to give a defense to everyone who asks you a reason for the hope that is in you ...” (1 Pt 3:15). When we make Jesus holy in our characters, we move others to come our way. And when they arrive, they are driven to inquire. This is the power of the sanctified character for Christ. This is our ambition, our struggle, our victory. We seek to manifest in our lives the aroma of our Lord Jesus Christ.

When the word “character” is used in literature, writers often use it more in the negative sense. It is often said, “He was some character,” meaning that his personality was different, if not an anomaly of correct social behavior.

But we would use the word in a positive sense in reference to defining the temperament or mentality of a particular person, particularly in reference to our “transformed disposition” in Christ (Rm 12:2). This transformed disposition would identify the nature of Christ insofar as our disposition manifests the character of Christ. The transformed Christian must emulate the nature of who Jesus is.

Dictionaries define character to be the mental and moral qualities that are distinctive to a particular individual. We would use synonyms as personality, nature or psyche in order to be more specific in reference to the character of an individual. In fact, we have found that there are at least fifteen synonyms in the common dictionary that would refer to the mental and moral qualities that define the personality (character) of any individual. All synonymous words define the mental characteristics and behavior of each person in a society that makes him or her unique as a person. When we apply this definition to the Christian, we seek to define an individual after the character of Christ that makes one unique in the world in which we live.

The word “different” would be a good word to use when identifying the character of each individual of society, for we are all unique in our character. We are all “different” according to our character when we compare the diversity of personalities that make up the human race. Among all the individuals of a society, Christians are to be “different.” They are to be so different that others should be moved to inquire concerning their “difference.”

God did not make us clones, neither did He intend that Christianity would clone us into a legal religiosity. If we were clones, we would be a cult. The fact that we are set free in Christ, and are under a mandate never to be brought into the bondage of cloning (Gl 5:1), means that God intends that our characters be transformed into the image of Christ.

Each of us seeks to exemplify the maximums of Jesus' character in our lives, depending on our background and uniqueness. Christianity is reflected differently in every Christian simply because we were not created with the same personality. However, when we all seek to manifest Christ in our lives, we are brought closer together as we follow the same road map to character building.

All Christians are focused on transforming their characters after the image of Christ. He is the norm around whom we mold our personality. Paul wrote,

And be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God (Rm 12:2).

President Abraham Lincoln said many years ago, "Character is like a tree, and reputation like its shadow. The shadow is what we think of it; the tree is the real thing." As Christians, we might look at ourselves as "shadows" of Christ. When people see the transformed character they witness in our lives, they must be drawn to the real thing, that is, Christ. This is what Jesus said of Himself in reference to His character being the reflection of the Father: "Not that anyone has seen the Father; except He who is from God. He has seen the Father" (Jn 6:46). And more specifically, He said, "He who has seen Me has seen the Father" (Jn 14:9). It is not that we see a physical image of the Father in Jesus, for God is spirit (Jn 4:24). Jesus revealed the character, personality, nature, divinity, etc. of the Father. Jesus gave up the "form of God" in His incarnation, but He did not give up the character of God. And since He manifested the character of God, we read our Bibles in order to understand who God is. We look to Jesus in order to discover the image of the One who sent the model for character building.

Since our character is what we are, and our reputation is what one is thought to be through the eyes of others, then we must make sure that our reputation reflects the aroma of Christ. Paul wrote of himself and other Christians, "*Now thanks be to God who always leads us in triumph in Christ and manifests the aroma of His knowledge through us in every place" (2 Co 2:14). Our lives must manifest to others "the aroma [of Christ] from life to life" (2 Co 2:16).

Because we are to reflect the character of Christ, we should give all heed to protect our character from being stained by the world. Joel Hawes said, "Character is like white paper; if one is blotted, it can hardly ever be made to appear white as before." If one would flaw his character by sin, then he has damaged his reputation. He will reflect a flawed image of Christ to his friends. Lord Chesterfield said it correctly: "Your moral character must be not only pure, but, like Caesar's wife, unsuspected." We seek to have a character that does not move people to question our motives, and above all, to question the authenticity of Jesus as the Son of God.

Translators often used the word "virtue" to identify the character of the Christian as revealed and explained in the New Testament. By using the word "virtue," the Holy Spirit was challenging each disciple of Jesus to develop continually his character after the image of Jesus.

Consider 2 Peter 1:3 in view of what God has made available for us in order to develop our characters:

... His divine power has given to us all things that pertain to life and godliness through the knowledge of Him who has called us to glory and virtue" (2 Pt 1:3).

The commentary of this statement would be 2 Timothy 3:16: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness ...." In view of this statement of Paul in 2 Timothy 3:16, we can better understand in the following statement Peter's exhortation to grow our character spiritually:

... giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge self-control, and to self-control patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness love (2 Pt 1:5-7).

The Christian life is a transforming adventure to develop our characters after Christ in order that we become spiritual residents of eternal heaven. It is always our challenge to transform every area of our character in order to correct dysfunctions in our personalities and behavior. When we consider our present character, we must always conclude that we are all in some ways dysfunctional. We are flawed with humanity. We need direction and molding from One who is not of this world. We thus pray that God will lead us into circumstances, or encounters with other characters, in order that we discover those areas in our personalities that need to be fine-tuned. Our relationship with others is the opportunity to discover ourselves.

In the following chapters we seek to set forth some areas where one can focus on important points of character in order to build one's personality to be more profitable for God. We do not presume to cover the subject in its entirety. We simply seek to establish a foundation upon which we can aid in the transforming of our minds so that we better reflect the aroma of Christ. Our goal in this process of transformation is to generate that about which Peter wrote in 1 Peter 3:15:

But sanctify Christ as Lord God in your hearts and be ready always to give a defense to everyone who asks you a reason for the hope that is in you, yet with meekness and fear.

Chapter 1

CHARACTER THROUGH WISDOM

We remember in the early years on a Kansas farm when we first started to study the Bible. The very first oracles we were instructed to read by our mother was Solomon's wisdom in the book of Proverbs. Wisdom is so precious to the desires of a young man. In one's years of maturing, it should be the desire of every young person not simply to seek wisdom, but the wisdom that is from above, which wisdom God freely gives.

Solomon personified the greatness of wisdom in Proverbs in order to help those who were young as ourselves who desired so much to grow in wisdom. Solomon counselled,

My son, if you will receive my words and treasure my commandments within you, so that you incline your ear to wisdom and apply your heart to understanding, yes, if you cry out after knowledge and lift up your voice for understanding, if you seek her [wisdom] as silver and search for her as for hidden treasures, then you will understand the fear of the Lord and find the knowledge of God (Pv 2:1-5).

Youth is a time in life when we do not know that we do not know everything, and thus, we often parade ourselves as fools in our own foolishness. So we arrogantly proceed in life to the point that we humbly realize that we do not know, and thus, we somewhat conquer our youthful arrogance and then open ourselves to be taught. It is then that our faith must drive us to the Divine teacher. It is then that we "understand the fear of the Lord and find the knowledge of God" (Pv 2:5). Maybe it is our youthful insecurity that drives us to seek that which would help us overcome our lack of self-esteem, for Daniel wrote, "And those who are wise will shine as brightness of the firmament" (Dn 12:3).

Our faith must be in Him who knows all things, and thus, we must know enough to go to the source of all wisdom. We trust in James' promise: "If any of you lacks wisdom, let him ask of God who gives to all liberally and without reproach. And it will be given to him" (Js 1:5). It is often the case that we have a great deal of knowledge, but little wisdom to apply to life that which we know. Our first need, therefore, is for wisdom, for it is wise to seek knowledge that will allow us to be successful in life. It is wisdom that puts our knowledge to work for our success.

In our younger years we must know enough to realize that the road to maturity is paved with the wisdom of God. If we are to behave wisely, then we need to be on our knees for that which we so covet. The first step on the road to gaining wisdom is made after coming from our knees in prayer.

James again instructed, "Who is a wise and understanding man among you? Let him show by good behavior his works in meekness of wisdom" (Js 3:13). It is not a coincidence that wisdom makes one meek. Through wisdom we understand that we are human. Wisdom is thus the enemy of arrogance, and for this reason, the more we grow in wisdom, the more opportunity we have to correct our ways. The wise are not judges of others. They realize that that about which they would judge others, they too are guilty. The wise will "first remove the beam" that is in his own eye before considering the speck that is in his brother's eye (See Mt 7:3-5). James explained this wisdom in the following manner:

But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, reasonable, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy (Js 3:17).

A. Heavenly wisdom that is pure.

Remember Paul's advice to Timothy? "Now the purpose of the commandment is love out of a pure heart ..." (1 Tm 1:5; see 2 Tm 2:22). What better advice could an older man of God give to a young evangelist? Paul continued by encouraging Timothy to hold “the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience” (1 Tm 3:9). “Keep yourself pure,” he continued (1 Tm 5:22). The wisdom of Paul’s advice rests on the truth that “to the pure all things are pure” (Ti 1:15).

A truly wise person will first seek to keep his life pure. For this reason, and especially for a young person, one should make every effort to flee that which would endanger one’s purity (1 Tm 6:11). Paul instructed, “Flee also youthful lusts. But pursue righteousness ...” (2 Tm 2:22). Our character for Christ will shine through our pure behavior. Those who have corrupted their behavior with the impurity of sin, and yet claim to be Christian, have manifested the nature of a dysfunctional spiritual character.

The wisdom from above is manifested in the life of the one who has enough sense not to endanger his reputation by hanging around youthful lusts. The wisdom from above, therefore, is smart to do that which is right. The wisdom that comes from above leads one to keep himself from all immorality, and even those situations wherein one’s morals might be compromised, or even questioned. Characters for Christ know how to flee.

The wisdom from above is generated within the minds of those who have focused their thinking on the instructions that come from God. No man of God is complete without feasting on the word of God. He is incomplete unless his thinking is formed and controlled by God through His word (See 2 Tm 3:16,17). When one allows himself to be instructed by God through a study of God’s word, then he is transforming his mind into godly thinking (See Rm 12:2). He becomes wise in determining what is the work of the flesh and what is the fruit of the Spirit (See Gl 5:19-23). Being able to make a decision between the flesh and Spirit comes only through a study of the word of God. Correct decisions can be made only when one has a correct standard by which to make a decision. Therefore, we must never forget that the truly wise person has God in the teleology of his life.

B. Heavenly wisdom seeks peace.

It is always true that trouble makers make fools of themselves. It is a wise person who maintains his silence when he is in times of possible confrontation with a trouble maker. Jesus gave the divine dictionary on defining the children of God: “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called the children of God” (Mt 5:9). For this reason, the Hebrew writer identified the children of God with this exhortation: “Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man will see the Lord” (Hb 12:14).

Since the wisdom that originates from God is full of peace, then one should not expect to be in the eternal presence of God if he is not a peaceful person. This is why Paul exhorted the Roman disciples with the words, “... let us follow after the things that make for peace ...” (Rm 14:19). No wise person generates strife.

Peace must define the relational atmosphere of the fellowship of the children of God. The social atmosphere of the body of Christ must be conducted in a way that brings individual members of the body into contact with one another in order that each member may learn how to live in peace with others. If we cannot live in peace with one another on earth as a family of peacemakers, then there should be no expectation to live in the presence of the God of peace. If the fellowship of the body is not close enough to fine tune our ability to learn how to live in peace with one another, then it is a dysfunctional body that is not preparing each member to dwell in the presence of the God of peace.

Jesus does not intend to be a policeman of peace in heaven. Peace must be the nature of those who get there. Each candidate for heaven is a peacemaker, and thus there should be no need for any “peace police” among the members of the body. If some members of the body cannot be peacemakers on earth, then certainly they should not expect to be eternally in the presence of those who have learned to live in peace with one another on earth. So when Paul exhorted the Thessalonian Christians to “live in peace among yourselves,” he was giving them a mandate that would qualify them for eternal dwelling (1 Th 5:13). Isaiah would conclude: “And the work of righteousness will be peace, and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever” (Is 32:17). Characters for Christ know how to live in peace with one another.

C. Heavenly wisdom is gentle.

We live in a world where there is a famine of kindness. It seems that the more urban the culture, the more the citizens are indifferent, and even harsh with one another. Jesus forewarned His disciples, “Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves. Therefore, be wise as serpents and harmless as doves” (Mt 10:16). “Harmless as doves” defines the character of those the wolves seek to devour. Because of the harmless nature of the sheep, the wolves snarl.

In the midst of wolves, it may be very difficult to remain harmless and benevolent and kind. Nevertheless, we must never forget that this world is an environment in which God is molding our character for eternal dwelling. We must see wolves, therefore, as an opportunity to behave after the One we call ourselves a disciple. It is this One who said to the Father in reference to the wolves who snarled at Him on the cross, “Father, forgive them for they do not know what they are doing” (Lk 23:34).

We are thus to be led by those who have mastered their kindness enough to deserve the right to be our shepherds. Shepherds must be “self-disciplined, sober-minded ... not violent, but forgiving, not contentious ...” (1 Tm 3:2,3). We seek to follow those who are gentle in the midst of snarling wolves.

Our shepherds reveal to us the fruit of the spirit of kindness (Gl 5:22). Paul again instructed Timothy on the wisdom of a kind spirit: “And the servant of the Lord must not quarrel, but be gentle to all ...” (2 Tm 2:24). In a world wherein people are starving for kindness, we can understand that the character of a kind disciple is manifested as a brilliant light (See Mt 5:16). The wisdom that is identified by a relational environment of kindness is identified by the Holy Spirit’s following instructions:

Therefore, put on as the elect of God, holy and beloved, a heart of compassion, kindness, humility, meekness, longsuffering; forbearing one another and forgiving one another. If anyone has a complaint against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also should you (Cl 3:12,13).

Many years ago, a missionary to Mozambique, Ira Gillet, reported an interesting statement that was made in reference to the mission hospital with which he and other Christians worked. Someone observed that the local people often passed by the government hospital in order to go to the mission hospital. When some were asked why, one patient made the statement, “The medicines in both hospitals are the same, but the hands are different.” It is like the pain going away from a skinned knee when touched by a loving mother’s hand. Heavenly wisdom reaches out to others with kindness in order to release the aroma of our loving Father.

D. Heavenly wisdom is reasonable.

Someone was certainly right when he made the statement, “There is no fool like the wretch who will not reason or arbitrate a problem.” One of the beautiful cultural qualities by which the Venda people in north-east South Africa are known is their desire and ability to negotiate. It was not unexpected, therefore, that when South Africa was negotiating a new constitution for the rebirth of the nation in 1994, that a Venda official was named to negotiate the new constitution of the nation with the previous government.

The church should be known for being people of negotiation because they are a community of peacemakers. We do not mean compromise between good and evil, but negotiation in areas of personal conflict. Here is an example:

I urge Euodia and I urge Syntyche to be of the same mind in the Lord. And I ask you also, loyal companion, help these women who labored with me in the gospel ...” (Ph 4:2,3).

God seeks to bring all men unto Him on the basis of the fact that He is God, and thus, we the created, should come to Him on His terms. Isaiah recorded the plea of God to Israel, “‘Come now and let us reason together,’ says the Lord” (Is 1:18). We must bring this desire for negotiation into the realm of Christian character.

Therefore, if you bring your gift to the altar, and there you remember that your brother has something against you, leave there your gift before the altar and go your way. First be reconciled to your brother, and then come and offer your gift (Mt 5:23,24).

When Jesus continued with the statement, “Agree with your adversary quickly,” He meant that we should negotiate with our enemies lest they turn on us. It follows, therefore, that the wise person will always seek for terms of peace with his adversaries. Standing firm on our beliefs, and working with people, does not assume that we must compromise our principles. It simply means that the Christian must never be the one who would stir up strife in areas where compromise is allowed. Being a bully in areas of opinion does not mean that one is in the right.

Our inferiority complexes or low self-esteem often hinder us from going to our brother to negotiate peace. We remember that “God has not given us a spirit of fear, but of power and of love and of a sound mind” (2 Tm 1:7). This does not mean that our character should be identified as one who seeks his own way first. In matters of opinion, we must always allow one another freedom. And freedom means that we do not always get our way.

In order to have the courage to negotiate, while guarding one another’s freedom in Christ, we must forget our own inhibitions and do that which is wise. The wisdom from above is manifested in the one who has the desire to settle matters of difference in a spirit love and a sound mind. Wisdom that defines the godly character of one who seeks to mold his personality after Christ will always be identified by one's desire to be reasonable.

E. Heavenly wisdom is full of mercy.

Here are some sweet words: "Blessed are the merciful, for they will obtain mercy" (Mt 5:7). There is something wonderful about showing mercy to others. Mercy is always returned. When we loan out mercy, the debt is always repaid.

Our mercy toward others manifests our understanding of how much mercy God has extended to us through Jesus. And in view of the judgment to come, we need to store up a great deal of mercy. James stated, "For judgment will be without mercy to the one who has shown no mercy" (Js 2:13). Every mournful sinner who cries out to God for mercy is guaranteed the answer to his prayer by extending mercy to others.

Someone wisely said, "When you see the fear in another's eyes, be sure that he sees the mercy in yours." Merciful people are approachable because others do not fear approaching them. An approachable person is identified as one who is known to be merciful to the faults of others. We approach those from whom we seek counsel when we know that we will receive understanding and not judgment. It is for this reason that mercy is the glue that sustains the relationships that people have with one another. It is the key character trait that continues the unity of the body of Christ.

Mercy was the drawing power of Jesus that flowed from the cross. During His ministry, Jesus said, "No one can come to Me, except the Father who has sent Me draws him" (Jn 6:44). At the time Jesus made this statement, He did not reveal how the Father would draw people to Him. The drawing power would later be manifested through the mercy of the cross. After making the preceding statement at the beginning of His ministry, Jesus explained, "And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all men to Me" (Jn 12:32).

This is nothing short of wonderful. We are drawn to Jesus because of the love and mercy that glows from the cross. The same is true of ourselves in our relationships with others. Mercy will draw others to us because they will receive mercy for their offenses against us and not judgment. It is for this reason that "mercy rejoices over judgment" (Js 2:13). Those who offend us may rightfully deserve judgment, but mercy will set condemnation aside in order to restore relationships. God sets our condemnation aside through the cross in order that we have a covenant relationship with Him.

So Peter inquired of Jesus, "Lord, how often will my brother sin against me and I forgive him? Up to seven times?" (Mt 18:21). Peter's math was bad. Jesus responded, "I do not say to you up to seven times, but up to seventy times seven" (Mt 18:22). When we mold our characters after Christ, we are into multiples of forgiveness. Mercy and forgiveness become the identity of our personality because there is an unlimited supply of both in our hearts.

F. Heavenly wisdom is full of fruit.

James wrote, "What does it profit, my brethren, if someone says he has faith but does not have works?" (Js 2:14). We know the answer to the question. Faith without works (fruit) profits nothing. It is dead!

Jesus made a profound statement in Matthew 7:16: "You will know them by their fruits." This statement was made in the context of bad fruit. So Jesus added, "A good tree cannot bring forth bad fruit, nor can a bad tree bring forth good fruit" (Mt 7:18). Good trees bring forth good fruit (Mt 7:17). It is the wise thing to do. Those who manifest the wisdom that is from above, not only manifest fruit, but they manifest good fruit. True godliness is not fruitless.

Those who have wisdom from above have a faith that is "working through love" (Gl 5:6). They are into the lives of others in order to seek the good of others. "Let each one not look out merely for his own interests, but also for the interests of others" (Ph 2:4). This is the ministry of the wise disciple who is full of the wisdom that is from above. God looked out for our spiritual needs, and in turn, we look out for the spiritual needs of others. This is the behavior of the disciples of Jesus (See Gl 6:1). Wisdom from above is manifested in their lives through their good fruits.

G. Heavenly wisdom is impartial.

In James' explanation of the wisdom that is from above, he identified those about whom the word "impartial" would refer. "My brethren," James explained, "do not show favoritism and hold the faith of our glorious Lord Jesus Christ" (Js 2:1). This statement was made in the context of showing favoritism to the rich. Unfortunately, we are often guilty of showing favoritism in our relationships with others. James poses a question as to what we would do "if there should come into your assembly a man with a gold ring in fine clothing, and there come in also a poor man in filthy clothes" (Js 2:2).

In those churches that are led by leaders who are greedy for money, they often seat the rich on the front seats. If we would do such, James judged that you have made “distinctions among yourselves and have become judges with evil thoughts” (Js 2:4). We often condemn ourselves in our seating arrangements.

The wisdom that is from above is revealed when one emulates in his life that which God did toward us. “But God demonstrates His love toward us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us” (Rm 5:8). Jesus did not check bank accounts before He went to the cross. And neither should we in reference to our relationships with others. If we would emulate the wisdom of God in our lives, then we do not have the right to show favoritism toward the member dressed in the expensive suit, while at the same time show disrespect toward the beggar who walks in off the street in rags. We must never forget that Jesus went to the cross for those who were dressed in the rags of sin (Rm 5:8).

H. Heavenly wisdom is without hypocrisy.

If we show favoritism, then we are hypocritical in our relationships with others. We are not genuine or sincere. There is a hidden agenda to all our relationships. We often wear masks to disguise our true selves. We hide behind false impressions. But we need to remember that as disciples of Jesus, we are to be “laying aside all malice and all deceit and hypocrisies ...” (1 Pt 2:1). It is imperative to remember the words of Jesus concerning the fake religiosity of some of the religious leaders of His day: “Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees which is hypocrisy” (Lk 12:1).

The Pharisees did not manifest in their lives the wisdom that comes from above. James wrote, “This wisdom does not descend from above, but is earthly, sensual, demonic” (Js 3:15). Anyone who behaves without focusing on God first in his life is behaving with earthly wisdom. His decisions, therefore, are limited to earthly conclusions (Compare Mt 6:33).

We know that we need to be taught the wisdom that comes from God simply because we are of this world. And the wisdom that is from this world has a lot to be desired in reference to treating everyone with equality. We should be as someone said of an old wise owl.

A wise old owl sat in an oak;
The more he saw the less he spoke;
The less he spoke the more he heard;
Let's try to imitate that bird.

James said it simply: “Therefore, my beloved brethren, let everyone be swift to hear, slow to speak, and slow to wrath” (Js 1:19). One will never be taught the wisdom that is from above if he cannot be quiet long enough to hear God who speaks quietly through His word.

To become wise we must make ourselves available to experience life. Wisdom comes from experience, and thus we must not be shy about experiencing life. We can learn a great deal of knowledge through schools of education, but unless we use wisdom to take our knowledge from our heads into our behavior, our knowledge is of little value. A hermit may have a great deal of knowledge, but he will lack in wisdom because he has not allowed himself to experience life with others.

Wisdom ignites our knowledge for the benefit of living the abundant life. The wise person, therefore, does not allow the crowd to determine his direction. The wise person sees things from outside the box of conformity in order that he might excel to the heights of conquest. He wisely takes risks that are guided by the wisdom that is from above. Once we have acquired knowledge through the learned schools of education, it would be good to remember the statement of the great scientist Max Born, “I'd be happier if we had scientists with less brains and more wisdom.”

So we would continue to be discipled in the wisdom that is from above. Of Jesus, Luke recorded, “Now Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man” (Lk 2:52). We conclude that because of the great wisdom that He manifested, Jesus had great favor with God and man. It is simply true that the wise are followed, but the foolish are forsaken. And so, it is the wise thing to do to ...

... let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away from you, along with all malice. And be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, just as God in Christ has also forgiven you (Eph 4:31,32).

Chapter 2

CHARACTER THROUGH KNOWLEDGE

“The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. Fools despise wisdom and instruction” (Pv 1:7).

The prayer of every disciple of Jesus should be as Solomon's request of God: “Give me now wisdom and knowledge so that I may go out and come in before this people” (2 Ch 1:10). God’s inspiring answer to this request excites our desire to utter the same prayer, for God answered Solomon:

Because this was in your heart and you have not asked for riches, wealth, honor, or the life of your enemies, nor have asked for long life, but have asked for wisdom and knowledge for yourself so that you may judge My people over whom I have made you king, wisdom and knowledge is granted to you (2 Ch 1:11,12).

Throughout his years of reign, Solomon gained a worldwide reputation for being wise above all men and a man full of knowledge. He subsequently wrote many proverbs in order “to give prudence to the simple, to the young man knowledge and discretion” (Pv 1:4). In his opening instructions concerning the acquisition of knowledge, he admonished, “The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge” (Pv 1:7; see Pv 2:5).

When one humbles himself before God, he has put himself in a position to access the greatest source of wisdom and knowledge, “for the Lord gives wisdom. Out of His mouth comes knowledge and understanding” (Pv 2:6). King Hezekiah encouraged the Levites “who taught the good knowledge of the Lord” in order that the people of God continue in the counsel of God (2 Ch 30:22).

If a chemist or physicist made it his full-time job to sit down and read only all the scientific journals of the world for an entire year, by the end of the year he would be far behind by several months in his reading of new information. We live in the information age because man is daily making new discoveries of what God embedded in the natural world that He created. Because of the massive information flow through the Internet alone, our access to information can almost be overwhelming. The input of information into our brains has wearied us to the point that we sometimes become “information exhausted.”

It is a time for wisdom to be the governor of the amount of information we have accessed. We cannot help ourselves, but to learn more and more. And because we learn, we must have wisdom to apply that which we learn. It is simply a characteristic of humanity that we learn. And since we continue to learn, we must continue to make wise decisions concerning what we learn. Solomon wrote, “The heart of him who has understanding seeks knowledge, but the mouth of fools feeds on foolishness” (Pv 15:14; see 18:15; 21:11). We must always remember the words of Solomon who wrote at the end of his lifetime of searching for knowledge: “For in much wisdom is much grief. And he who increases knowledge increases sorrow” (Ec 1:18).

The Jewish Talmud was correct: “He who adds not to his learning diminishes it.” We add to our knowledge in order not to be ignorant. We seek to grow in wisdom in order not to use our knowledge foolishly. Solomon was right: “Wise men lay up knowledge, but the mouth of the foolish is near destruction” (Pv 10:14). So we seek not to be the son of ignorance, for in knowledge we understand that we can escape the destruction that comes with foolish behavior. Unless we grow in wisdom as to how we would use that which we learn, our learning will often lead to our own demise. It is great to know about atomic energy. But without wisdom, the unwise can easily go from electricity to power homes to atomic bombs that destroy homes.

We have observed throughout the world that an ignorant people can never be a free people. The people of any free democracy, therefore, are challenged to learn and make wise decisions. A people who are left in ignorance cannot make wise decisions. There is always a race within every society between freedom and the bondage that is the child of ignorance. Freedom can win out only if the people are educated. Centuries ago, Solomon may have had this principle in mind when he wrote, “The godless with his mouth destroys his neighbor, but through knowledge the just will be delivered” (Pv 11:9).

A. Knowledge that sets us free from sin.

It is the same in reference to our freedom from the bondage of sin. When Zacharias was filled with the Holy Spirit, he said through the Spirit that the mission of Jesus would be “to give knowledge of salvation to His people ...” (Lk 1:77). It would be through this knowledge that the people would be set free. It would thus be the mission of Jesus “to give light to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace” (Lk 1:79). It is knowledge of and obedience to the ways of God that sets us free from the bondage of our own selves. But the person who thinks that he knows everything, is the one who has the most to learn. We would not, therefore, assume that we can invent our own ways in order to deliver ourselves from the bondage of sin.

Jesus came with knowledge of the truth that would set men free (Jn 8:32). He came into a religious environment where there were religious lawyers who became an obstacle to the people in their efforts to learn the way of the Lord unto the salvation that He brought. He said to these religious lawyers, “Woe to you lawyers! For you have taken away the key of knowledge” (Lk 11:52).

The “key of knowledge” is one’s free access to the knowledge of salvation by which one can be delivered from the bondage of sin. The religious lawyers stood between this knowledge (truth) and the people. Jesus continued, “You entered not in yourselves, and those who were entering in you hindered” (Lk 11:52). Through their rebellion against the One who brought the key of entrance into the kingdom, they were not able to enter. But they also stood at the door of eternal opportunity and hindered those who sought to enter. Jesus judged them, “For you shut up the kingdom of heaven against men, for you neither go in yourselves, nor do you allow those who are entering to go in” (Mt 23:13).

Those who would either refuse the knowledge of salvation, or allow others to stand between them and such knowledge, are doomed to continue on a road to destruction. Paul wrote of such people millennia ago who refused to have a knowledge of God in their thinking.

And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a depraved mind to do those things that are not proper (Rm 1:28).

These and others who refused to follow the knowledge of God unto salvation, were given over to suffer the consequences of their bondage in ignorance. It was on the foundation of this understanding that God said, “My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge” (Hs 4:6).

The problem with most folks is what Paul said of those Jews who created a religiosity after their own desires: “For I testify of them that they have a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge” (Rm 10:2). Such people had forgotten the exhortation of Isaiah: “And wisdom and knowledge will be the stability of your times, and strength of salvation” (Is 33:6).

When we search in our hearts for the light that would deliver us from the bondage of darkness, we must be driven to the word of God. And once we have consumed ourselves in the oracles of His wisdom, we will declare as Paul, “Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God” (Rm 11:33). It is certainly a joy to be “enriched by Him ... in all knowledge ...” (1 Co 1:5). When we are enriched with His knowledge, we too will be thankful as Paul wrote, “Now thanks be to God who always leads us in triumph in Christ and manifests the aroma of His knowledge through us in every place” (2 Co 2:14). It is His wisdom and knowledge in us that allows us to be triumphant over all things. It is as Paul wrote:

For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, has shone in our hearts to give the light of the knowl- edge of the glory of God in the face of Christ (2 Co 4:6).

B. Knowledge sets us free from ignorance.

When we are filled with the knowledge of God, it is then that we are able to cast “down imaginations and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God ...” (2 Co 10:5). We can understand, therefore, why it was Paul’s prayer “that your love may abound still more and more in knowledge and all discernment ...” (Ph 1:9).

For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that you might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding (Cl 1:9; see 2:2).

We will always contend that only in Christ can one truly establish a correct worldview that is based on the knowledge of God, for in Him we escape “the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ ...” (2 Pt 2:20). If one leaves God and Christ out of his thinking, then he can never attain unto a full understanding of that which is true. We must come to this conclusion lest we deprive ourselves of salvational opportunities. It is as Paul wrote concerning our “full knowledge of the mystery of God, that is, Christ, in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge” (Cl 2:2,3). It is for this reason that we are on guard against the false knowledge that would be set forth by those who do not feast on the wisdom that is from above. Paul warned Timothy, “O Timothy, guard what was committed to your trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings and opposing arguments of what is falsely called knowledge” (1 Tm 6:20).

Because they have allowed themselves to be deceived by worldly knowledge that is void of God, some are simply “always learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth” (2 Tm 3:7). Therefore, we would heed the exhortation of Paul to Timothy lest we be led astray by the false knowledge of men. We would conclude as Peter when he introduced his second letter: “Grace and peace be multiplied to you through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord” (2 Pt 1:2).

We will not forget that God’s “divine power has given to us all things that pertain to life and godliness through the knowledge of Him who has called us to glory and virtue” (2 Pt 1:3). Therefore, we heed the exhortation of Peter: “add to your faith ... knowledge ...” (2 Pt 1:5). In doing this, we will not be “unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Pt 1:8). Peter could not have concluded his last letter better than with the following statement: “But grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pt 3:18).

C. Knowledge sets us free from unbelief.

When it comes to knowing the incomprehensible knowledge and wisdom of God in whom we believe, we are like adventurers walking on a beach. We walk along looking at the smooth stones that have been polished by centuries of restless waves. We see old sea shells. In all our marvel of the wonders of the beach, we have difficulty comprehending the awesome sea by which we walk, failing to understand the magnitude of its power throughout its thousands of years of restless activity. And with such limited appreciation for the eternality and awesomeness of God, we walk throughout life. In observing the created things of this world, we often struggle to see the “invisible things of Him since the creation of the world” (Rm 1:20). When we begin to be struck by the evidences of our awesome God, it is then that we are driven to seek for knowledge and wisdom from Him. We are thus driven to His word.

When we thirst for knowledge from Him, we are driven to the source by which we can understand Him. We open our Bibles daily in our efforts to discover small pebbles that He has fashioned by His creative work throughout millennia. And thus, when our knowledge of those marvels He created overwhelm us with the necessary conclusion that we are not here by chance, then we begin to seek earnestly for His instructions that would bring us into His eternal presence.

When Sir Isaac Newton (1642-1726), the renowned physicist, commented on Daniel 12:4, by asserting that since the Bible said that “knowledge will be increased,” then we must assume that it might be possible in the future that men could go fifty miles an hour. Newton’s contemporary, Voltaire, lived up to his reputation as a skeptic concerning the Bible by criticizing what he presumed was a fantasy of Newton. Voltaire mocked Newton by saying that when he looked through the Bible, he concluded that Newton was a “poor dotard” for believing in the Bible. Now that we live in a time when men have left footprints on the moon, we ask who was really the “poor dotard”?

When great men of history discovered gems of knowledge in the Bible, they were sent on a quest for discovery. And so will the wise men among us today. God made us to seek knowledge, for in the acquisition of knowledge we are set free from the bondage of ignorance. But if we forget God in our quest to know, we will never understand how little we know.

It is unfortunate that we live in an era wherein mankind is cursed with those in some world societies who fear knowledge. Some leaders in these societies are so insecure about their own manhood that they refuse even their women to learn in schools. We would assume that the leaders of such societies know the power of knowledge. As long as they can keep their people ignorant in some wilderness of the world, and away from a world of knowledge, they can keep the people in bondage through ignorance.

We must not conclude that the statement, “the truth will set you free,” is to be understood only in a religious context. When a society seeks knowledge, then the people of such a society are delivering themselves from living in the caves of ignorance, being led about by those who profess some distorted religiosity. Ignorant leaders can lead only by keeping the people ignorant.

Centuries ago men lived through what was called the Dark Ages. The ages were called “dark” because the Roman Catholic Church sought to keep the people in ignorance of the word of God. When some brave men started to translate the Bible into the language of the common people, the Catholic Church rose up to burn the translators at the stake and the Bibles they had translated.

We are now living in another “dark ages” because of a class of self-proclaimed religionists who know no Bible, and thus, are keeping the common people in ignorance of the Bible because they do not study their Bibles. Is there really any difference between a Catholic priest who sought for Bibles to burn during the Dark Ages, and the self-proclaimed religionist today who keeps the people ignorant of the Bible because he himself does not know the Bible? In either case the people remain ignorant of the Bible.

When church leaders understand that their own existence as leaders of the people often depends on the ignorance of the people, then there is no freedom of the people. There is no desire on the part of the leaders to lead the people into a greater knowledge of the word of God. Any society that exists upon the foundation of ignorance has doomed itself from the brotherhood of humanity. Any church of people who do the same in reference to the word of God, have doomed themselves to eternal destruction (See 2 Th 1:6-9).

People often wonder why the West has become so developed throughout the centuries. The answer to this economic wonder is simply in the fact that Christianity brings freedom to humanity. It is then in a culture of freedom that individuals are set free to explore, to discover, to invent. When men’s minds are set free from the bondage of sin and ignorance, the development of society results. But when societies bind themselves with traditions in ignorance, they will not develop.

The bondage of tradition can be broken down only by the axiomatic truth, “The truth will set you free.” Truly free men seek knowledge, especially the knowledge that flows from God through His word. And when men bask themselves in the realm of God’s knowledge, it is then that they will put away ignorance for a better way of life.

Chapter 3

CHARACTER THROUGH PEACE

When Jesus said, “Blessed are the peacemakers,” He was giving an identity character trait of those who would be His disciples (Mt 5:9). Christianity is about peace between God and man, man and man, and man within himself. Those who would be Christian in their thinking and behavior, therefore, must manifest a spirit of peace.

When astronauts Armstrong and Aldrin landed on the moon with the Apollo 11 mission, they left a plaque on the surface of the moon that will last until the end of time. The plaque read, “We come in peace for all mankind.” When Jesus “landed” on earth as a babe in Bethlehem, He was God’s plaque on earth that read, “Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace toward men of goodwill” (Lk 2:14).

The peace that Jesus brought forever established the character of those who would be His disciples. How could we ever forget the following comforting words He spoke to His disciples?

These things I have spoken to you so that in Me you might have peace. In the world you have tribulation. But be of good cheer, I have overcome the world (Jn 16:33).

Peace I leave with you. My peace I give to you; not as the world gives do I give to you. Let not your heart be troubled, nor let it be afraid (Jn 14:27).

Men thirst for peace on earth. A League of Nations, United Nations, Africa Union, documents of armistices, peace treaties, and all such unions of peace are constructed and signed by men on earth in order to satisfy the craving of all men for peace. And often, because of the fallibility of worldly characters, such agreements are often ignored, broken, and as a result, wars break out to destroy all our efforts to live in harmony.

Peace demands idealism and self-sacrifice. But when men unleash their most base desires for either control, domination or wealth, peace pays the price. After World War I when President Woodrow Wilson addressed the United States Senate in 1919, he stated, “The League of Nations is the only hope of mankind.” Unfortunately, that hope was dashed when the world once again engaged itself in the most destructive war of all human history, World War II. It was a war that the film documentary The World at War estimated claimed the lives of over fifty million people.

When Zacharias was filled with the Holy Spirit, he prophesied of John’s mission to come, which mission was “to guide our feet unto the way of peace” (Lk 1:79). So when the angels announced the birth of Jesus, finally in all history we heard the comforting words that there would be “on earth peace toward men of goodwill” (Lk 2:14). Throughout history, we have often failed to fulfill that pronouncement. But we can be assured of one thing. We have peace with God through the announced babe in Bethlehem that no man can disrupt with war. Regardless of what happens in the affairs of this world, the Christian will always have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

A. Peace between God and man:

Our most desired peace is the satisfaction that our Creator is pleased with us. We are not of those who have foolishly said in their hearts that there is no God (Ps 14:1). We believe. But in our belief there is often guilt and fear because we know that we are human. Guilt and fear, therefore, have driven us to the divine Peacemaker. And so we find awesome comfort with our Creator because He offered an atoning sacrifice for our frail humanity. We go to bed tonight with peace of mind.

As His children, we yearn for His approval. But when we take a reality check of ourselves, we realize that we formerly placed ourselves in a frightful situation in reference to our relationship with Him. We were all prodigal children who were checked in at the Hog Hotel, yearning, as the prodigal son, for the comforts of home (Lk 15:11-32). We had all forsaken our natural abiding with Him, sinned, and having run away into the world (Rm 3:23). In our rebellion, we fell short of His approval (Rm 3:9,10). And because sinful rebellion cannot exist in His presence, we had through our rebellious behavior banished ourselves to pig pens that were far from His presence (Is 59:2). We cried out as Paul, “Wretched man that I am! Who will deliver me from the body of this death?” (Rm 7:24).

In our despair, there was hope. “Therefore, having been justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ” (Rm 5:1). Glory hallelujah! Those who have struggled through the wilderness always appreciate the paradise of God in Christ.

Because it is not in us to direct our own ways (Jr 10:23), God has always delivered unto man instructions (law) by which we would not digress to the state of all humanity about which Moses wrote in Genesis 6:5: “And God saw that the wickedness of man was great on the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually”.

The problem with law, however, is that it becomes our opportunity to sin. “For without law, I was alive,” Paul reminded the Roman Christians. He continued, “... when the commandment came, sin revived and I died” (Rm 7:9). The good news is that with law there is always grace, for our Father knew that we could not keep law perfectly in order to make ourselves right before Him, and thus live in peace with Him. When we seek to live in peace with God, law is never what we expect it to be. Law is always as Paul said, “But when the commandment came, sin revived and I died” (Rm 7:9).

Every honest person knows that perfect keeping of God’s law is an impossibility. Therefore, we must conclude with Paul, “that a man is not justified by works of law, but by the faith of Christ Jesus” (Gl 2:16). We can never have peace with our Creator if such peace depends on our ability to keep law perfectly. Law, therefore, necessitates grace in reference to our relationship with God. There is no peace in law without grace.

In order to sleep at night with any peace of mind, we have all cried out to God for mercy. Through our sins, we have all fallen short of the glory of God (Rm 3:23). We need the long extending arm of God’s grace. Because He does not wish that any of His creatures should perish (2 Pt 3:9), God has lovingly responded to our pleas for peace with Him. We thus have peace of mind in that we are continually ...

... being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God has set forth to be an atoning sacrifice by His blood through faith in order to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins ... (Rm 3:24,25).

Because Jesus brought peace between God and man through the remission of sins that flows from the cross, we are cleansed, no longer having “feelings of guilt for sins” (Hb 10:2). We all rejoice with Paul who thanked “God through Jesus Christ our Lord” (Rm 7:25).

Our peace with God was realized at the cross. As long as we live under the shadow of the cross, our peace with God remains the foundation for our security on which we stand (See 1 Co 15:-14). Our peace remains because we find confidence in the cross, not in our efforts to live perfectly before Him according to law. Therefore, our human imperfection in reference to law demands the cross. The atoning sacrifice of the cross was necessary for peace to prevail between God and man. Those who would build their characters for Christ must continue to build their knowledge of the effect of the cross in reference to our peace with God.

B. Peace between man and man:

When God made a covenant with the seed of Abraham at Mount Sinai, and then delivered the conditions (law) of the covenant, He knew that the Israelites would be separated as a nation from the rest of the cultures of the world. And rightly so, for God sought in Israel to preserve a segment of society on earth in order to bring the Messiah into the world. Since it is not possible for men to develop their own moral laws to preserve themselves socially (Jr 10:23), law had to come with the Mount Sinai covenant. But with the covenant and law, came the necessity of separating the children of Israel from those who did not have a written law to keep them close to their Creator.

The law and covenant thus brought a social “middle wall of separation” between Israel and the rest of humanity. In the courtyard of Herod the Great’s temple in Jerusalem there was a “middle wall of separation” beyond which no Gentile was allowed to go. This wall became the signal that the Jews kept themselves separated from all other nations.

But something marvelous happened with the coming of our Peacemaker. Paul reflected on the great work of our Peacemaker with the statement, “For He is our peace, who has made both one, and has broken down the middle wall of separation” (Ep 2:14). Jesus broke down the “middle wall of separation” by abolishing it through the offering of His incarnate body. Jesus admonished “the enmity, which is the law of commandments contained in ordinances, in order to make in Himself of the two one new man, thus making peace” (Ep 2:15). He made peace between Jew and Gentile by reconciling “both to God in one body by the cross ...” (Ep 2:16). And now, we “are all sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus” (Gl 3:26). The breaking down of this wall of separation is still happening today as the gospel goes into all the world.

For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek. There is neither bondservant nor free. There is neither male nor female. For you are all one in Christ Jesus (Gl 3:27,28).

When those of any race of the entire world today come into Christ through obedience of the good news of Jesus' death, burial and resurrection, he or she is added to a universal fellowship of all those who have likewise obeyed the gospel. It took some time for the early Jewish Christians to figure this out. But eventually Peter confessed, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons. But in every nation he who fears Him and works righteousness is accepted by Him" (At 10:34,35).

Think of it in this way. When we come into Christ, we will often have leftover ethnocentrism (race pride). But we must get over it. After all, when we peel off the skin of every individual, we are all the same color. Our cultures may vary, but we are still one man in Christ. The purpose of the fellowship of the church on earth is to get us on the way to breaking down cultural barriers in preparation for eternal dwelling with one another in heaven.

When Jesus comes again, we will receive a "new habitation" (new body). Paul wrote, "For in this house [body] we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed with our house that is from heaven ..." (2 Co 5:2). We groan in this body in hope of the new body to come. We groan that when the new body comes, our new bodies will no longer give any indication that we can be identified to belong to a particular race. If one would enjoy heaven, therefore, he should start now in the fellowship of the one body into which all races are baptized.

In this one spiritual body, we start breaking down in our minds any "middle walls of separation." Will it not be a marvelous thing to experience in the resurrection to come the commonality of our new habitation that will give no indication of race or culture? And will it not be an exciting experience in heaven not to judge someone by the appearance of their skin color? We need to think about this for a moment the next time we meet someone and judge (profile) that person by the color of his or her skin.

Those who form their characters after the peace that Jesus brought between God and man, and between men and men, experience the oneness of the body of Christ. The oneness that we have in Christ is more than a doctrinal unity. It is more than a peace we have with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. It is a unity in cultural diversity in Christ. The character of those who are in Christ is above racial differences.

C. Peace within men:

When the psalmist wrote, "The Lord will bless His people with peace" (Ps 29:11), more was meant than peace from war. In the context, the Lord would bless His people with inner peace of mind. They would "walk through the valley of the shadow of death" and fear no evil (Ps 23:4). Regardless of the circumstances that surrounded His people, they would have an inner peace that would surpass all understanding.

Among God's people it would always be as Paul wrote: "And the peace of God that surpasses all understanding will keep your hearts and minds in Christ Jesus" (Ph 4:7). This was the peace that Jesus left with His disciples (Jn 14:27). And this is the peace that changes the entire demeanor of our character. It is something that is seen on the faces of God's people and carried out in the behavior of their lives. Peace is always manifested in the behavior of those who possess this virtue.

The story is told of two artists who were asked to paint pictures that would portray peace. One artist painted a picture of a calm lake that reflected mountains in the background with a calm lake in the foreground. The other painted a picture of a rushing river that cascaded over a long waterfall. Just before the river came to the waterfall, the artist painted a leaning tree in the midst of the river on which a bird rested and sang. There were no worries in the mind of the bird as he sang his cheerful song of the day. If the tree gave way, his wings would carry him to safety. The bird was at peace within himself regardless of the circumstances of his environment.

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore we will not fear, though the earth is removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, though its waters roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with its swelling (Ps 46:1-3).

Christians have the peace that passes all understanding of this world. It is a peace that the world cannot figure out. When in trouble, their God lifts them up on high.

... those who wait on the Lord will renew their strength. They will mount up with wings as eagles. They will run and not be weary. They will walk and not faint (Is 40:31).

Remember what David said? "Though an army should camp against me, my heart will not fear" (Ps 27:3). Victor Hugo wrote,

Be like the bird,
Who halting in his flight,
On limb so slight,
Feels it give way beneath him.
Yet sings,
Knowing he hath wings.

We live in a world where too many people allow too many concerns to bring too much depression in their lives too many times. It is a world that is starving for an inner peace of mind. It is a world that harkens for the call of Jesus: “Come to Me all you who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest” (Mt 11:28; see 6:25-34). Therefore, we must give ourselves a break. Jesus admonishes, “... do not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will care for itself. Sufficient for the day is its own trouble” (Mt 6:34). This is the character of those who have given themselves to the origin of all peace. It is He who is truly the Prince of Peace. We must remember, however, that there is no peace within us until we make Him our Prince above us.

Chapter 4

CHARACTER THROUGH HOPE

If there were no life after death, then no truer words could have been said of the Christian than these: “If we have hope in Christ only in this life, we are of all men most to be pitied” (1 Co 15:19).

Because of the perils of sailing ships around the southern tip of Africa, the storm-tossed seas by winter winds gave birth to the name, “The Cape of Tempest” or “The Cape of Storms.” Throughout the centuries, many sailors came to their doom as the tempestuous seas took their floating security to a watery graveyard where the Atlantic and Indian Oceans collide. The seas around the southern tip of Africa certainly gained a reputation for being an area for treacherous sailing.

One Portuguese seaman, however, sought to change the unfortunate destiny of too many ships by finding a sea route through the treacherous waters around the southern tip of Africa. He found a safe route and time when the seas were the most friendly, and then changed the name of the area. He subsequently named the land, “The Cape of Good Hope.” The name stuck, and since we live in the area, the first natural land monument for which we search the horizon on our return from a long trip is Table Mountain. Once spotted, our hopes are revived for home and soon realized upon our arrival to the warmth of the Cape.

There is something romantic about Table Mountain that no nonresident of the area understands. It has been the “mountain of hope” for thousands of weary sailors throughout the centuries who understood that the mountain meant a final rest from a tempestuous journey. And so will our heavenly home be once we are there (See Hb 4).

God knew that life without hope would lead to a fatalistic worldview by those who struggled to survive until they met their fate in death. The desire to hope is so strong within man, that in the absence of all biblical knowledge among animistic peoples, some concept of hope has always been conceived in the minds of all men. Hope for something after life was imagined in order to bring peace of mind in life. We want to believe that this world is not all there is.

For the Christian, we understand that a faith without a resurrection is simply a hopeless fantasy of an imaginative mind. If our Savior were still in some tomb that was lost somewhere outside Jerusalem, then we are truly to be pitied as a people who have generated a mental fantasy in order to deal with the harshness of life and the darkness of death. But we have witnesses of a resurrected Savior. We trust the testimony of these witnesses who have testified that He is still living.

These witnesses did not walk by faith in the First-born in resurrection. They walked by sight. They actually experienced the resurrected Savior. And just in case we might forget that they walked by sight, many years after Jesus’ ascension into heaven, one of them wrote:

That which was from the beginning, that we have heard, that we have seen with our eyes, that we have looked upon and our hands have handled, we proclaim concerning the Word of Life (1 Jn 1:1).

Cephas (Peter) was one of those witnesses with John who had heard, seen, looked upon, and handled the resurrected Savior. He too wanted to reconfirm our hope with comforting words:

Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to His abundant mercy has begotten us again to a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead ...” (1 Pt 1:3).

John wanted to reassure us that he and the other disciples heard, saw, looked upon and handled the resurrected Word of Life. Likewise, Peter wanted us to know that he and the first disciples had at the death of Jesus lost hope. But after the resurrection, he, John, and the other disciples were “begotten again to a living hope.” And it is this hope that we have because of their personal encounter with the resurrected Jesus. We have not seen our resurrected Savior, but we have believed the testimony of those who walked in His presence.

Our hope is based on the foundation of two facts: (1) God does not change. (2) God has promised with an oath that our end will not be when we breathe our last breath. The Hebrew writer reflected on these promises, and thus wrote ...

... that by two unchangeable things in which it is impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong encouragement, who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us (Hb 6:18).

The Hebrew writer continued, “This hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast ...” (Hb 6:19). We live with a hope that is the emotional foundation of our most inner self. Though the stormy waves of life seek to cast us to and fro, our souls are anchored in the promises of God. So we live “in hope of eternal life which God, who cannot lie, promised before time began” (Ti 1:2).

Our hope is beyond the resurrection. It is a hope that we will continue in the presence of our Creator throughout eternity. It is this hope that motivates us to develop our characters for Christ. It is the motivation to keep our minds focused on those things that are above and not on those things that are on the earth (Cl 3:1,2).

Chapter 5

CHARACTER THROUGH HOPE OF ETERNAL LIFE

There has always been great discussion among theologians concerning the “possession” of eternal life. Some have argued that it is yet in the future, while others claim that we have it now in this life. It may be only a difference in how we understand the possession of eternal life, but the fact is that eternal life is both a present reality and a future possession.

Before we listen to some words from the Holy Spirit, consider the definition of the phrase “eternal life.” It is a phrase that refers to “duration”—if we can use this word—and not simply an environment. We will have eternal life in a heavenly environment.

From the day of our birth into this world, we were given a spirit from the Father (Hb 12:9). It is a spirit that has eternal possibilities. However, the eternal possibilities can be realized only if we remain in the presence of the Father of our spirits. Our eternality is based on His eternality, and thus, outside His eternal presence we cannot assume that we will exist for eternity. We are not, therefore, inherently eternal within ourselves when we are born into this world. We can be snuffed out of existence by the One who brought us into the world.

Unfortunately, sin separates us from the only One who is eternal, and thus, as long as sin is in our lives, we are headed to the One who has the following power over our spirits:

And do not fear those who kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul. But rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell (Mt 10:28).

In an environment wherein we have the opportunity to sin, we also have the opportunity to lose our eternality in the presence of God. The environment of sin in this world offers us the opportunity to lose our possibility of eternality. This is so because sin separates us from God (Is 59:2). And when in sin in this environment, we are destined for destruction (See 2 Th 1:6-9). We will experience a second death that will result in our separation from the only One who has the power of eternal existence.

We would say, therefore, that our spirit and soul only have eternal possibilities. Therefore, in an environment where the possibility to sin is real, God had to introduce an opportunity for eternal life. He had to take care of our problem of sin in order that we in this life could walk in a realm of eternal existence. Our eternal life is realized in this life, but possessed in actuality when we experience a paradigm shift that is yet to come. This is the shift from this physical world into the new heavens and earth wherein we will dwell for eternity. Our hope, therefore, is not simply for eternal existence, but for the environment of a new heavens and earth wherein we will enjoy eternal life in actuality in His eternal presence.

Our hope is for this new paradigm of existence wherein we will live in the eternal presence of God. Paul explained this in the following words:

For we are saved by hope, but hope that is seen is not hope, for what a man sees, why does he still hope for it? But if we hope for what we do not see, then with perseverance we wait for it (Rm 8:24,25).

So we are “in hope of eternal life which God, who cannot lie, promised before time began” (Ti 1:2).

There is an eternal life in a new paradigm of existence that is different from the eternal life that we now possess in this earthly paradigm that offers the opportunity to sin. It is our desire to be transitioned from this earthly paradigm into the presence of God. We seek the new and heavenly paradigm wherein the temptation to sin will have been taken away. But before we reach the paradigm of heaven, we have eternal life now only through the cleansing blood of Jesus. Our walk in this cleansing blood gives our soul the opportunity to continue life into the new paradigm of heaven.

Now we must step back into the earthly ministry of Jesus when He was making these promises to the audience of His ministry. We must take another look at His promise in Mark 10:29,30. In the historical context of this promise, Jesus was speaking of those who would in a time after He made the statements of Mark 10:29,30, forsake fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and lands for the sake of the gospel that He was preaching. The “age to come” about which He spoke would begin after His earthly ministry, and thus, after His resurrection. The sacrificial offering of one who committed himself to Jesus during His ministry would result in eternal life after His resurrection (Mk 10:30). If His statement, “age to come,” refers to the time after the cross—He made the statement during His ministry—then those who made the sacrifices during His ministry, would have eternal life after His resurrection. They would have eternal life because of the blood offering of the cross that was yet to come at the time Jesus made the promise.

There is no reason to place the historical fulfillment of the promise only to a time after the cross, and thus make the phrase “age to come” to refer exclusively to this time. It is also true that those who make the sacrifice of family and lands now have life now, but also the promise of eternal life that is yet to come. Jesus’ statement was in real time after His resurrection. But in reference to those who now live after His resurrection (this would be us), they too would have eternal life now because they would be walking in the cleansing blood of Jesus (1 Jn 1:7).

In view of the cross, Jesus spoke of eternal life as a promise and a possession throughout His ministry. “*Truly, truly, I say to you, he who believes has everlasting life” (Jn 6:47). “*He who hears My word and believes in Him who sent Me, has everlasting life” (Jn 5:24). Notice the tense of the verbs. The possession of the eternal life existed at the same time one believed. And since one also believes in Jesus at this time in life, then he has eternal life.

The possession of eternal life was conditioned on belief in Him. These promises of Jesus were made during His ministry. The fulfillment of the promises was realized when men first believed, and as a result of their belief, they did that which would wash away their sins (See Mk 1:4; At 22:16). We must be careful not to skip over the time of fulfillment. This is the time in which we now live. We must not skip over our present time by assuming that the fulfillment of Jesus’ promise of everlasting life would be realized only when He comes again. He was making the promise of eternal life during His ministry that would be fulfilled when the gospel would be preached and obeyed. It was during this time of preaching that the blood of the cross was effective in the lives of those who obeyed the gospel. And since we have obeyed the gospel, then we have eternal life, though it is conditioned on our faithful walk in the light.

This moves us to John who wrote after the cross and resurrection. He wrote to Christians these encouraging words: “*And this is the testimony, that God has given us eternal life and this life is in His Son” (1 Jn 5:11). Everyone who has been “baptized into Christ” now has the life about which Jesus promised and John stated we have (See Rm 6:3; Gl 3:26-29). John wanted to reassure those to whom he wrote that they were in possession of eternal life, but not yet in possession of the environment wherein the life could be fully enjoyed: “He who has the Son has the life. He who does not have the Son of God does not have the life” (1 Jn 5:12). We can be assured that we have the life because we have both the Father and the Son through our obedience to the gospel.

Because we now have the Son, we now have the life that comes from Him. Now concerning the sin and separation problem, John reminds us that “*if we walk in the light as He is in the light, ... the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanses us from all sin” (1 Jn 1:7). As we walk in the light of His word now, the cleansing blood of Jesus continually keeps us clean of our sins. We thus have eternal life in prospect now, though we are in hope of the actuality and environment of eternal life in the presence of God to come.

We are the children of God on earth in hope of a new existence wherein we will be in the presence of God. John reminded his readers that “it has not yet been revealed what we will be” (1 Jn 3:2). But we need not worry. We will be clothed with a new body, a new habitation (2 Co 5:1-5). John promised, “But we know that when He appears, we will be like Him, for we will see Him as He is” (1 Jn 3:2). So we are as Peter stated, “But we, according to His promise, look for new heavens and a new earth in which righteousness dwells” (2 Pt 3:13).

We look for the new environment wherein we will thoroughly enjoy the eternal life that we now have in Christ. And as preachers of the gospel, we are as Paul: “Therefore, I endure all things for the elects’ sake, that they may also obtain the salvation that is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory” (2 Tm 2:10). We preach Christ because we seek to take those with the possibility of eternity on into the environment of our eternal God.

Chapter 6

CHARACTER THROUGH ASSURANCE

We must never underestimate the emotional and mental security that hope works in our souls in order to give substance to live the abundant life (See Jn 10:10). Our character as a Christian is defined by our hope. It is what a lighthouse is to a sailor on a storm-tossed sea. As someone said, “Hope is a freshly worn path to a lost pilgrim.” We would add that it is a life preserver to a drowning soul, an oasis to a desert traveler, and Table Mountain to a true Capetonian. Some wise person surmised, “Hope is like the sun, which as we journey toward it, cast a shadow of our burden behind us.” Hope is the basic substance that gives us assurance through all our struggles and trials of life.

When we are filled with hope, we seek to share it with the hopeless. Nothing relieves one of the stresses of life more than the fact that there is hope for better times. One of the greatest motivators to spur on the evangelist is to be motivated with a deep sense to aspire to that which is before us. It is his mission to take hope to the hopeless. And in his desire to accomplish his mission, he seeks to take others with him into a realm of assurance. The serendipity of our own assurance, therefore, is the salvation of others.

Paul wrote of the resurrection to come. He explained to the Thessalonians that which would transpire at the moment of the sound of the last trumpet. After explaining details of our resurrection and ascension, he concluded, “... comfort one another with these words” (1 Th 4:18). We talk about our hope of the resurrection and ascension to come in order to inspire ourselves to share our piece of the pie with those who have no hope.

We were all once on a suicide mission of sin in our lives when God came along with grace through Jesus (Rm 5:8). The cross was the serum of hope to all of us who were suffering from the deadly plague of lawlessness. We were the “walking dead” until Jesus, through death, poured out His blood on the cross. We were candidates for doom when God cried out from the cross, “I love you!” Hope was grasped as all of us saw in Jesus the possibility of being created anew in Him. As a result of our faith in Jesus, all Christians can now see beyond the grave.

Upon our acceptance of that which we so dearly needed—assurance of life beyond this life—we now have courage to face the future. We were once as someone said, “There are no hopeless situations. There are only people who have grown hopeless about them.” Now in Christ our situation in life is one of being assured through the hope that beams from the cross. And it is this hope that we seek to share with others. It is because of our character of hope that we seek to motivate others to ask “a reason for the hope” that is in us (1 Pt 3:15). Discipleship is living in a manner that generates questions concerning hope.

Hope forces us to think on those things that are above, not on things of this hopeless world (See Cl 3:1,2). It is as Samuel Johnson wrote, “The natural flights of the human mind are not from pleasure to pleasure, but from hope to hope.” The effect of our hope is that we are heavenly minded. And because we are heavenly minded, we are encouraged to press on in times of dire circumstances (See Ph 3:13-15). Hope gives the weary the confidence to rejoice in sufferings, knowing that a crown of life is reserved for all those who endure this present environment (See Js 1:2). James promised, “Blessed is the man who endures temptation, for when he is tried, he will receive the crown of life that the Lord has promised to those who love Him” (Js 1:12).

One may consider the Christian’s hope a fantasy that has been imagined in a hopeless environment of evil and suffering. The hopeless atheist may find solace in the good he would do in this life. When he is gone, however, there is only a legacy of good by which he is remembered. The Christian will leave a legacy, but his legacy is a treasure that he has laid up in a heavenly environment that will be appreciated for eternity (See Mt 6:20). It is for this reason that Paul could write of all Christians the following encouragement:

Therefore, my beloved brethren, be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord (1 Co 15:58).

Christians can be steadfast and unmovable in the Lord because they are assured that their good works are not useless. Their legacy of good works will follow them right on into eternity:

Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from now on. “Yes,” says the Spirit, “so that they may rest from their labors, for their works follow them (Rv 14:13).

The good works of the saints will follow them because their good works identify their character. By the fruits of their good works, they will be known that they are the children of God.

Chapter 7

CHARACTER THROUGH FAITH

In the Princeton University’s Alumni Weekly, June 7, 1963, a graduate wrote after his graduation from Princeton,

The trouble with me is that I can’t believe in anything. On some days I can, but most of the time I am smarter than that. I have been taught to question, not to believe, so I never know where to stop. What I want is a cause; what I cannot have is a cause.

We live in a world of those who believe that this world is all there is. It is a world that says, “Seeing is believing.” It is a world, therefore, that needs a spiritual revival that says, “Believing is seeing.” The materialist of this world would say, “Trust in this world.” But the Christian would respond, “Trust in the Lord with all your heart, and do not lean on your own understanding” (Pv 3:5).

This world would find solace for its sin if it would trust in God. Augustine wrote, “Now it is faith to believe that which you do not yet see; and the reward of faith is to see that which you believe.” Our soul beckons for that which is beyond this world; it yearns for eternity. And because we so yearn, our souls seek to believe.

The book of Hebrews is a masterpiece on faith. One of its theme statements is Hebrews 11:1: “Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.” We like the way Edward Robinson translated this statement: “Faith is confidence as to things hoped for; conviction as to things not seen.”

We hope for that which we have not seen. However, the Hebrew writer wants to lead our minds beyond wishful thinking and superstition. The proposition of his thesis was that our faith becomes “evidence” of those things that are not seen. God would not demand a faith that is built on wishful thinking. If He had, then such faith would be no faith at all. It would be only superstition. Bible faith is an evidence of those things that are not seen because it is a faith that is based on evidence. It is for this reason that we have the recorded testimony of so many who have witnessed the supernatural work of God.

We have the recorded testimony of Abraham, and Elijah, and Paul, and the apostles of our Lord. It is not that we need a miracle in our own lives. If we needed a miracle, then we would be seeking to negate the power of the testimony of those whose personal experiences of the resurrected Jesus were recorded in the Bible. Modern-day miracle workers are working to deny the statement of Romans 10:17: “So then faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of Christ.” There will be no cry for a miracle from those who seek to walk by faith. They would in no way ask for God to cheat them of the blessedness of their walk by faith.

If we must have a miracle in our own lives in order to believe, then we are accusing the word of Christ of being an impotent testimony of witnesses. We are saying that the testimony of the word of God is insufficient to produce the faith that is necessary to please Him (Hb 11:6). But we have not forgotten that miracles were recorded so that we “might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God ...” (Jn 20:31). If we would cry out for a miracle from God in our lives, therefore, we are actually confessing our lack of faith in the word of Christ.

We would not, therefore, be as Thomas who said, “Unless I see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe” (Jn 20:25). No, we would not dare venture down that road of unbelief by seeking for a sign as the unbelieving religious leaders of Jesus’ day (See Mt 12:38,39). We would believe. We are not of those who say, “Unless we see we will not believe.” We will believe regardless of seeing, for we seek to walk by faith and not by sight. We seek to walk under the umbrella of Jesus’ statement, “Blessed are those who have not seen and yet have believed” (Jn 20:29).

The Hebrew writer came to our rescue. We once preached a sermon on the faith that the writer sought to present as a foundation of our faith. Throughout the Hebrew document, we discover a foundation for our faith (Hb 2:1-4). We discover the Founder of our faith (3:1,2), in order that we not falter from our faith (3:12-14). We see that some have fallen from their faith (3:18 – 4:3), and thus, we seek to hold on to the future of our faith (6:11,12). We hold on in order to enjoy the fullness of our faith (10:22). In this way we will remain faithful throughout our lives (10:38,39). Our faith is the assurance of things for which we hope, the evidence of things that we do not see (Hb 11:1).

The Hebrew writer knew that we needed some examples of faith. And so he recorded the examples of heroes of faith who had experienced the greatest tragedies that life could deliver. Regardless of all the struggles that these heroes went through in their lives, they remained on course in living a faithful life.

A. The faith of Noah:

“By faith Noah, being warned by God of things not yet seen, moved with fear, prepared an ark for the saving of his house” (Hb 11:7).

Noah built a boat by his faith in what God said was coming. He did not build by sight of what was happening in the present. While living in a generation where “the wickedness of man was great on the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually,” Noah cut planks, pegged beams, and stuffed pitch in order to prepare by faith a floating house (Gn 6:5). And while laboring with his sons through faith, he had probably never experienced the natural phenomenon of rain, for before the flood a mist came up from the ground to water all vegetation (Gn 2:6). The satisfaction of over a century of building was realized only when the first rain drop splashed across his brow. We can only imagine the thrill that passed through every nerve of his body as he stared in wonder as to what God was bringing upon the earth in fulfillment of His promise.

As he built that boat, we are sure that Noah at times faced an innumerable host of obstacles. Nevertheless, his faith allowed him to see the way to the saving of his family. He saw a dark night coming for humanity, but his faith allowed him to see a bright day again after the waters would dry from the land. The dissipated canopy of cloud that encompassed the earth before the flood was taken away in order to reveal the warmth of a beaming sun.

We are sure that he dreaded taking that first step by faith into the ark. But when the ark began to be uplifted from the face of the earth by the waters of the flood, he was surely thankful that his faith had kept him building throughout one hundred years while he struggled against all opposition. His faith finally paid off. He was lifted by waters that delivered him to a new world.

Doubt often questions, “Who believes?” Faith always answers, “I.” When doubt knocks at the door, faith will open it. But no one will be there. It is faith that will allow us to be as the psalmist wrote,

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore we will not fear, though the earth is removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea ... (Ps 46:1,2).

When we feel that our world is coming apart, we will build by faith as Noah. He remained faithful when the world that he knew “was destroyed, being overflowed with water” (2 Pt 3:6). And when our world is coming apart, we will seek to walk in the footsteps of Noah who built an ark to the saving of his family. God “did not spare the old world, but saved Noah, a preacher of righteousness,” because Noah remained faithful in a time when the rest of the world gave up all faith (2 Pt 2:5).

B. The faith of Abraham:

“By faith Abraham, when he was called to go ... obeyed ... went out, not knowing where he was going” (Hb 11:8).

We would, as Abraham, rather walk alone in the dark by faith, than in the light on our own accord. Abraham chose rather to go to an unknown land by faith, than to stay alone by sight in his own homeland. In his case, God’s commission was more important than land and relatives. He was as all those faithful disciples who have throughout history put God before family by going into all the world. Abraham left his extended family and homeland, but was blessed with being the father of millions who have lived by the example of his faith. Jesus promised the same to everyone who would put Him before houses, brothers, sisters, father, mother and homelands:

And everyone who has left houses, or brothers, or sisters, or father, or mother, or children, or lands, for My name's sake, will receive a hundredfold, and will inherit everlasting life (Mt 19:29).

We would be as Abraham for Jesus. We would choose to go out for Jesus into a land we do not know. We would remember that today is the tomorrow about which we worried about yesterday because of our lack of faith. We must remember, as someone said, that “God is playing chess with the Christian. He meets every move.” So we must always allow faith to be the grave of fear, and then move on for Jesus in order to take the gospel into all the world. If doing that which God would ask of us calls on us to make any sacrifice of this world, then the world to come is worth any sacrifice that must be paid in this world.

Our obedience to God is made perfect by our works, but our works must be based on our faith. Paul explained that in Christ, it is our “faith working through love” (Gl 5:6). Therefore, the testing of our faith through obedience will either cause us to use our faith or lose our faith. James challenges us: “Show me your faith without your works, and I will show you my faith by my works” (Js 2:18). In Abraham’s case, his faith allowed him to move the mountains, but the mountains never moved his faith. He demonstrated his faith through his work of obedience to God. When God commanded, he left houses, brothers, sisters, father, mother, lands and moved on to a land he had never seen before. His faith allowed him to see the invisible, and thus do the impossible for God. He knew that the only faith that was worth having was the faith that would move him on to the next destination.

C. The faith of Moses:

“By faith Moses, when he was grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh’s daughter, choosing rather to suffer mistreatment with the people of God than to temporarily enjoy the pleasures of sin” (Hb 11:24,25).

Someone so wisely said, “All strength and force of man comes from his faith in things unseen. He who believes is strong; he who doubts is weak. Strong convictions precede great actions.” And such was Moses.

There was once the case when a young, inexperienced seaman was sent up the mast of a sailing ship to untangle ropes and sails during a storm. The young sailor yelled down, “I’m becoming very dizzy. I think I’m going to fall.” An old sailor yelled up to him from the deck, “Don’t look down. Look up.”

In order to get the attention of Moses, God had to take him up to the top of a mountain in order that he look up to His guiding hand. When the despondent mother of Jesus and her friends approached the tomb of Jesus in order to dress His body for final rest, they were concerned about who was going to roll away the stone from before the tomb. The text reads, “... and looking up, they see that the stone is rolled back ...” (Mk 16:3,4-ASV).

Moses presented the usual excuses for not assuming his leadership of the people of God. But God turned all his excuses into opportunities for victory. His faith moved him to move out of Egypt. When he moved on with God, God strengthened his faith to move a nation out of captivity and into its entrance into the land of promise.

Our faith will not move us to reach out unless it reaches up. We can never ascend to doing great things for God unless our minds ascend to heavenly things. Paul wrote, therefore, “Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth” (Cl 3:2). Doubts concerning our destiny will find their grave in faith when we mentally transcend this present world in order to be other-world minded. We would, therefore, fix the anchor of our faith in those things that are above, knowing that we live in an ever changing and restless world. We must always remember, “The fear of man brings a snare, but whoever puts his trust in the Lord will be safe” (Pv 29:25). God “is a shield to those who put their trust in Him” (Pv 30:5).

We must conclude that it is faith that builds one’s character. We do not want God to steal away our faith with miracles that entice us to walk by sight. It is faith, not sight, that spiritually prepares us to walk through the trials of this world. It is as someone wrote, “The Christian sees more on his knees, than the philosopher sees on his tip toes.” We would be cautioned, therefore, as Paul so warned: “Therefore, let him who thinks he stands take heed lest he fall” (1 Co 10:12). It was said by a wise person, “Unless there is within us that which is above us, we will soon yield to that which is around us.”

We must always be as the desperate father who brought his afflicted son to Jesus. The father revealed that his faith had come to an end. He pleaded with Jesus, “But if You can do anything, have compassion on us and help us” (Mk 9:22). The father’s faith brought him and his son to Jesus, but there it faltered. Jesus then said to the tearful father, “If you can? All things are possible to him who believes” (Mk 9:23).

It seems that all of us are as the father. We have a faith that keeps Jesus in our minds, but not a faith that keeps us in His trust. We should all, as the father, cry out to Jesus, “*Lord, I believe! Help my unbelief!” (Mk 9:24).

Character building is not simply to believe that God is present, but that He is here to grow us spiritually through our times of trial. We better understand the struggles of this world, therefore, when we understand that struggles build our faith in order that we make it through this world.

If we would lose all our money, we would lose much. If we would lose a friend, we lose much more than money. But if we lose our faith, we have lost everything. The Hebrew writer concluded his review of our heroes of faith in chapter 11 with the statement of Hebrews 12:1. He reminded us that all the heroes of faith that he mentioned in the letter now surround us in order to see how we will perform in reference to our faith.

*... seeing we are also surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin that so easily entangles us, and let us run with endurance the race that is set before us.”

The Bible is a road map for our faith. The way to master it as our road map is to let it master us. We must come to the Bible in order to develop our faith to see that which is beyond the Bible. It is the work of our faith to take us through our troubles, and thus, we must conclude that there are messages in the word of God upon which our faith is founded that deal with each struggle we may encounter in this life. We must always remember that it is not the greatness of the troubles we encounter in this life, but the weakness of our faith that causes us so much grief. Our failures in our struggles, therefore, become the opportunity to fine tune our faith through study of the word of God. A faith that will not take us to the other side of any trial in life is a weak faith. It is for this reason that we must see in our trials measures of our faith. Trials of life are opportunities to fix our faith with the word of God.

Throughout the ministry of Jesus, it was His task to bring all men to faith in Him. The apostles would later add the details on how to openly profess before men that which was necessary in order to come into Him. During His ministry, there were many chief rulers who believed on Christ. “But because of the Pharisees they did not confess Him lest they should be put out of the synagogue” (Jn 12:42). Their faith would not move them to confess Him who could empower them to be saved.

If the faith that is within us is powerless in taking us all the way to obedience of Jesus, then it is a faith that cannot power us on to victory in Jesus. Jesus calls on a totally committed faith. We must remember that we cannot cross a chasm with two hops. Without an obedient faith in Jesus, it is all the way, or no way. Spurgeon was right: “A little faith will bring your soul to heaven: a great faith will bring heaven to your soul.”

We simply do not believe in a God who can, but in a God who will. It is this behavior of faith that builds character. When we start believing that the things that really count are the things that we cannot count, then we know that we are on our way to the victory that only a true faith can provide.

Chapter 8

CHARACTER THROUGH TRUTH

Many years ago, a resident of Long Island in America ordered from a manufacturer a new barometer. On the morning the barometer arrived in the post, the resident noticed immediately that one hand on the barometer scale was unusually low on the scale. He immediately gave the barometer back to the postman with a very stern letter to the manufacturer. In the letter he complained to the manufacturer that he had sent him a faulty barometer. That afternoon and the following day, a great storm struck Long Island and caused considerable damage.

Sometimes truth can be staring one directly in the face, but we are often so bent on our traditions, or side-tracked by our subjective religiosity, that we are simply blinded. Those who would cultivate a character that is pleasing to God must be those who are always in search of that which is true. In their search for truth from God, characters for Christ guard themselves against being led astray by error.

Webster’s dictionary defines truth as “the state of being the case .... The body of real things, events and facts.” Paul had this meaning in mind when he wrote in reference to his delivery of the message of the gospel to the Ephesians: “*In Him you also trusted, after you heard the word of the truth, the gospel of your salvation” (Ep 1:13). Paul made this statement in the context of so many lies that were being proclaimed in the region of his readers. The recipients of his letter were not living in a religious environment that was much different than the one in which we live today. Error often prevails over truth.

Christendom is burdened with too many theatrical religionists who are strong on theatrical religiosity, but weak on the word of God. Some groups are zealous about doing a good number of good works, but weak on their knowledge of the Bible. They subsequently justify their existence as “Christian” on the foundation of works, not the word of God.

We live in a religious world that is the residence of too many prophets who have no desire to have the knowledge of God in their thinking and ways. We recently spoke to a Christian counsellor who said of the church, “We are no longer a people who come together to hear or study the word of God.” A new generation has arisen who seek to validate their relationship with God through good works, but apart from the foundation of the word of God.

True teachers of the word of God are those who seek truth from God. Such is their nature because they are disciples of Christ. All those who are seeking the truth must seek those who are also truth seekers. It is the truth of God’s word that brings Christians together. Truth seekers naturally seek out one another. If we would be God’s people, then we must be people who seek His truth. Our fellowship as disciples of Christ must be based on the word of Christ, not simply on our common works for Christ.

John encouraged Gaius to associate with Demetrius because Demetrius had a good reputation for being one of the truth: “Demetrius has a good report from all, and of the truth itself” (3 Jn 12). We seek out those who love the truth in order “that we might be fellow workers for the truth” (3 Jn 8). We seek out truth seekers, for we rejoice as John who wrote that he had “no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth” (3 Jn 4). Notice that in all of John’s preceding statements that he focused on establishing fellowship that is based on truth, not on the common good works of different individuals.

What would be our reputation before the church? Would it be as Gaius whose reputation was reported throughout the church for his love of the truth? John wrote of Gaius, “For I rejoiced greatly when brethren came and testified of the truth that is in you, just as you walk in truth” (3 Jn 3; see 2 Jn 4). As Gaius, we must be identified as characters for Christ who have an intense desire to be known for being Bible students.

Those who are Bible students are truth seekers, and thus all Bible students are drawn together in order to discover together the truth of God.

A. Rejection of truth.

It is unfortunate that the love of truth is often not passed on from one generation to another. Josiah was the young king of Judah who was touched by the word of God. In fact, he was so touched that he set out to restore Israel to the law of God (See 2 Kg 22,23). His response to the reading of the book of the law in his presence revealed his character: “Now it came to pass when the king had heard the words of the book of the law that he tore his clothes” (2 Kg 22:11).

Though he was previously ignorant of the book of the law of God, Josiah did the best he could with what he knew. But when he read in the book that he and all Israel were wrong in following after a religiosity that they had created after their own desires, he repented. As the king of Israel, he subsequently called all the religious leaders to come together for a time of repentance and restoration. When they all gathered, he made the following call for repentance:

Go. Inquire of the Lord for me and for the people and for all Judah concerning the words of this book that is found, for great is the wrath of the Lord that is kindled against us because our fathers have not hearkened to the words of this book, to do according to all that is written concerning us (2 Kg 22:13).

Because he humbled himself before the word of God, Josiah ...

... made a covenant before the Lord, to follow the Lord and to keep His commandments and His testimonies and His statutes, with all his heart and all his soul, to perform the words of this covenant that were written in this book (2 Kg 23:3).

What was exciting about this repentance was that not only the king, but “all the people took a stand for the covenant” that Josiah made before the Lord (2 Kg 23:3). Josiah was a restorationist king of Israel because he sought to take the people back to the word of God. We would conclude, therefore, that if a leader of God’s people is not taking the people to the word of God, then it is not his desire to restore the people to God. He is seeking a following for himself, not for God.

After Josiah, his son, Jehoiakim, became the king of Judah (Jr 36:1). It was then that things changed for the worse. Josiah's restoration to the word of God did not go deep enough into the hearts of his own family, nor the society he sought to lead back to God. When the word of God was read in the presence of Josiah, he turned Israel to God. But when the word of God was read in the presence of his reigning son, Jehoiakim, the following happened:

So it came to pass when Jehudi had read three or four columns [of the word of God], he [Jehoiakim] cut it with a penknife and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the scroll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth (Jr 36:23).

Because Jehoiakim did not have a heart for the word of God, when it was read in his presence, he turned Israel away from God.

Depending on one's character, truth is either received or rejected. It is often the case that when the alarm goes off at the appointed time in the morning when we should get out of bed, we have the desire to crush the clock and continue on in our sleep of ignorance. We must always keep in mind that rebellion against the truth hurts no one except ourselves, though others may live with the consequences. Jehoiakim sought to bury his head in the sands of ignorance, forgetting that the truth and its blessings will continue to live in the hearts of those who know and love the truth. Unfortunately, most people are as the religious leaders of Israel during the earthly ministry of Jesus: "All too well you reject the commandment of God so that you may keep your own tradition" (Mk 7:9).

When Stephen preached the truth to a mob of those who rebelled against the word of God, "they were cut to the heart. And they gnashed at him with their teeth" (At 7:54). Those who do not want to hear truth often respond as Jehoiakim and the mob of religious leaders who threw Stephen "out of the city and stoned him" (At 7:58). Jehoiakim burned the truth of God. The religious leaders of Jesus' day rejected the word of God. An angry mob of religious leaders stoned Stephen to death because they did not want to hear what he said in reference to their rejection of the word of God. Such is the response of those who have no desire to learn the truth of God's word. When one claims to be religious, but has no love for the Bible, then his only option to maintain a following is to be hostile to those who would preach the truth.

The proverb is told of a hunter and a preacher. Behold, a hunter went forth to hunt. He shot at a duck, and the duck was wounded. And behold, the duck began to squawk. Then behold, a preacher went forth to preach. The preacher took aim with the truth and preached. And behold, the truth wounded an erring member, and behold, the member began to squawk.

It is unfortunate that most people are more willing to believe a lie that is repeated by most of the people, than to believe a truth that is spoken only by a few people. This was the reason why Paul wrote the following statement to the Ephesians in reference to the truth that was being ministered to the disciples:

Then we will no longer be children, tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of teaching, by the trickery of men in cleverness to the deceitfulness of error (Ep 4:14).

"It is always easier to believe a lie that one has heard a thousand times," as Grit said, "than to believe a fact that no one has heard before." Eagerness to believe the lie reveals the character of the one who has no desire to search for truth. Those who are content with their spiritual lives are rarely students of the word of God.

To the Thessalonians, the Holy Spirit wrote in reference to the deceiving power of Satan, "...with all deception of wickedness among those who perish, because they did not receive the love of the truth so that they might be saved" (2 Th 2:10). Most people do not have a love for the truth simply because they seek to believe those who craftily lead them astray with error that tickles their ears (See 2 Tm 4:3). Most people are willing to believe a half truth, while failing to understand that in doing so they are believing a complete falsehood. Benjamin Disraeli once said, "Time is precious, but truth is more precious than time." Anytime one would find the truth of God's word standing in his way, can be assured that he is going in the wrong way. We would not, therefore, resist the Holy Spirit who comes to us through the truth of the written word of God (At 7:51).

Because we seek to be taught, reproved, corrected and instructed in righteousness, we will accept all Scripture that "is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tm 3:16). We will do so in order that we may be "complete, thoroughly equipped for every good work" (2 Tm 3:17). It is for this reason that we seek Jesus who can "teach the way of God in truth" (Mk 12:14; see Lk 20:21).

When we venture throughout the land visiting those of the religious world, we know that there is always hope when we walk in on an assembly of people who have their Bibles open and are led by a teacher who seeks to know God and His word. These are people who have made a covenant with God to know His word. They have committed themselves to the way of the truth in order that they not be tossed to and fro in a world of error.

B. Reception of truth.

We thirst for the truth because Jesus promised, “*And you will know the truth, and the truth will make you free” (Jn 8:32). Jesus is the truth by which we can find freedom from error. To His disciples He said, “I am the way, the truth, and the life” (Jn 14:6). We know the true character of His disciples, therefore, when we see their desire to search the Bible in order to discover truth. God’s people can find their way out of the quagmire of religious confusion only through a study of the Spirit’s road map to truth.

We learn a lesson from the residents of Berea. Luke spoke of their character with words that were selected by the Holy Spirit:

These were more noble-minded than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind and searched the Scriptures daily to see whether these things were so (At 17:11).

Simply because Paul and his companions spoke the truth of the gospel to the Bereans was not sufficient proof for the Bereans that what they said was true. The Holy Spirit moved Luke’s hand to use the word “noble-minded” in reference to Berean’s truth-seeking character. They were noble-minded because they were truth seekers. And by being truth seekers, they knew that there was only one source that could be trusted to keep them from being tossed to and fro and carried about by every prophet who passed through town.

The Bereans’ final source for truth was the Scriptures, not those who spoke the truth. Before they were caught up in some grand scheme and assembly before those who speak with flattering lips, the Bereans first consulted that which they knew was true and unchangeable. They searched their Bibles. We know the character of a truth seeker because he has his Bible open, checking every word that the preacher says. Before he is caught up in religion that is promoted by a prominent preacher, he searches his Bible. Because it was Bereans’ desire to continually grow in their knowledge of the word of God, they remained noble-minded Bible students.

There is a small stream of water that comes forth from a spring near Lake Itasca in the northern part of America. One can easily jump across this stream. But as the stream ventures down and across the North American continent toward the south, many other streams that have become rivers, spill their waters into this stream until it becomes a mighty river. As the river grows, it reaches the southern part of the North American continent. It is called the Mississippi River, over which no man could ever possibly jump.

When the reception of truth identifies the character of an individual, he spiritually grows throughout life into being a mighty person for God. When the totality of one’s thinking is consumed with the word of God, he is able “to be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might” (Ep 6:10). Our desire for truth is identified by how earnestly we search the Scriptures. This is that about which Peter referred when he wrote, “Grow in the grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pt 3:18). No person has a right to claim to be a disciple of Jesus if he is not earnestly searching the Scriptures in order to grow in the grace and knowledge of Jesus.

Jesus pled on behalf of His disciples the night of His betrayal. He prayed, “Sanctify them by Your truth. Your word is truth” (Jn 17:17). It is our desire to be sanctified by the truth of God’s word. And in being sanctified by His truth, we are set apart from the thinking and behavior of the world. We are set apart for His glory.

Chapter 9

CHARACTER THROUGH MORALS

In our efforts to build godly characters, we are constantly challenged with decisions as to whether something is either morally right or morally wrong. The Sinai law was a law of statutes where many acts of behavior were prescribed by precept upon precept. But as Christians, we live under a law of principles. The guiding principle of all law for all time has been based on two directives of love: (1) “You will love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind” (Mt 22:37). (2) “You will love your neighbor as yourself” (Mt 22:39). These are the two most important guiding moral principles of life by which all men from the beginning of time were to conduct their lives. However, these two moral directives upon which we base our behavior do not define specifics. Every decision that comes our way is not always defined in Scripture. Our challenge is how we are to apply these two principles in determining what we are to do in those areas where the word of God is silent.

We often legally seek a “thou shalt” or a “thou shalt not” statement in the Bible that would define our response to all circumstances of life. If there were such statements in reference to every aspect of our behavior, then our obedience might be easier. But this legal approach to behavior does not challenge our incentive to grow in our love of God or with our neighbor. If our obedience were simply a legal compliance to commands, then we would not be challenged to make moral decisions that are based on the principle of “love your neighbor as yourself.” And if we are not challenged to make moral decisions that are based on love, then our spiritual growth is limited.

The legalist seeks to perform a law in reference to his relationship with his neighbor, and then excuse himself from any responsibility when the law is silent. But when we are to love our neighbor as ourselves, we are obligated to always love. There are no loopholes in love. There are no places of silence that would allow us to escape our responsibility toward our neighbor. Love covers the totality of our life, whereas law covers only details.

As one grows in love, the following are some tests that will help in determining what to do when trying to make a moral decision concerning our behavior as disciples of Jesus:

A. The test of Scripture:

The first and most obvious test to determine whether something is either right or wrong is to consult the word of God. When a certain lawyer asked Jesus what one should do in order to inherit eternal life, Jesus responded, “What is written in the law? How does it read to you?” (Lk 10:26). When the word of God speaks, we must walk according to its instructions. Paul explained this to Timothy. “And if a man competes as an athlete, he is not crowned unless he competes lawfully” (2 Tm 2:5).

As disciples of Jesus, we seek to walk according to His commandments. Jesus instructed, “If you continue in My word, then you are truly My disciples” (Jn 8:31). Therefore, in order to determine what to do as a disciple of Jesus, we must first consult the word of Jesus. However, when the word of God is silent in reference to making a decision in a particular area of behavior, then we must move on to other means by which we would determine what is the correct thing to do.

B. The test of common sense:

That which is not sensible cannot be right because God does not call us to be senseless. Though 2 Thessalonians 3:10 is a direct mandate from the Holy Spirit, it is a principle that is based on common sense. “... if anyone is not willing to work, neither let him eat.” To be specific, there is no law in reference to what work we must do. Neither is there a law to work in order to support one’s self and his family. The principle Paul states is that if one does not work when there is work to do, then he cannot live off the church.

There is no law that one should not jump off a high building. But common sense would dictate that one should certainly exercise some wisdom in this matter. There are no laws in reference to the abuse of taking drugs that would damage one’s health. But common sense dictates that one should not consume anything that would harm one’s body. There is no law concerning the eating of food, but common sense would state that we should preserve our bodies, and thus, not eat too much, or eat that which would be poisonous to our bodies. When there is silence in the Scriptures concerning decisions that must be made, God expects us to exercise common sense in reference to our behavior.

During His ministry, one individual came to Jesus complaining that his brother would not give him his rightful share of their father’s inheritance for the children. In response to the brother’s complaint, Jesus presented the parable of a rich man who “brought forth plentifully” from his crops (Lk 12:16). So the rich man reasoned, “I will pull down my barns and build larger ones, and there I will store all my grain and my goods” (Lk 12:18). After he had stored all his wealth on earth, Jesus said that the man proclaimed that he would retire and be happy the rest of his life. “But God said to him, ‘You fool! This night your soul will be required of you’” (Lk 12:20). In Jesus’ conclusion to the parable, He gave a rule of common sense: “So is he who lays up treasure for himself and is not rich toward God” (Lk 12:21). If the Christian focuses all his energy on the things of this world, then he is not using common sense in reference to that which is beyond this world.

C. The test of the golden rule:

Jesus said, “Therefore, all things whatever you want men to do to you, even so do also to them, for this is the law and the prophets” (Mt 7:12). This does not mean that we should do unto others before they do unto us. The “golden rule” is a principle of desiring that others treat us as we would seek to be treated by them. The principle is based on what Paul wrote, “... for whatever a man sows, that he will also reap” (Gl 6:7). Others will simply treat us the way we treat them. If we sow goodness, we will reap goodness.

The golden rule is the principle, though there are those in this world who are simply evil. Our goodness is often rewarded with dishonesty and persecution. In fact, Jesus said that the righteous will sometimes be “persecuted for righteousness sake ...” (Mt 5:10). What He meant was that when one lives the righteous life, he will reap the persecution of an unrighteous world that is intimidated by righteousness. Nevertheless, when one is treated unjustly for living the righteous life, this is no excuse for retaliating with unrighteousness. Remember what Peter wrote?

Bondservants, be submissive to your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but also to the harsh. For this is commendable, if for the sake of conscience toward God, one endures grief, suffering wrongfully (1 Pt 2:18,19).

This is difficult. However, in maintaining our righteous character of doing good to others regardless of what others may do to us, our characters are molded to be as Jesus, who said from the cross, “Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they are doing” (Lk 23:34).

When men gnashed on Stephen with their teeth, he emulated the spirit of Jesus in his character by saying to those who were throwing stones at him, “Lord, do not lay this sin to their charge” (At 7:60). Stephen picked up no stones and threw them back. As he breathed his last, there were no stones found in his hands. And for the benefit of all Christianity, it was good that he did not seek to retaliate, for one of his retaliatory stones may have hit the man standing near who was holding the garments of those who stoned him to death. “And the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man’s feet whose name was Saul [Paul]” (At 7:58). And Saul “was consenting to his death” (At 8:1).

If Stephen would have done that which was done to him, then one of his stones could have mortally wounded the man who many years later repentantly said of himself, “I was formerly a blasphemer and a persecutor and injurious. But I obtained mercy because I did it ignorantly in unbelief” (1 Tm 1:13). When we do unto others as we would have others do to us, we never know what the result will be. Long after our death, the fruit of our love for others may be produced in the lives of others we influenced, but did not retaliate against.

D. The test of publicity.

Paul wrote, “And those who are drunken, are drunken in the night” (1 Th 5:7). Sin loves dark places. The key word for sinners is “cover up.” Sin does not like to be exposed to the general public. We must always ask ourselves that if what we are doing would be made known to everyone we know, then would we be ashamed?

Disciples of Jesus must live the consistent life. In other words, as they conduct themselves in secret, they should conduct themselves in public. As they are in their homes, so should they behave before the public. There should be no variation in the life of the saint from his private life to his public life. We should seek to be the same at all times.

Matthew wrote in reference to the reputation of Jesus, “And His fame [reputation] went throughout all Syria” (Mt 4:24; see 14:1; Lk 4:14,37). When one’s reputation is good, then others will do what the people did in response to the fame of Jesus. “Great multitudes followed Him from Galilee and Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea, and from beyond the Jordan” (Mt 4:25). We like the poem entitled Would I Be Called A Christian? that was written over a half century ago by J. F. Moser:

Would I be called a “Christian,”
If everybody knew,
My secret thoughts and feelings,
And everything I do?
Oh, could they see the likeness,
Of Christ in me, each day?
Oh, could they hear Him speaking,
In every word I say?
Would I be called a “Christian,”
If anyone could know,
That I am found in places,
Where Jesus would not go?
Oh, could they hear His echo,
In every song I sing,
In eating, drinking, dressing,
Could they see Christ my King?
Would I be called a “Christian,”
If judged by what I read,
By all my recreations,
And every thought and deed?
Could I be counted Christ-like,
As I now work and pray,
Unselfish, kind, forgiving,
To others every day?

E. The test of conscience:

Regardless of how bad we might think someone is, we must always believe that there is some good in ev-everyone. God blessed us with a conscience, and it is this conscience that makes us feel bad when we do wrong.

Numerous species of birds migrate throughout the world every year. For example, the Arctic Terns are born in the arctic tundra of northern Canada. After birth, the young terns learn how to fly, and then migrate. They make their way across the Atlantic Ocean to western Europe, down the western coast of the African continent, and then on to Antarctica at the bottom of the world. When it is time for these world wanderers to return home, they fly north to the tip of South America, across that continent, across America, and then back to the very home of their birth. It is a trip of over 30,000 kilometers.

No one has ever found a lost Arctic Tern flying around trying to find his way home. God gave us a conscience to seek out our way to our heavenly home. If we fly in the wrong direction, there is something in our brain that tells us that we are flying in the wrong direction. It is called conscience.

When David wrote, “The fool has said in his heart, ‘There is no God,’” he was not fooling around (Ps 14:1). God gave us a sense of His presence in our minds. Paul reflected on this presence by which David made the preceding statement:

For the invisible things of Him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and divinity, so that they are without excuse (Rm 1:20).

This was Paul’s commentary on David who spoke in reference to those who would deny the existence of God. The next time you are sitting in a philosophy class of a university, and the professor spouts out, “God is dead,” then you will understand that he is foolish. He is not following his sense of spiritual direction. Or, it may possibly be that he has buried his conscience in a false science that searches for every opportunity to dodge personal accountability for sin.

Christian students in universities need to remember Paul’s exhortation to young Timothy: “O Timothy, guard what was committed to your trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings and opposing arguments of what is falsely called knowledge” (1 Tm 6:20). It would be good for one to read this statement the next time he is tempted to follow the “vain babblings and opposing arguments” of those who have puffed themselves up by foolishly denying the One who gave us enough sense to follow our conscience. Many are simply “speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron” (1 Tm 4:2).

Paul reflected on the conscience that was within him in the context of Romans 7:15-25. He confessed that “I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin that is in my members” (Rm 7:23). There is always a struggle within our hearts concerning that which we must do. In the context of Romans 7, the struggle is whether to follow a legal code of obedience by which one might boast in his own performance of law, or to let go and let God through grace deliver one from the temptation of legal justification.

Sometimes it is difficult to follow one’s conscience. We seek to do that which is right, but then there is the temptation to ignore conscience and follow after the flesh. In the context of Romans 14:23, some were intimidated into following after the crowd by eating meat that was sacrificed to idols, which thing violated their conscience as novice Christians. Paul concluded his point on the eating of such meat by saying that if one did not feel right about doing such, then he was violating his conscience. If one violated his conscience, then he has at least condemned himself for eating against his conscience. “And he who doubts is condemned if he eats, because he does not eat from faith, for whatever is not from faith is sin.”

This one statement should alert every believer to be careful about doing that which is against one’s conscience. When we must make decisions when there is no statement in the word of God in reference to the decision we must make, then it is best to at least follow one’s own conscience. This is not always a correct guide for determining correct behavior, but it is at least a trigger to alert us to do that which we believe is right according to our conscience.

God considers our conscience so important concerning our behavior that He left the Gentiles under the “law of conscience” for centuries before the cross. Paul wrote that the Gentiles were subject to work the “law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness and their thoughts alternately accusing or else excusing one another” (Rm 2:15). Our obedience, therefore, must be governed not only by the word of the Lord, but also by our own conscience. “Therefore, it is necessary to be subject, not only because of wrath but also for conscience sake” (Rm 13:5; compare 1 Co 8:7; see 1 Co 10). At the end of all things, “the purpose of the commandment is love out of a pure heart, and a good conscience and a sincere faith” (1 Tm 1:5; see 4:2; 2 Tm 1:3; Ti 1:15).

John leaves us with an important thought that gives some direction in reference to the use of our conscience: “For if our heart [conscience] condemns us, God is greater than our heart, and knows all things. Beloved, if our heart does not condemn us, we have confidence toward God" (1 Jn 3:20,21). At the end of our lives we need to be able to say as Paul, "Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God to this day" (At 23:1). And before a civil court, he stated, "I exercise myself to have always a conscience without offense toward God and men" (At 24:16). Paul conducted his life with a pure conscience. He would conclude for us, "Pray for us. For we are sure we have a good conscience in all things desiring to live honorably" (Hb 13:18; see 1 Pt 2:19).

F. The test of one's hero:

Almost everyone has someone they admire, look up to, follow, seek counsel from, or are mentored by. When we are in a situation to make a decision concerning right or wrong, it is sometimes good to ask oneself what his hero would do if he were faced with the same decision.

Jesus is our hero. "You call Me Teacher and Lord. And you are right, for so I am" (Jn 13:13). On the occasion when Jesus made this statement, He continued, "If I then, the Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another's feet" (Jn 13:14). The reason we should follow Jesus as our hero is what He said to conclude the impact of His example of washing the disciples' feet: "For I have given you an example that you should do as I have done to you" (Jn 13:15). Jesus gave an example of humble servitude. If we are to be His disciples, then we should be looking for his footprints in order to follow His example. We need to be looking for dirty feet.

Now the challenge is to choose the correct heroes we should be following. If we idolize those who are wicked, then we are working against ourselves. Peter wrote that Jesus left us an example that we should follow in His steps (1 Pt 2:21). But if we choose to follow in the steps of the unrighteous, then we will end up with their final destination. One must be cautious, therefore, to choose those individuals who would lead us in the right direction.

The Holy Spirit gave the apostle Paul the right to be followed as an example: "The things that you have both learned and received and heard and seen in me, do these things and the God of peace will be with you" (Ph 4:9). Therefore, Paul wrote of himself, "Be imitators of me even as I also am of Christ" (1 Co 11:1). The condition for which one can be a hero for the Christian is that the one we would seek to follow must be a Christian. We would follow Paul, therefore, in so much as he followed Christ.

G. The test of influence:

Sometimes when seeking to determine if something is either morally right or wrong, we must ask ourselves if the action would either benefit society or cause disruption in society if everyone behaved in the same manner. This principle is reflected in Paul's exhortations to the Corinthians in reference to the eating of meat that had been sacrificed to idols (1 Co 8).

The context of eating meat was in reference to older Christians who had long grown out of any scruples concerning the eating of meats that were sacrificed to idols. The strong disciples knew that there was no religious significance to any meat. But some new converts, who had just been born out of idolatry, still associated with idols the meats that had been sacrificed in respect of the idols (1 Co 8:7). If the strong brother had no consideration for the weak brother in these matters, then he could possibly encourage the weak brother to eat such meats in violation of his conscience. If the strong brother thus ate to encourage the young Christian to eat against his conscience, then he caused the weak brother to eat the meats, and thus sin against his own conscience (Rm 14:23). So Paul said to the strong brethren, "And so by sinning against the brethren, and wounding their weak conscience, you sin against Christ" (1 Co 8:12).

The church is a society of believers. Doing some things may be right in and of themselves, as the eating of meat sacrificed to idols. But if participating in such encourages the new converts to behave contrary to their conscience, then the strong have sinned by encouraging the weak to sin against their conscience. Paul's instructions concerning such situations is to forgo one's rights in order to accommodate the weak until such a time when the weak have grown out of their scruples. "Therefore, if food causes my brother to stumble, I will never eat meat again, lest I make my brother stumble" (1 Co 8:13).

In order to determine whether some things are either right or wrong, one should look around and determine if doing what one intends to do will cause another to stumble. In those things in which we have the freedom to participate—such as the eating of any foods—the one who has the freedom to do certain things must be patient until the weak brother grows out of any scruples he has in doing such. We must keep in mind that it is assumed that the weak brother will grow out of his scruples in reference to those things wherein all Christians have freedom. No brother has a right to bring into bondage another brother with scruples he should have grown out of years ago.

When we move beyond the fellowship of the disciples, we must also be considerate of the society in which we live. For example, if the eating of meats that were sacrificed to idols led the unbelievers to believe that the Christian was also a believer in idols, then it would be common sense that the Christian should refrain from doing that which would encourage the unbeliever to continue in his error. One should be careful about doing those things that would either condone or encourage the unbeliever to continue in the error of his way. Christians should manifest a character of truth and godliness before the world. Because the Christian does not participate in those things that identify worldly living, he becomes a light to the world for righteous living (See Mt 5:16).

H. The test of reaping:

Galatians 6:7,8 states a principle in reference to our present behavior.

Be not deceived. God is not mocked, for whatever a man sows, that he will also reap. For he who sows to his flesh will of the flesh reap corruption. But he who sows to the Spirit will of the Spirit reap eternal life.

Some forgotten poet rightly stated,

You never can tell when you do an act,
Just what the result will be;
But with every deed you are sowing a seed,
Though the harvest you cannot see.

Before one participates in any deed, he must realize that he will have to take ownership of the consequences of what he would do. If he does not suffer the consequences of his own bad decisions, others may.

We grew up on a farm in the central part of the state of Kansas in America. Our mother always reminded us children that in life we should consider our future before we engage in any questionable activities in the present. She gave the example of a young teenager whom she had known, but never told us his name. For some reason, this young teenager became angry with a neighboring farmer. In his youthful retaliation, he went out by night and planted some Johnson grass in the neighboring farmer's field. In those days before herbicides, it was difficult to kill Johnson grass. It was introduced into the United States in 1840 and is classified as one of the top ten most persistent weeds in the world.

Eventually, the young man grew up, our mother said, and became the victim of reaping what he had sown. When he was in his early twenties, he noticed that the neighboring farmer, in whose field he had planted the Johnson grass, had a very beautiful young daughter. As time went by, he eventually fell in love with the fair maiden. His love affair eventually ended in his marriage to the delight of his eyes.

After fulfilling his years on earth, the father of the maiden he had married passed away. You can guess the rest of this story. The retaliatory young man inherited the farm of his wife's deceased father, with all that Johnson grass included. Before you make a decision to do something, it would be wise to first run it through the test of possibly reaping what you will sow. You may literally reap what you sow.

I. The test of finances:

Before one involves himself in some financial dealing, it would be good to consider what effect his financial involvement in the dealing will have on others if all goes wrong. For example, there is no statement in Scripture that says, "Thou shalt not gamble." But one must remember that gambling casinos become rich because there are only a few winners. The vast majority of the gamblers lose, and thus, the losers make the management of the casino rich. The few winners, unfortunately, inspire the masses to keep on betting .... and losing.

We once had a friend who had involved himself in gambling. He once said to me, "Others say that I have a good poker face." But it must not have been all that good for he was continually burdened in paying off his gambling debts. His habit of gambling brought suffering to his family. We are reminded of Paul's statement in 1 Timothy 5:8: "But if anyone does not provide for his own, and especially for those of his own household, he has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever."

Before one would involve himself in anything that would endanger his financial responsibility toward his family, he should be warned. In the case of the Thessalonians, some had quit their jobs. They were not willing to work when there was work to be done. So Paul rebuked these lazy brothers by instructing the rest of the Thessalonian disciples to "withdraw yourselves from every brother who walks disorderly ..." (2 Th 3:6). This statement was made in the context of financial responsibility. If one deals foolishly with his finances, and subsequently must beg off the church, then he has given up his right to be in fellowship with the church. Paul was very specific and direct in reference to such freeloaders: "... if anyone is not willing to work, neither let him eat" (2 Th 3:10).

If one's financial actions lead to the destitution of his family, or to his begging off his brothers and sisters in Christ, then he has shamed his family and given up his right to be in fellowship with the body of Christ. We must never forget that “the love of money is the root of all evils, by which some coveting after have strayed from the faith and pierced themselves with many sorrows” (1 Tm 6:10).

J. The test of family:

Having a good family name is a precious thing. What a young person must remember is that what one does will reflect on the name of his family. If what one would do in the dark, is discovered by the community, then one's family can be greatly shamed. Sometimes in determining one's moral decisions on what he would do depends on how his behavior will reflect on his family name.

K. The test of universality:

Our children often seek to justify their actions by saying, “Everybody is doing it.” But what is being done by everyone may be a detriment to society as a whole. We must ask ourselves that if everyone in society behaved as we do, would society as a whole be improved? The Christian seeks to let his light shine before all in order to encourage all to follow an example of Christian behavior. Christians are the salt of the earth because their behavior preserves society. But if one's salt has lost its saltiness, and one's light is dim, then there is little preservative and light for the world to follow.

We must always remember that societies do not become progressively better. Without the moral direction of the word of God, societies over time always digress to the moral state of what God said of the society that existed before the flood of Noah's day: “And God saw that the wickedness of man was great on the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually” (Gn 6:5). The world's population was not born morally depraved as babies. It was the acceptance of wickedness by more and more individuals of society over centuries that brought the society of Noah's day to the point of having no use for the purpose for which man was created.

The same moral degradation happened to the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. “... the men of Sodom were exceedingly wicked and sinners before the Lord” (Gn 13:13). We know the rest of this story. As the world population before the flood of Noah's day, so also the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. Moral degradation always begins with one accepted and commonly practiced sin. When the majority accept as culturally correct any sinful behavior, then one accepted sin after another will take the entire society into moral ruin. When different practices of sin become common, then the whole is spoiled. Before the first individual considers doing anything, he must imagine everyone doing the same thing. If one's behavior does not add to the upliftment of society, then he should change.

Chapter 10

CHARACTER THROUGH PRAYER

How many times have we said our prayers, but never really prayed? The desires of our heart somehow never find the correct words to satisfy our inner yearnings to lay our petitions before our Father. Our prayers often come forth from our lips as if they were uttered to gods of stone whom we knew would never answer. We seek to pray to a living God with dead words. We seek to carry our words before the altar with cold formality, void of the vehicle of our hearts. No wonder John the Baptist and Jesus taught their disciples how to pray. There was something different about their prayers, and thus, one of Jesus' disciples asked that He teach His disciples how to pray.

Now it came to pass that as He was praying in a certain place, when He finished, one of His disciples said to Him, “Lord, teach us to pray as John also taught his disciples” (Lk 11:1).

At least this one disciple witnessed in Jesus' prayer something that was different than the cold formalities of prayer that were commonly uttered by himself and the other disciples. It is interesting that this is the only request that the disciples made of Jesus to teach them something specific. They did not ask that He teach them how to preach. They did not ask Him to teach them how to lead singing. They did not ask that He teach them how to conduct a colorful assembly of the saints. “Teach us to pray” was all they asked.

We find this interesting, if not revealing of our own selves. We seek to be taught everything, but how to pray. Since our character should be defined by a dedicated prayer life, then we need to be on our knees with the same request as the disciple who asked Jesus to teach them how to pray. Since we are always unsatisfied with our prayer life, then we are always seeking instructions in how to pray.

A. Jesus teaches on prayer.

It is not surprising that there is a great deal of instruction in the Sermon on the Mount in reference to prayer. If the Sermon on the Mount would be the constitution for character building, then we would expect no less in reference to the subject of prayer. Notice Matthew's introduction to the occasion of Jesus' teaching:

And seeing the multitudes, He [Jesus] went up on a mountain. And when He sat down, His disciples came to Him. Then He opened His mouth and taught them ... (Mt 5:1,2).

Jesus taught them many things on this particular occasion. When He came to the subject of prayer in the "sermon," He taught them many things concerning how to express their inner desires to the Father, as well as what to request. The following are some very important points of Jesus' teaching on prayer in the context of Matthew 6:5-15:

1. Do not pray as the religious hypocrites. There were some in the religious environment in which the disciples lived who loved to pray in prominent places "so that they may be seen by men" (Mt 6:5). Prayer is not a performance. Prayer is not to be uttered in order to receive the glory of men. On the contrary, "when you pray, enter into your closet" (Mt 6:6). Prayer is a private matter. "In your closet" assumes that prayer is between the one praying and God.

There are those public occasions when holy men lifted up holy hands in order to lead a group in prayer. In view of the phrase "in your closet," we could deduct that even when one leads in a public manner, his prayer is addressed orally, but the prayer is still an expression of thoughts of the one who is praying. The Holy Spirit wanted "men to pray in every place, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting" (1 Tm 2:8). This statement is made in reference to public prayer. The mandate is that the men be the ones who are lifting up their holy hands in prayer in public.

We must keep in mind that the statement of instruction to Timothy does not say that all the men in the assembly should pray at the same time. No one person praying in such an environment should pray his own prayer to the exclusion of others. Public prayer is simply one person expressing the thoughts of the entire group in prayer. If one is to lead the thoughts of others in public prayer, then the group must be silent in order that the words of the one who leads the thoughts of the group can be heard by the group. If everyone seeks to make his own prayer at the same time in an assembly, then there is no leading in prayer, only vocal confusion with individuals trying to compete with one another in prayer. Such behavior leads to confusion in the assembly.

Jesus' instructions on prayer indicate that there should be no public displays of one's praying in a manner that would give a pretense of righteousness, or draw attention to one's self. This was the context of Jesus' instructions and the problem of the Pharisees. Prayer is a private matter, not a public display of shouting to God for attention, or an effort to compete with others. We see this in Jesus' instructions on prayer: "But you, when you pray, enter into your closet. And when you have shut your door, pray to your Father who is in secret" (Mt 6:6).

If one prays publicly in order to display himself, as did the Pharisees, then he would be as the religious hypocrites who also prayed publicly in order to be seen to be somewhat religious.

2. Do not use meaningless repetitions. "But when you pray, do not use meaningless repetitions as the Gentiles do, for they think that they will be heard for their many words" (Mt 6:7). Probably no one commandment of Jesus is violated more in reference to prayer than this one statement. We have attended countless assemblies where the entire assembly carried on in prayer with many "meaningless repetitions." The choir of repetitions by many in the public prayer were the vain repetitions of those who were often in competition with one another. When the unbeliever steps into such confusion, his conclusion is as what Paul said of the confused assemblies of the Corinthians where many were trying to speak in languages at the same time:

*Therefore, if the whole assembly gathers in one place, and all speak with languages [at the same time], and there come in the uninformed, or unbelievers, will they not say that you are mad? (1 Co 14:23).

When Jesus prohibited "meaningless repetitions," He was prohibiting the saying of the same thing over and over again in prayer. It could not be more clear. But what has been established as a traditional ceremony of prayer in many assemblies is that "meaningless repetitions" in prayer are uttered by the entire assembly at the same time. It seems that this tradition cannot be broken, regardless of whether Jesus said not to do such, or whether Paul said that the unbelievers would judge such behavior in an assembly to be madness.

To our knowledge there are no statements in Scripture that refer to the disciples praying at the same time when they are in an assembly. There are numerous statements that instruct us to pray “for” one another (Ep 6:19; Cl 1:9; 1 Th 5:25; Js 5:16). But there are no statements in Scripture that say the disciples are to pray simultaneously “with” one another. When the disciples come together for prayer, only one person leads the thoughts of the group while the rest of the group listens.

Now we must make a distinction between praising God and praying to God. With much of the “simultaneous prayers” that are meaningless repetitions, and are common among many assemblies today, that which is said to be prayer is actually “simultaneous praise.” The participants are often offering to God praise, not prayer.

There is a difference between praise and prayer. We see no problem with an assembly offering together praise to God. Christians have done this in singing since the first century. A song is simply a group praise of God that is organized according to a melody. An assembly singing together never gives the impression that the assembly is disorganized or that the singers are mad.

When the whole assembly offers simultaneous and repetitious praise to God at the same time, such may be judged to be in the area of freedom. But in behaving in such a manner in assembly, the “uninformed” of 1 Corinthians 14:23 would on an initial and uninformed visit judge that the attendees of the assembly are mad.

What Paul is instructing in 1 Corinthians 14:23 is that every assembly of the disciples must be conducted in an orderly manner, whereby, and if by chance, the uninformed or unbeliever might visit. And if the uninformed or unbeliever attends an assembly of the disciples, then under no circumstances should the assembly give the impression that the attendees are mad. Simultaneous prayer or praise by everyone in the assembly will give this impression. Therefore, in order to guard against being judged by the unbeliever that we are mad, our assemblies must be orderly. It is in this context that Paul instructed, “Let all things be done properly and in order” (1 Co 14:40).

When we speak of prayer, we must not forget the “closet principle.” Prayers must always reflect the thinking of one individual to his Father, whether uttered in private or public. Remember Jesus’ instructions, “... enter into your closet ...” (Mt 6:6)? When Peter and John were released from custody, there was a public prayer at one of the homes of the disciples in Jerusalem. But read carefully what the text actually says about their coming together in an assembly to offer praise to God:

Now when they [all the disciples] heard this, they lifted up their voices to God with one accord. And they said, “Lord, You are God, who have made heaven and earth and the sea, and all that is in them ... (At 4:24).

The statement says that they lifted up their voices “with one accord.” In other words, that which they stated was the same thing in making a statement of praise to God. They were harmonious in their praise that they gave, not individual and confused. In other words, they were not all saying different things at the same time. Luke records the exact words that they uttered with one accord. The conclusion, therefore, is that one person led the thoughts of the entire group, which words we have recorded in the text of Acts 4.

Their praise in the same words would be the same as a song of praise where everyone sings the same words of praise in harmony. There is actually a quotation from the Old Testament in the statement that was made (Ps 2:1,2). The statement that they all made as one group was certainly not the “meaningless repetitions” that Jesus said should not be characteristic of the prayers of His disciples in an assembly.

We once watched a CNN news special of the people in Tibet. During the special, an old man in a village was featured. The CNN crew followed the 85-year-old man in his life in the village. Whenever the man was pictured wherever he went, he was holding and spinning the Buddhist prayer wheel. The prayer wheel is a cylinder on which prayers are written in Sanskrit on the outside. As one turns the cylinder, all the prayers written on the cylinder are supposedly repeated. This aged man was constantly spinning the prayer wheel that was mounted on the spindle, supposedly offering hundreds, even thousands of prayers. Some today have involved themselves in such meaningless repetitions with words.

In offering our “meaningless repetitions,” we must be reminded of Elijah who at one time offered one prayer to God to turn off the rain on Israel (Js 5:17). Just one prayer stopped all the rains. After three years, Elijah prayed to turn the water on, and God gave rains from heaven (Js 5:18). The verb tense in reference to the two prayers of Elijah is aorist, that is, a onetime prayer to turn the water off and onetime prayer to turn it on again. One prayer from a righteous person will do that which is required. There is no power in “meaningless repetitions.”

Someone was right who said, “Nothing lies beyond the power of prayer except that which lies outside the will of God.” The power of prayer is not in “meaningless repetitions.” It is in faith that God will perform for His people. Jesus promised, “And all things you ask in prayer, believing, you will receive” (Mt 21:22). Working for God without prayer in our lives is like driving a vehicle without stopping for petrol, or in some modern-day vehicles, stopping for a charge of electricity. Work for the Lord without prayer inevitably comes to a stop.

3. Pray to our Father: Our prayers are directed to the Father (Mt 6:9; At 4:24). Jesus said, “Therefore, pray to the Lord of the harvest so that He will send laborers into His harvest” (Mt 9:38; 2 Co 13:7). Jesus asks that we address our prayers to the Father. At the time of his stoning, Stephen saw Jesus in heaven at the right hand of the Father (At 7:59). Since this was a direct and personal request of Stephen to Jesus, whom he saw at the time he uttered his plea, we would have difficulty in using this historical event as a mandate for prayer directed to Jesus. Stephen was looking at Jesus as he made the request that He forgive those who stoned him.

Paul made the statement in 2 Corinthians 13:7, “Now I pray to God that you do no evil ....” We conclude that the word “God” in this statement refers at least to the Father. But one could say that since Jesus is one with God, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, then certainly Jesus would be in on the answer to Paul’s prayer. At least this thought was in the request that Paul made from prison when he wrote to the Philippians. “But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timothy shortly to you so that I may also be of good comfort when I learn of your state” (Ph 2:19). It was the Lord Jesus whom Paul trusted to send Timothy to the Philippians. Would it not be within the request of our prayers to petition the Lord Jesus to send an evangelist to a particular area? The implication is that whatever prayer we utter, God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit go to work for us.

This thought may have been in the plea of Simon when he said to Peter and John, “Pray to the Lord for me ...” (At 8:24). We would assume that the reference “Lord” in this statement at least included Jesus since all that was done on this occasion was in reference to the Samaritans who submitted to Jesus as Lord. Simon’s request, therefore, would have been that Peter and John asked the Lord Jesus not to bring on him that which Peter said would happen because of his bitterness.

Nevertheless, and based on the instructions of Jesus in Matthew 6:9, we will direct our petitions to God, the Father. However, we also understand that when the instructions of Matthew 6:9 were stated by Jesus, He was still in His earthly ministry to the Jews. He was taking believing Jews to the cross and His personal ascension to the right hand of God where He would exercise all authority in heaven and on earth (Mt 28:18).

After the ascension, things changed in heaven. Jesus is now our mediator in heaven with the Father (1 Tm 2:5). We seek to do all things in His name (Cl 3:17), and thus, we will follow the instructions of Jesus to the apostles in John 14:13: “And whatever you will ask in My name, that I will do so that the Father may be glorified in the Son.” Our prayers are addressed to the Lord. We understand that the Father, Son and Holy Spirit will all go to work for us in answer to our prayers. It is our privilege to offer our supplications. It is the work of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit to answer our prayers. And since the Father, Son and Holy Spirit work as one team, then we assume that all that God is—the Father, Son and Holy Spirit—goes to work in answer to our prayers.

4. Prayer unleashes God’s business among men. In His instructions, Jesus taught the disciples to pray, “Your will be done on earth as it is in heaven” (Mt 6:10). Jesus’ instructions in Matthew 6:9-13 are statements in reference to God’s work among men. If we would unleash the power of God on earth in the hearts and events of men, then our prayers must be in tune with the will of God. God’s will is done on earth when men submit to the will of God as it is done in heaven.

Jesus reigns in the hearts of men when believers submit to His kingdom reign from heaven. In this way, therefore, the kingdom reign of Jesus comes to a particular place of the world when people believe on Jesus and submit to His kingdom reign from heaven. We would pray for the kingdom reign of Jesus to come to a particular area of the world by pleading to the Father that His will be done in the hearts of men on earth as it is done in heaven.

If we pray that the kingdom come in a particular region of the world, then we would certainly be praying for those who would take the gospel to the people of the region. This too is what Jesus asked of His disciples: “Therefore, pray to the Lord of the harvest so that He will send laborers into His harvest” (Mt 9:38).

5. Prayer builds character. Jesus said, “And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors” (Mt 6:12). Forgiveness is not only a condition for the Father to forgive our sins, but also the foundation on which our character is changed into being godly. God is a forgiver because He does not wish that any perish from an eternal relationship with Him (2 Pt 3:9). We forgive in order that our friendships on earth not perish.

We must keep in mind that we must bless those we ask the Father to bless. We must pray the hardest, therefore, when it is the hardest to pray. When we are offended, sinned against, and tormented by our persecutors, it is indeed hard to pray. But when we have a forgiving spirit on our knees, it is hard to fall. The cross of Jesus indeed stands tall when we are on our knees, emulating in our lives the spirit of forgiveness that came forth from the cross. From the cross, Jesus prayed to the Father, “Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they are doing” (Lk 23:34). We must simply not forget, as someone said, “Kneeling in prayer keeps you in good standing with God.” We must simply remember that it is difficult to stumble when we are on our knees in prayer.

We also must not forget that Satan is the greatest believer in our prayers, simply because he is the one who suffers the most from our prayers. A wise poet wrote,

If prayer is made the center of our life,
God will remove our strife.
If one petitions God in humility,
God will bless with tranquility.

We sometimes pray to God for strength in order to achieve great things. What God often gives in answer to our prayers is weakness in order that we realize we must find strength in Him. Some would ask for health in order to do great things for God. But the answer to such a prayer may be infirmity in order that we depend more on His work and less in our own. We would not ask for riches in order to be happy, but for contentment with those riches we already have. We ask not for power to be praised of men, but for weakness in order to feel our need for Him. We do not need all things in order to enjoy life, but as the humble African villager, have few things in order to enjoy all things. At the end of the day, we are usually not given all the things for which we ask, but certainly we are given everything we need. We would be known for that which God desires that we be known: “My house will be called a house of prayer for all people” (Is 56:7). Our desire to serve the Lord is certainly the engine of our destiny, but it will never start up without the fuel of our prayers.

And all things you ask in prayer, believing, you will receive.
(Mt 21:22)

The Christian must continually reexamine his character. No one can be true to himself if he is self-deceived or narcissistic. Some seek to lead a secret life deep within themselves, but their inner self will always be revealed to others through their behavior. If there is an inconsistency between one’s deep inner feelings, and what one seeks to portray to the world, then he is leading a life of self-deception in what he portrays. The spiritual struggle of the Christian is to bring harmony between one’s inner feelings and beliefs and his character that he manifests to others. This is being true to oneself, and in one word, being sincere.

When on our knees to the Father, we must never deceive ourselves into believing that the Father does not know our inner most desires and character. If one prays to the Father contrary to his inner most desires and character, then he is seeking to be a hypocrite before the Father.

We should not expect insincere prayers to be answered. It is for this reason that we must continually struggle to bring our prayers into harmony with our inner most beliefs and feelings. If we find an inconsistency between the hidden inner self, and the character we seek to portray to others, then only repentance will bring us peace of mind.

Over a century and a half ago in 1867 Alfred Bernard Nobel moved the world beyond black powder by inventing a more powerful explosive mixture that he called dynamite. He was thirty-four years old when he was granted the patent for the mixture in 1867. He became fabulously wealthy because his invention of dynamite was sold to governments throughout the world to make war.

Nobel’s last will and testament was dated November 27, 1895. At the end of his life he realized all the damage to humanity that his invention had caused. As a result of this realization, in his last will and testament he wanted his wealth given in special grants to encourage the building of societies. He requested that his wealth be given in grants to build and not destroy. The grants were eventually called the Nobel Prizes. The financial grants were to be given to those who excelled in social development in the fields of physics, chemistry, psychology, medicine, literature, and above all, peace. The profits of his invention that caused so much grief in war, eventually led to encouraging humanity to prosper.

It may be that we too need repentance in our lives to live the character of Christ, instead of living a life of destruction. This is what the Ephesians did, for Paul wrote the following of their past:

Among whom also we all once behaved in times past in the lust of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature the children of wrath, even as the rest (Ep 2:3).

The end of the story for the Ephesians can be the glorious end of all those who change their characters from being “children of wrath” to being people who bring glory to God.

“But God, who is rich in mercy, for His great love with which He loved us, even when we were dead in trespasses, made us alive together with Christ—by grace you have been saved (Ep 2:4,5).

Book 65

The Power Of Many As One

When all humanity at one time in history spoke the same language and had a common goal, all men began to do something that was awesome. They supposed that they would build a tower whose top might, in their thinking, reach even into heaven (Gn 11:4). Their ambition was wrong, but their unity was strong. God made a proclamation concerning their ability. Our inherent ability to be united and strong was the way He made us. The proclamation was that “... nothing will be impossible for them that they have imagined to do” (Gn 11:6). When we get together, we get strong. This is our gift from our Creator. When we speak the same language and have the same goal, nothing will be impossible for us.

Satan’s greatest weapon against us, therefore, is to orchestrate us into biting and devouring one another in senseless debates over nonsense. The Holy Spirit cautioned some brethren who involved themselves in such: “But if you bite and devour one another, take heed that you not be consumed by one another” (Gl 5:15). We will thus give no place to Satan in these matters. We will construct no theological boxes that enshrine opinions. At all costs, we will seek to defend our unity with all those who have obeyed the gospel. However, we will not give way to those who would infringe on our precious freedom that we have in Christ. We will allow no box makers to draw us into controversies that lead to more confusion. We will build no theological boxes ourselves into which we would steal away the freedom of others. This is necessary in order to be the one organic and universal body of Christ.

The end result of box-making theologies is the establishment of an assortment of denominations composed of adherents who defend their boxes by conforming to common theologies or traditions. Because this cocooning behavior is so prevalent in the religious world, we need to take another look at some of those key statements of Scripture that reveal mandates concerning the organic unity of the body of Christ. As disciples of Jesus, it is our task to be unified in our diverse opinions. Our obsession for unity should be so strong that we should be willing to forgo all contentious attitudes in the midst of our differences. We must remember that a contentious spirit will always lead to the formation of a new denomination in Christendom, which thing we struggle to abolish for the sake of reaching the world for Jesus. When we maintain the unity of the faith in the bond of peace, we are powerful. And since God works in those who are unified, then we have the privilege of experiencing the awesome power of the Spirit in our lives.

The foundation and introduction upon which any study concerning the subject of this book is made is John 17:20,21. The mandate of Jesus’ statement must permeate all our discussions. Unity must be the obsession of all those who believe in Jesus as the Christ and Son of God. Jesus’ prayer in John 17:20,21 establishes the foundation upon which our relationships with one another must exist and continued, even in times of disagreement concerning our differences of opinion. In other words, when discussing our differences, John 17:20,21 must be the first rule for orderly discussion.

I do not pray for these alone, but for those also who believe in Me through their word; that they all may be one; even as You, Father, are in Me and I in You, that they also may be one in Us, so that the world may believe that You sent Me.

Jesus’ prayer for oneness was first in reference to “these” for whom He prayed on this occasion. It is imperative to understand those to whom the pronoun “these” refers. “These” would set the example for the rest of us, since the original mandate of Jesus’ statement was directed to “these.” Their oneness in Christ would teach us that Jesus’ prayer was answered in their lives, and thus, can be answered in our lives as we follow the example of what “these” who believed and taught in unison with one another.

Jesus was talking to individuals, not to groups. His prayer, therefore, was for the individuals to whom He spoke to be one. In this context, the individuals were His immediate disciples, the apostles. His prayer was that they as individuals remain united as one. “These” were to be given through the Holy Spirit, a unifying message upon which they would be one (See Jn 14:26:16:13). The foundation for their unity, therefore, would be the unifying message with which they would go forth and evangelize the world. The gospel message of the believers would be tested by the desire of those who believed in Christ to be one as the apostles remained one. John later wrote the following concerning the unifying message that he and the other apostles spoke:

That which we have seen and heard we declare to you so that you also may have fellowship with us [the apostles], and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ (1 Jn 1:3).

After Jesus made the initial plea in His prayer for the oneness of the apostles, He then took the subject of His request for unity beyond the apostles. He prayed for those who would believe on Him “through their [the apostles’] word.” Again, He was speaking in reference to individuals who would believe the unifying message of the apostles. In believing the unifying message of the gospel, people would subsequently obey the gospel and be added to the one universal body of Christ.

Those who would believe as a result of the preaching of the gospel, would be individuals. They would believe as individuals, and as a result of their belief, be added to the group of those who believed and were baptized (At 2:47).

Groups of individuals would be united because the individuals of the groups would be one in Christ through their obedience to the gospel. We see in the prayer of Jesus that there should never exist among His disciples any such thing as autonomous groups of believers who would function separate from one another either as individuals or groups. In fact, in reading between the lines of Jesus’ prayer, He makes a prophecy against anyone who would separate groups of believers from the whole of His household of believers. In the prayer, Jesus’ point is very clear: One cannot seek to fulfill the answer to Jesus’ prayer for unity if he in anyway constructs or seeks to maintain any ecclesiastical organization that functions in a manner by which the disciples of Jesus are separated from one another.

Jesus prayed that His immediate disciples be one in spirit and purpose as He and the Father were one in their spirit and purpose at the cross. When His immediate disciples went forth with the united message of the gospel, those individuals who believed came into the fellowship of the one body (See 1 Jn 1:1-3). The obedient were inherently one because of the one gospel that they obeyed. Their unity, therefore, was a blessing as a result of their obedience to the gospel. It would be the task of the obedient, therefore, to maintain the unity with which they were blessed when they obeyed the gospel.

There was an apologetic in the prayer of Jesus that His disciples be one. The apologetic was “that the world may believe that You sent Me” (Jn 17:21). If the oneness of the body is evidence that the Father sent the Son, then the opposite would signal to the world the fact that the Son did not originate from the Father. The unbelieving world would conclude that if the Father and Son were supposedly one, then certainly this oneness must be reflected in those who would believe on Jesus as the Son of the Father.

One of the reasons why we believe that Islam is not a true religion from God is because of the division that exists between the Muslim Sunnis and Sh’ites. Their mortal and endless conflict with one another is evidence that Islam is a religion of man, for no message from the one true and living God would cause such a mortal conflict. However, we must remember that the Muslim makes the same argument against a divided Christianity.

The Muslim points out our embarrassment, and probably our theological hypocrisy. He concludes that since Christianity is so denominationally split into countless sects, then certainly Jesus could never have been deity revealed from God. Jesus would be a prophet, but never God in the flesh.

The Muslim also accuses Christians of having a polytheistic faith. He asserts that the Christian has deified Jesus, and thus, he concludes that the Christ has constructed a theology of at least two gods, god the Father, and Jesus, whom Christians have deified to also be a god. Those who believe in Jesus, therefore, have a difficult time explaining to the monotheistic Muslim that God the Father and God the Son are one. Christians have a difficult time defending their claim of one God when at the same time, they practice a divided Christendom.

Of course Muslims, and followers of other non-Christian religions, pronounce their judgments with the prejudice of their own uniqueness. Since all Muslims hypocritically look past their own diversity within Islam, they assume that they can judge Christians to believe in a Jesus who was only a good prophet, but not the Son of God. They do not understand the nature of the church amidst the diversity of so many false religious groups that pose to be “Christian,” and yet function divisively throughout Christendom.

Christendom is only a word that represents a collective of diverse religious groups that believe in Jesus. All these groups claim to have a stake in Jesus, but most do not do the will of the Father in heaven (Mt 7:24-27). We would not, therefore, allow the Buddhist or Muslim, or whoever, to deny the Sonship of Jesus because of the nonsense of every religious group who poses to be “Christian” simply because they cry out “Lord, Lord.” It is obedience to the truth of the gospel that the united apostles preached that produces unity. And when there are those who do not submit to the truth of the gospel, then they have no right to claim the name “Christian.” This name is reserved only for those who have done that which qualifies one to be “of Christ” (See 1 Co 1:12,13).

So Jesus’ prayer is still valid. Not everyone in Christendom who cries out “Lord, Lord” is conforming to the unifying message of the gospel. Being Christian is validated by doing the will of the One after whom we call ourselves (See Mt 7:15-23). And thus, we search throughout Christendom for individuals who have obeyed the gospel. We seek for those who have obeyed the gospel, and thus, are deserving to be “of Christ” because of their obedience to the gospel. These are the individuals who would be one in Christ because they have done the will of the Father upon their obedience to the gospel.

We must delve deeper into the mire of denominational sectarianism as we make our journey past division and into the unity that brings power to the house of God. But in all of our mental meanderings, we must not lose sight of Jesus’ mandate that individuals who would call themselves after Him must be one. We must force ourselves to look past church house signs and temples, and the pompous pretense of those who have called a group of disciples after themselves. We must even look past legalized assemblies that are presumptuously set forth as the identity of the church.

In order to discover the unity about which Jesus prayed, it is indeed helpful to study closely those texts of Scripture where the Holy Spirit has alerted us to watch out for certain signs that would lead to division among the disciples. While we are immersing ourselves in these chosen texts, we must never lose sight of the fact that Jesus calls on individual Christians to be one as He and the Father are one. Our motive for doing this study is not only for our own salvation, but also for the salvation of unbelievers to whom we would preach a unifying gospel. And while we preach, we must strive to manifest in our oneness the oneness of the Father and Son after whom we call ourselves.

Chapter 1

THE BIRTH OF HIERARCHY

Any study of the universal unity of the body of Christ must consider the development of universal hierarchies as the Roman Catholic Church. It is necessary to consider such hierarchies in view of the universality of the church. There is certainly a difference between the earthly hierarchy of the Catholic Church and the heavenly hierarchy of the church of the New Testament. Therefore, in order that we not end up with a Catholic hierarchy, we must carefully consider the New Testament texts that explain the universality of the church that exists without all the authorities on earth that are characteristic of the Catholic Church, and other networks of authority that are maintained by religious groups around the world.

In order to construct a worldwide network as the Roman Catholic Church, a foundation must first be laid that is conducive to the birth and development of such a network. Once the foundation is laid, then only time is needed for the hierarchy of authority to develop. Over time, men who seek authority for themselves, move their movement from freedom in unity to an institutional network of authorities.

In the case of developing a worldwide network of control as the Catholic Church, it takes decades to develop such a hierarchal system. The progress is slow in development. The origins of such church networks are first embedded in what is considered harmless leadership behavior among the adherents of the movement. When those who seek to bring the style and system of world lordship leadership into the body of freed disciples, a foundation of behavior is laid that eventually leads to the bondage of the disciples under the authority of the designated leadership.

There is a natural sense of security in lordship-led movements, and thus, as believers seek to be reassured by their autocratic leaders, hierarchal networks of authority are easy to develop. It is simply appealing to the vast majority of potential adherents to have a “king” on earth whom they can see. In our worldly thinking, we can relate better with a “king” on this earth than one who is supposedly a long way off on the throne of David at the right hand of God in heaven.

Once the foundation for a structure of authority is laid, then an historical trigger is all that is necessary to set the digression on its way to a networked authority that is not reversible because it is led by those who enjoy their positions of authority in the organized structure.

In this initial chapter we must focus on the universal unity of the body for which Jesus prayed. It is necessary that we step back for a moment in order to suggest some thoughts in church history that are usually not discussed in the context of how networks of authority originate in their early stages of development.

The challenge of any book written on the subject of unity is that we must first view the worldwide body of Christ from the top down, and not from the bottom up. We must view the function of the disciples as the organic body from the throne where the King is seated with all authority (Mt 28:18). Once we fully understand the universal kingship and headship of Jesus over His one body, then we can better guard ourselves from forming any hierarchal network of authority that would take the place of Jesus’ reign in our hearts (See Rm 5:17).

(For more study on this subject, download Book 55, The Organic Function of the Body of Christ, Biblical Research Library, africainternational.org.)

A. Understanding history from an institutional perspective:

Because of our present institutional view of the church, our inclination is initially to view the function and organization of the church from the bottom up. In doing this, we have often formed a distorted view of the worldwide organic function of the members of the body. We want to center leadership around local authorities we have designed to be our leaders and decision-makers. But if we look from heaven down, we see the church from the viewpoint of Jesus and the authority of His reign. We then view godly leaders assuming responsibility of the sheep because they have submitted to Jesus’ authority. And this is exactly what the Holy Spirit wanted us to see when He directed Luke to write the document of Acts. We see the disciples functioning universally as they were controlled by King Jesus in heaven through His word.

When we view the church from the throne of Jesus, we will better understand the connection of individual members to the one Vine (See Jn 15:1-4). We can better understand how individuals are united in Christ because of their common connection with Jesus and one another through their obedience to the gospel. But if we view the church from what exists in the religious world today, then we will always end up with a distorted understanding of His kingdom and reign.

B. Understanding history from a Catholic Church perspective:

Another mistake that church historians have often made is to interpret history from a Catholic Church point of view. Even protestant historians have used too many Catholic documents to construct the early development of the Roman Catholic Church. Researching material on this subject that is footnoted with Catholic Church resources must always be questioned.

The Catholic Church has always assumed that the Catholic Church can historically trace its beginnings back to Christ through Peter, who is supposed to have been the first Pope. With this historical prejudice, it is assumed that all historical documents that were written in the first and second centuries should be interpreted with the pretext that the Catholic Church hierarchy of authority on earth existed back to Peter. We would confess that different networks of hierarchy were development during the second and third centuries. But these developments were diverse. Not all eventually led to what is the Roman Catholic Church that we see today.

By formulating our view of church history from the school of Catholic history taught by Catholic theologians, we certainly have come to some erroneous conclusions of the universal body of disciples as explained in the New Testament. In particular, we have often assumed that the entire body of members throughout the world followed a direct line of Catholic apostasy from the very beginning of the church that was first established in Jerusalem in A.D. 30. In our study of the events of history, therefore, we must make every effort to refrain from interpreting history from the bias of those who would have us understand history from the perspective of the Roman Catholic apostasy. Though we can find no hierarchy of authority embedded in the teaching of the New Testament church, the church must always arm itself against such apostasies.

C. Understanding history from a biblical perspective of apostasy:

In our research to understand the historical changes that took place in the church after its initial beginning, we must always assume that the apostasy from the original function of the body of Christ from its early beginning to the formation of the hierarchal authority of the Catholic Church, was constantly in motion. And thus, we must not assume that the Catholic Church apostasy, as well as any other apostasy to hierarchal authority, was a surprise to the Holy Spirit. If we always assume that some apostasy is in progress at any time among Christians somewhere in the world, then we too will not be surprised when we wake up one day and find that we are in the midst of such. We must never assume that the Catholic network of authority was a unique happening in church history. On the contrary, we must always assume that such networks of authority are in some stage of development, if not fully developed, simply because there are always those among us who would draw away the disciples after themselves.

God knows the future, and thus, through the inspired historical statements made in the New Testament we would assume that He would give us some indication of what would lead to that which actually happened in the historical development and establishment of networked authorities.

We would also assume that the Spirit would give us some indication of how apostasy to hierarchal authority would begin, as well as instructions on how to prevent such. We would assume, therefore, that we can discover in our studies of the New Testament that the Holy Spirit would forewarn the early disciples concerning what would eventually take place, and thus give the early church instructions on how to prevent apostasies of hierarchal networks of authority. That which laid the foundation for apostasies as the Roman Catholic Church, that came centuries later after the establishment of the church, can be found in the warnings of the Holy Spirit in the New Testament.

The Catholic Church was not specifically in the mind of the Holy Spirit when He gave warnings concerning hierarchal apostasy. If the Catholic apostasy was specifically in the warnings, then other hierarchal networks of authority that exist throughout the world today might excuse themselves from violating some of the warnings in the New Testament. We must keep in mind that there are numerous hierarchal networks of authority throughout Christendom today that fall under the condemnations of the Holy Spirit that are recorded in the New Testament. The hierarchy of the Catholic church is not unique among the religions of the world.

It is not, therefore, that the Spirit had the Catholic Church specifically in mind when He gave His warnings in the New Testament. He simply gave instructions on how such hierarchal apostasy develops, as well as instructions on how to prevent and correct such in the initial stages of development. This is the theme of all warnings surrounding the rise of individuals and groups at any time in history who would lead disciples away after themselves in order to establish networks of authority among the disciples.

In the following chapter, we base our premise for hierarchal apostasy on that which laid the foundation for such apostasy in the first century. Similar apostasies are in development today among religious groups in different places of the world. It is always present in those who seek to steal some of the “all” authority that rests with our King in heaven.

During the Protestant Reformation five hundred years ago, many protestant churches that were given birth out of those years of protest against Roman Catholicism, often copied the same network of authority of the Catholic Church. They have since become that from which they fled. These hierarchies of authority continue today in the protestant world. When the Independent Church Movement started in the middle of the twentieth century, it was initially a protest against foreign networks of authority that were propagated around the world through missionary societies. But the independents who ran from the authority of the mission societies seem to in some places be circling around to become that from which they fled. They too are laying the foundation in some places upon which a universal hierarchy of authority could develop, especially in some areas of Africa.

We must keep in mind that the development of a worldwide hierarchy of authority occurs over decades, if not centuries. It is our task to assume that the Holy Spirit knew such hierarchies of authority would develop throughout history, and thus, we search in the New Testament for His instructions on how to recognize the early beginnings of such apostasies. Recognition aids in preventing such from taking place among ourselves.

Hierarchal apostasy should not come as a surprise to those who are knowledgeable of history. Hierarchies of authority are simply the outcome of those who seek to have authority over others, and subsequently, bring this desire in among the members of the body.

Whenever a hierarchal system of authority is established, then the gospel reign of King Jesus is under attack. Adherents of the religion with an institutional authority are brought into the bondage of the authorities of the religion. When this happens, the headship of King Jesus is marginalized. When there are lords on earth, the lordship of Jesus in heaven is challenged.

Chapter 2

STAYING CLOSE TO ONE ANOTHER

In order to understand clearly that from which we often are tempted to stray, it is necessary to know some basic Bible teachings that are often ignored. After all, apostasy means leaving sound teaching and going after that which is not true. We must, therefore, first understand the true model of how God intended that we as members of the body be freely networked with one another throughout the world in a spirit of unity. Since the body of Christ is globally one, then there are necessary teachings in the New Testament that identify its oneness. At the same time there is a foundation of teaching that will always keep sincere members from constructing either a national or international network of hierarchal authority in which men are placed as rulers over the body.

A. One head, one universal body:

Jesus is the only head of the body (Cl 1:18). He has all authority over all things (Mt 28:18). In order for the body to be one and universal, these two truths must never be compromised. As Luke wrote the historical document of Acts, therefore, he wrote by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit in order to record an historical account of how the King of kings worked in the lives of individuals. He recorded how the Spirit worked to produce an internationally united army of believers. Luke portrayed the organic function of the body as it spread as one body into all the world.

In focusing on the function of the one organic body, the Holy Spirit wants us to understand that the success of the disciples in evangelizing their generation was in the fact that the members of the body remained one universal body. The many members, regardless of where they lived, never viewed themselves to be separated from one another. When reading through the book of Acts, therefore, one principle is clear: The disciples always functioned individually in a united organic manner in order to accomplish the mission of Jesus. The disciples functioned as each one was personally committed to the function of the one universal body.

The early disciples accomplished all that we read in the New Testament without any hierarchal authorities on earth who regulated their function. There is a great lesson here for those who feel that we cannot effectively do the work of our personal ministries unless we fall under some authority on earth to tell us what we must do. Even the disciples in Jerusalem were functioning in reference to their ministry to the widows for several years before some racial prejudices led to the neglect of some Grecian widows (At 6:1-7). A group was chosen to sort out the problem, but when the problem was sorted out, the organized group was disbanded. One member of the group, Stephen, went on to heaven (At 7:59,60), and another, Philip, went on as an evangelist to Caesarea (At 21:8).

The point is that the early disciples needed no organizing authorities to muster them into doing that which each disciple was personally to do in his own life in order to be a disciple of Jesus. This may be a strange thing to highly organized institutional churches today. All we would ask is that those of the corporate church today take another look in the book of Acts concerning the organic function of the body of Christ.

The disciples of the first century simply went about doing their personal ministries without establishing any church organizations with some earthly hierarchy of authority that controlled and manipulated the disciples on earth. They went about preaching the gospel in order to generate individual and voluntary commitment to the King of kings. When any one individual obeyed the gospel, he was added by God to this functioning body of disciples (At 2:47; see Ep 4:11-16).

New converts were not added to any particular group of disciples. They were added to the one universal church of disciples who functioned as disciples wherever they were scattered (At 8:4). The power of the body, therefore, remained strong as individuals were disciplined to the one Lord of all things. As the body grew, it exerted so much influence in the societies to which Christians went that the world was turned upside down as a result of the impact of their ministries (At 17:6).

B. Apostasy to error:

In Peter's quotation of Joel 2:28, he historically positioned the beginning of the church in Jerusalem in A.D. 30 (At 2:17-21). He quoted Joel's introduction to his prophecy, "And it will come to pass in the last days ..." (At 2:17). The events that transpired on the A.D. 30 Pentecost took place "in the last days." These were the last days of national Israel and God's unique Sinai covenant relationship with Israel. According to Jesus' prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, there would arise before the destruction “false christs and false prophets” among the people (Mt 24:24). Between A.D. 30 and A.D. 70, therefore, the beginning of apostasy would arise. Apostasies would certainly arise throughout the history of the church, but there would be a great apostasy before the close of the first century.

We assume that Timothy was in the region of Ephesus when Paul wrote the following warning: “Now the Spirit clearly says that in the latter times some will depart from the faith ...” (1 Tm 4:1). Both Paul and Timothy were in the latter times, the last days of national Israel. In these times there were false christs and prophets who were “giving heed to deceitful spirits and teachings of demons” (1 Tm 4:1). In his second letter to Timothy, Paul mentioned two such false teachers in the church. Paul warned Timothy in reference to his relationship with such men:

But avoid profane and empty babblings, for they will increase to more ungodliness. And their word will spread like gangrene. Among them are Hymenaeus and Philetus, who concerning the truth have strayed ... (2 Tm 2:16-18).

That about which Paul warned Timothy was already happening. The error of the two false teachers was already spreading when Paul wrote the preceding statement to Timothy in the middle 60s. Peter also was not unaware of what was transpiring among those to whom he wrote.

But there were also false prophets among the people [of Israel], just as there will be false teachers among you, who will secretly bring in destructive heresies, even denying the Lord who bought them, bringing on themselves swift destruction. And many will follow their shameful ways. And because of them, the way of truth will be blasphemed (2 Pt 2:1,2).

Specifically in reference to our subject of hierarchal authority, Paul identified the nature of hierarchal leadership in the context of 2 Thessalonians 2:1-12. Notice carefully the autocratic behavior of the “man of lawlessness” who would set himself up as a center of reference in religious matters:

Let no one deceive you by any means, for that day will not come unless there first come a falling away, and that the man of lawlessness is revealed, the son of destruction, who opposes and exalts himself above all that is called God or that is worshiped, so he sits as God in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God (2 Th 2:3,4).

This apostasy states that the one who would set himself up, would do so with religious authority. He is one who would go as far as demand worship. Peter’s statements identify the nature of the apostasy that was coming in the lifetime of his immediate readers, as well as any apostasy throughout history that is always lurking somewhere in the leadership of the church. Though Jesus taught that lordship leadership should not be among His disciples, such happened in the church in the first century. Therefore, we must always be cautious about setting ourselves up as authorities among the disciples (See Mk 10: 35-45).

Paul warned the Ephesian elders about those who would set themselves up as rulers over groups of disciples that they had drawn away from the sole lordship of Jesus (At 20:29,30). Peter wrote that such apostasy was already happening at the time he wrote 1 Peter in the middle 60s (See 1 Pt 5:1-4). When John wrote 1 John, the agents of apostasy were already at work. John warned, “Beloved, do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits ... because many false prophets have gone out into the world” (1 Jn 4:1). If we date 1 John the middle or end of the 60s, then there was apostasy among the disciples at the time John wrote. The prophecies of apostasy had already started to be fulfilled by the middle and end of the first century. John reminded his readers,

Little children, it is the last hour. And as you have heard that the antichrist is coming, even now there are many antichrists. By this we know that it is the last hour. They went out from us, but they were not of us ... (1 Jn 2:18,19).

It was the last hour of national Israel. The church had been warned by Jesus that this hour would come. The New Testament prophets verbally explained the nature of the apostasy that would come, and thus in their warnings identified the nature of different apostasies to error.

One of the primary apostasies would be an apostasy to hierarchal authority among the disciples. As students of the Bible who must be on guard against any apostasy, we must be prepared to define a true apostasy, and then take measures to arm the church with the truth of God’s word.

If division in the church must happen in reference to guarding the church against apostasy, then those who would preach another gospel must be cut off as Paul encouraged those legalistic teachers in Galatia to do themselves in reference to their relationship with the body of Christ. “I could wish that those who are troubling you would cut themselves off from you” (Gl 5:12).

It was certainly a sad day in the history of the function of the organic body of Christ when a Christ-sent apostle would wish that those who preached a legalistic gospel (Gl 1:6-9), would cut themselves off from the universal body of Christ. But unless their deception should continue to injure the family of God, it was best that those who bind where God has not bound should leave. John said they would go out from among the disciples, but in the beginning, “they were not of us” (1 Jn 2:19).

Chapter 3

DEPENDENCE ON ONE ANOTHER

3In studies of church history, we have found that few church historians consider the New Testament beginnings of any apostasy that eventually leads to a global network of authority. Most historians usually study the documents that were written by the apostate church once the apostasy had advanced to the point of being recognized as something different to what is recorded in the New Testament.

When we study church history in reference to Christianity, our study must always begin with the warnings of apostasy that are recorded in the New Testament. We then proceed to any historical documents that explain the development of the apostasy that is defined by specifics in the warnings of the New Testament. We seek to identify those characteristics of apostasy that lead to international networks of authority that infringe on the authority of Jesus over His body. When we study hierarchal apostasy in the New Testament, we discover the first indications that eventually lead to a slow transition from the original into worldwide networks of churches that are exclusive in their belief and behavior, and are controlled by a hierarchal network of authorities. The New Testament, therefore, is our only standard by which we can define a any apostasy, whether doctrinal or organizational.

The case history of the church of Ephesus is a good example of how a transition from a Bible-oriented system of leadership is made to independent groups that are led by lordship leaders. By the time Paul revisited the church in Ephesus on his last mission journey, he warned that there would arise from among the leaders in Ephesus those who would separate disciples into autonomous groups that they could control. When he made the statement, “from your own selves will men arise” (At 20:30), he was personally and specifically warning the Ephesian elders who would lead groups of disciples into autonomous churches that were controlled by some of them.

The authoritarians that would arise from among them would certainly arise from future elders in Ephesus. But Paul’s immediate concern was that from the elders he was personally addressing in the Acts 20 meeting there would arise some who would draw away disciples to establish autonomous groups. In other words, the apostasy was immediate, and in the lifetime of these elders. By the time Peter wrote his first letter a few years later in the middle of the 60s, lords had already arisen among some elders (See 1 Pt 5:1-4). Paul prophesied that such was coming, and Peter said that it had already arrived by the time he wrote 1 Peter 5. The apostasy in Ephesus could have happened within a period of about ten years after Paul’s Acts 20 meeting with the Ephesian elders.

What happened was that men with leadership ability failed to implement in their lives Jesus’ mandate that there would be no lords with authority in the church (See Mk 10:35-45). Those who would be great would be the servants of all. The gradual change came in the leadership in some places in the church when men started to assume a percentage of the “all” authority Jesus has over the universal membership of His body. When leaders start assuming some authority, the ground work is being laid for a worldwide hierarchy.

The heart of the problem always centers around authority. The New Testament teaches no such thing as apostolic succession, that is, one person of supposed authority transferring the same authority on to others. In the Roman Catholic Church, apostolic succession is a primary teaching in reference to the organization of the church. It is a teaching that authorizes the continued authority of a pope to succeeding popes. It is believed that Jesus passed authority first to Peter, and then Peter passed his apostolic authority on to a successor who followed him as the pope of the church. But there is no evidence of such a teaching as apostolic authority that is passed from one generation of leaders to another.

The prophecy of Paul in reference to the Ephesian elders was that it would be individuals who would draw away disciples after themselves by assuming authority over the groups. Paul viewed this denominating of the body as an apostasy, not as a natural course of church growth. His prophecy was a warning, not the establishment of apostolic authority that was supposedly invested in those who would draw away the disciples into groups over which each would exercise authority. It may have been the case that these elders (bishops) passed on authority to their successors of the denominated groups that they had initially drawn away after themselves. Or, it may have been that succeeding elders simply followed the lordship example of the first generation of lords. Whatever the case, Paul certainly did not pass on to the Ephesian elders any apostolic authority that they in turn should pass on to those who would follow them. He actually warned them against such.

The foundation for a separated group with authoritative leaders was contrary to the universal unity of the body of Christ. It was apostate succession, not apostolic succession, since it was an apostle who condemned the drawing away as a departure from the organic function of the body under the sole authority of Christ. It is a contradiction within the doctrine of apostolic succession that the very people after whom the doctrine is called (the apostles), are the very people, as Peter, Paul and John, who condemned any supposed succession of “apostolic” authority.

Nevertheless, independent groups were beginning to be formed in the middle and latter part of the first century when leaders drew away disciples after themselves. Once these disciples were separated into independent churches by leaders as Diotrephes, and some as those among the Ephesian elders, then the foundation was laid for the union of groups through the cooperation of authoritarian leaders. This would fully develop in the second and third centuries.

In order to maintain the separation of these groups who called themselves after either individuals or groups of leaders, the leaders maintained the independence of their respective groups, though the leading authorities sought in some way to function with one another. It was at this time in history when the one universal church began to be dysfunctional in reference to being a united fellowship of members. The fellowship of independent members had turned into a fellowship of independent church groups who were led by authoritarian leaders. These leaders sought to connect the groups with one another through councils and synods. The stage was thus set for the eventual rise of a chief bishop to be appointed. This primary leader would eventually in history become the pope of all the denominated groups.

The initial development of independent groups was first witnessed by Paul among the disciples in Achaia, who during his lifetime, denominated themselves after different personalities. Each group was calling itself after a particular leader, and thus taking pride in a selected personality as Paul, Apollos or Cephas. In this case, however, none of these men assumed any authority over any group of disciples (See 1 Co 1:12,13), neither did they work among the new converts in Achaia in any manner to encourage any groups to function autonomously from one another. Regardless of the sincere efforts of godly leaders, however, it seems that unless each member struggles to maintain the unity of the faith in the bond of peace, autonomous groups will arise among the disciples. Such seems to happen even if good leaders teach and work against the denominating of the church (See At 20:29,30).

Because of the early sectarian spirit among some of those of Achaia, we should be alerted to the fact that when disciples regularly meet as groups, they must be cautioned that as individual groups they should not consider themselves to be a unique fellowship in their relationship with other groups. Being regularly with familiar faces must not move us to ignore other brothers and sisters who do not have the opportunity to be with one's fellowship. Our growth in love with one another must not separate us from those with whom we cannot regularly fellowship. The fact that the body is one universally means that each member is in fellowship with all the members of the body throughout the world.

In the letters that were written to the early first century church in different cities or regions, there are many exhortations to maintain unity among believers. These exhortations were given because of the inability of all the members to regularly see one another's face every time the saints in a particular city or region came together. The fact that the Holy Spirit exhorted the disciples to maintain unity was based on the house assembly function of the disciples. Since all the Christians in a particular area could not meet together regularly at the same time and in the same place, encouragement was needed from the Spirit that they work at preserving their unity in Christ, regardless of where and with whom they regularly assembled (See 1 Co 1:10; Ep 4:1-6; Ph 1:27).

The fact that these exhortations are in the letters that were directed to the church in particular cities or regions is evidence that a sectarian spirit was coming into the church at the time the letters were written. Some house fellowships were being drawn away from the whole of the church in the cities by dominant leaders who sought to lord over their house groups.

Because it is natural for a group of Christians who regularly meet with one another on a weekly basis to lose contact with other groups who also regularly meet together, we might have an indication of how to better approach the context of 1 Corinthians 11. Since both 1 & 2 Corinthians were actually directed to the saints in all Achaia who were meeting in homes throughout the province (2 Co 1:1), then the event of the love feast/Lord's Supper that is discussed in 1 Corinthians 11 may have been an occasional and provincial meeting of all the Christians in all Achaia. At least this is something to consider in view of the problem that prevailed and Paul's instructions to correct the problems in 1 Corinthians 11. It was an occasional opportunity for everyone to reconnect and to celebrate together as one body in order that each member be reminded that they were one body, though they were many members meeting in many different locations. The regional eating of the love feast/Lord's Supper would encourage everyone to be reminded of what Paul wrote in 1 Corinthians 10:16: "The cup of blessing that we bless, is it not the fellowship of the blood of Christ? The bread that we break, is it not the fellowship of the [universal] body of Christ?"

Paul continued, "For though we are many [members scattered throughout Achaia], we are one bread and one body, for we are all partakers of that one bread" (1 Co 10:17). Unfortunately, that which was to bring them together to be of the same mind and judgment, the love feast with the Lord's Supper, became an occasion for some to manifest their sectarian spirit.

We must also keep in mind that the Christians in Achaia received instructions from somewhere to have a regular love feast and Supper together. We assume that the Holy Spirit directed them to do such in order to promote the unity of the disciples throughout all the region of Achaia. Their eating together of a meal, with the celebration of the Supper, was an opportunity for all of them to remember that they were "one bread, one body," and in fellowship with one another regardless of their inability to meet together as one group at the same place and the same time on any Sunday. But when a sectarian spirit entered in among them, they were calling themselves after different personalities, and thus, groups became independent from one another according to their assemblies. By the time Paul wrote 1 Corinthians, the event that was to call them together as one body in fellowship with Christ, became the occasion to manifest that some were behaving independently of one another, even at this early date in the history of the church.

Chapter 4

SETTING THE STAGE FOR HIERARCHY

When groups of disciples remain independent from one another over a long period of time, they crystallize with an independent spirit. If they have one man as their leader (preacher/pastor), then they naturally crystallize around that one personality. Once a group has crystallized, it has become a denominating group that is functioning autonomously from all other groups in the area who may also be functioning in the same manner. A denomination is a group of disciples who are usually led by a single personality, or group of leaders, who are indigenous in their function, and often self-reliant on their mutual fellowship. In order to maintain their identity, they often adopt a unique name, maintain a certain behavior or liturgy in assembly, and sometimes dress themselves with a unique style of clothing.

The independent group's interpretation of those passages that deal with unity often becomes twisted. The group interprets the "unity passages" of the New Testament with an almost cultic application. They interpret the unity passages in a manner that makes these passages refer to unity within their particular group, and not to all the members of the one universal body of Christ. Their interpretation of passages as 1 Corinthians 1:10, therefore, is almost cultic in that they seek that everyone within their denominating group should "speak the same thing and have the same judgment" according to what the preacher or leaders dictate.

Once autonomous groups were established in the early church, and maintained by key leaders, then the stage was set for a hierarchy of leaders among many churches to develop in the years to come. The independence (autonomy) of some groups continued on for about a century until a sociological trigger moved the leaders of these groups to form a universal association in order to restore some sense of unity among the churches. Separated groups who would call themselves after either a particular fellowship, tradition or personality carried on, though the nature of their relationship with one another was based more on an agreement for union rather than a spirit that the members were one body in Christ. The "northside" church on the north side of town did its own programs and the "southside" church on the south side did theirs. All went well as each group independently functioned in their own ministries while they continued on in their own unique fellowships.

We assume the preceding history because of what Paul personally warned the Ephesian elders was coming among the disciples in Ephesus (See At 20:29,30).

We also base our conclusions on a specific written exhortation that he made a few years later to the same disciples in the same city (See Ep 4:1-6). His personal warning to the leaders was that some among them would draw away groups of disciples after themselves. In the written exhortation a few years later, he encouraged all the members that they should be “eager to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (Ep 4:3). Because the division did come, we conclude that they did not heed the personal warning, nor the written exhortation. Some did draw away disciples after themselves, and thus, did not keep the unity of the Spirit.

The problem developed, therefore, when each fellowship of disciples became so separated from one another that they did not consider themselves as one church, but several churches in a single city. Their spirit of autonomy had moved them to be independent groups within the same region. At least, they were not working together in the unity of the Spirit according to Paul’s exhortation in Ephesians 4:3.

We work with a great number of independent churches throughout the world. Many of these groups are doing the best they can with what they know. They have for years functioned under the authority of their own name or leader in order to identify themselves to be either “Paulites,” “Cephites,” or “Apollosites.” We know of one town in South Africa with a population of about 8,000. There are 28 independent churches in this one town, all doing their own thing, while maintaining their separation from one another by the members’ identity with any one of the particular groups. Their pastors/preachers keep them separated from one another because members of their respective groups understand that increments in their pay checks depend on the attendance of Sunday morning assemblies. The church situation of this small town may be extreme, but it does illustrate the common church environment of many cities of the world.

Independent churches work with people in order to focus their lives on God, but they usually do not consider themselves in fellowship with one another as the one universal church. Their belief in group autonomy keeps them away from one another. Their interpretation of Jesus’ statement, “I am the vine. You are the branches,” is interpreted to mean that they as independent church groups are the branches. In the context of this statement, however, Jesus was speaking to the twelve individuals in His presence at that time who were His apostles (See Jn 15:5). He was the vine, and they as individuals were the branches. The branches were not groups connected to Jesus, but individuals.

By the close of the first century, many groups declared their independence from one another. The declaration came from the leaders, not the members, as certain leaders began to draw away disciples after themselves (See At 20:29,30; 3 Jn). And for this reason, the division into autonomous groups was contrary to the spirit of maintaining the organic function of the one universal body of Christ.

All went well until the great persecution by the state of Rome. It was this persecution that drove the Christians together, but it was also out of this persecution that a universal hierarchial apostasy eventually arose, which apostasy is known today as the Roman Catholic Church.

As independent churches today throughout Africa become weary of being on their own for so long, they are starting to come together. They are coming together through regional “pastors’ forums,” “pastor fellowships,” or common missions or organizations, the very thing that many broke away from over a century ago. Those who have caused the problem of division are those who seek to contrive a corporate merger where the authorities of each independent group remain intact while an effort is made to bring more union among the churches in the community or nation. In these efforts to promote more union, the authorities of each group remain in control over “their churches.” Nevertheless, we see this as a positive move to encourage some level of unity. However, we believe that as long as each independent church retains its own authorities over each group, only union, not unity, will result.

In the early church apostasy, the bishops (elders) of independent groups were driven together by the state persecution of Rome. But according to what Paul said was coming during his ministry, it was the bishops of these autonomous groups who had drawn away disciples after themselves. They eventually started to form unions of the groups of disciples over which they assumed control. When the autonomous groups, with their bishops, chose at the regional meetings one bishop to represent each independent group, then you know the rest of the story. From the regional meetings there came international meetings, over which a “chairman” (pope) was eventually declared.

The book of Revelation explains the trigger that drove the disciples together. However, when John recorded the visions of Revelation, he did not picture the coming together of the persecuted as churches forming “unions” with one another as independent groups. He pictured the saints as individuals who gave their allegiance to Jesus, not to any particular church group. This was the message of the key verse of the book:

These will make war with the Lamb and the Lamb will overcome them, for He is Lord of lords and King of kings.

And those [individual Christians] who are with Him are called and chosen and faithful (Rv 17:14).

By the time of the visions of Revelation, some of the leaders of the churches had already gone too far. Paul's prophecy of leaders drawing away disciples after themselves in Acts 20, Peter's pronouncement in 1 Peter 5 that the lords had already arisen among the disciples, and John's identity of the denominating behavior of Diotrephes had already progressed to the point of dividing the church. When the disciples of all the divided groups struggled through about 150 years of persecution by the Roman Empire, it was the key leaders who encouraged Christians to remain faithful, regardless of the particular sect of the church to which they belonged.

Defense documents came into existence in the second century as men whom we call "Apostolic Fathers" wrote defenses of Christianity to the state of Rome. Second century apologists as Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Hermas, Polycarp and Papias wrote defenses for the entire church. The Didache (130 - 150) was written in order to define and defend the teaching of the early church. If men stood up today, which some do, to represent the church before existing governments, then in their writings we would have a distorted view of the church, for they would write an all-inclusive definition of Christendom. We will see this happening even during the time of Paul's imprisonment in A.D. 61,62. (More later in chapter 16.)

By the end of the third century, and into the beginning of the fourth, the leaders of churches were well on their way to forming a worldwide network of authorities who would speak to the government of Rome on behalf of the church. By the time the Roman Emperor Constantine came along, the organized bishops started to pattern themselves after the organization of the Roman Empire. When Constantine incorporated the church into the political environment of the Roman Empire, the stage was set for the development of the worldwide network of what became the Roman Catholic Church.

The definition of the one universal body of Christ then took on a different definition. Unity was defined by every authority of each church group falling under the control of the central government of the universal church. In actuality, autonomous groups about whom Paul, Peter and John warned, were brought into union with one another under the authority of a common authority. By the middle of the third century, the church had organized into the order of networked authorities.

In some contexts today, we see the meeting of the "authorities" of the independent churches moving in a similar direction. A chairman is designated for a year, which chairman is given the authority to organize the meetings and establish the agendas of the meetings. We keep in mind that we are only in the early beginning of what takes several decades to develop. The meeting of the leaders is a beginning to promote unity, but the leaders who often meet must be cautious about establishing any one person or committee as a central authority for all the churches that are represented. If a state persecution would come along within any particular nation where the preachers of the independent churches have their regional meetings, we wonder if regional preachers' forum would be organized in a manner that would politically give the church a voice before the government.

It is for this reason that we often misunderstand the early beginnings of hierarchal authorities that began in the church before the close of the first century. All that is needed to form a union among corporate autonomous groups is a sociological trigger. In our context in South Africa, we are not at the stage of state persecution. However, political ambitions on the part of some church leaders have historically presented them with the problem of not being able to separate the affairs of the church from the politics of the state. Many pastors would like to have a seat in parliament, and thus, the independent churches for which they preach are viewed as a voting constituency. We have attended meetings of preachers where the reason for the meeting was to call everyone together to be represented before the government. Such meetings are not for the purpose of getting ourselves into the word of God for serious unity, but for exalting personalities to create unions. And so, in all of this jostling for either power or influence we do not forget Rome.

Chapter 5

IDENTITY OF ONE BODY

We seek to encourage Bible students to gather in order to discuss the work of the body of Christ. As long as "authorities" are not gathering together to establish a common authority among them, then meetings for mutual study move us in the right direction to reconnect as the body of Christ. In order to reconnect, we encourage members of the body to gather in order to discuss the word of God as the authority for our common unity.

When Bible lovers gather to study the word of God, then nothing but good can happen. After all, God delivered His word to us in a written manner that would promote unity and the breaking down of theological walls that would separate the members of the body from one another. As long as everyone agrees that the word of God is the authority upon which we base our unity, then we will succeed. But if we base our unity upon the common agreement of men of authority, then we will accomplish only union, and thus remain with unions when God asks for unity.

Rare is the Bible interpreter who does not read into the text of Scriptures his current patterns and policies of religious thinking and behavior. Those who do not realize this challenge have a difficult time being objective interpreters of the Scriptures. They are often the first to fall victim to organizational structures of authority and practices that fall far short of the unity with which God has blessed His people.

We have found that those who are cultic in their legalistic answers for the unity of a local body of believers are the first to encourage division of the universal body of Christ. Inherent in their legal doctrine for unity is the cause for denominating their body of disciples from all other denominating groups who believe in different outlines of legal doctrine. In their efforts to clone their flock into a legal community, where unity is based on total conformity to forms and norms, they have led themselves away from those who have slightly different codes of forms and norms that define their unique groups.

Injecting our commonly accepted traits of religious behavior into the Bible is a subtle mistake in hermeneutics, and one that lends the interpreter to developing eschewed understandings of various Bible texts that speak of unity. We would be the first to confess that we too wear glasses that are scratched with our traditions, and thus, often give us a distorted view of Bible texts. Therefore, we are very cautious to put a smile on our face and finger on the passage, in order to guard ourselves against binding where God has not bound.

It is for the preceding reason that we continually read and study the Bible text in order that our thinking be totally molded around what the text actually says. This is our only concern. Nevertheless, this is still no guarantee that what we purport to be the correct interpretation is sometimes flavored with our habitual and traditional practices and beliefs. And thus, we seek to extend a great amount of mercy toward those with whom we differ in view of the fact that we too will one day stand before One from whom we will plead for mercy (Js 2:13). We would rather err on the side of being too merciful, than on the side of legally excluding those whom God may have accepted through grace.

A. The influence of assembly behavior.

When discussing the subject under consideration in this book, it is almost without exception that we seek to read into the text of Scripture something that transpires during the ceremony of our regular assemblies on Sunday morning. We have unfortunately allowed our corporate assembly obsessions, that have been exported throughout the world, to define our faith, or worse, to validate a group of disciples to be “the true church,” and thus a church that can be accepted into our fellowship.

We would name this obsession with legal assembly rituals or liturgy as “assembliology.” This is the study of rituals and liturgy that we use to define our faith. Those who seek to identify the existence of the church by a certain legal ceremony of assembly behavior, have actually established the first signs of cultic behavior.

We have invented the term “assembliology” for lack of a word in our dictionary that would identify our obsession with legally designated liturgies that take place during the “hour of worship” on Sunday morning. Assembliologists are those who define who they are by how they legally perform certain Sunday morning ceremonies. Because we all become accustomed to the formalities of our assembly, we often unknowingly allow the ceremonies of our assemblies to define both our Christianity and our relationship with others. In doing this, we often denominate ourselves from one another because of the differences that define our unique assemblies.

We do this because we do not allow freedom of worshipful expressions to be different from one worshiper to another. We thus clone the ceremonies of our own assemblies with others in order to construct a pretense of unity, then appoint ourselves as judges of those who do things differently. One single reading from Acts to Revelation manifests the dubious validity of this “doctrinal” identity. Nevertheless, this is where most of us are, and thus the challenge that faces anyone who would discuss the subject of unity among members of the body.

Because we are obsessed about defining who we are by the liturgy of our assemblies, we conclude that any differences in assembly “style” assumes that those who do things differently are of different faiths. The liturgy of our assemblies, not individual discipleship, becomes the standard by which we determine if we are the “true church.” We use the legal “pattern” of our assemblies to define who we are, and to some, the standard by which we determine those with whom we will have fellowship. The end result is that we unfortunately determine an individual’s salvation by the assembly in which he sits on Sunday morning. We have thus forgotten the individual’s personal relationship with the Lord Jesus, by assuming that his being added to the body by God is endangered by the location of the stump on which he sits on Sunday.

Have you ever heard the statement, “He has left the church!”? Some make this statement in the sense that they have the right to subtract from the church the one whom God has added simply because someone has determined to sit somewhere else in another assembly (See At 2:47). Sometimes what is actually meant in the statement is that the judge who has made the statement is saying that one’s salvation is dependent on what assembly one attends.

Have we become so judgmental and legal that we can assume that we are in the position to determine one’s personal relationship with God by where he sits on Sunday morning? In the above declaration of someone “leaving the church,” what is actually meant is that one has left one liturgy of assembly for another liturgy of assembly, and thus has left the liturgy of the “approved” assembly. We link our identity of the church so close to our liturgies of assembly that we have concluded that our assembly is the identity of the true church. This is a preposterous conclusion and theology.

The problem is that our adherence to common codes of assembly become so strong that we judge our own relationship with God by what we do on Sunday morning. Because we define our faith by the codes or liturgy of our assembly, some will even sacrifice a personal relationship with someone who sits on a pew or bench in another assembly. We make judgments on relationships according to what each person customarily does during the “church assembly.”

Consider also our presence in an assembly with another person who behaves “differently.” If we might feel uncomfortable about someone sitting beside us who is raising their hands during the assembly, then we know we have a problem. The one raising his hands may be judging the person beside him to lack somewhat in spirituality because he does not raise his hands. It has come to the point in some situations that our body movements in assembly are used to determine if one’s worship is acceptable to God, or in some situations, whether one is truly spiritual in his or her worship.

When there is no passage to judge something to be wrong in our assemblies, but we still feel uncomfortable, then we must conclude that we are allowing our feelings to determine doctrine, and worse, our salvation or the salvation of others. This is the practice of binding where God has not bound. Because of our feelings, we have made ourselves judges and lawgivers of others.

When we devise our own standards or behavioral practices that lie in the realm of freedom, then we have gone too far. We have made ourselves expert judges of others by using our own personal “assembly traditions” as the standard by which to determine what should or should not happen during the “hour of worship” on Sunday morning. We then wonder if we would be comfortable sitting with Paul Saturday after Saturday as he went from synagogue to synagogue (See At 17:2). And then Aquila and Priscilla were every Saturday in the synagogue when Apollos eventually came by with exhortations from the Scriptures (See At 18:24-26). We would conclude that if one cannot find a text of scripture that is violated by some behavior or ceremony of liturgy, then we have no right to judge another.

B. In search of liturgy:

We have combed through the New Testament scriptures several times in hope of discovering some legal and formal liturgy that would define a “scriptural” assembly. But our searches have always ended in vain. We have even looked at the disorderly assembly of 1 Corinthians 11 to find some liturgy of how the Holy Spirit corrected the Corinthians’ confusion in assembly. But still we find no established legal ritual that would constitute a “biblical” assembly. We have, however, discovered that in assembly Christians should never become involved in behavior that Paul said the unbelievers would consider “madness” (1 Co 14:23). Nevertheless, the desire of some to have a legal identity of the church by an assortment of prooftexts on assembly rites is very strong among us.

The desire to identify the church by its assembly is so strong that we will often seek to piece together some sort of legal outline that will bring comfort to ourselves that we are the true church. As long as the “assembly outline” is performed on a regular basis on Sunday, then we can even neglect our sinful relational attitudes toward one another outside the assembly and throughout the week. We have made our legal assemblies the “atoning sacrifice” for ungodly behavior that follows the “closing prayer.”

What we have discovered among “outline-oriented” assemblologists is an unfortunate selectivity of liturgies that would supposedly define a legal assembly. In establishing these theological legalities for assembly, some have used functions that Christians are to do daily, and thus, confined these functions to an “hour of worship.” After the outline of legalities are performed on Sunday morning, then it is assumed that one can walk away after the “closing prayer” with the feeling that he or she is justified before God until the next “appointed hour of worship.”

In establishing our outline for “true worship,” we have selected singing, the proof texts of which actually define the life-style of Christians in their daily walk of life (See Ep 5:19; Cl 3:16). We have also selected prayer, though prayer too should constitute the nature of our daily discipleship (1 Th 5:19). And then there are our contributions, from which we would deprive and delay the needy on our doorstep until we can be satisfied the following Sunday to have performed our giving as a legal ritual of assembly.

Some are so eager to find a Sunday morning liturgy for assembly that they twist 1 Corinthians 16:1,2 out of its historical context. The historical context was that Paul asked the disciples to gather their special contribution for the famine victims in Judea when they gathered together, which was on the first day of the week (1 Co 16:3). However, our eager assemblologists seem to forget the last part of verse 2: “... so that there be no collections when I come.” In other words, during all those Sundays when Paul was present with them, they were to have no contributions.

We must not forget that we often confine the preaching of the preacher to scholastic presentations on Sunday in order to make him the “pulpit preacher.” By assigning him the title and position, we limit his desire to truly preach the gospel to the lost who usually never show up at our assemblies.

But on one point we might score. The love feast/Lord’s Supper is and should be celebrated with regularity. And this the Ephesians seemly picked up on in celebrating the feast/Supper on the first day of the week (At 20:7). Other than the example of the feast/Supper on the first day of the week—and it is only an example—we find no function of the body confined to Sunday that should not be continued throughout the week. We must question how that which is to be the daily function of discipleship can become a legal definition of what would constitute a legally sanctioned assembly? If we answer that what we are to do daily cannot be used to define a legal assembly, then certainly there can be no legal outline of assembly, that if conducted, would constitute what we would call the identity of the “true church.”

Nevertheless, we have led ourselves to believe that as long as our legal liturgies are performed on Sunday morning, then we can go on our way after the “closing prayer,” often continuing our dysfunctional relationships with one another and others. For six days after the “closing prayer” there is often a famine in preaching, singing, praying and giving until the next appointed hour when these functions are to be legally performed in order that we can say that an “official” assembly has been conducted.

The intensity by which we identify the church with a legal performance of ceremonies on Sunday will determine the intensity by which we will determine if we are the people of God by our assemblies, and not by our love for one another.

When we search in the New Testament for a “true” form of assembly, or “scriptural identity of assembly,” we discover few details of how the early church actually functioned in their assemblies. Because we cannot find an outline to define a supposedly “scriptural” assembly, we become somewhat uneasy. Our failure to discover an “assembly outline” leads some to question their faith. But we would remind ourselves that the lack of any directives as to how an assembly should be conducted should help us understand that the Holy Spirit is saying that there is a great deal of freedom in the area of how we meet together. And since there is freedom in this area of the function of the organic body, then we would caution ourselves not to bind where God has loosed. If we bind a certain liturgy of assembly where God has not bound, then we are the ones who divide the church, not those who would seek freedom where God has not bound.

We must state the preceding because of what James said: “There is one lawgiver who is able to save and to destroy. Who are you to judge another?” (Js 4:12). When it comes to “styles” of worship or ceremonies of assembly, every disciple must ask himself, “Who are we to judge another?” When we establish any liturgy of assembly that we assert to be “scriptural,” then we know that we have become divisive. We have become divisive in separating ourselves from others who simply do things differently.

In the area of missions, we have found it quite amusing how some report back to supporters “their successes.” They will hand an outline of assembly ceremonies to a group of people, print out a name on a sign that identifies the particular group for which they have claimed to be an “established” church, and then write to supporters with the terminology, “church established.”

If a unique sign is hung over the heads of those who are performing a canned ceremony of assembly identifies the body of Christ, then whatever happened to the atoning sacrifice of Jesus? A supposed correct order of assembly does not atone for our sins and keep us “faithful.” A presumed “name of the church” hanging around our necks offers no atonement. We are children of God by faith, not by assembly ceremonies and signs. The children of God are identified by their daily walk in the light of God’s word, not by what they momentarily do on Sunday morning. The church exists when repentant believers obey the gospel in order to wash away their sins (At 2:38,47; 22:16).

C. Division based on different liturgies of assembly:

If we are so confident to piece together certain ceremonies by which our faith should be defined by our assemblies, then we may have no scruples about reading into the text of Scriptures our customary behavior in assembly. Once we have convinced ourselves that the traditions of our assembly are “scriptural,” then it is easy to lay “aside the commandment of God” in order to hold our assembly traditions (See Mk 7:1-9). The next step is only theologically natural. “All too well you reject the commandment of God so that you may keep your own traditions” (Mk 7:9).

One might conclude that we are making frivolous statements in reference to the oneness of the body of Christ in the context of assembly behavior. If one comes to such a conclusion at this point in our study, then it is possible that the deed has already been done. The behavior of our assemblies may be so traditional that there is no hope for any objective investigation of the oneness of the disciples since our differences in assembly will continually govern how we relate to one another. If the points on our assembly outline are confidently affirmed, then we have gone too far to investigate objectively these matters in the Scriptures, for there are often no scriptures in the New Testament to investigate in reference to that which divides churches over assembly behavior. We are left with the dilemma, therefore, of dividing over those things about which the Scriptures say nothing.

We need to make something clear. If one does not come to the conclusion in his study concerning the assembly of the saints that there is no New Testament established liturgy or ceremony of what would constitute a “scriptural assembly,” then the remainder of this study is useless.

If a group of disciples are so confident that what they do in their assembly is the only way an assembly should be conducted, then that group has separated itself from others who conduct their assemblies in a different manner. In fact, if such a group were transported to the first century, they would probably have a difficult time fellowshiping the first century Christians. They would because they have led themselves to be the judges and lawgivers of “scriptural assemblies” by the standard of what they do in their assembly. There can never be any unity among those who have a legalistic form of assembly if their definition of assembly lies within the silence of the Scriptures, and thus within the area of freedom. Legalistic codes of liturgy can never be a basis for unity simply because we have our different rules for ceremonial liturgy. Assembly experts can only work for unions of churches, not unity.

Nevertheless, because we are often so prone to be traditionalists in reference to our religious behavior, especially in our view of the function of our assemblies with one another, we must always reinvestigate our source of validation as Christians. The pages of our Bibles must be worn with use and marked with inscriptions that indicate that we are continually searching God’s word for direction in the matter of our assemblies. We must guard ourselves against making any legal rules of assembly that are not written in the word of God.

We must, however, caution ourselves about using some New Testament texts in order to establish rules for assembly. For example, we do not want to restore the assembly of the Achaians as such was described by Paul in 1 & 2 Corinthians. We must keep in mind that these texts were written to correct dysfunctional assemblies, and thus, should be interpreted and applied with caution. There are some behavior characteristics of the first century Christians we do not want to restore. But in rightly dividing the word of truth, we seek to see past the dysfunctions of the early disciples in order to discover and apply those truths that God desires that we implement in our lives.

We must not forget that religion is based on some accepted system of religious rites, rituals or ceremonies. When individuals give their allegiance to maintaining such as a group, then a denominated religion is established. In contrast to this, the gospel is not a system of rites, rituals or ceremonies. The gospel was and is the work of Jesus on behalf of our sins. It was He who performed for us.

(Now for those who would feel quite uncomfortable at this point of study concerning liturgies of assembly, we would suggest that you download Book 5, The Cross and The Church, chapters 22-27, BRL, from africainternational.org. Also download Book 24, Authentic Church, and read chapter 13. The study of these books and chapters give a reasonable definition of the assemblies of the early church.)

Chapter 6

THE ONE-MEMBER CHURCH

One of the first things to remember in order to understand the oneness of the disciples is, as stated previously, to always view the body of Christ from the point of view of Jesus from heaven. And since Jesus is reigning in heaven with all authority on earth through His word, then it is only logical that we should always view His body from how He sees the members organically functioning on earth in obedience to His word. We know this is difficult, since we are earthly bound and confined to space, time and location. But this is not the case with Jesus who looks down on His people as they work through the struggles of this world in order to spread His aroma to those who are seeking hope.

We must never forget that Jesus now has authority over all things (Mt 28:18). He is the head of all things for the sake of His body (Ep 1:22,23). We must, therefore, always view His body to be worldwide (universal) for His reign is universal. Since the body is composed of individual members throughout the world, then the body of Christ is universal. We must always view the function of the body first to be universal before we can understand the local organic function of parts of the body in any particular region of the world. This is how Jesus from heaven looks over the function of the members of His body on earth.

The body of Christ exists wherever there is a member of the body, not an assembly of the body. An assembly of the body does not constitute the existence of the church in any particular location. Members, not assemblies, validate the presence of the body of Christ. Assembly is not the evidence of the existence of the body, because the body was in existence in its very beginning on the day of Pentecost before there was the first assembly the following Sunday. When the first person came forth from the waters of baptism in Jerusalem on the Pentecost in A.D. 30, and was added to the church of disciples by God, the church was in existence. The first assembly was not until a week later.

The church existed, therefore, before there was an assembly of the members of the body who had been added to the body of God's people (At 2:47). This is why we must conclude that the church is not identified by its assemblies, but by individual members who have been born again and added by God to the body. When we understand this one point, we have accomplished a quantum leap in understanding the oneness of the universal body of Christ.

When we approach our Textbook, therefore, it is God who adds individuals to the spiritual body that exists throughout the world (At 2:47). Wherever there are individuals who have obeyed the gospel, the church exists. We seek to expand the kingdom reign of Jesus throughout the world by preaching the gospel in order that people have the opportunity to be added to the body of disciples. And where one person has been added to the body, the church exists.

We do not establish the church in any particular area by baptizing people. The church has already been established. Establishment of the church took place in A.D. 30 in Jerusalem. Church establishment, therefore, can never happen again. We may establish assemblies, but we can never establish the church. Wherever the gospel was preached after the Pentecost of A.D. 30, the church grew, but it was not established again.

We need to be careful, therefore, when we use the terminology "establish the church." If we use this terminology, we may be revealing our assembliology theology. In other words, we may be seeking to validate the existence of the church in a particular location by establishing an assembly. If we think this way, then keep in mind that the church was first "established" in Jerusalem in A.D. 30 on the day of Pentecost before there was any "official" assembly of the disciples.

It might help to consider this in the following manner: If we go into a city and preach the gospel, and only one person obeys the gospel by the time of our departure from that city, then we must ask ourselves, "Does the church now exist within the city?" If we say that it does, then we are on our way to focusing on individuals, not assemblies, as the identity of the church throughout the world.

The next time we ask someone, "How many churches are there in Nairobi," we will caution ourselves. When we view Jesus looking down on individuals from heaven, then we are beginning to understand that Jesus is with us everyday of our lives, not just on Sunday morning. If we happen to be walking alone through the valley of the shadow of death some place in the world, we can find comfort in the fact that Jesus is there because we are a member of His body, the church. We do not have to be sitting in an assembly in the valley of the shadow of death to believe that we are "church," and Jesus is there with us.

It may be that sometime in the future we will have to kneel down outside Jerusalem as Stephen and be stoned for our faith. If we do, then we can be assured that Jesus is standing at the right hand of the Father, looking down on us as we breathe our last breath of life as a member of His body.

Chapter 7

THE MANY AS ONE BODY

Jesus knew how His disciples would of necessity have to organically function after He sent the Holy Spirit upon the apostles on the day of Pentecost. He knew how they would have to function during years of persecution. Because the disciples would first be targeted by their Jewish persecutors, and then by the state persecutors of Rome, they would of necessity have to feel good about meeting in small groups from house to house. And thus, in His own ministry, Jesus set the example of teaching from house to house (See Mt 8:14; 9:10,23; Lk 5:29-32; 14:1; 15:1-32; 19:5).

During His earthly ministry, Jesus went from house to house ministering the word of God to the people and speaking of the change in kingdom reign that was soon to come in the lifetime of His disciples (Mk 9:1). In order to prepare His Jewish disciples for a change in kingship in heaven, He taught many concepts concerning His kingdom reign that were soon to come (Download Book 9, The Reign of Christ, BRL, africainternational.org). Because His coming kingdom reign was such a dramatic paradigm shift in the heavenly realm, it is interesting to note how Jesus at first subtly taught on the subject, and the location where He taught these important subjects.

A. The disciples ministered from house to house.

Jesus' house to house ministry seems to have established a pattern for the early disciples. They too ate their food in fellowship with one another from house to house (At 2:46). They ministered the word of God from house to house (At 5:42; 20:20). And when Saul wanted to find Christians during his campaign of terror, he went from house to house in order to search for them (At 8:3). The expansion of the body of Christ into all the world from its very beginning was from house to house. This was not a pattern of ministry to establish a precedent for either evangelism or assembly, but simply the natural process by which the early church organically grew. It is our task to discover how the early disciples remained one organic body as they numerically grew from house to house throughout the world.

What is interesting about the early house to house function of the body was the unity that was maintained among the Christians regardless of whose house in which they assembled. Though the fellowship meetings were of necessity in the homes of the members, the members in any particular city continued to function as one united body. They never viewed themselves as autonomous from one another simply because they had to meet in their homes.

If there were many Christians in a particular city or region, then the common place of exhortation and teaching was in the homes of the members. For example, Aquila and Priscilla had a meeting of the saints in their home when they lived in Asia (1 Co 16:19). Paul found twelve disciples in Ephesus who were undoubtedly meeting in the homes of the disciples for many years before he encountered them (At 19:1-5). Nympha had a fellowship of disciples meeting in her home (Cl 4:15). When Aquila and Priscilla moved on to Rome, they continued to use their home for the assembly of the disciples (Rm 16:5). When reading the context of Romans 16, it is interesting to note the numerous household fellowships of the disciples that were taking place throughout the city of Rome, and yet, Paul did not consider any of the household fellowships to be autonomous from one another.

The kingdom reign of Jesus comes into existence in a particular region through the addition of members to the body by God after people obey the gospel. Added members then enjoy the serendipity of fellowship with other Christians who have likewise been baptized into Christ (At 2:41,47). Their unity as part of the body is a blessing that comes with their common obedience to the gospel, not because of a union of independent groups who have cloned their assemblies after one another in order to conform to one another. Unity among individual members is simply inherent in the members' common obedience to the gospel.

Since we are given no information in the New Testament on any organizational mechanism as to how all the disciples in a particular city remained united as one church, we must assume that in view of the fact that the church is always one, whether locally or internationally, then the Holy Spirit assumed that we needed no instruction on how the Christians in any region should orchestrate unity on their own accord. It was simply understood that everyone who believed in Jesus, and was obedient to the gospel, would be a part of the one body of Christ. There needed to be no instructions on how to be that which was only natural to be when added to the universal body of Christ. The early disciples simply did not allow their necessity of meeting in different homes throughout a city to separate them into independent groups that had no fellowship with one another.

Church buildings came into existence at the beginning of the fourth century. It was Emperor Constantine who orchestrated a political move to bring Christianity into harmony with pagan religions throughout the Roman Empire. Throughout the centuries before the appearance of the first church buildings, however, it was the custom of the disciples to meet in numerous homes wherever they had the opportunity to assemble. But with the coming of larger assemblies in church buildings, the disciples in any particular city had a tendency to separate themselves from one another as members of different assembled groups naturally grew closer together in their weekly assemblies. What was natural in human relationships seemed to move the groups further away from one another as groups.

Before the large assemblies, there were small assemblies in several homes throughout a particular city. The small assemblies seemed to encourage all the members of a region to function as one body.

It was not that the initial Christians established a “doctrine” that the church should meet in homes. Meeting in the homes of the members for almost three hundred years was simply the necessity of the day, which necessity after three centuries of the existence of the church, must have been the established custom of the disciples. But it was only a custom.

The mention of house assemblies in Scripture precludes no necessity that we today must do likewise. Therefore, we must assume that when studying through passages in the New Testament that deal with the unity of the church, we must understand that the disciples were meeting in the homes of the members. But because they were meeting in small groups, they were not denominated into different autonomous groups because of their necessity to meet in their homes. We emphasize the house assembly function of the early Christians in order to better understand the New Testament statements that are made in reference to unity.

The problem comes when one reads his church building culture of today into the text of New Testament statements that refer to the assembly function of the saints. And in doing so, one usually has the tendency to assume that the early disciples in their house-assemblies functioned autonomously from one another in their assemblies as large church-building-oriented assemblies function today. But if we make this assumption, we are reading into the text of Scriptures something that is contrary to the facts of history and certainly alien to the unity of the body of members in the first century. What usually happens is that the preacher teaches on a New Testament text in reference to unity, but assumes that the passage is speaking only to those who are seated before him.

It is important to keep reminding ourselves of this point because when the subject of church unity is under consideration, those who are accustomed to assemblies in church buildings often assume that purpose-built church buildings must be read into New Testament contexts that deal with the unity of the saints. In doing this, some often force themselves to imagine how supposedly large independent assemblies within each city worked together as one church in the city. In many ways, our building culture of today actually hinders our objectivity in interpreting passages that deal with the unity of the body.

The unity of the church in the first century was not based on how large assemblies of disciples organized some system by which they could work together as one assembly of disciples. On the contrary, the historical context of small house assemblies did not present an obstacle for the early Christians to remain one body. The necessity of their being small drove them to associate with others in the city who were also disciples of Jesus. Their focus on unity was on individuals enjoying their common blessing of unity, regardless of where any individual member was located on Sunday.

The New Testament was not written in the context of identifying the church by its meeting in assemblies. The existence of the church was determined by individually baptized believers wherever they were located. The statements of unity in the New Testament were directed to individuals, which individuals regularly assembled with other baptized disciples wherever possible. The exhortation of New Testament passages were written to correct dysfunctional relationships between individuals, not dysfunctional relationships between different independent assemblies of Christians.

The problem of assemblies functioning independent from one another was corrected by exhortations to individuals. The assembly of the disciples in the early church in any particular city was never allowed to be an opportunity for division between any Christians. Division only came when certain groups of elders, or individuals, separated assemblies of disciples under their own control, much like what exists today in different cities throughout the world.

For the preceding reasons, there was never any case where one assembly of disciples in the first century disfellowshipped another assembly of disciples. Since membership of the body is individual with God, it would be senseless to believe that one assembly of disciples could collectively disfellowship any individual in another assembly by disfellowshipping the entire group of disciples. The fact that some today have done such is proof of their denominational behavior in reference to assemblies being the identity of the church.

Now reverse the preceding in reference to baptized individuals as Aquila and Priscilla who were regularly sitting in an assembly of unbaptized Jews (At 18:24-26). Would their sitting among the unbelievers be justification to disfellowship Aquila and Priscilla because they met with unbelievers every Sabbath in the synagogue? We assume that they met with other disciples on Sunday, if indeed there were other disciples in Ephesus at the time. But what if there is an assembly of people who believe in Jesus and are meeting in a community where there is no assembly of the disciples? What if they are the only assembly in a pagan or idolatrous community where there are those who believe in Jesus? Could a Christian sit in their midst? We wonder if Paul separated himself on Sunday from the twelve disciples he found until they obeyed the gospel in the name of Jesus (At 19:1-7)? We pose these questions to those among us who are quick with all the answers to condemn an individual disciple because he or she does not have the opportunity to sit in a legally sanctioned assembly, if indeed one existed in the area where he lives.

The answer to the above scenarios is that the Christian should simply start an assembly in his own house. And that is exactly what happened in the first century. This is what Aquila and Priscilla did, though for evangelistic purposes, they took every opportunity to meet with other religious people as long as they were allowed. The early Christians started their assemblies in their own houses, and stayed there for several centuries.

B. The many remained one.

In every city of the first century wherein Christians resided, the Christians were meeting throughout the city at different locations. Each member was functioning as part of the one organic body of Christ. In a city as Jerusalem, with an estimated 30,000 members, plus children, there were meetings in hundreds of homes throughout the city. In fact, if we were to make a conservative estimate, we might assume that there was an average of 25 members, plus children, meeting in every house. If this estimate is anywhere near the average assembly, then there would have been about 1,200 house assemblies in Jerusalem by the time of the events of Acts 15. And yet, when the events of Acts 15 were recorded by Luke, he made the statement, “Now when they [Paul and Barnabas] came to Jerusalem, they were received by the church [ekklesia]...” (At 15:4).

When we read accounts of the activities of the disciples in Jerusalem, Luke always referred to the church as a single body of disciples. We must take Luke’s use of the word ekklesia into the rest of the contexts of Acts where he records the presence of Christians in different cities. For example, when Paul went throughout Syria and Cilicia, he strengthened the “churches” (At 15:41). The better translation of the word ekklesia in this context would be that he went to and strengthened the assemblies of the disciples in the cities that he visited. When he went throughout Galatia, the “churches [assemblies] were strengthened in the faith and increased in number daily” (At 16:5). The number of disciples increased in all the regions that he visited, and therefore, there was an increase in house assemblies. These are the only two cases where Luke uses the plural of ekklesia in reference to the disciples. We would conclude that he does so in order to reaffirm to Theophilus, the one to whom the document of Acts was directed, should understand that the disciples were meeting throughout cities and regions of the Roman Empire in different assemblies, though they were the one ekklesia of Christians.

Luke did not determine the existence of the church in any city by the number of assemblies in a particular city, but by the individual disciples in the city. When he discusses the growth of the church in Acts, it is growth in members, not assemblies (See At 1:15; 2:41,47; 4:4; 6:7). He emphasized the oneness of the disciples in any city by using the singular term “church” that referred to all the disciples who were numbered as members of the body. But when a teacher came through town, Luke used the plural of ekklesia in order to emphasize the method by which the disciples assembled to be taught and encouraged.

We find it quite interesting when biblical interpreters do not figure into their historical studies of the church the fact of the numerous assemblies (“churches”) of the saints in the cities to whom the epistles were written. Invariably, some interpreters come to a particular epistle that is addressed to the saints in a city that is named, and yet, they assume that there was only one single assembly of the saints on Main Street and Central Avenue in the city. Such an historical prejudice does no justice to our understanding of the organic function of the body. In fact, such an interpretive prejudice twists the meaning of those texts that deal with the organic unity of the members of the body. Instead of understanding the “unity passages” of the New Testament in the context of multiple-assemblies of the church in any particular city, some unnecessarily force themselves into wondering how large single-assembly churches supposedly worked together as one church in a city. We believe that the real picture is that the disciples were all one church as individual members. This fact was understood by the first readers, regardless of where any individual member was located on Sunday morning. The word “church” (ekklesia) did not refer to literal assemblies of the members, but to the members as God’s called out assembly of people.

With some interpreters, the single-assembly prejudice is so ingrained in their interpretations that they lead us to deny the rapid growth of the early church. For example, after at least three decades of the existence of the church in Ephesus, it is assumed by some interpreters that there was still only one single-assembly of the disciples in the city of Ephesus when John recorded the following statement in the book of Revelation, “To the angel of the church of Ephesus ...” (Rv 2:1). To believe that this statement assumes that there was still only one assembly of the disciples in Ephesus after such a long period of growth is certainly a denial of the early growth of the church in Ephesus.

It is not that there was only one single-assembly of disciples in Ephesus at the time Jesus addressed “the church” in Ephesus in Revelation 2, but the singularity of the word “church” teaches the unity of the in- dividual disciples who were meeting in many house assemblies throughout the city, and yet, they were united as one church. The assumption that there was only one single-assembly of the church in Ephesus, and other cities of the New Testament, is a subtle denial of the unity of the disciples within these cities.

Some might argue that the multiple assemblies of the church in a particular city or region is not relevant to our discussion on the unity of the organic body. But we would certainly argue to the contrary. Without going into the novice nature of such reasoning, we would contend that we cannot understand the nature of the unity of the universal body of Christ unless we first understand the house-assembly function of the disciples when the epistles were written and addressed to the early disciples in any particular city or region. The epistles were directed to the members of God’s family who were all working together as a single unit, though there were corrections made in the letters in order to correct their relational dysfunctions.

The discussions in the following chapters of this book will validate the necessity of this conclusion. One will also come to the conclusion that the present assembly behavior of the church makes it difficult to understand how the disciples in a particular city as a whole in the first century could be united as one in Christ while meeting at different locations throughout a city or region. But if we could set aside our modern-day single-autonomous-assembly prejudices, we can better understand that we are united as individuals in Christ, regardless of where, when or with whom we sit on Sunday morning.

Chapter 8

DISCIPLESHIP BEYOND ASSEMBLIES

When we step down from a “high church” assembly identity of the church to a multiple assembly of the church of Christians meeting in small groups, we actually need to move down one more level. Most of New Testament letters were written to correct dysfunctional behavior, whether this behavior was manifested in a dysfunctional assembly or when one was ordinarily going about his personal life in the world around him. About half of the New Testament is a record of the life and ministry of Jesus. The remainder of the letters of instruction, and a final note of prophetic encouragement (Revelation), were addressed to individuals as members of the body. When we understand that the Bible was written to teach us the science of life, then we are on our way to understand better all the work that God put into giving us His instructions for life.

The main objective of the New Testament letters was not to identify the church by a performance of legal codes. We understand the epistles as instructions on living, not as a doctrinal constitution on church and assembly. It was not the purpose of the Holy Spirit to establish a legal code to identify the disciples in any particular community by a doctrinal code of assembly. It was His purpose to correct individuals in their individual relationships with one another in order that they be known for their love of one another (See Jn 13:34,35). The New Testament is a textbook on how God wants us to love Him above all, our neighbors of the world among whom we must live, and one another as His children (Mt 22:34-40).

In some contexts of Scripture, the assembly of the saints became the opportunity for the carnality of some members to reveal itself. But we must not be diverted in our understanding of these texts by thinking that a pattern of assembly had been violated, and thus, a correct pattern was subsequently revealed. The problem in Achaia, for example, was not in the violation of a pattern of assembly, but in the dysfunctional relationships that some disciples fostered toward one another long before they arrived at the assembly. What corrupted their coming together in assembly was the unholy attitudes of some who were inconsiderate of others, not some doctrinal code of liturgy they violated.

As previously stated, there are few statements in the Scriptures that deal with the coming together in assembly of the disciples. The vast majority of inspired New Testament Scripture deals with the spiritual conduct of disciples outside assembly, and their struggles to survive in this world. We would, therefore, view the text of Scripture primarily as a road map on how to live our daily lives with one another in our struggles to live in a world that is hostile to faith.

Christians assemble with one another because of their one another relationships that are built on love (Jn 13:34,35). If there are those who need a commandment to be with their brothers and sisters in Christ, then they are struggling with loving their brothers and sisters in Christ. The solution to this lack of love is not legal commands on correct assemblies, but teaching on how to love one another, which is exactly what is contained in the New Testament letters.

If we come to the New Testament in order to discover instructions that will help us make it through every day, then we will get over our obsession of trying to find a legal code of conduct for an “hour of worship” once a week on Sunday morning. We will cease trying to identify ourselves by a brief encounter with one another on Sunday.

Almost all the disputes that occur among Christians come from those who have obsessed over some violation of liturgy on Sunday morning. Such disputes over supposed violations that take place during the “hour of worship” too often divert our attention away from correcting unloving attitudes that occur outside our assemblies. We are saddened when we consider how many conflicts have resulted over the supposed “biblical” ceremonies by which the Lord’s Supper is supposedly to be carried out during an assembly. It is in controversies over subjects as the Lord’s Supper that reveal our character outside the assembly. In fact, this would be the context of Paul’s statement of 1 Corinthians 11:19: “For there must also be factions among you so that those who are approved may be made known among you.”

Our unloving and contentious spirits in matters of opinion make us no better than the Achaians who were drunken with the wine of the Supper, which wine some had consumed totally before the arrival of all the saints for the Supper (1 Co 11:17-34). We must continually remind ourselves that the epistles were written to correct dysfunctions in our personal lives. Once the dysfunctions are corrected, then there is no difficulty in our coming together in love. And in reference to the Achaians, there was a great deal of relational dysfunction among the members before they showed up at an assembly with one another.

The interpretive foundation upon which we base our understanding of unity is that the Holy Spirit seeks to reveal the will of God to those who believe in Jesus. Because we are less than perfect, the Holy Spirit had His holy hands full when He directed the early writers to give us direction concerning our behavior. When we read the Spirit’s epistles to correct social dysfunctions among the body of members, we keep in mind that He was focusing first on each member individually. If the individuals sorted out their lives, then the assembly of the individuals would be a joyous occasion for spiritual renewal.

In reference to unity, the Holy Spirit moved through inspired writings to correct relational functions that individual disciples are to have with one another. The early house assemblies were the opportunity for individual members to discover their spiritual and personal dysfunctions. It is easy to hide in the crowd of a large assembly and allow oneself to have his personality dysfunctions to go unchecked. But in the close fellowships of the early house assemblies, dysfunctional relationships revealed themselves. These dysfunctions then had the opportunity to be corrected in a spirit of love.

In the weekly assemblies of the Achaia members in their respective towns, there seems to have been little problem when the “Cephites,” “Apollosites,” and “Paulites” met in their own assemblies. But when all the members of all Achaia came together to celebrate around the love feast/Supper, then their sectarian attitudes and behavior were manifested. They had no problem as long as they met in their own small groups. But when all the members came together into one assembly, it was manifested that they were dysfunctional in their personal relationships with one another. It was this dysfunction that was reported to Paul, who subsequently wrote that it was not possible for them to come together to celebrate their unity around the love feast/Supper. On the contrary, their coming together in the assembly of all the saints manifested their disunity (1 Co 11:17-19). It was during this area wide assembly where the factions among them were manifested (1 Co 11:19).

What seems to have transpired was that some house assemblies assumed a certain “personality,” or at least surrounded themselves around a certain personality. In reference to the Achaian situation, for example, the “Cephites” were fine when they met together with one another. One group even harbored a certain member who was living immorally with his father’s wife (1 Co 5:1-5).

Regardless of how different groups dysfunctionally condoned immorality or sectarian behavior in their assemblies, corrections had to be made. The sectarians could not hide in their own groups. The immoral person could not hide among those who condoned his sin. Neither could Jews or Gentiles separate themselves from one another into either Gentile or Jewish groups (See Gl 2:11-16). The behavior of every member, regardless of where he or she assembled, affected the entire church.

We might conclude that if one can maintain a dysfunctional spirit or immoral behavior while assembling with the saints in a particular group, then the assembly is too impersonal, or the group has compromised the moral teaching of the word of God. A participatory and interactive assembly of the saints is an opportunity for each disciple to correct dysfunctional personality characteristics in a spirit of love. If immorality is involved, then the immoral can be rebuked.

When we correct our personality dysfunctions in a spirit of love, then the assembly of the saints becomes an adventure in personality discovery. When we live in a relational environment where our morally can be checked, then we are kept safe from falling if we repent. When we are in an assembly of brothers and sisters where relationships are functional to “confess your sins to one another and pray for one another” (Js 5:16), then our assemblies are conducive to spiritual support and character building. It is then that our coming together is for the better, and not for the worse.

What the Holy Spirit did do through the instructions of the written word of God is to correct the dysfunction of individuals in order that the individuals have an opportunity to rejoice in assembly. When we meet together in love, our spirit of worship is enhanced. Assembly becomes the sweet opportunity to taste the essence of what God intended should occur in a relational gathering of all the parts of the body. It is for this reason that every assembly of the saints should be an opportunity for edification.

It is through edification that the power of the unified body is released. When the many are edified through assembly, the power of each member is released. It is our conclusion that every assembly of the saints should be for edification, for when each member of the body is edified, the power of the Spirit that works in every member is released on the world through the energized witness of each member of the body.

Chapter 9

ONENESS IN ALL ACHAIA

The history of the church in Achaia initially originated from the Thessalonian disciples in the province of Macedonia. When Paul, Silas and Timothy left Philippi, they passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, and then came to the city of Thessalonica (At 17:1). There was great receptivity of the gospel in Thessalonica, and thus, the newly converted disciples evidently said to the two evangelists, Paul and Silas, that they would take ownership of Macedonia. They said to the evangelists that they should go on to the city of Berea, and then to the province of Achaia. So they sent Paul and Silas on to Berea, while Timothy stayed in Macedonia (At 17:10).

Paul was then accompanied by some of the Berean brethren on his way to Athens where he again preached Jesus as the Christ and Son of the one true and living God (At 17:15). After Athens, Paul ended up in the city of Corinth that was located in the province of Achaia (At 18:1). If Aquila and Priscilla were already Christians when Paul arrived, we could assume that the church already existed in Achaia upon Paul’s arrival.

The Thessalonian disciples truly took ownership of their responsibility as disciples of Jesus to reach out from Thessalonica in order to preach the good news of Jesus. It was only about six months after Paul left Thessalonica when he wrote back to the Thessalonians the following words:

And you became imitators of us and of the Lord ... so that you were examples to all the believers in Macedonia and in Achaia. For the word of the Lord has sounded forth from you, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place ... (1 Th 1:6-8).

By the time Paul arrived in the province of Achaia, the “word of the Lord” had already spread throughout the province through the mission efforts of the disciples in Thessalonica. Upon his arrival in Achaia, the word of God had gone into all the province because of the efforts of some very zealous disciples who wanted to share the opportunity to unbelievers to come out of idolatrous religiosity and into the fellowship of the Son of the one true and living God.

We might assume that since Paul found Aquila and Priscilla in Corinth, these two may have been contacted first by the Thessalonians in their evangelistic outreach to Achaia (At 18:1-3). For some reason, it was easy for Paul to find these two Jewish disciples when he arrived. Some have assumed that he connected with them because they too were in the tentmaking business. This may be true. But the most probable reason why Paul and the tentmaking couple connected was because Aquila and Priscilla were already disciples at the time Paul arrived, possibly being the result of the evangelistic efforts of the disciples in Thessalonica. Stephanas and his household, whom Paul personally baptized (1 Co 1:16), were the firstfruits of Achaia that Paul baptized (1 Co 16:15). But since Aquila and Priscilla were from Pontus and Rome, they were not considered the “firstfruits” of Achaia. We might assume, therefore, that they were already Christians by the time Paul met them in Corinth.

With the help of Aquila and Priscilla, Paul’s personal preaching to all Achaia originated first from the city of Corinth (At 18:1-3). In order to understand the organic unity of the body of Christ throughout all Achaia, we must understand that Paul was not the only evangelist who preached throughout the many cities and towns of the province. We must come to some justified conclusions concerning his ministry in Achaia in order to develop a better understanding of what actually transpired throughout Achaia in reference to the preaching of the gospel and the organic unity of the body. Our conclusions concerning the existence of the church in Achaia lead us to a better understanding of the nature of the unity of the body of Christ as the members reached into all the world with the preaching of the gospel.

A. Peter and Apollos preached in Achaia.

The division among some of the disciples that prevailed throughout Achaia manifested itself when the whole community of believers came together for the love feast/Lord’s Supper that was probably held in the city of Corinth (1 Co 11:17,18). The context of the 1 Corinthians 11 love feast/Lord’s Supper assembly is better understood with the view that this was an occasional meeting of all the Achaian disciples, not just those who resided in the city of Corinth. In the context of this assembly for the regional love feast/Lord’s Supper, the opportunity presented itself for some disciples to manifest their inconsiderate attitudes and divisive behavior that were contrary to the nature of the unity of the body. Some disciples who had to come from great distances to the occasion were marginalized by the behavior of those who were quite inconsiderate and sectarian. The situation was so grave that some were even left hungry after they had journeyed a great distance to be at the meeting. Because of the ungodly situation that prevailed, we must determine what was happening during the assembled fellowship in order to understand the exhortations that Paul wrote to correct the situation.

1. Exhortation for unity: Paul began the Corinthian exhortations on unity with the general admonition of 1 Corinthians 1:10:

Now I urge you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that you all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you, but that you be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.

This is the foundational statement that helps us understand the nature of the organic function of all the saints in Achaia, not just those of the municipality of Corinth. We need to determine if the preceding statement of Paul was an impossible mandate that was bound on the individuals of any particular group of disciples, or if it is a reference to all the members to maintain their fellowship with one another throughout all Achaia.

Taken literally, the statement might seem to enjoin on the disciples an almost cultic principle of unity if the mandate is to the members of any group of saints who were meeting in someone’s house. A dominant leader could certainly use this passage to bind what he considered the “same thing” on those over whom he dictatorially reigned in a particular house assembly. But we feel that this is far from the truth of the passage, and thus, we need to go further in our investigation of what Paul meant in order to understand what he was mandating in reference to the unity of the body of Christ.

2. The Achaian ministry of three preachers: Consider the fact that the personalities around which some of the division was occurring were the three evangelists, Paul, Apollos and Cephas (Peter). The fact that some of the Christians in Achaia were dividing over personalities was not the fault of any of the three evangelists. The fault of division was with those who sought an opportunity to call themselves after those they highly respected. This is something that is human nature, but can become the opportunity for those who have a sectarian spirit to divide the body of Christ. However, we must not ignore the fact that Apollos was a Gentile and Peter was a Jew. Those who claimed to be of Apollos were possibly the Gentile converts in Achaia and those who claimed to be of Peter were possibly the Jewish converts. This is only an assumption concerning the nature of the division, but one that should not be ignored.

The disciples were calling themselves after these three personalities, whom, we could correctly assume, preached in all or portions of Achaia by the time Paul wrote the letter of 1 Corinthians from Ephesus. We know Apollos preached in some places of Achaia (At 19:1). Notice carefully Apollos' initial desires in his contact with Aquila and Priscilla in Ephesus: "And when he [Apollos] desired to go to Achaia ..." (At 18:27).

It was Apollos' initial desire to go to the province of Achaia. He did initially go to all of Achaia, but first went to the principle city of the province, which was Corinth (At 19:1). However, we cannot assume that while he was in Achaia that he limited his preaching only to the city of Corinth. Since his original desire was to go to Achaia, we would assume that he ministered the word of God far beyond the city of Corinth. This seemed to be the nature of Apollos, for he was an adventurous evangelist, and true evangelists by nature continually seek to go to new places in order to preach the gospel.

We are not told when Peter (Cephas) was in Achaia. The only evidence that we have of him preaching in the region is Paul's mention of his name when he, Paul, rebuked the Corinthian disciples for using him as an occasion for division over personalities. We would not assume that the Gentiles of Achaia would have used his name as an occasion for division simply because Peter's reputation had spread to the region by the time Paul wrote the 1 Corinthian letter. The only valid conclusion would be that Peter was personally in the province sometime after Paul left Achaia, but before he wrote 1 Corinthians.

The ministry of the three preachers not only produced fruit through the preaching of the gospel, but those who were converted were naturally attracted to the personality who initially preached the gospel to them. The Achaian disciples had their favorite preachers, which favoritism eventually became one of opportunities to manifest a divisive spirit among them.

We would not assume that all three preachers (Paul, Apollos and Peter) restricted their preaching to the "city limits" of Corinth. This would have been most unnatural in reference to the work of an evangelist. We do not know how long either evangelist stayed in the province. But one thing would certainly be true if their preaching began in Corinth. Visitors from all Achaia who came to Corinth and heard the message of the gospel, would have asked them continually to come to their areas throughout all Achaia and also preach the gospel. We would correctly assume that Paul, Peter and Apollos would certainly have answered these pleas. If they did not have the time to answer these "Macedonian calls," then the visitors themselves would have returned to their towns and villages throughout all Achaia with the message of the gospel.

B. The correction letter to all the disciples of Achaia:

In order to understand the unity about which the Holy Spirit wrote in 1 Corinthians 1:10, we need to determine exactly those to whom the exhortation was written. Once this is determined, then some surprising light is shed on our understanding of the meaning of the passage.

We must remind ourselves of a very important historical fact concerning the early assemblies of the church in the first century. Because we are often so prejudiced by our belief in autonomous assemblies, we must continually remind ourselves that such a belief and practice was foreign to the organic function of the early disciples. They never considered separating themselves from one another because of their necessity to meet at different locations. They never considered functioning independently of one another.

We must keep in mind that autonomous function is a modern-day behavior and theology that is read into the function of the early church. It is a theology, unfortunately, that is so strong among some today that it is considered almost heresy to even submit the possibility that the early Christians had no concept of behaving independently from one another because they met at different locations in assembly. The early Christians did not consider their assembly locations to be an opportunity by which they would denominate from one another in the organic function of the body. Therefore, we must guard ourselves from reading into the earthly organic function of the early church something that is unique to us today, but is foreign to the Scriptures. We must simply keep in mind that it was the church that was in the cities, not churches. Focus in the New Testament was on people as the church, not assemblies as the identity of the people as the church.

The assertion of the “autonomous” theology is so common today among religious groups that many have led themselves to believe that when a particular group of disciples is mentioned in the New Testament, then there must have been only one single assembly of the disciples of the church in the mentioned city. In other words, when in Revelation Jesus addressed the seven churches in seven cities of Asia, it is assumed that there was only one assembly (“one church”) in each of the seven cities that are mentioned in Revelation 2 & 3. We feel that such is not only an erroneous historical conclusion, but as previously stated, an attack against the organic unity and early growth of the church in the first century.

If we assume the late date of the writing of Revelation to be around A.D. 96, then the autonomy doctrine would assert that from the time of the massive conversion in Ephesus of Acts 19 in the middle 50s, to the date of writing of Revelation in A.D. 96, the church in Ephesus grew to only one single assembly in the city, and that assembly was meeting in the home of some disciple. We believe that such a conclusion is essentially preposterous, if not a denial of the early organic function of the body of members, not only in Ephesus, but also in all the major cities of the first century. We find it quite erroneous to believe that by the time the New Testament letters were written, that there was only one single assembly of disciples in Rome, Corinth, Thessalonica, Philippi, Ephesus, Antioch, Jerusalem, and Colosse. Such a conclusion seems to be the opposite of the Holy Spirit’s historical statement that the early Christians turned the world upside down for Jesus (See At 17:6).

We must also reconsider the autonomous single-assembly theology in reference to the early meetings of the disciples in the homes of the members. Again, there was no such thing in the first century as church buildings, school halls or civic centers in which the early Christians could meet. During times of Jewish persecution, which later moved into the state persecution of the Roman Empire, it would have been counter productive for the disciples to advertise the location of their assemblies by meeting in public places (compare At 8:3).

When the church went underground and met in caves (the catacombs) under the city of Rome during the heat of the state persecution of Rome, we think it would have been quite unreasonable for groups of disciples to function autonomously from one another in reference to their assemblies. The Christians were struggling together for survival, not to survive in order to be dominated from one another. While enduring the heat of persecution, the early Christians were drawn together, not separated from one another into independent groups.

With the understanding that the one church consisted of multiple-assemblies within the regions or cities of the first century, we approach mandates for unity that are expressed in statements as 1 Corinthians 1:10. We understand these statements with the view that the text is teaching that the disciples remained united. 1 Corinthians 1:10 was written in the historical context of some disciples denominating over personalities. Paul wrote the exhortation in order to encourage the fact that Christ is not divided, and thus, they could not, as the body of Christ, be divided into independent groups (1 Co 1:13).

We consider exhortations as 1 Corinthians 1:10 to be exhortations that the disciples not allow their regular assemblies to become the opportunity to draw away from one another as independent groups. Our understanding of the organic unity of the disciples who regularly met at different places, and possibly different times on Sunday, does not canonize for us any theology on assembly. The early Christians’ multiple-house assemblies were simply out of necessity. However, sometimes their meetings in different houses became the opportunity for them to manifest a sectarian spirit on the part of some. Meeting in only one place was not Paul’s answer to the problem. His answer was to correct their relationships with one another because they were all “of Christ.” They were all “of Christ” because they had all been baptized in the name of Christ (1 Co 1:12,13).

We do not, therefore, argue against the sin of division by offering a divisive doctrine of either legal union or cloning within or among autonomous assemblies. We do not argue for autonomy in order to promote a superfluous unity that is actually a union. We seek to deal with the sectarian attitudes that often prevails among disciples, regardless of where the disciples sit on Sunday morning. And in order to do this, there are some very interesting facts concerning those to whom the letters of 1 & 2 Corinthians were directed.

1. *Stephanas and his household were the firstfruits of Achaia. In 1 Corinthians 16:15, Paul wrote, “... brethren, you know the household of Stephanas, that it is the firstfruits of Achaia ....” Stephanas, Fortunatus and Achaicus had come to Paul in Ephesus to minister to Paul “what was lacking on your [the Achaians’] part” (1 Co 16:17). As they brought support from Achaia to Paul, they also reported to Paul what was happening among the disciples in Achaia.

In considering this statement in reference to the conversion of Stephanas and his household as the first ones to be converted in Achaia, why would we assume that Stephanas, Fortunatus and Achaicus were only from the city of Corinth? Paul certainly addressed his first letter to the disciples in the area “to the church of God that is at Corinth” (1 Co 1:2). But we make a wrong assumption by not considering the second letter that was written to the same people. Because of the preceding statement, we wrongly assume that 1 Corinthians was directed only to the disciples who lived in the city of Corinth. But in the passage quoted above in reference to Stephanas (1 Co 16:15), Paul did not say that he was the firstfruits of the city of Corinth. Stephanas and his household were the firstfruits of Achaia, though they may have lived in the city of Corinth. It seems more logical to conclude that Paul was writing to all the disciples in all of the province of Achaia, not just to those in the city of Corinth. In other words, his letters were not exclusively to the disciples in Corinth simply because he mentions this city in the introduction of the first letter. When we get to the follow-up letter (2 Co), this point is made very clear.

The occasion for much of the division was when all the disciples of Achaia came together in the city of Corinth to celebrate the love feast/Lord’s Supper. This would be particularly true in reference to their provincial and occasional assemblies in one city for the Lord’s Supper. But the division among all the disciples throughout the province was not simply in Corinth. It was a provincial problem. The problem only manifested itself during the periodic regional assembly of all the members when they came together in Corinth for the love feast/Lord’s Supper. (More on this in chapter 11.)

So in Paul’s reference to Stephanas as a representative of Achaia in 1 Corinthians 16:15, we could assume that Stephanas was not from Corinth, but from some other town in Achaia. In fact, Paul commended those who sent the representatives of Stephanas, Fortunatus and Achaicus to him with their support. The uniqueness of Stephanas and his household was that they had “dedicated themselves to the ministry of the saints” (1 Co 16:15). This was to the ministry of the saints in all Achaia.

In 1 Corinthians 16:15 Paul said, “You know the household of Stephanas ....” Paul’s mention of the household of Stephanas was not an introduction to this household. It was simply a statement concerning a household that they already knew. The knowledge of this household throughout Achaia, therefore, assumes that the three men, Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, were representatives to Paul from all the saints of Achaia, not just Corinth.

Stephanas and his household were known throughout Achaia because they had dedicated themselves to serve the saints throughout the province. When we investigate this matter in the second letter, the ministry of this household was certainly far beyond the city of Corinth. The division among the disciples was provincial, and thus, the one who was familiar with all the divided parts within the body was a household of dedicated servants who moved among the disciples throughout the province.

2. Those to whom 2 Corinthians was directed clarifies those to whom 1 Corinthians was directed. With the comments of the previous point in mind, consider Paul’s introduction in the second letter: “Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, to the church of God that is at Corinth, with all the saints who are in all Achaia” (2 Co 1:1).

Paul specifically addressed the second letter to the saints in the city of Corinth, but he tied these saints to all the saints in Achaia with the word “with.” This is one of the strongest statements in the New Testament that teaches the organic unity of the body of Christ in any particular region where there are Christians.

We deduct from Paul’s introductory statements in both letters that he was addressing all the saints in Achaia representatively through the saints who were in Corinth. The problem of disunity that Paul discussed was not exclusively with the saints in the city of Corinth. Those who claimed to be “of Apollos” or “of Cephas” or “of Paul” were scattered throughout the province of Achaia. They were scattered throughout the province because the former ministry of Paul, Peter and Apollos extended throughout the province.

3. All Achaia was ready to contribute to the famine in Judea. When Paul moved on in 2 Corinthians to his discussion of the special famine contribution for Judea, his commendation concerning contributions about which he wrote to the Macedonian Christians was not simply in reference to the saints in Corinth.

Concerning the ministry of the saints, it is not needful to me to write to you, for I know the willingness of your mind, of which I boast of you to those of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago. And your zeal has stirred up the majority (2 Co 9:1,2).

Paul boasted that the saints in all Achaia had prepared for the contribution. His boast was not in reference to the saints in the city of Corinth alone. The commendation was concerning all the saints in all Achaia. We conclude, therefore, that this statement ties the recipients of both 1 & 2 Corinthians together to be addressed to all the saints in Achaia. For this reason, Paul’s encouragement through the boast had to go to all the saints in all Achaia, the saints whom he addressed in both letters.

The pronoun “you” in 2 Corinthians 9:1,2 referred to all the Christians in Achaia, and thus, the letter of 2 Corinthians was written to all the Christians in Achaia. Therefore—and please note this—when Paul uses the pronoun “you” throughout the letter of 2 Corinthians, we must conclude that he was addressing all the saints in all Achaia. And we would go one step further in our conclusion. The problems that Paul addressed in 2 Corinthians reflected on the problems with which he dealt in the first letter. Since this would be a logical conclusion, we would assert that 1 Corinthians was also directed to all the saints in Achaia who were dealing with some problems in reference to the unity of the saints.

It was in the context of his address to all the saints in all Achaia that the plea of 1 Corinthians 1:10 was made. Paul’s exhortation in reference to unity in both letters, therefore, was that the individual saints of Achaia not denominate themselves from one another, regardless of where they lived, with whom they assembled, or who they favored as their leader. Paul’s mandates for unity were not written to autonomous groups to be united as a network of churches. His instructions were directed to individual members to be united with one another as the one universal body of Christ. If the members maintained their unity with one another, then the members of all their assemblies would be united.

4. Paul supported himself while preaching in all Achaia. One thing is certain concerning Paul’s preaching when he went to Corinth. He preached in all the province of Achaia, not just in the city of Corinth. Notice carefully the wording of his statements in 2 Corinthians 11:9 in reference to his support. He made the statements, “present with you” and, “I was not a burden to anyone .... I have kept myself from being burdensome to you.” In 2 Corinthians 11:10 he concluded these remarks with the statement, “As the truth of Christ is in me, no one will stop me from this boasting in the regions of Achaia.” It is evident that he was addressing in 2 Corinthians all the disciples in all Achaia, not just those in the city of Corinth. As he traveled about preaching the gospel in all Achaia, he supported himself in order not to be a burden to any of the new converts.

Paul’s ministry was to the province of Achaia when he was personally in the province. The problems of the church of Achaia with which he dealt in the second letter, were problems he mentioned in 1 Corinthians. And since the second letter was directed to all the disciples in Achaia, then we must conclude that the first letter was also directed to all the disciples in Achaia.

In the context of the problem that he addressed in 2 Corinthians 11 concerning divisions surrounding the Lord’s Supper, we must assume that when he wrote both letters, they were addressed to all the Christians in the province of Achaia. The purpose for which the members of the church in Achaia came together for the love feast/Supper was actually lost in their independent behavior of being exclusive in some of their home assemblies. In order to correct their disconnected assemblies, Paul sought to correct their relationships with one another.

Chapter 10

THE ACHAIAN EXAMPLE

We need to draw some conclusions from the fact that there were Christians meeting in small groups throughout all the province of Achaia. These saints were addressed in the letters of 1 & 2 Corinthians. In drawing our conclusions, we must not forget the fact that both 1 & 2 Corinthians were addressed to “all the saints who are in all Achaia” (2 Co 1:1). With this in mind, we consider all the exhortations of 1 & 2 Corinthians in view of the fact that the two letters were written to individual Christians throughout the province, encouraging them to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

Since the message of 1 & 2 Corinthians was directed to all the saints in all of Achaia, which saints were meeting in numerous houses in the many towns, cities, villages, and farms throughout the province, then we must consider the exhortation of 1 Corinthians 1:10 in this context. If 1 Corinthians 1:10 teaches anything, it teaches that there was to be no such thing as an independent and exclusive function of any group of disciples among all the Christians of Achaia.

When Paul exhorted that all the disciples in Achaia be united, his exhortation far exceeded the limits of some autonomous single group of disciples. His exhortation was to be heeded by the “church of the Paulites,” “church of the Cephites,” and “church of the Apollosites.” In fact, it would be quite preposterous to conclude that either 1 or 2 Corinthians was directed to one specific assembly of disciples. The fact that the Christians in Corinth alone were meeting in many different homes throughout the city, would validate the conclusion that the letters could not have been written to any one group, but to all the saints.

Paul wrote “that there be no divisions among you [as individuals], but that you be perfectly joined together [as one body] in the same mind and in the same judgment” (1 Co 1:10). What exactly would this statement mean when understood in view of the fact that the church throughout Achaia was multiple in the assembly of the disciples?

Since it would be natural for those who met together on a regular and weekly basis to draw closer to one another with the possible neglect of others, then we would understand that Paul’s exhortation would be directly against forming cliques of disciples who would call themselves after different personalities as Paul, Cephas or Apollos. It is not wrong to call a particular group after a specific location. But churches need to be careful in identifying their assemblies with unique names in order to separate themselves from one another.

Some of the problems of division in Achaia rose from individual disciples calling themselves after at least three different personalities. The novice disciples in Achaia evidently suffered from “preacheritis.” Their denominating after personalities seemed to be only natural since all the saints in Achaia lived in a very idolatrous society. They needed to connect with someone as their leader, and thus, they naturally connected to the only person who initially delivered the gospel to them. The disciples possibly took pride in the one who baptized them (See 1 Co 1:14-16). They had forgotten that the more one follows a favorite personality on earth, the less his faith is dependent on the personality of Jesus in heaven. The more one seeks on earth a mediator between himself and God, the less he depends on Jesus Christ as his only mediator (1 Tm 2:5). This is the emotional background upon which Jesus made the statement, “And call no one your father on the earth, for One is your Father, He who is in heaven” (Mt 23:9).

In the case of Apollos and Cephas, these two may have personally baptized some of those who had divisively given allegiance to them. In order to correct this denominating among the saints, Paul said, “I thank God that I baptized none of you except Crispus and Gaius ... also the household of Stephanas” (1 Co 1:14,16). The occasion for some of the division, therefore, was that allegiance was being given to different preachers who baptized them. And because of this, Paul was thankful that he had baptized only a few, lest a group follow him to the exclusion of others (1 Co 1:12).

The problem was that those who were calling themselves after men denominated the church over their favorite preacher, which preacher, had no intention of ever drawing away disciples after himself (1 Co 1:12). So when Paul exhorted that they be perfectly joined together, and that there be no divisions among them, he was speaking in the context of different groups forming their own sects after their allegiance to a favorite preacher, and subsequently, forming independent groups that were identified by a specific personality. 1 Corinthians 1:10 must be understood in reference to the individuals being united, and thus, correcting the dividing into independent groups. If the individuals corrected their relationships with one another, then the groups would naturally be united. Since this is a contextual understanding of the statement of 1 Corinthians 1:10, then certainly it is a statement against anyone establishing himself as the preacher around which a church of disciples is formed or ruled. This is the very problem Paul addressed in the context of 1 Corinthians 1.

Though neither Paul, Apollos nor Cephas had any intention of starting their own independent party of adherents that was separated and identified to be independent from other groups, it was a simple fact that disciples often like to do this type of thing regardless of the wishes of their leader. We like our favorite “kings,” and thus, we have a tendency to call ourselves after our favorite preacher. But if we understand 1 Corinthians 1:10 correctly, then calling ourselves after different leaders on earth is divisive among the disciples. It is carnal behavior in that our focus is turned from our total allegiance to Christ alone as our King to some fallible man on earth.

1 Corinthians 1:10 is a passage that is directed specifically to any group (church) of disciples who would form their own autonomous group that would separate individual members of the one body from one another. Paul’s mandate in the exhortation of 1 Corinthians 1:10 was to correct the dysfunctional fellowship that individual members had with one another. In order to discourage the division that persisted through their establishment of unique groups, he corrected the relational behavior of the individual members with one another. If individuals ceased denominating themselves into groups by calling themselves after different personalities, then there would be no common basis for any group of disciples to cluster around one another to the exclusion of others.

Paul’s argument is that we not individually propose either a personality, tradition, unique name, or race by which we would assemble ourselves together as an exclusive group. We can understand why the only name used in the New Testament in reference to disciples is “Christian” (1 Pt 4:16). If there were any other name, then different groups of disciples would select different names in the New Testament as the banner under which they would establish their unique identity. And by identifying their group to be unique because they had chosen a unique name, they would isolate themselves from others whom God had added to His body throughout the world. Churches are not identified by printing up common sign boards and hanging them around the necks of those we would seek to huddle together into their favorite denomination.

Since the exhortation of 1 Corinthians 1 is to cease using unique names by which we would denominate ourselves from one another, then certainly individual members must never do such. They must not call themselves after any name than Christ, lest they denominate themselves from one another by calling themselves after a different name. If everyone claims to be “of Christ,” then we are Christians only. And being Christians only means that we must accept anyone whom God has added to His family upon their obedience to the gospel.

Those groups who would declare their independence from other groups in a region because they called themselves after a unique personality, doctrine or name need to take another look at the exhortation of 1 Corinthians 1:10. We see many efforts of different churches throughout the world who have called themselves after different preachers or pastors, and subsequently, assigned a unique name to their groups. We would exhort every saint, therefore, to review 1 Corinthians 1:10 in view of the fact that we must be one body of Christ. Every individual disciple is a brother or sister to every individual disciple throughout the world. We must never allow ourselves to be called after any name than Christ. Our first step toward unity, therefore, is to banish the denominating names from among ourselves and be Christians only.

God expects unity among all those who would be Christians only. Since we are baptized in the name of Christ, then we are blessed with unity by the One who gave Himself for us (1 Co 1:13).

This point might be easier to understand if we viewed it practically. What if a storm came through and blew down the church house on Monday that was the common place of meeting of the Christians? If out of necessity the saints met in many homes of the members the following Sunday, would there now be many autonomous “churches” in the city, the number of which would be determined by the number of homes in which all the saints had to meet? Would we then need to erect a common name on every house in order to determine those of the common fellowship who were before the storm assembled under the same roof? Or, would the church in the city simply be one church as it was before in meeting under the same roof, regardless of the number of assemblies that were conducted the first Sunday after the storm? If after the storm we hung a different name over the disciples who were meeting under different roofs, then we are on our way to being denominated as the Achaians. We must remember that the Holy Spirit moved the hand of Paul to tear down any name of man that would denominate the sheep of God from one another. Christ is not divided.

The church was one in Acts 2 on the first day when the first person was added to the body of obedient believers. The advantage that the Jerusalem disciples had was that there were no constructed walls within which disciples could separate themselves and no unique names that separated them from one another. They were the one church in the city of Jerusalem the following Sunday when the 3,000 began to meet under different roofs throughout Jerusalem. They did not move into being autonomous from one another the first Sunday after Pentecost, and neither did they when they moved into all the world.

Chapter 11

UNITY AROUND A MEAL

From the very beginning of the church in Jerusalem, the early disciples understood the key to maintaining the unity of the saints in the bond of peace. Since the first converts were Jews, they understood the bonding nature of a fellowship meal, which meal they ate annually in the Passover feast. When Jesus was at His last Passover meal with His disciples, He changed the significance of the Jewish Passover meal (See Mt 26:26-29). The Passover meal became His Supper, and thus, the occasion for the disciples to come together in order to remember their spiritual nationhood and covenant as a result of Jesus’ atoning sacrifice. Instead of an annual observance of the “Passover meal” as in the Old Testament, the early Christians had their love feast/Lord’s Supper on a weekly basis (At 20:7). They needed no commands to do this. It was simply natural to do that which gave them purpose for being one covenanted nation with God because of the cross.

A. The Passover feast of unity:

Under the Sinai law recorded in the Old Testament, God commanded Israel to come together annually for the Passover meal (Ex 12). This was a meal during which the Jewish families would come together with the priests and eat the food that came from their sacrificed animals. The purpose of the meal was both to remember their covenant that God had established with them as a nation at Mount Sinai, and to celebrate their oneness as a nation. All the tribes of Israel were to eat as one nation in order to remember that they were one united and covenanted nation under God (Ex 12).

The spiritual significance of the Passover meal was brought into the new covenant relationship that Christians have with God through Jesus. Jesus changed the significance of the Passover meal. In partaking of the meal, Christians are to remember Him as their Passover offering. In partaking of the bread and cup during or after the meal, Christians are to remind Jesus to come again for them (Download Book 39, The Lord's Supper, chapter 3, BRL, africainternational.org).

Through the eating of the meal and partaking of the bread and fruit of the vine, Christians preach the Lord's death until He comes again (1 Co 11:26). The church is the new spiritual Israel that is in a new covenant relationship with God. Therefore, when Jesus stood with His disciples at His last Passover supper with them, He changed the meaning of the bread and wine of which the disciples partook when they continued to eat their "Passover meal." "And as they were eating [the Passover meal], Jesus took bread and blessed it. And He broke it and gave it to the disciples and said, 'Take, eat. This is My body'" (Mt 26:26).

Jesus gave a new meaning to the bread of the Passover meal. When the disciples would eat the bread during His kingdom reign, it would be in reference to His sacrificed body, as well as His one spiritual body of obedient disciples. The disciples did not understand either of these concepts at the time Jesus ate the bread with them during His last Passover with them.

And He took the cup and gave thanks and gave it to them, saying, 'All of you drink of it. For this is My blood of the covenant that is shed for many for the remission of sins'" (Mt 26:27,28).

All the Jewish disciples knew the significance of the Passover meal. It was a meal of remembrance and a celebration of the one nation of Israel that was established by God and brought into a covenant relationship with Him at Mount Sinai. But at the time Jesus took the bread and cup during His last Passover, the disciples did not understand the significance of the unity they were to promote among themselves by eating what they would later consider to be the Lord's Supper.

B. The one bread and one body:

In order to introduce the following thought, we must remember that the gospel brings us closer together. But in contrast to gospel, religion moves us further away from one another. The problem in the Corinthian context was that the disciples had a difficult time getting religion out of their behavior. They would not be able to come together to celebrate the gospel of unity until they moved their minds away from the religion of the temple behavior in Corinth. When we partake of the Supper, we remember the gospel of the Lord Jesus. And in doing so we are brought closer together.

The unity factor of the Lord's Supper in the context of the Corinthian letters was brought out by Paul in 1 Corinthians 10:16,17. Notice how Paul brings the teaching of Jewish unity that surrounded the Jewish Passover into the fellowship meal of the Lord's meal. "The cup of blessing that we bless, is it not the fellowship of the blood of Christ? The bread that we break, is it not the fellowship of the body of Christ?" (1 Co 10:16).

The eating of the meal was to bring fellowship and unity between members of the body. This event in the lives of the disciples was the foundation upon which the Lord's Supper was eaten. The eating of the one bread and drinking of the cup was to signal their common fellowship they had with one another in Christ. The partaking of the love feast and Supper was an event that brought together the many into one.

Paul continued to explain, "For though we are many, we are one bread and one body, for we are all partakers of the one bread" (1 Co 10:17). Unfortunately, what was to symbolize their oneness in Christ, the Achaians corrupted to be an occasion to manifest their lack of unity. They thus came together for the worse, and not for the better (1 Co 11:17).

Paul rebuked, "... when you come together in assembly, I hear that there are divisions among you, and in part I believe it" (1 Co 11:18). "Therefore," Paul challenged them, "when you come together, it is not to eat the Lord's Supper" (1 Co 11:20). They did not come together to remember that the many members throughout Achaia were one body. On the contrary, when they came together they manifested their divisive attitudes and behavior. The disciples throughout Achaia came together into one assembly for the love feast and Supper, but their coming together revealed their divisions, not their unity. Therefore, their coming together was not for the purpose of remembering that they were one body by eating the one bread. They had corrupted the purpose that the many members were to come together in fellowship by partaking of the one bread. Their coming together, therefore, was not to accomplish the purpose of the love feast/Supper.

Paul explained how their division was manifested in their coming together. “For in eating, each one takes before others his own supper” (1 Co 11:21). It was no longer a sharing meal to promote unity. What was happening was that they were eating as individual groups wherein the different cliques, or groups, sat by themselves independent of others while they ate and drank. The occasion was so contrary to the oneness of the body that Paul revealed that “one is hungry and another is drunken” (1 Co 11:21). Instead of making sure that everyone present was able to share in the food and drink, some groups selfishly consumed their own food while others were allowed to go without food and drink. Each group who had plenty, ate all their own food and drank all their own wine in having their own supper. Others were left to go hungry. That which was instituted to encourage unity became the occasion to manifest divisive behavior.

It was the classical case of sectarianism in the church. When all the denominated sects of the church came together, they could not break down the walls that divided them from one another. Therefore, the meal that was to bring them together in unity, and then climax with the Lord’s Supper to celebrate their common covenant with God, was a clear manifestation of their sectarian behavior. By their divisive behavior during the love feast/Supper, they despised the assembly for the Supper that was to encourage fellowship (1 Co 11:22).

From the context of 1 Corinthians 11, therefore, we see the eating of the fellowship meal and Lord’s Supper as an occasion to manifest that we are one body under the cleansing blood of Jesus. If we do not eat in order to promote our oneness in Christ, then we eat and drink judgment unto ourselves (1 Co 11:29). This was what the eating of the love feast/Supper became in the gathering of the Achaians.

If the occasion explained in 1 Corinthians 11 is a fellowship meal that we eat in order to celebrate our oneness in Christ, then it is unfortunate that many groups today fail to see any significance in having such a meal at all in order to promote unity. In fact, if we understand that this fellowship meal was an opportunity for all the saints of Achaia to come together in fellowship with one another, then we might consider that we unknowingly violate the principles that Paul gives by having our own meal within our own group, and thus, we eat our own supper to the exclusion of others. It would certainly not be wrong for each group to have their own fellowship meal on a weekly basis to celebrate their unity with every other Christian throughout the world. If the occasion herein discussed by Paul was an area wide fellowship meal and Lord’s Supper to create a bond of unity among all the disciples in a particular region, then we might want to reconsider doing the same occasionally in order to bring the disciples of a particular region together in order to encourage the organic function of the body in a particular region. Unfortunately, it is usually the case that independent groups have their “own supper,” but never invite other Christians in the area to the feast in order to celebrate unity.

Paul concluded the exhortation of 1 Corinthians 11 with some very practical instructions. “When you come together to eat [the fellowship meal],” he wrote, “wait for one another” (1 Co 11:33). Waiting for one another is an indication that we are one body in Christ. Eating before everyone arrives from distant areas is an indication that parts of the body are not being considerate of all the parts of all the body. When all the parts of the body remember the gospel of unity, they are brought together. This is the powerful dynamic of partaking of the Supper on a weekly basis. We remind ourselves of our oneness in Christ every Sunday.

If any member could not wait to eat before all the members in Achaia had arrived, then Paul instructed that the local members “eat at home so that you do not come together for judgment” (1 Co 11:34). What Paul was saying was that everyone must wait until everyone arrives before the eating of the Supper begins. Doing so accomplishes the purpose of the love feast and Lord’s Supper. Waiting for one another promotes unity. Not waiting on one another brings judgment upon ourselves because we are not eating the “one bread” of the Supper in order to celebrate the oneness of the body.

The fellowship meal with the Lord’s Supper is more than a meal to satisfy hunger. If one cannot wait to satisfy his hunger at the area wide fellowship meal, then he must eat before he comes. If anyone starts eating before everyone has arrived, then his actions manifest his lack of understanding of the purpose of the fellowship meal and Supper. He is thinking of his own belly, and not the unity that was to be signalled to the whole body by the whole body eating together as one.

Chapter 12

THE RISE OF WOLVES AND SHEEP THIEVES

The exhortation of 1 Corinthians 1:10 is illustrated by its application to the Christians who lived in the area of Ephesus. As we journey through the recorded meeting that Paul called in Miletus with the Ephesian elders (bishops, shepherds), we are encouraged by the fact that by the time of the meeting, the disciples, with their shepherds throughout the region of Ephesus, were behaving according to the Spirit's mandate of 1 Corinthians 1:10. There was unity among the members of the body, which members, unfortunately, would within a few years after the meeting be moving into an era of great persecution by the Roman state. In fact, we would conclude that the reason Paul called this unique meeting with the church leaders was to specifically address the "wolf and lordship problems" that were soon to come among the Ephesian disciples before the state persecution of Rome. Before the persecution would reach its zenith, there would be a denominating effect taking place among the disciples in the area in the immediate future.

At the time Paul visited the elders of Ephesus on his last mission journey, there were elders (shepherds) throughout the region who were moving among the many house groups. "So from Miletus he [Paul] sent to Ephesus and called the presbyters of the church" (At 20:17).

There was more than one single-assembly of the disciples in Ephesus at the time this meeting was called. The growth of the church in Ephesus had gone far beyond the privilege of all the members of the region to meet in one location, and thus, they were meeting in the homes of the members throughout the area. However, in the context of Acts 20 all the disciples are referred to as "the church." It was not the churches of Ephesus, but the church. And it was not a single presbyter ruling over the flock, or any specific group. It was a plurality of presbyters who worked among all the disciples of the area.

We thus caution ourselves about reading into the background of the meeting our present independent church behavior. All the disciples in all of Ephesus were one church, though they were all meeting at different places. And among all the disciples of Ephesus there was a plurality of shepherds (presbyters) looking after the spiritual needs of all the sheep.

(Though it is not in the context of this discussion to clarify the use of nouns that refer to the "presbyters," we must keep in mind that there are several Greek words used in the New Testament that identify those who were the elders. English words as "presbyter," "shepherds," "pastors," and "bishops" are all used in reference to the leaders for which Paul gave spiritual qualities and physical qualifications in 1 Timothy 3:1-7 and Titus 1:5-9. For further study of this subject, download Book 24, chapter 24, BRL, africainternational.org.)

When the meeting of elders transpired in Miletus, Paul reminded those present of his past ministry in the region. In those years of ministry, he taught them "publicly and from house to house" (At 20:20). Verse 21 defines the word "publicly." He used the word referred to the evangelistic work of his ministry in Ephesus to the unbelievers. The phrase "house to house" referred to his edification of the disciples in their homes. Because the disciples remained connected as the one church, regardless of their diverse assemblies in homes throughout the region, it was easy for Paul to move from house to house. It was in the homes of the members where Paul said that he did not shun to declare to them "all the counsel of God" (At 20:27).

When house groups become independent and begin to draw themselves away from the family of disciples, it is then that sectarian division starts to hinder the organic function of the body in reference to teachers moving among the people. This was the problem that was introduced by Diotrephes. (More on this in chapter 15.)

During the meeting in Miletus, Paul moved into another singular use of words in reference to the multiple-assembly function of the body in Ephesus. He said,

Therefore, take heed to yourselves and to all the flock, among which the Holy Spirit has made you overseers, to shepherd the church of God that He has purchased with His own blood (At 20:28).

It is very important to read this statement and let it speak for itself. In view of the saints being scattered throughout the metropolitan area of Ephesus, which was at this time at least 250,000 in population, Paul exhorted these shepherds to take heed to "all the flock." This was not all the flock of their respective single-assembly groups. It was a statement that reflected on their ministry to see over the spiritual needs of each individual sheep of the flock in all the city of Ephesus.

No one group of shepherds was encouraged to restrict their care of the flock to just one group of disciples. Since the members were scattered throughout the city, and meeting in several homes, then the shepherds had the responsibility of shepherding the sheep throughout the city. Nothing is said in the context of Acts 20 that the shepherding of the flock should be confined to one specific assembly of the sheep who were meeting at a specific location in someone's house. On the contrary, since the sheep were everywhere throughout the city, then the function of the elders was everywhere throughout the city. And since the flock is encouraged to know the shepherds, then each group must be sure to invite the shepherds to visit their group (1 Th 5:12,13). Again, we must be careful about reading our present autonomous behavior into the reality of the function of the body of Christ within a particular city, as well as throughout a region where there were disciples. The shepherds were moving among the sheep in order that the sheep know their shepherds, and for the purpose of the shepherds knowing the needs of the sheep. It was the perfect arrangement for the sheep to remain united.

The fact that there is only one universal flock of God is brought out in the statement of Acts 20:28: "Therefore, take heed to yourselves and to all the flock ... to shepherd the church of God that He purchased with His own blood." There is still one church (one fold) of God throughout the world, whether there are members living in Ephesus or any other city throughout the world. Jesus purchased with His blood only one church of God, not just a single group meeting in someone's house in the city of Ephesus.

Paul's statement that the blood sacrifice of Jesus was for the universal body means that all the members of the body in Ephesus were included. The blood sacrifice was for "the body," not bodies. And since it was for the global body of Christ, then every member of the body is continually cleansed by the blood regardless of where he or she is located in this world (See 1 Jn 1:7). The blood is not divided, and thus, those on whom it is poured must not be divided. No assembly of the saints has a right to judge whether the blood is poured out on another assembly of saints just down the street. Blood pouring is God's job.

The shepherds were among the sheep in Ephesus. They ministered to the spiritual needs of the sheep wherever the sheep were in the city. Now when these shepherds traveled to the city of Miletus just south of Ephesus in order to meet with Paul, did they cease being shepherds of the flock of God? Were they shepherds in Ephesus, as well as shepherds when they arrived in the city of Miletus? If a spiritual need arose among some Christians in Miletus, would the Ephesian elders be barred from ministering to those needs? If one would think that shepherds had been invested with some sort of authority, then he will not be able to answer these questions correctly. If one believes that there is a geographical restriction on elders ministering to the spiritual needs of the sheep, then he too will have some difficulty answering these questions. We would conclude as Peter, who judged some elders for being lording authorities, that they were fellow shepherds in the universal body of Christ. But they had no authority as lords, and thus, were to cease functioning as lords (See 1 Pt 5:1-4).

From wherever he was in the world, Peter wrote to other elders, wherever they were. He wrote the following statement: "I exhort the elders who are among you, as a fellow elder ..." (1 Pt 5:1). Would Peter need to travel to where the elders were to whom he wrote before he could be a "fellow elder" with them? If he wrote a letter, then certainly he was in some other location than those to whom he wrote. If one of the elders of those to whom he wrote traveled to meet Peter wherever he was, then would that elder cease being an elder and just be a member? It is sometimes difficult to interpret the practicality of Peter's statements when we are behaving contrary to the very thing that Peter judged the lording authoritarians to whom he wrote. They were in the process of establishing themselves as lording elders with authority, which thing Jesus said would not be so among His disciples (Mk 10:35-45).

Simply because those who are designated shepherds (bishops, pastors, elders, presbyters), by those members who know them, does not mean that they cannot function as such to those who do not know them personally. Elders are such because of who they are, not by some officially invested authority that was given to them, and certainly not because they are in some office-bearing potentate position.

When shepherds start assuming some authority, then there is a problem. If they assume some of the authority of Christ, then they start assuming some of the lordship of Jesus, for with authority must also come lordship. Authority and lordship cannot be separated. And because authority and lordship cannot be separated, neither can one separate lordship from the denominating of the body. Lords must have bodies of people over whom they can exercise their lordship. Now we know why Paul reminded the Ephesian elders where there would be a problem with lordship elders. A few years later, he wrote a letter to these same elders. In the letter, he reminded them that we have only one Lord (Ep 4:4-6). But because there would arise lords from among them after the Miletus meeting, there would also arise denominating groups who would declare their autonomy under the lordship of their lording elders.

We do not see lordship leadership in the teaching of the New Testament concerning leadership. Jesus barred such leadership from among His sheep (See Mk 10:35-45). Nevertheless, lordship leaders were soon to come. Shepherds can easily take their spiritual ministry to others. However, we must not assume that when a traveling elder comes into our city that he has come with some authority over the disciples of that city. Historically, the apostasy to hierarchal authority developed when elders assumed authority they did not have, and then brought their assumed authority together and eventually manifested it through what we now call the pope.

We never see in the New Testament some type of networked authority among the shepherds that was exercised over the church. When Paul called the elders to Miletus, he was not calling authorities together. He was calling only the greatest slaves of Ephesus who had dedicated themselves to the spiritual needs of the sheep in Ephesus. At the time, these slaves had not started to lord with authority over those they would draw away after themselves.

When problems did develop among the disciples in the first century, meetings were held to deal with the doctrinal problems, or arrogant lords (At 15: G1 2). The church never resorted to some chain of authority among men on earth to solve either doctrinal or organizational problems. This point was certainly brought out during the Acts 15 meeting when the church gathered to sort out some problems with some legalistic brethren who were binding where God had not bound (See At 15:1,2). When dealing with doctrinal problems, the disciples always resorted to the authority of the Scriptures, not the supposed authority of some hierarchy of men who claimed to have authority to pronounce judgments.

In the context of the Acts 20 meeting at Miletus, Paul did not call the shepherds together in order to designate a “chairman” of the elders. He was not establishing some network of authorities that would eventually lead to a network of authorities among the disciples. On the contrary, in his meeting with the shepherds he specifically warned them against any efforts to draw away any group of disciples by lording over them.

Chapter 13

REMAINING WITH ONE LORD

The Christians in Ephesus were functioning as an organic body throughout the city before Paul arrived at the neighboring city, Miletus, on his last mission journey. Where the Christians of Ephesus assembled on Sunday did not determine their ministry to the whole body throughout the region of Ephesus, neither did their assemblies in the homes of the members separate any disciples from one another. At the time Paul visited the shepherds of Ephesus, they were carrying out their function in the body as described in the mandate of 1 Corinthians 1:10. Though members of the body met in many different locations for their common assemblies on Sunday, they were functioning as one united body.

But something was coming in their future. There was division coming, division similar to what we witness today in some areas where the body of Christ is located. What is interesting to note is that the divisive behavior today that some seem to think is the ordinary function of the body in a city or region is actually the denominating of the body about which Paul warned the Ephesian shepherds.

Paul warned the Ephesian shepherds of two problems that would soon denominate the sheep of God:

For I know this, that after my departure grievous wolves will enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also from your own selves will men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away the disciples after themselves (At 20:29,30).

A. Wolves that scatter sheep.

Paul was warning that the shepherds must be on the lookout for wolves. When wolves enter in among a flock of sheep, the sheep scatter. The sheep lose contact with one another as they flee in different directions for their own safety. The unity of the flock is lost as sheep scatter.

1. Entrance of the wolves: Since Paul made the statement, “after my departure,” then the entrance of the scattering wolves would soon come after his departure from their presence, and carry on in the centuries to come. The beginning of the scattering was not something that would happen in the centuries to come. The apostasy about which Paul spoke was in its primal beginnings by the middle of the first century. By the second and third centuries, many erroneous beliefs would eventually develop into a mass apostasy.

The second century was not good for the flock of God. Wolves brought in an assortment of heresies that devastated the unity of the church, which heresies led many of the church into beliefs that were contrary to the fundamental teachings of New Testament. For example, Tertullian (160-220) introduced the teaching that every newborn babe was tainted with sin that was supposedly passed down from Adam's sin in the Garden of Eden. He was the first to mention the concept of original sin.

Other teachings also came into the body of believers. Teachers as Ammonius Saccas of Alexandria, Egypt, taught a compromise between Christianity and paganism, which teaching was adopted by Emperor Constantine of Rome to amalgamate church, paganism and state. This teaching would eventually result in the Edict of Milan in 315 when Constantine made a distorted view of Christianity the state religion. Saccas sought to harmonize pagan philosophies with Christianity, and thus, develop a religious philosophy by which Christians and non-Christians could live in peace under the control of the state.

Other religious and philosophical teachings had a great impact on Christianity. Mani of Mesopotamia (216-276) syncretized the Zoroastrian mystery religions of the East with the teachings of the New Testament. The Ebonites denied the deity of Jesus by teaching that Moses had the same authority as Christ, and thus was equal with Christ. Monarchism was another denial of the eternality of Jesus. The Monarchians taught that Jesus lived so perfectly under the law that God adopted Him to be His Son. By affirming the total human origin of Jesus, they denied that Jesus was one with God before the incarnation.

Through the adoption of many mystic beliefs of non-Christian religions, gnosticism became the greatest attack against the Christian faith in the second century. The core teaching of gnosticism was that Jesus was only the final emanation of a series of digressions from God who dwells in total light. The last emanation, Jesus, was so digressed from the light, that He created the material world. Some gnostics believed that Jesus was simply a phantom who only appeared to the disciples. He was not the incarnation of the eternal God.

The primary theme of all teaching that identified the thinking of the wolves about whom Paul warned the Ephesian elders centered around an attack against the central faith of the Christian. And the center to the Christian faith is Jesus as the Son of God. The wolves would focus on devouring the foundation of the faith of Christians. The lord leaders would focus on denying the authority of Jesus to which Christians have submitted.

2. Entrance of the lordship leaders: The entrance of the lordship leaders among the flock of God meant that the lords had little consideration for the unity of the flock. They cared for their own selves rather than sparing the unity of the flock. They would sacrifice the unity of the flock for the sake of their selfish ambitions to have a group of sheep who would seek their leadership. In forming their own groups, their groups would inherently exclude other groups of sheep who were also huddling around their chosen lords.

In reference to those who would rise up as authorities, Paul's exhortation to the Ephesian elders, and to us, is that we must understand the rise of hierarchal apostasy. We must understand the early beginnings of such apostasies in order to check those who would lord over the flock of God.

Once hierarchal apostasy is full grown in a particular religious group, then it is difficult to correct. It is difficult to correct because the churches who are drawn away into a network of authorities are supportive of those authorities who lead each particular group. After a departure to church lords, the church group grows up knowing nothing different than to approach Jesus through the network of authorities of their particular church organization. If finances are involved in the support of the authorities of hierarchal apostasies, then it is difficult to restore such movements to the lordship of Jesus.

What Paul envisioned as lords coming in among the flock, Peter wrote a few years later that it was already happening at the time he wrote in the early 60s. In his first letter, Peter called on the shepherds to whom he wrote to "shepherd the flock of God that is among you ... not under compulsion ... not as being lords over those entrusted to you ..." (1 Pt 5:2,3).

Paul warned that some of the Ephesian shepherds would rise to be lords over their independent churches. They would make the sheep to be subservient to their authoritarian or influential leadership. This was the dividing of the flock into different independent churches that had little to do with one another once the lords drew away their sheep. The different groups would be subservient to the lords who led them, for the lords would assume authority over each of their groups.

B. Lords that steal sheep.

While wolves devour the sheep by devouring the foundation of faith upon which the flock exists, lords take control of the sheep, and in so doing, denominate the sheep into their own flocks. Wolves scatter by devouring, but lords gather up their own sheep and separate them from other shepherds who have likewise gathered together their own groups of sheep.

When Paul introduced verse 30 of Acts 20, he turned specifically to the shepherds who would seek to recruit sheep for their own autonomous groups. The phrase, “also from your own selves ...” indicates that Paul turned from the elders in general to those potential lords among them who were going to recruit members in Ephesus in order to establish their own congregations of sheep. In order to remain drawn away, these sheep would be independent from the other independent churches in town who had also been denominated as autonomous groups. This was the behavior of Diotrephes as John explained in 3 John. (More on this in chapter 15.)

Those who had been entrusted by the flock to shepherd their spiritual needs would turn from being servants of the flock to being lords over the flock. The apostasy would be in those who would assume authority over the flock. Jesus said that all authority belonged to Him (Mt 28:18). Lordship leaders seek to assume some of Jesus’ authority over His sheep. By doing such, lord leaders seek to claim that which does not belong to them. They partially assume some of the lordship of Jesus over His sheep in order to lord over their own flocks. They do as Peter said, “lord over the flock” so that they may draw away disciples after themselves. Any shepherd or group of shepherds, therefore, who draws away sheep in order to lord over them, falls under the warning of both Paul and Peter.

“Lording over” means that one has claimed authority. If one assumes no authority, then he cannot be a lord. Lordship exists only in the fact that one has either been assigned authority, or out of his own autocratic behavior, assumed authority over others. Whatever the situation, the lord exists for the purpose of calling away a group of sheep into an independent fellowship that in some way functions to the exclusion of those who do not submit to the lordship of the leader.

Lordship is contrary to the nature of the leadership that Jesus determined would be among His body. He explained this in the following statement:

You know that those who are recognized as rulers over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them. And their great ones exercise authority over them. But it will not be so among you. But whoever desires to be great among you will be your servant (Mk 10:42-44).

Jesus made the preceding statement to the disciples during His ministry. But even on the night of His betrayal when He washed their feet, He perceived that there was a dispute among them “as to which one of them should be considered the greatest” (Lk 22:24). So Jesus again admonished them on that occasion with the following words:

The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them. And those who exercise authority over them are called benefactors. But you will not be this way. But he who is greatest among you, let him be as the youngest. And he who leads, as he who serves (Lk 22:25,26).

What was about to transpire in Ephesus was an apostasy to lordship leadership by those shepherds who would violate Jesus’ mandate that He made in reference to leadership among His disciples. In order to draw away disciples after one’s self, one must use his influence as an occasion for denominating a group of disciples under his control. Once the sheep have submitted to the influence of their lord, then the denomination is established.

This apostasy is initially slow and unnoticed. This is why the Holy Spirit delivered the exhortation of Acts 20 specifically to the elders of the flock. Elders, or shepherds (pastors), are first designated by the flock to continue their function as servants of the flock. Because shepherds have dedicated themselves to the ministry of the saints, it is easy for some to move into the realm of lording over the flock. Those people who have their own ambitions and agenda can easily move from being servants to being lords. For this reason, no new Christ is to be designated a shepherd (1 Tm 3:2,6). The flock must first learn his ambition, whether it is for the Lord to serve, or for himself to be served.

Once the flock designates leaders, some leaders often use their designated ministry of leadership to start giving orders. They subsequently turn from leading by example (1 Pt 5:2) to lording by command. Once they have progressed to lording through assumed authority, then the flock is locked into being an autonomous denomination that is separated from those who refuse to be lorded over by any lord other than Jesus. Once the lorded group builds a temple for itself, it is often locked into a behavior of separation from all other groups who have likewise built the same. The four walls they have built around themselves signal to other walled in sheep more than is realized.

But in contrast to lordship leaders, those who have the mind of Christ lead according to the gospel. Jesus emptied Himself for us (Ph 2:5-8). Gospel leaders empty themselves for the flock. Jesus gave up His environment of heaven for us (Jn 1:1,2,14). Gospel leaders give up their comforts of living for themselves in order to live for others. Jesus suffered for His disciples. Gospel leaders do likewise. They live as Jesus lived for them.

Chapter 14

CHRIST-CENTERED FELLOWSHIPS

When groups of disciples are considered “drawn away,” their identity is in the fact that they establish a fellowship that is often centered around a person, which person is usually the preacher. Their assembly before their preacher establishes the uniqueness of the group and becomes the means by which the adherents maintain their identity as a unique group in the community. We have often engaged others by asking, “Who is your preacher?” The response varies, but is often something as, “We go to brother John’s church.” Assemblies are thus the opportunity for the “brother Johns” of the community to weekly assemble the sheep around their preaching, and thus, retain their faithfulness. Attendance at the assembly is the indication that one is faithful to the preacher to whom he has given allegiance and the group with which he has placed his membership.

Before the Reformation Movement five hundred years ago, the Eucharist (Lord’s Supper) of the Roman Catholic Church was the center of the Mass. Regardless of all the distorted views of the Eucharist, Catholics were rightly assembled together for the Mass that was provided over by the Catholic priest. The historian, Will Durant, wrote that the Roman Catholic Mass was ...

... based partly on the Judaic Temple service, partly on Greek mystery rituals of purification, vicarious sacrifice, and participation (Caesar and Christ, NY, Simon & Schuster, 1950, p.599).

Once the Mass was established as the center of Catholic assemblies, it remained such for over a thousand years. All was well until Martin Luther (1483 - 1546) rose up to reform Catholic liturgy during the Mass. In 1520, Luther launched his attack against what he considered pagan concepts in the Eucharist during the Catholic Mass. In 1523, Luther published his reforms of the Catholic Mass. In his published reforms, he made preaching, not the Eucharist, the center of the assembly. He wrote,

A Christian congregation should never gather together without the preaching of God’s Word and prayer, no matter how briefly .... the preaching and teaching of God’s Word is the most important part of Divine service (Luther’s Works, LIII,11).

Almost the entire Protestant world after the Reformation followed the teaching of Luther on the assembly by instituting preaching as the primary function in the assembly of the church. In doing this, the very thing about which Paul warned the Ephesian elders became so ingrained in religious liturgies that church groups go scrambling when their preacher leaves or dies. Search committees are established just to reestablish the center of reference of the assembly, for most churches today center their assemblies around the preacher and preaching.

The tendency to center assemblies around a prominent leader (the preacher) played itself out well during the Industrial Revolution that started the latter part of the eighteen century. As industry flourished in Europe and the West in the eighteen century, it was easy to bring the behavior of the boss at the local factory into the function of the local group of disciples. We erroneously viewed the successful boss in industry to be a candidate for leadership in the church. Many churches, therefore, sought first for someone around whom they could be organized, rather than someone who knew their Bible.

The irony of the progression into sectarian denominationalism among the disciples of our Lord is that those who have historically sought to prevent such, have assumed an embedded divisive theology that created the very same sectarian denominationalism they were fighting against. These warriors against hierarchal authority actually developed a foreign concept to the New Testament. They taught group independence in order to prevent a universal hierarchy of ruling lords on earth. In other words, lording was tolerated over independent groups of disciples that were led by the preacher, or “eldership,” in order to prevent lording over many groups of disciples.

In order to prevent an apostasy to a worldwide Catholic apostasy, some have created a theology that developed “autonomous churches” that they believed would guard against becoming a universal denominational hierarchy. Instead of moving into a worldwide Catholic hierarchy, some developed autonomous hierarchies within each denominated group of disciples. We have since drifted to interpret passages that discuss unity in the New Testament with the prejudice of our behavior of being independent churches who are struggling to work together in union.

In order to prevent a Catholic heresy of a worldwide network of authorities, we must simply obey the mandate of Jesus in Mark 10:43,44. Rather than creating an erroneous doctrine of division that would inherently create that from which we flee, it is better to challenge those who would leave their ministry of servanthood to become lords of independent flocks. The prevention of networks of authority is not in creating doctrines that inherently produce division. We must deal with lording leaders and erroneous teachings. We must not do so by establishing any teaching or function that is inherently divisive. It is not difficult to resort to the word of God to rebuke those who would seek to lord over the flock of God. Wolves who need rebuking are not hard to identify by their teaching that is contrary to truth. Lords are identified by their hierarchal commands. Wolves are identified by their heretical teachings.

We have found that those who are obsessed with the word of God usually have little difficulty in not becoming obsessed with becoming lords. When one feels controlled by the direction of the word of God, he has little desire to control others by his own word. He does not seek to control by his own word because he is so full of the word of God. He cannot help himself but speak the oracles of God (1 Pt 4:11).

On the other hand, we have found that those leaders who have little knowledge of the word of God are the ones who are quick to lord over the flock. Because of their lack of knowledge of the word of God, they have nothing by which to lead than the intimidating pronouncement of a command. Lordship leaders, therefore, usually depend on their position to command, not on their pronouncement of the word of God.

In the case of the apostasy that was coming the way of the Ephesian disciples, men who sought to be the center of reference of a group of disciples would be doing the drawing away. These men would use their influence among the sheep to assume authority over the sheep. In order to prevent such a scenario from developing today, the sheep need to take action when either a wolf or sheep stealer arises among them. Assembling the sheep into independent denominations is no prevention against the establishment of a worldwide network of authorities. Denominationalism is the problem. A theology of denominationalism is not the cure for sectarian division among the sheep.

Denominationalism among the sheep is the indication that lords exist over different groups of sheep. But when all the leadership of all the sheep meet together, as was the case in Acts 15 in Jerusalem, the leaders stopped those who would seek to rise up and be the chairman of the board of church leaders. The “circumcision brethren,” who brought fear among the Gentile brethren with legalistic knives in their pockets, were thwarted by the freedom that we have in Christ (See Gl 5:1). We must never forget that lords always bring bondage.

Chapter 15

INTERRUPTED ORGANIC DISCIPLESHIP

We understand the statements of what John wrote to Gaius in 3 John in the historical context that there were house fellowships throughout the region of where Gaius, Demetrius and Diotrephes lived. The theme of the letter to Gaius deals with a dysfunctional organic function of some disciples in the region, which dysfunction was promoted by one who sought to denominate some of the disciples into independent groups that were submissive to his leadership, and thus, outside the organic function of the church to preach the gospel to the world.

Paul’s meeting with the Ephesian elders in Miletus dealt with elders who would lead sheep away after their own independent groups (At 20:30). John’s letter to Gaius is in reference to an individual doing the very thing about which Paul warned. Though we are not told exactly who Diotrephes was, he could have been any self-proclaimed pastor, priest, or prophet who sought to have his own autonomous group of disciples.

This is one of the revelations in the New Testament where church autonomy is specifically targeted and judged divisive. In fact, the Holy Spirit is so specific in what He says through John that the practice of drawing away disciples into independent groups that are based on the lordship of any individual, or group of individuals, is evil. Such is a strong statement in view of the present practice of forming one’s own group, and then declaring the group’s independence from the rest of the disciples in any particular city or region. Such behavior is an organic dysfunction of the body.

We must keep in mind that this move to establish an independent group was based on lordship leadership. It was not a doctrinal matter other than the fact that Diotrephes violated the principle of servanthood leadership that Jesus taught should be among His disciples (See Mk 10:35-45). If the case were a situation where disciples were being drawn away to restore the truth of the gospel, then this would not be the text to use. In some cases, people must be called out of apostasy in order to restore a Bible-based faith. In other words, if we were to approach some who had been drawn away into the apostasy of a Diotrephetic apostasy, or the lordship leadership of some Ephesian elders, in an effort to bring them back under the lordship of Jesus, then we would be following Paul and John's advice to restore, not to denominate. Calling people out of hierarchal apostasies does not fall under the judgment of either Paul, John or Peter. In the work of the Holy Spirit to have recorded for us principles by which to judge an apostasy to be hierarchal lordship, He has given to us a road map back to the lordship of Jesus.

The occasion of the letter of 3 John is in the context that Gaius was discouraged concerning the lordship leadership of Diotrophes who was autocratically taking control of some of the disciples in the area where Gaius lived, and subsequently, destroying the organic function of disciples as Gaius. Because Gaius was certainly discouraged by these efforts to disconnect brethren from one another by one who sought to be independent from the church as a whole, John wanted to encourage Gaius that he was doing well by receiving and sending out the evangelists. In fact, in the context of 3 John, one way to identify the church leader who is evil is that he is not mission minded, nor does he lead the group over which he lords to either receive or send forth evangelists. Diotrophes was actually working against the mission of the church to support those evangelists who were going forth to preach the gospel. This was the evil result of his actions.

In John's commendation of Gaius in his financial support of traveling evangelists, we can assume that one of the evils in which Diotrophes had involved himself was in reference to money. Gaius was doing a worthy work in financially supporting missions through his reception of and sending forth the traveling evangelists. John used the Greek word propempo in reference to his sending forth of evangelists. It is a word that means to financially set forth one on his journey. Diotrophes, however, was barring any of the members of the group over which he lorded from financially supporting the traveling evangelists. It may have been that Diotrophes did not want any of the support that was coming his way as the preacher of his independent group to be sent to any evangelist who was going about preaching the gospel to the lost. We could make this deduction because such thinking is not uncommon among some local preachers of independent churches. Such preachers need to be reminded that if they are thinking in such a manner, they, as Diotrophes, have involved themselves in doing that which the Holy Spirit defined as evil (3 Jn 11).

In contrast to Diotrophes, Gaius was doing well in his efforts to promote unity through his open arms to include everyone who was going about preaching the gospel. John encouraged Gaius by stating,

Beloved, you do faithfully whatever you do for the brethren and especially for strangers, who have borne witness of your love before the church. You will do well to support them on their journey in a manner worthy of God (vss 5,6).

Gaius was doing that which was right in reference to functioning as an organic member of the body. He was obedient to God's system of getting those who heralded the good news into all the world (See Mt 28:19,20; Mk 16:15,16). He was instructed according to what Paul had written concerning world evangelism:

How then will they call on Him in whom they have not believed? And how will they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how will they hear without a preacher? And how will they preach unless they are sent? (Rm 10:14,15).

All was going well until one individual among the disciples in the area of Gaius decided to do that about which Paul had warned the shepherds in Ephesus. Diotrophes started to draw away disciples into his own exclusive fellowship. He started to restrict the group that he controlled from cooperating with others in reference to receiving and sending forth the evangelists.

One of the contexts in Scripture that specifically identifies the denominating of the organic body into independent groups is 3 John 9,10. Because we live in a world wherein most churches behave independently from one another, this is the text that should be clearly understood lest we be behaving after the manner of Diotrophes. John explains how independent church groups separate themselves from one another, and then how they declare their autonomy from one another in order to protect their own fellowship. By identifying the behavior of Diotrophes we can identify the nature of both himself, and the practice of how independent groups function in order to maintain their independence from one another.

I wrote to the church, but Diotrophes, who loves [A] to be first among them, [B] does not receive us. Therefore, if I come I will remember his deeds that he does, [C] unjustly accusing us with malicious words. And not content with that, he himself [D] does not receive the brethren, and [E]forbids those who would. And he [F] casts them out of the church (vss 9,10).

A. Be first:

Most independent church groups with which we have worked throughout the years were started by a very zealous individual. In this person's zeal, and willingness to be a good servant of the Lord, either he or the church sometimes moved him into being the center around which the members functioned. Such is only natural simply because of the dedication of those preachers who want to help the people of the community.

Over a period of time, however, this center-of-reference function by the leader often moves the initiator of the group into a change in his character and relationship with the group that he has initiated. He begins to believe that the church continues to exist because he exists. If he has not focused the church on Christ, then the church does focus on him as the one who continues the existence of the church he started. The preacher subsequently leads himself to believe that if he went away, the church would go away. In believing such about himself, he assumes that the members are connected to Christ through him. Since he initiated the church, he started to believe that the members should depend on him for almost everything that happens in the group.

We do not necessarily conclude that the preacher who has initiated a group seeks to be dominant over a group. It is simply human nature that in one's zeal to serve, the new converts have gravitated toward his enthusiasm, personality and leadership. We have found that the vast majority of the preachers of independent churches on whom the members depend for so much, are almost exhausted because of the pleas for help from the people. They are simply in a situation that often damages their families, and sometimes emotionally exhausts them. It is not a situation in which they would like to be.

This may or may not have been the case with Diotrephes in the early stages of his work with the disciples over whom he exercised control at the time John wrote. He may have innocently started out in his ministry with all good intentions. But things went wrong. All we know about him is that by the time John wrote 3 John, he was spiritually in trouble because he loved to be first. That which he was doing was considered evil by the Holy Spirit. His narcissism had subsequently led him into evil behavior.

It may have been that Diotrephes had a narcissistic personality before the development of the scenario that John explained. At least his name indicates that he was probably from an aristocratic family, for his name includes the Greek word for God. In the society in which he lived, such names were given only to children in aristocratic families. The scenario may have been that when he became a disciple all was well. But as his influence grew among the disciples, the disciples moved him into the position that he held among the house fellowships at the time John wrote.

John does not tell us how Diotrephes became what he practiced at the time he was denominating those disciples over whom he exercised lordship. Such was inconsequential in reference to what he was doing in disturbing the organic function of the one universal body of Christ. The problem was in his drawing away disciples into an autonomous function as an independent group, and by doing such, shutting down the mission outreach of those over whom he lorded.

When preachers stay for a long time with one particular group of disciples, the Diotrephes syndrome almost always happens. It is only natural for people to call themselves after those personalities who stand before them on a weekly basis. And when one who is an evangelist going among the unbelievers stays with a specific group of believers for a long period of time, he ceases to be an evangelist because of the tremendous load of shepherding a large group of people. The members of the group become so dependent on the preacher that they often cease doing anything without his approval. The preacher thus becomes the center of reference for the fellowship of the group, as he has become the center of reference for the assemblies of the disciples.

The autocratic leader makes all the decisions for his group, and in making the decisions, he has separated his group from others in the area who are also making all the decisions for their groups. Everyone declares their autonomy from one another because everyone seeks to make their own decisions over their own work. In the case of Diotrephes, he simply declared the autonomy of his group from all other groups. In this case, he had declared his independence from the group with whom Demetrius was associated, for John, before he came, advised Gaius to associate with Demetrius. Of Demetrius, John stated, "Demetrius has a good report from all, and of the truth itself. And we also bear testimony ..." (3 Jn 12).

B. Shun competition.

When a particular individual as Diotrephes seeks to establish or lead an autonomous church, he often declares the independence of his "church" from every other church in the region. Even if independence is not verbally declared, it is determined by not receiving anyone into the fellowship of one's exclusive group that would preach against the independent behavior of the local preacher.

However, John warned that any group of disciples must not feel obligated to receive just any teacher without first knowing whether the teacher is preaching the truth of the gospel. We are to test the spirits with the word of God (1 Jn 4:1). The case of Diotrephes is not a case of determining whether a traveling evangelist is coming by to teach something that is false. 3 John is about a dominant leader who excludes those who are teaching the truth. John writes to deal with autocratic leadership, not doctrinal error.

John uses the plural pronoun "us" in his statement of judgment in order to indicate that neither he nor any of those who were traveling from group to group teaching the word of God were received by Diotrephes. We have witnessed this very thing which naturally happens among some fellowships. The leaders of some churches have moved into this scenario of independence that hinders the movement of teachers among the disciples in order that they build up the body through the teaching of the word of God. Those churches that have sought to work under a leadership that lords over them, are the churches that would be under consideration by John in 3 John. They are blocking the organic function of the body to build itself up through the ministry of those who teach the word of God.

Christians must certainly be independent from the world in their teaching in order to survive in the midst of a worldly environment. However, there is a difference between being independent from the world in reference to morals and teaching, and being independent from one another in an effort to survive the onslaught of error in the world. If a group of disciples does not declare its independence from the world, and specifically the world of false teaching, then that group will lose its identity as a church of our Lord (See Hs 4:6). If a church of disciples declares its independence from the ministry of other teachers who seek to build up the body through the teaching of the word of God, then they open themselves up to being led astray by a Diotrephetic teacher who does not know the word of God. At least their knowledge of the word of God will be limited only to what the leader knows about his Bible.

When church groups practice independence from one another, they are actually falling into the hands of the world. By separating themselves from the fellowship of other disciples, they often lead themselves to shun those who seek their fellowship. We have witnessed this in house fellowships that are led by a strong leader.

The group is encouraged to separate itself from other groups in the area much like the group that was controlled by Diotrephes. Diotrephes' behavior manifested leadership that was not conducive to the unity of all the groups in the area, and thus in their isolation they presented to the world a divided church. The isolationist leadership behavior of the small group of disciples moved the group to shun any outsiders from coming by with teaching for their group. The group or groups led by Diotrephes became dysfunctional in reference to fellowship because they refused teachers and shepherds from coming by in order to build up the body with the word of God.

Diotrephes was the classic example of a leader who leads disciples into division by his own function of lord-ing over an isolated group of the flock of God. He declared the autonomy of his group by his sectarian behavior to draw away disciples after himself. He entrenched his influence over the members of the group to the point that he personally determined who would teach in his group. At the time John wrote to Gaius, Diotrephes would not even receive the apostle John, the apostle of love.

We must keep in mind that John deals directly with Diotrephes, not with those over whom he was dominant. There were arrogant leaders in Achaia who drew away house fellowships from one another throughout Achaia. But Paul did not personally name these leaders as John personally named Diotrephes. The reason Paul did not name the individuals in Achaia was because the members were the ones who were behaving divisively. Under the influence of some leaders who even denied the apostleship of Paul, they were allowing themselves to be sectarian (See 2 Co 11:12-15).

In the case of Diotrephes as an individual, he was behaving divisively. Among the members in the area where Diotrephes had his influence, Gaius and Demetrius represented the normal organic function of a fellowshiping brotherhood. They were the ones who were being threatened with excommunication if they did not adhere to the demands of Diotrephes to shun any other leaders who might want to come by with teaching.

C. Slandorous competition.

In order to solidify the independence of the autonomous group, the Diotrephetic leader must go beyond his personal rejection of anyone coming to his group. He must progress to the point of convincing everyone in the group that the apostle John of love was possibly a false teacher. Or, he was too liberal in his teaching because he had too much mercy on others we would consider to be false teachers. We are not told what the specific slander was that Diotrephes made against the traveling John and the evangelists. We can only assume that what he said through slander was meant to discredit John and other traveling teachers. His purpose was to bar evangelists from coming to teach in his autonomous group.

When John used the phrase “unjustly accusing,” he was speaking of some false accusations that Diotrephes generated in order to convince those of his group that John and the other evangelists must not be permitted to come to “their” group.

Slander is used to recruit others to one’s favor. It is a typical scheme by which independent church leaders bar teachers from approaching “their” church. All that Diotrephes and his group were doing was considered evil by John. John exhorted Gaius, “Beloved, do not follow what is evil” (3 Jn 11). Therefore, when one knowingly speaks that which is false against another in order to lead a group of disciples to reject one from the whole of the body, he is doing evil. He has involved himself in slander, and thus, condemned himself by his own speech. Diotrephes was practicing this evil in order to bar John and the other evangelists from coming to his group.

We must not ignore the fact that those who would come by with teaching were not local leaders in reference to the function of the group, or groups, over which Diotrephes exercised dominance. Diotrephes would be the local leader, and thus, in his slander of John and the traveling evangelists was evil. Through slander he sought to bar the traveling teachers from speaking to those over whom he exercised control. However, we must keep in mind that Gaius and Demetrius were also local leaders. The evil work of Diotrephes was to bar both the traveling evangelists and the local leadership of other groups. Through his slander, he was establishing a truly autonomous church that was separated, both from the universal and the local body of believers.

The foundation upon which Diotrephes was establishing the autonomy of His group was authority, not teaching. If Diotrephes’ problem were in reference to teaching, then surely John would have dealt with such in 3 John. But since the problem was one of lordship leadership, then John was coming as Paul was going to Corinth after the writing of the 2 Corinthian letter. If some in Achaia did not repent of their arrogant leadership, Paul warned,

I have told you before, and foretell you as if I were present the second time. And being absent now, I write to those who have sinned before, and to all the rest, that if I come again, I will not spare ...” (2 Co 13:2).

Paul was headed to Achaia with the “rod” of discipline (1 Co 4:21). Some dominant and arrogant leaders were going to be delivered unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh (1 Co 5:5). Paul concluded his warning by stating:

Therefore, I write these things being absent, lest being present I should use sharpness according to the authority that the Lord has given me for edification and not to destruction (2 Co 13:10).

D. Do not receive others.

An independent group is formed under the direction of a leadership that seeks to be the dominant influence over the members of a particular group. Once the leadership restricts others from the group, then the members of the group usually follow the exclusive behavior of the leadership by being intimidated not to receive outside teachers. The preacher who withdraws himself into his own kingdom of disciples is fearful of receiving other leaders, lest they correct him for the evil sectarianism that he is practicing.

We must not confuse Diotrepetic leadership with those godly leaders who stand by the word of God in order to guard the flock from erroneous teaching and “wolves” who seek to come in among the flock. It is the responsibility of the shepherds of the flock to protect the flock from false teaching. The Holy Spirit wrote to Titus that “an elder must ... be able by sound teaching both to exhort and refute those who contradict” (Ti 1:9). Elders must be able with the word of God to test those who come to the flock seeking to be teachers (1 Jn 4:1). However, there is a difference between a shepherd who is trying to guard the flock from false teaching and a shepherd who, because of selfish ambition, seeks to draw away disciples after himself. In this context of discussion, we are talking about the latter.

Diotrephes was a lordship leader among the sheep. He had withdrawn himself and his group from the fellowship of the universal body of Christ by his sectarian actions. Some in Achaia sought to do the same in reference to Paul’s coming. They first slandered Paul before the church. They then accused him of being weak and fearful about actually coming to approach his accusers (2 Co 10:10; see 12:10). Nevertheless, Paul was coming, and he was coming with the rod of discipline if some in Achaia did not repent of their arrogance (1 Co 4:21).

As in the case of Paul going to Achaia, John first wrote a letter of correction lest he be put in a situation where he would have to deliver Diotrephes unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh (See 2 Co 1:23; 13:2; see

1 Tm 1:20). John was expecting to go to Gaius, and thus did not write a lengthy letter (3 Jn 13,14). Because of the evil behavior of Diotrophes, John planned to deal with him personally.

Those who withdraw themselves from the body of Christ, often take their independent group of disciples with them. In this way, autonomy first lays the foundation for the division of the universal body of Christ that is eventually divided into many independent groups. When preachers remain with a group of disciples year after year, it is only natural that the people are drawn to their favorite leadership. With this great influence over the people, the leader becomes the icon of his followers, and thus the leader is sometimes emboldened to declare the group of disciples to be “his church.”

Sincere leaders who understand and teach the universality of the organic function of the body of Christ are not tempted to follow Diotrophes. Such leaders focus the flock on Christ. If any leader of the church in all history could have easily started his own movement of churches that would be called after himself, it would have been the apostle Paul. But such did not happen. No such churches are known because Paul focused people on Christ, not on himself.

Unfortunately, some of the greatest reformers of past years were not so successful as Paul. Martin Luther cautioned his disciples about calling themselves “Lutherans.” Luther wrote,

I pray you leave my name alone and not to call yourselves Lutherans, but Christians. Who is Luther? My doctrine is not mine: I have not been crucified for anyone .... How does it then benefit me, a miserable bag of dust and ashes, to give my name to the children of God? Cease, my dear friends, to cling to these party names and distinctions; away with all of them; and let us call ourselves only Christians, after Him from whom our doctrine comes (Michelet, Life of Luther, p. 262).

Nevertheless, after Luther’s death, those who followed his teaching could not resist calling themselves Lutherans against Luther’s will. We were once in a gathering of preachers of different religious faiths. One preacher stood up and stated confidently concerning his particular denomination, “We are true Calvinists in our teaching,” indicating that they as a group had drawn themselves away after the teaching of John Calvin. When groups become sectarian by crystallizing themselves around a particular individual or particular code of traditions, or doctrine, then they can no longer state that they are “Christians only.” They are either Calvinistic Christians, Lutheran Christians, or whatever. But being Christian only is often too much for those who are fearful of losing their identity with a particular religious heritage.

E. Crystallize the group.

At this stage of development in the denominated group, the leadership has assumed control by focusing on a particular individual who controls the group. In order to crystallize a group in separating it from other groups that are likewise following the same course of sectarianism, the leaders through intimidation enforce allegiance. If one would be a member of the sect, then he is forbidden to consider himself a part of any other group. In other words, one’s membership with a particular group is the signing of an allegiance with one group to the exclusion of working with or fellowshiping any other group. This is accomplished through a spirit of allegiance that is instilled within those who have agreed to identify with a selected party.

Diotrophes denominated his group of disciples from all other groups by violating one of the most important functions of the universal body of Christ. He denominated those over whom he exercised control by drawing them away under his own control. A denomination is defined by its refusal to fellowship those who are not a member of the denominated group.

In the historical environment of the function of the body in the first century, evangelists were traveling from city to city preaching the gospel to the lost. In any particular region where there were many Christians, shepherd/teachers were building up the body by going from house to house (See At 2:46; 20:20). Diotrophes, however, barred the members of his group from receiving these evangelists and shepherds. Diotrophes was thus working against the organic function of the body to evangelize the world, as well as the body growing itself spiritually through the teaching ministry of the shepherds. What Diotrophes was doing was not simply forming his own denominated group of disciples, but hindering the preaching of the gospel to the world and the organic function of the body. Souls would be lost as a result of his sectarian behavior. It is for this reason that the Holy Spirit was calling his actions evil (3 Jn 11).

G. Instill cult fear.

The unity of the body of Christ is destroyed when the members of each denominated group of disciples are made to fear social expulsion from the fellowship of the group with which they have their membership. Diotrophes had made a sect out of the group over which he maintained control. He did so by intimidating any member of his group from participating in the fellowship activities of any other members of the body in his area.

What he did was to generate loyalty through fear of expulsion. He threatened to disfellowship those who would financially partner with others by supporting the traveling evangelists. He also instilled a sense of loyalty that always drew the members and their support to his group. He thus sought to stand between the members and Christ by socially intimidating the members into following his work and him as the leader of his independent church.

We do not miss the fact that John did not reproach the members of the church in Diotrephes' move to create and maintain an autonomous group of disciples. The reason John did not is that he understood that sheep are sheep. Sheep naturally follow those who would be their shepherd, regardless of the motives of the shepherd they follow. The shepherd can lead the sheep to the slaughter house, and still they will be content to allow their shepherd to pronounce any dictate that would lead them to doom.

We have seen this behavior numerous times. For example, when the church in any area would have an area wide meeting, we have seen sheep pack up before the meeting is over in order to make sure that they returned to the regular meeting of their own group. This may have been what was happening in Achaia with some who were calling themselves after different personalities (1 Co 1:12).

What is manifested in such behavior is that good-hearted sheep have a greater loyalty to their sect than they do to all other sheep in the area. They are more concerned about attending their own fellowship than enjoying an opportunity to fellowship the extended family of God. In their innocence, they have revealed that they are more loyal to their leader and their group than the extended church family in the area. We might call this "innocent denominationalism." Whatever we would call such behavior, however, it is still calling oneself after a particular group or individual.

In reference to the character of Diotrephes, and such leaders who demand loyalty, they have forgotten Jesus' mandate that there should never be authoritative leaders among the flock of God. Jesus reminded the disciples that there are "rulers over the Gentiles" who exercise authority (Mk 10:42). "And their great ones exercise authority over them" (Mk 10:42). However, Jesus clearly mandated, "But it will not be so among you" (Mk 10:43). What all leaders should do when there is an opportunity for all the sheep to manifest their soliarity is to encourage all the sheep to be present.

We have always found it quite interesting that a mandate of Jesus that was so clearly stated in reference to the leadership of the church is one of the first directives disobeyed by some who are leaders of the body of Christ. One must keep in mind that he may not think that he is lording over the flock. However, the behavior of the flock over which he is unknowingly lording will manifest his lordship.

The reason Jesus gave the mandate that there should be no authorities among His disciples is revealed in the behavior of Diotrephes. When leaders rise up and claim authority, they are dividing the church of our Lord as Diotrephes denominated his group from all other groups. Diotrephetic leadership always leads to the denominating of the body of Christ. The division promoted by Diotrephes was based on him, not on a specific doctrine. And in this case, Diotrephes personally claimed authority over the group, and thus, denominated the group from other groups.

We must never forget that when someone claims authority among the disciples, it is always inherently divisive. Once a leader behaves autocratically, then he demands that the members of the group over which he has claimed authority must sign allegiance to him and his group. Some leaders may be somewhat naive in their leadership style. They may assume that the controlling nature of their leadership does not denominate the flock over which they innocently assume leadership. But we must not misunderstand what John was writing concerning the results of Diotrephes' controlling behavior. His controlling behavior denominated the disciples over whom he exercised control from other disciples.

In very subtle ways, some leaders denominate their particular groups from all other groups. Their behavior is as Diotrephes who demanded allegiance to his group. If one would be a member of his group, then they could not be a part of any other group in the area. Diotrephes lorded over his group by intimidating the members into stating their exclusive membership (allegiance) with his group, which membership affirmed that they were a part of his group.

Leaders must understand that every time they require a member of the universal body of Christ to give allegiance solely to a particular group of the body, then they have in a very subtle way denominated that member from all other disciples of Christ who might be meeting with other groups in the same city or region. We must remember that our membership was registered in heaven when God added us to His people (At 2:47). It should never change from the time we signed up with Jesus when we were obedient to the gospel to the time we complete our journey of life. The New Testament nowhere teaches such a thing as a dual membership, one on earth and another in heaven.

When we give our allegiance to Christ, we have disconnected from any group or man who would stand between us and Christ. When we obeyed the gospel, we did not sign up with any exclusive group within the one universal church. Diotrefes demanded allegiance to himself because he loved to be first. But by demanding such allegiance, he was asking for the members of his group to exclude other members from his congregation who did not give total allegiance to those over whom he assumed leadership.

We must never forget that the organic unity of the universal body of Christ can never exist if we set up a network of authorities either locally or universally who demand allegiance to the internationally organized network of authorities. When we walk freely in Christ, our walk in freedom is not only from sin, but also from anyone who would bring us into the bondage of their favorite group of disciples, or their Catholic order of hierarchical authorities.

Chapter 16

PREACHING CHRIST

The Judean Jews wanted to present Paul before Roman authorities as a political prisoner who was antagonistic against Rome. If they could succeed in this effort, then they would have eliminated him from the religious scene of Judaism. Therefore, before the Roman governor of Caesarea, the lawyer for the Jews, Tertullus, accused Paul: “For we have found this man [Paul] a pestilent fellow and a creator of dissension among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes” (At 24:5).

Tertullus used all the right political words before the Roman authority that would picture Paul as one who was a threat to Rome. But the Roman officials knew enough about Judaism and the Jewish religious leaders to understand that this “pestilent fellow” was not against Rome, but against the Jews’ religion (At 25:19). Nevertheless, during this trial Paul appealed to be judged in Rome. As a Roman citizen, he had the right to be judged before a Roman court in Rome (At 25:11). So the historical context of Paul’s statements in the first chapter of Philippians was written while he was in the custody of a Roman guard in Rome.

Rome was the center of politics for the entire Roman Empire. We would correctly assume, therefore, that almost everyone in Rome had some political agenda, or whose behavior was cautiously guarded by the political environment. This would certainly be true in the case of the religious leaders. If one were out of favor with the powers of the Roman State, then this would certainly not put one in a comfortable social position.

The tension between Roman state religion and Christianity would eventually play itself out in the great persecution that would eventually arise throughout the Empire and would last for 150 years. So what was coming in the lives of Christians was Roman state religion that was against Christianity. The entire book of Revelation was written to prepare the early Christians for this onslaught against their faith.

At the time Paul was in Rome, the wicked and narcissistic Nero was emperor. Because of his personal claims to be deity, Nero launched a personal vendetta against Christians in Rome during the middle 60s. Nero’s personal vendetta against Christians would eventually turn into state persecution in the years to come. But at the time Paul was in Rome, he was there representing the Christian faith in the midst of Nero’s antagonism against Christianity. We would assume, therefore, that the political preachers in Rome were greatly influenced by the political environment in which they lived and preached.

The disciples in the Roman colony of Philippi knew the predicament that Paul was in as he sat in custody in a Roman prison. In answer to their concerns for his personal safety, Paul wanted the Philippian Christians to know one very important point in reference to his trials: “But I want you to know, brethren, that the things that happened to me have turned out for the furtherance of the gospel” (Ph 1:12). Whatever transpired as a result of his imprisonment, therefore, had resulted in the furtherance of the gospel. That which seemed to be a tragic turn in his life, was actually turning out for the preaching of the gospel. God had led Paul to a Roman prison in order to have Christianity put on trial before a secular court (At 23:11). All the evidence that Luke transcribed in the documents of Luke and Acts would be in Paul’s defense, which defense eventually led to Paul’s release in A.D. 62. (Download Book 28, Luke’s Historical Defense Of Christianity, BRL, africainter-national.org).

Paul's presence in a Roman prison was a mistake on the part of the Jews who sought to silence his preaching. While Paul was in prison, he wrote that the gospel "has become manifest throughout the whole [Roman] Praetorian guard, and to all the rest, that my chains are in Christ ..." (Ph 1:13). Because of his bold stand for Jesus, "many of the brethren in the Lord, being confident by my chains, are more courageous to speak the word without fear" (Ph 1:14).

Before Paul arrived in Rome, the brethren in Rome had previously been apprehensive about speaking the word publicly. But the fact that he was bold in his chains encouraged some of them to be the same. After he was falsely imprisoned in Philippi on a previous journey, Paul simply carried on as his bold character necessitated. So he wrote to the Thessalonian disciples:

But after we have suffered before and were shamefully treated in Philippi, as you know, we were bold in our God to speak to you [in Thessalonica] the gospel of God with much opposition (1 Th 2:2).

We would conclude that Paul's request for prayer from the Colossians was answered by God while he sat in a Roman prison. At the same time he wrote the Philippian letter, he also sent a letter to the disciples in Colosse. In that letter (Colossians) he asked them to "continue in prayer ... that I make it [the mystery of Christ] manifest as I ought to speak" (Cl 4:2,4). The fact that some even of Caesar's household had obeyed the gospel, and were now brothers and sisters in Christ, was a testimony of Paul's boldness to speak in prison in Rome. His bold speaking is evidence that God gave Him a portion of boldness in answer to the prayers of the brethren in Colosse (See Ph 4:22).

But the situation in Rome was not all a rosy picture of boldness and successes. There were some brethren in Rome who did not defend the jailhouse preacher. In fact, Paul continued in his letter to the Philippians, "Some indeed preach Christ even from envy and strife ..." (Ph 1:15).

Paul was known throughout the religious world for stirring up religious animosity among both Jews and Gentiles by his preaching that Jesus was the only way to God (See At 4:12; 21:20,21). If Paul were in prison on behalf of the defense of Christianity, then the political preachers in Rome would have been preaching the cross and Christ in a way that would bring more opposition to Paul. Since they sought to be politically correct, then they could not have preached in a manner that defended Paul. It seems that the preaching of the political preachers was thus ineffective in producing the results that came from Paul's preaching. It was ineffective because they did not want to preach Christ in a way that would stir up animosity against themselves, as did the preaching of Paul.

These ambitious, and possibly envious preachers, sought to compromise the faith because they did not want to suffer from the hostility of Nero. They did not want to involve themselves in being hated for Jesus as did Paul (Jn 15:18-27; Rm 1:16). Therefore, their political preaching produced division within the family of disciples in Rome, for some Roman Christians were encouraged to be bold, but the political preachers sought to preach a message of compromise.

Paul wrote that the "envy and strife" preachers preached "Christ out of selfish ambition, not with pure motives, supposing to add distress to my chains" (Ph 1:17). These ambitious preachers were political in that they sought to promote themselves at the cost of stirring up antagonism against Paul. These were the ones who would seek to sit in the chief seats, wear robes and clothes that distinguished them from others in public, and then parade themselves before others that they were accepted religious leaders and approved by the government. They possibly paraded themselves in positions of political prominence that would separate themselves from the jailhouse preacher down at the local prison. We have found that whenever a preacher seeks to be politically correct and in favor with hostile governments, he compromises his message in order to remain in the company of government officials.

One certainly cannot set himself forth to be someone if he associates with jailhouse preachers. Such associations would not bring one in favor with the government powers of the day. One cannot be politically correct if he defends those who are accused of being "... a pestilent fellow and a creator of dissension among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes" (At 24:5). Who would want to be associated with a religious political prisoner in Rome who was accused of such things?

These political preachers were intentional. They were specifically speaking in a derogatory manner against Paul in order to disassociate themselves from Paul. Paul stated frankly that they supposed "to add distress to my chains" (Ph 1:17). Can you imagine that? Here are preachers who were so political in their behavior and preaching that they would seek to cause preachers as the apostle Paul to have more distress in their chains by how they represented Christ to the public.

One might think that he would never be guilty of such behavioral shenanigans. But such things did Diotrophes in reference to the apostle of love by speaking all sorts of slanderous accusations in order that John not be accepted by the brethren over whom Diotrephes had claimed authority (See 3 Jn 10). The next time some preacher would slanderously speak against another preacher, he should probably bite his own tongue, lest he fall into the evil of Diotrephes and into the company of the slanderous political preachers of Rome.

When one is filled with selfish ambition, and thus becomes envious of those he would like to replace, in his evil motives he will often seek to bring another down through slander in an effort to exalt himself.

So what would we expect as an answer to these political preachers by a true man of God who suffered from ungodly behavior? What would we reply to “title holding” presumptuous and self-proclaimed apostles and prophets who seek positions and fame among the disciples by slanderously speaking against other preachers? Paul simply replied, “What then?” (Ph 1:18). Or, if we would paraphrase his meaning in modern-day thinking, “Whatever, as long as Christ is preached.”

We might expect Paul to come forth in the power of the Spirit with some profound denunciation to lambast such self-righteous and slanderous personalities who spewed forth their political garbage from pulpits throughout Rome. We might even expect him to show up at the meetings that generated strife, meetings that he told both Timothy and Titus to refuse to attend (See 2 Tm 2:23; Ti 3:9-11). We might even expect our own feelings to be played out in Paul’s reaction to the ambitious promoters. But Paul did none of these things. He simply wrote, “What then? Only that in every way, whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached. And in this I rejoice, yes, and will rejoice” (Ph 1:18).

When there are those brethren who stand up out of envy and selfish ambition, and bring a railing accusation against other brethren, they condemn themselves through their evil motives and behavior. If they are preaching Christ, then at least they are accomplishing the mission of keeping the name of Jesus Christ before the world.

We will ignore the competitive motives of self promotionalists. We will praise God that the name of the Lord Jesus Christ is being proclaimed. What Paul was saying was that he was willing to suffer the reproach of others in order that the name of Christ be preached. He was willing to continue the unity of the body regardless of the motives of some who were driven by selfish ambition. It was simply not worth causing division among the disciples to become involved in debates with those who were motivated by envy and selfish ambition. There would be a lot less division among the disciples if the bigger men would simply ignore the self-promoters and refuse to attend those meetings that lead to more controversy. Unity is promoted by refusing to meet with contentious people whose motive it is to intimidate others into giving way to their opinions, demands, or lordship.

Chapter 17

AN IDENTITY CRISIS

Romans is a document of freedom. By the grace of God, Paul argues, we are set free from having to keep law perfectly in order to be justified before God. Unfortunately, when Paul concluded Romans with the statement of Romans 16:17, some had still missed the argument of the letter. Some today have also involved themselves in an ironic twist of the precious truth that we are saved by grace. Instead, some are still saying that we are saved by perfect obedience to law. This theology is specifically revealed by those who have established what they consider to be a legal liturgy of assembly by which one is supposedly justified if kept precisely every Sunday morning.

The twisting of Paul’s statement in Romans 16:17 is so misused that it is almost impossible for many to identify the divisive person about whom Paul speaks.

And because the passage is often reversed in its contextual meaning, some slanderously accuse their opponents of dividing the church over issues in which Christians actually have freedom. They use the passage in a manner that is opposite from Paul’s original defense of those who sought to function organically in the freedom of Christ. Thus those who twist the statements of Paul actually replace grace for law that they have bound as a legal doctrine of self-justification.

We must study carefully what Paul stated in the context of the entire book of Romans before coming to the following statement of Romans 16:17,18:

Now I urge you, brethren, mark those who cause divisions and offenses contrary to the teaching you have learned, and turn away from them. For they who are such serve not our Lord Christ but their own belly, and by appealing words and flattering speech deceive the hearts of the innocent.

In the context of Paul's series of arguments in the book of Romans against the legalistic brethren to whom he was directing this letter, we must understand "the teaching" that Paul taught the Roman disciples in his letter. And to understand this teaching, we must consider the entire argument of Paul's thesis in Romans. In order to bring us to the above concluding statement, Paul introduces us to a profound truth in reference to our justification: "Therefore, we conclude that a man is justified by faith apart from the works of law" (Rm 3:28). What he meant was that we are made right before God by our trust (faith) in God's grace, not by our trust in our meritorious obedience of law, or our efforts to atone for sins through good works.

Because Abraham was not under the Sinai law, he could not be justified by obedience to that law. Paul even argued that Abraham could not establish his own righteousness by keeping any codified law of work that he might establish for himself. "For if Abraham was justified by works, he has something about which to boast, but not before God" (Rm 4:2). Neither Abraham, nor ourselves, can devise any law of works by which we can atone for our sins, and thus boast before God concerning our righteousness. Both Abraham and ourselves have only one recourse: "Abraham believed God and it was credited to him for righteousness" (Rm 4:3).

If we would devise a system of law by which we might seek to justify ourselves before God, then we would be putting God in debt to save us. "Now to him who works [to justify himself]," Paul stated, "the reward is not credited according to grace, but according to debt" (Rm 4:4). Therefore, the one who would bind law-keeping as the foundation upon which our salvation depends is seeking to obligate God to save us on the basis of our law-keeping.

Since the legalistic Jewish Christians to whom Paul was writing the letter of Romans were seeking to bind certain precepts of the Sinai law on the Gentiles, Paul asked the brethren, "How then was it [Abraham's righteousness] credited? When he was in circumcision or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision" (Rm 4:10). Circumcision was commanded for Abraham as a sign of God's covenant with Him, but he was not circumcised in order that God establish a covenant with him (Rm 4:11). The covenant was first established, and then the circumcision came as a sign of the covenant (See Gn 17:9-11).

At the time Paul wrote, one could be circumcised if he so chose. But to bind such in order to be declared justified (saved) before God was contrary to salvation by God's grace. The Jewish Christians, therefore, were dividing the church by binding where God had not bound. They were the problem, not those who wanted to live free from the law of circumcision.

The problem with the theology of the legalistic Jews was that they sought to establish their own righteousness before God through their strict obedience of law. In this way, they were seeking to be self-justified before God. "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness and seeking to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God" (Rm 10:3).

If we use the law of Christ as a legal system by which we would seek to justify ourselves before Christ, then we too would have the same problem as the Jews who sought to use the Sinai law as a legal system of self-justification. We would be establishing our own righteousness by a law which we would presume to keep perfectly in order to put God in debt to save us. But such can never happen simply because all have sinned, and thus, no one can live perfectly before God (Rm 3:9,10,23).

Paul wrote that he wanted to be found in Christ, "not having my own righteousness that is from law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness that is from God by faith" (Ph 3:9). This did not mean that he was declaring his freedom from law, but that he was declaring his freedom from having to obey law perfectly in order to be justified before God. Once he had assured himself of being just before God through faith, then through trust (faith) in God he established law in his behavior (Rm 3:30,31).

No one can keep law to any degree by which he can boast before God that he deserves to be saved. Since the first sin entered into the world through Adam, salvation has always been by faith in the grace of God. This conclusion must be true since we all sin (Rm 3:9,10). Since we cannot keep any law perfectly in order to save ourselves, then it is superfluous for us to exalt ourselves as judges to demand perfect keeping of law by others. It is for this reason that some need to be cautioned about establishing a law of liturgy for assembly, and by doing such, consider themselves self-justified before God when they supposedly keep perfectly their self-imposed liturgy of law for assembly.

In the historical context of the writing of the letter of Romans, the Sinai law had been terminated (Rm 7:1-4). This termination meant the end of the rite of circumcision. However, there were Jewish brethren "who sneaked in to spy out our freedom that we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage" (Gl 2:4).

These were the “church dividers.” These brethren taught, “Except you are circumcised after the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved” (At 15:1). The one who would divide the church, therefore, is the one who would bind where God has not bound. He is the one who would impose that which God has not bound in order to be justified before God. This was the entire case of Paul in the book of Romans. If we would bind perfect keeping of any law as a means of salvation, then we have traded grace for law. And in the trade, we have made a bad deal. If one would impose upon the church any tradition as law, then he has become a church divider.

Our salvation is by grace, and not by perfect keeping of law, or the perfect keeping of a liturgy of assembly that cannot be defended by the word of God. “For by grace you are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God” (Ep 2:8). It is by grace, and not by some system of self-imposed law that we would consider ourselves justified before God. The church dividers in the context of Paul’s arguments throughout the book of Romans were those who were binding law in a manner by which they would claim to be righteous before God.

At the time Paul wrote both Romans and Galatians, circumcision was a tradition among the Jews. It was a law under the Sinai covenant, but that covenant and law had been nailed to the cross (Cl 2:14). To bind the tradition of circumcision on the Gentiles would be binding where God had not bound.

Paul concluded Romans by encouraging those who sought to walk in the freedom they had in Christ. They must be on the lookout for those church dividers who would bind where God had not bound. These are those Paul had in mind when he wrote, “... mark those who cause divisions [by binding where God has not bound] and offenses contrary to the teaching [of the grace] you have learned ....” (Rm 16:17). These are those who have denied the grace of God. When Paul instructed, “turn away from them,” he meant what he stated in Galatians 5:1: “Stand fast therefore in the freedom by which Christ has made us free, and do not be entangled again with a yoke of bondage.”

One must be cautious not to be recruited by others who would legally bring one into the bondage of self-imposed ceremonies of assembly by which they would seek to be justified before God. If one binds in our assemblies those things about which the New Testament is silent, then he is the church divider who walks contrary to the liberty that we have in Christ. Paul warned that legalistically oriented brethren “zealously recruit you, but not for good. Yes, they want to exclude you so that you might be zealous for them” (Gl 4:17). But if one is recruited to a gospel of legal obedience, then he is excluded from the grace of God.

If we recruit groups to perform our prescribed law of liturgy in assembly, we have not “established a church.” We have simply made those whom we have recruited to our “form of liturgy” to be twice condemned as the scribes and Pharisees who made those whom they recruited to their legalistic forms to be twofold sons of hell. Evangelists must be careful not to “travel sea and land” and do what Jesus said in the following statement:

Woe to you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you travel sea and land to make one proselyte. And when he is made, you make him twice as much the son of hell as yourselves (Mt 23:15).

Both Romans and Galatians were written concerning the same problem of some who were binding where God had not bound. If one seeks to be free in Christ, then he must not submit to those who would bind a system of law, and perfect obedience thereof, as a means of justification. We seek to obey the law of God, for in failing to walk in the light of His word, we cannot be saved. But to devise a system of traditional interpretations, or system of worship that one must keep in order to be justified before God, is to destroy the freedom we have in Christ. Before we would accuse one of being a “church divider,” we need to search the Scriptures to determine if he is actually violating Scripture, or simply doing something that is not according to our traditions, or how we personally feel. If we cry out “church divider,” we may be the church divider for making the cry.

An example that sometimes reveals how easy it is to become somewhat hypocritical in our judgment of others illustrates this point. We once as a group made a decision as to how many assemblies each member of our group must attend before one was considered “faithful.” The decision was made by the entire group, written in our minds, and thus, we considered ourselves as rightful judges to pronounce judgment on those who did not attend our group-appointed times of assembly.

At the same time we were judging one another concerning faithfulness in attendees. We judged our neighbors for being denominational because they as a group had determined certain liturgies of assembly that must be recognized and obeyed. As a group, they even went as far as to chose a name for their group. We judged them denominational for selecting a particular name for their group, which we considered divisive. We made all these judgments at the same time we were being church dividers by binding on ourselves our own tradition as to how many assemblies one must attend in order to be “faithful.” We need not go into our established liturgy of assembly by which we also judged ourselves the “true” church. We justified ourselves because our decision was made by the group, while at the same time hypocritically judged our religious neighbors denominational, for binding their traditions on themselves as a group. We could not see our own theological hypocrisy.

It has been our experience that those who are quick to accuse others of dividing the church are the ones who are often coveting their own traditions that have denominated themselves as a unique group from all other groups. Their uniqueness is determined by their own “group decisions,” and thus they, as we, have all denominated ourselves from one another, while at the same time claiming that we all claim that we are the “true” church. We have often become judgmental humbugs with fingers pointing everywhere but at ourselves.

The church divider is not the one who stands in the liberty by which he was made free in Christ. The church divider is the one who binds his opinions, traditions, or liturgies of assembly that he presumes are legal forms of service and worship, and thus, must be kept as legal codes to justify oneself before God.

We must remember that we “have been called to freedom ...” (Gl 5:13). Paul added a definition that explains the motives of the church divider: “For they who are such serve not our Lord Christ but their own belly, and by appealing words and flattering speech deceive the hearts of the innocent” (Rm 16:18). The motive of the church dividers is selfish ambition. They are not seeking to bring the innocent into unity in Christ, but into conformity to their own strictures. These are the Diotrophes brethren who love to be first, and thus through intimidation, they seek a following from those who are deceived into thinking that obedience to their opinions will present a facade of unity. This may possibly be those who seek to be considered important and prominent in the church. So by enforcing traditional behavior on the church, they are actually leading the church into the apostasy of traditionalism.

Chief-seat sitters have a hard time bringing people directly to Jesus and into unity with one another. Through appealing words and flattering speech they seek to woo and awe the innocent into submission to their own personality and pronouncements. These are they who divide the church of our Lord, for they seek to draw the sheep away after themselves by binding where God has not bound (At 20:30).

Chapter 18

THE ONENESS ATTITUDE

The relational function of each member of the body is first with God, and then with one another. Our relationship with one another is based on our relationship with God. The weaker our relationship is with God, the weaker it is with one another. One cannot say he has a relationship with God if he has little or no relationship with his brothers and sisters in Christ. Our coming together in assembly, therefore, is actually a renewal of our relationship with God because we seek to relate lovingly with one another.

The New Testament is not a manual on assembly techniques or a code of liturgy for assembly-oriented religiosity. It is a compilation of Spirit-inspired instructions to encourage us to relate with one another because of how God related to us through the cross. We are called to come into an obedient relationship with God by His call to us through the cross. We are driven to connect with one another, therefore, because God connected with us through Jesus. The fellowship of the saints is no more complicated than that. Christians want to be connected with one another as much as possible because they have an endearing connection with God.

Now when we visit any region or city where there is at least one person who has connected with God through the cross, then it is only natural that we as disciples of Jesus should seek to connect with that person in order to worship and praise the “Divine Connector” of all members of the body. We must never allow our connecting with any group of disciples to exclude us from fellowshiping with other disciples who are also our brethren. If we do so, then we are manifesting a sectarian manner.

When Paul went into any city, he searched for disciples in that city. The first place he searched was the synagogue. We must forget that by the time Paul went on his first and second mission journeys (A.D. 46–49 and A.D. 49–52), it was 15 to 25 years after the Pentecost of A.D. 30 when the church was established in Jerusalem. In other words, 15 to 25 Pentecosts had occurred every year by the time he arrived in the synagogues he visited on his first two journeys (See At 17:1).

During this time, there were Jews annually going to Jerusalem for Pentecosts throughout these years. While in Jerusalem, they had heard the preaching of the apostles who stayed in Jerusalem after the A.D. 30 Pentecost (See At 2:42). To a great extent, therefore, Paul's regular visits to the synagogues on his mission journeys were actually follow-up studies with Jews who had visited Jerusalem during at least one of the Pentecosts after A.D. 30. This is why Paul went from synagogue to synagogue, searching for those Jews who may have already heard the gospel, as the Ethiopian eunuch who was confused on his way back home after encountering Christians who taught daily in the temple of Jerusalem (At 5:42; 8:26-40).

When Paul came into Corinth, he looked for others in the city who were disciples. Acts 18:2 says that he “found a certain Jew named Aquila ... with his wife Priscilla ..” When he once came into Ephesus he again found “certain disciples” (At 19:1). Paul was in the “finding business” because he searched for those, who had in an idolatrous world in some way connected with God. He searched for those who had either obeyed the gospel, or those who had visited Judea during one of the Passover/Pentecost feasts that occurred during the ministry of either John the Baptist or Jesus. The disciples he found in Ephesus may have earlier made contact with John during his ministry.

Paul's “finding ministry” assumes that one of his responsibilities as a disciple was to connect people with one another in Christ. It is interesting that Aquila and Priscilla had been in Ephesus for at least one year, but they had not found the “certain disciples” that Paul found when he came back to the city after a year in Judea, Syria and Galatia (At 18:22,23). It may have been that Aquila and Priscilla, being Jews, regularly met with other Jews in the synagogue, waiting for an opportunity to find someone as Apollos who was a visiting teacher (See At 18:24-28). But it could also be that the “certain disciples” were Gentiles, and thus they did not meet with the Jews in the synagogue. Or they may have been Jews who believed the message of John the Baptist, and were subsequently kicked out of the synagogue by opposing Jews before the arrival in the city of Aquila and Priscilla. Whatever the case, we must keep in mind that the city of Ephesus at the time was over 250,000 in population. We certainly could not expect Aquila and Priscilla to find all the disciples in the city in the year or so before Paul arrived.

Because of the size of the city of Ephesus, we would naturally assume that a problem of connectivity would develop among all the members of the body in the region of Ephesus. One fact in reference to connectivity between disciples in such a large area would almost be natural. It would be difficult for disciples in a large geographical city area to remain connected. In fact, because local resident disciples can become lost in large metropolitan areas, it was almost impossible for them to stay in contact with one another.

Paul envisioned a separation of disciples within Ephesus that would come after his final visit to the city (See At 20:30). Because of the difficulty of disciples remaining in contact with one another within such large metropolitan areas, we can understand why a letter that was written to the disciples in such an area as Ephesus would include an exhortation that every member in some way strive to stay connected. This is the context of the letter of Ephesians. Paul wrote to the disciples within a large city who had no automobiles, no telephones, no emails, no facebook, no twitter, etc.

How would we ever expect the disciples in large cities as Ephesus to remain one organic body of Christ when everyone was meeting in homes throughout the city? Even disciples today who are privileged with a vast means of transportation and communication devices often find it difficult to remain in contact with one another within large metropolitan areas. We can only imagine how difficult it was for thousands of Christians to remain in contact with one another in cities as Jerusalem, Corinth or Ephesus. Since they were all meeting in homes throughout these cities, we can assume that they struggled to keep the unity of the faith in the bond of peace.

This brings us to the context of the exhortations of Ephesians 4:1-6. This is an exhortation of only two sentences, both sentences imparting to all of us two simple mandates upon which we can remain the one organic body of Christ, though we may of necessity be scattered throughout hundreds of thousands, if not millions of people in a large metropolitan city or area. It is a context that reminds us that we are working with one another, though we are not in physical contact with one another.

In the first sentence of Ephesus 4:1-6, Paul focused on the personal relationships that Christians are to have with one another in order to maintain unity. He gives the personality skills that enable people to be with one another in a common fellowship regardless of their regular presence in the same assembly.

Therefore I, the prisoner of the Lord, urge you that you walk worthy of the calling with which you have been called, with all humility and gentleness, with patience, forbearing one another in love, being eager to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace (Ep 4:1-3).

If we have been called through the gospel of peace, then our common obedience to the gospel is the foundation for our fellowship with one another. Our unity is the serendipity of our obedience to the gospel. Paul also wrote, “... that you would walk worthy of God, who has called you unto His kingdom and glory” (1 Th 2:12). Paul had preached the gospel to the Thessalonians (1 Th 2:8). They had obeyed the gospel in order to escape the impending judgment that was coming (2 Th 1:8,9). In his second letter, he was expressing urgency in his call for the Thessalonians to remain faithful to their calling. He reminded them, “... He called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Th 2:14).

The common obedience to the gospel of people throughout the world is the foundation upon which unity in Christ is initiated (See 1 Jn 1:3). If one would be found worthy in his obedience of the gospel, therefore, he should be seeking to maintain the unity of all those who have obeyed the gospel. Those who would cause dissension in the body, therefore, are those who are unworthy. They are not worthy because it is the nature of the body to be one, and thus manifest to the world that the Father and Son are one. Those who “walk worthy of the calling” of the gospel, therefore, are walking in a manner that is explained and noted in the following points:

A. Humility:

True relationships in Christ can happen only when we humbly submit to one another (See Mk 10:35-45; 1 Co 16:15,16; Ep 5:21). If we seek to bring the arrogant or dominant way of world leadership principles into the body of Christ, then there will never be any true unity. Corporate leadership is based on what the owner of the business decides is best for his company. If he is the owner of a successful company, then the owner can be quite dominant and forceful concerning what he would impose on this employees concerning the operation of the company. This is the way of world leadership.

If we designate authorities among us other than Christ, then we subject ourselves to being called after someone as Diotrefes who sets himself up as the owner of the “church company” (See 1 Co 1:12-14). Whenever there are designated “sheep owners” among the people of God, then the sheep are divided by their allegiance to “owners” of each group of sheep. The result is that each sheep must determine the respective “owner” to which he must submit.

If the disciples designate different groups of authority over different groups of sheep, then the sheep are divided as to which group of authorities they must submit. But if all the sheep walk in submission to the “all authority” of the Chief Shepherd (1 Pt 5:4), then all the sheep are globally united in their common submission to the Chief Shepherd to whom they have all submitted. Our common submission to the authority of Christ, therefore, brings all of us together into a common submission to one another (Ep 5:21).

Unity among all disciples can exist only when there is no competition as to who will warm the chief seats. In fact, among disciples, there are no chief seats (See Mt 23:1-12). We are often amused when visiting numerous assemblies wherein is positioned “chief seats” in front of the assembly. Everyone knows that these seats represent places to which authority is given, and from which authority is manifested by those who occupy them, either on a temporary basis or permanent position among the disciples. We must not forget that among the disciples of Jesus we are all sitting on the same seats. There are no “chief seats” designated for higher authorities among God’s people.

Unity is promoted when we do not approach one another with arrogance, or thinking that we know all the answers. We come to one another with humility in order to study God’s word on the foundation of our love for one another, not with the ambition of proving we are right. A humble person simply states that he does not have all the answers.

B. Gentleness:

Humility is manifested through gentleness. A harsh person is not humble in his relationships with others, and thus, he is not one who encourages unity. It is interesting to note how Paul addressed the Corinthians, among whom were some very arrogant people: “Now I, Paul, personally appeal to you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ ...” (2 Co 10:1).

Would a harsh person presume to be in the presence of a gentle Jesus for eternity? The fruit that is produced by those who have relinquished themselves to the guiding of the Spirit, is gentleness (Gl 5:22,23). When we seek to be unified, we will seek to be gentle toward those with whom we may disagree.

If one would be gentle toward his fellow brother in Christ, then harsh retaliation is never justified. “Bond-servants, be submissive to your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but also to the harsh” (1 Pt 2:18). When one responds to harshness with a gentle spirit, then we know that the wisdom of God is within that person (Js 3:17). Therefore, “the servant of the Lord must not quarrel, but be gentle to all ...” (2 Tm 2:24).

Paul explained how he and the other apostles behaved in their relationships with others: “... we were gentle among you, even as a nurse tenderly cares for her own children” (1 Th 2:7). They came to the people as Jesus came to us: “Behold, your King comes to you, gentle, and sitting upon a donkey...” (Mt 21:5). Gentleness allows unity to continue among brethren. In order to develop humble gentleness, it might be necessary to take some time to ride around town on a donkey.

C. Patience:

No impatient person can be gentle. Impatient people are not gentle toward others in reference to differences. Patience is based on a gentle spirit, and a gentle spirit is based on our humility toward one another. The Holy Spirit gave a blanket command to the Thessalonian Christians: “Be patient toward all men” (1 Th 5:14). This would certainly include our brethren with whom we have a common fellowship in Christ. As disciples in Christ wherever we are, we should be known for our patience with one another as was the reputation of the disciples in the city of Thyatira: “*I know your works and love and service and faith and your patience” (Rv 2:19).

D. Forbearing:

Paul exhorted Titus in his leadership among the brethren, “to be peaceable, forbearing, showing all meekness to all men” (Ti 3:2). Impatient people are usually not gentle toward those with whom they disagree. In fact, impatient people are often arrogant, revealing that they come short in humility. When we seek to maintain the unity of the faith, everyone must be forbearing with the differences we have with one another. Through patience we learn how to forbear one another’s growth in the grace and knowledge of Jesus (2 Pt 3:18).

E. Love:

As the fruit of the Spirit that is revealed in Galatians 5:22,23 is based on love, love is the binding cord that holds all our mental attributes together as we forbear one another in our process of growth. When we speak of the church of our Lord, we are speaking of people who love one another (Jn 13:34,35). The people of God cannot be held together as the church without love. They certainly cannot be held together by what everyone pronounces as the correct legal requirements of our assortment of opinions.

Unity is not based on the opinions of one person whose opinions may be cherished and obeyed. Doing such is to denominate the body. One’s opinion on a matter may be right. But when two people disagree on a matter of opinion, one person’s opinion is incorrect. We must be cautious that we do not base our fellowship, or determine the existence of our group, on the opinion of the person who is wrong. In a spirit of humility, therefore, we must be patient with one another while we forbear one another’s opinions. Love is what continues our fellowship with one another as we forbear our differences in opinions.

The foundation for unity must always be our mutual love for one another. It is for this reason that Peter exhorted, “Love the brotherhood” (1 Pt 2:17). In other words, every member must love the brotherhood of members “... until we all come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a complete man, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ” (Ep 4:13).

If we love the church, then we will seek to be with the church. We will seek to forbear our differences. We will seek to continue with one another, even in times of conflict (See Ph 4:2,3). We will seek to approach one another in humility with all gentleness. Thus with patience, we will forbear the differences we have with one another in the bond of peace. It is for this that we must earnestly struggle.

Paul’s exhortation to develop Christ-like personality characteristics establishes the foundation upon which all unity among Christians is based. Since Ephesians 4:1,2 reveals the characteristics of those who are in Christ, then it is only natural that those who possess these characteristics would be united in their fellowship with one another. If we are not united as one fellowship in Christ, then we must personally examine ourselves, for in one of the preceding areas of personality we may be lacking.

Chapter 19

FELLOW WORKERS

In the context of Ephesians 4:1-6, and with the following exhortation, Paul continued his encouragement that the Ephesians to be “... eager to keep the unity of the Spirit...” (Ep 4:3). Depending on one’s translation, “eager” is a word that would well convey the meaning of Paul’s injunction. We must strive for unity. It is not something that just happens. The organic body functions when all its members are working “with” one another in their common effort to think with the same mind and judgment in carrying out the mission of Jesus.

A. Fellow workers function under the authority of their King.

When discussing the unity of the body, we often use the word “with” in reference to our fellowship of working together. But we must be careful with the use of this preposition, lest we be inferring something that is contrary to the word of God, a meaning that is actually worldly and divisive.

When some people use the word “with,” they mean that we must be working “with” one another in a corporate sense of the business world. In other words, in order to work with one another, everyone must fall under some network of association that is governed by the authority of management. In order to work with one another in this corporate sense, it is assumed that everyone must be directed by the management within the organization, and that the “employees” are in the physical presence of one another. But we know that this is a corporate concept of networking in function because of what Jesus said in Mark 10:

You know that those who are recognized as rulers over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them. And their great ones exercise authority over them. But it will not be so among you (Mk 10:42,43).

It is not difficult to understand this statement. Jesus has all authority (Mt 28:18). And to our knowledge, He did not distribute any of His authority to any person on earth in order to control a corporate network of those who are to supposedly work “with” one another under the umbrella of a corporate authority. In fact, listen to what Paul said to the Corinthians: “Not that we rule over your faith, but are fellow workers for your joy” (2 Co 1:24). In other words, if Paul, or any other person exercised authority over the Corinthian disciples, then they would not be fellow workers. The network of fellow workers in the faith is correctly understood when no one has authority over another, but everyone is working with one another under the authority of Christ.

The fellowship of the saints is defined as individuals working with one another without anyone having authority over anyone. This is what Paul was explaining to the Corinthians. He wanted them to know that they were fellow workers with him, not because he exercised some apostolic authority over them, but that they voluntarily surrendered to Christ, as did he, and thus all of them were working together in the Lord.

Christians are responsible for one another. “Bear one another’s burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ” (Gl 6:2). “We then who are strong ought to bear the weaknesses of the weak and not to please ourselves” (Rm 15:1). Responsibility means that we can look out for one another without any one person being in authority over others. This is our relationship with one another as fellow workers, both in spiritual responsibilities, as well as in our working relationship to fulfill our personal ministries.

At one time during his ministry, Paul had strongly urged Apollos to go to Corinth. But notice carefully the text where we are informed of this situation. “But it was not his [Apollos’] desire to come at this time, but he will come when he has an opportune time” (1 Co 16:12). Now if Paul had some apostolic authority over Apollos in their relationship with one another in order that Apollos be working “with” Paul, then Apollos would not have been submissive in this request of Paul. He would have been rebellious.

The relationship between Paul and Apollos illustrates that both were fellow workers in the kingdom, and thus, responsible for one another. Paul had no apostolic authority over Apollos, and neither did Apollos have authority over others. There was no network of apostolic authority by which the two would be in a unity that was based on a chain of command. Without a chain of command, they worked with one another in kingdom business. And if Paul exercised no authority over Apollos as an apostle, then we should be very careful about setting ourselves over one another in order that we can say we are working “with” one another.

The fact that Jesus exercises all authority in the lives of every member of His body totally defeats the teaching that there is some “apostolic authority” on earth with a few individuals among whom a network of authority exists within the church. It is believed by some that there was apostolic authority in the early church that constituted a supposed apostolic succession of authority that has been passed down throughout history. There are those today who assume such in order to validate a hierarchal establishment of control over those of their church organization. But such a teaching and behavior was never believed or practiced by the early leaders of the church. And if it was not practiced by the early church, then there is no historical record of such in the New Testament.

B. Fellow workers function outside one another's presence.

Some suppose that working “with” one another means that we must always be in one another's presence in our work. In other words, to be fellow workers in the kingdom we must be united and physically “with” one another while we work in the same ministry. But if this definition of working with one another is true, then no disciple would go anywhere in order to completed is own gifted ministry.

It may have been that this was the original dysfunction of the body in its early beginnings in Jerusalem. The members wanted to stay in Jerusalem with one another in the comfort of their Jewish culture. But God had other plans, and thus, through persecution He flushed the members of the body out of Jerusalem and out of their presence with one another. Subsequently, “those who were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word” (At 8:4). There are times when we can be personally with one another in our labors for the Lord. However, we must be careful about hindering the work of God by holding up in one place, enjoying one another's presence while the world goes unevangelized.

It is not necessary to be in one another's presence in order to be working with one another. We know this by what Paul wrote in Philippians 4:3:

And I ask you also, loyal companion, help these women who labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and the rest of my fellow workers whose names are in the book of life.

Paul was in prison in Rome when he wrote this statement. The “rest of my fellow workers” of the worldwide body of Christ were not there with him in prison. They were scattered everywhere. But they were still his fellow workers, and thus working with him in the furtherance of the gospel. In other words, the fellow workers did not have to be in one another's faces in order to be fellow workers with one another.

It is true that Paul had fellow workers with him in prison (Cl 4:10-12). However, these fellow workers did not become such when they visited with him in prison. They were fellow workers before they showed up with Paul at his prison door.

When we use the word “with,” therefore, we must be cautious about what we mean, lest we teach a form of disunity in the body of Christ. Before Paul and Barnabas left on their second mission journey, they had a disagreement about taking Mark (At 15:36-41). They could not come to an agreement concerning Mark, and thus, they parted from one another's presence. Barnabas took Mark and Paul took Silas. The two teams then went to different areas, but all went to the areas they had evangelized on the first mission journey (At 15:39,40).

Paul and Barnabas were still working “with” one another, though in different areas of the world. They had not divided the church because they went in different directions. Because they were working in different areas of the kingdom did not mean that they were church dividers. Only those who are concerned about control and authority would think such. Because they were not personally “with” one another, or had come together in the same assembly on a regular basis in order to be working “with” one another, did not mean that they had divided the church. They were together, however, as the one body in their common mission to evangelize the world.

Working together, therefore, does not mean that we have to be in one another's presence, or even agree with one another's methods of evangelism. Working together means that we are working to accomplish the common goal that Jesus commanded us (Mt 28:19,20; Mk 16:15,16).

The beautiful thing about working with one another as the body of Christ is that we are all on the same page, working our gifted ministries wherever we are in the world. The oneness of the body of Christ is in the fact that we are all fellow workers in the kingdom, regardless of where we are doing our ministry in the world in obedience to Jesus. It is this fact that keeps the body united and functional. Wherever one may be in the world, he or she must understand that he or she is working with a global body of believers who have individually given their lives to Christ. Each member of the worldwide body of Christ is an important functioning member in his or her own small part in the world. Every member of the body must remember that when he or she simply walks across the street to approach their neighbor concerning Jesus, there is a worldwide body of disciples right there in spirit.

Book 66

The Last High Priest

When struggling with our faith, there is no greater document among the libraries of humanity to consult, than the document of Hebrews. When there is no growth in Christ, spiritual stagnation sets in, and then comes doubt and spiritual death. This was certainly in the mind of Peter when he revealed two vivid metaphors of those who turn from the Son of God. They are as dogs who return to their own vomit and pigs that were washed to wallowing in the mire (2 Pt 2:20-22). In order to prevent such from happening in our lives, Peter exhorted in his second letter, “But grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pt 3:18). This is advice that we need to heed. It is spiritual advice that some early Jewish Christians failed to follow, for the Hebrew writer rebuked his readers for their lack of growth in the knowledge of the word of God. They should have by the time of writing been teachers of the word (Hb 5:12). Unfortunately, the result of non-growth on the part of the Hebrew writer’s audience was that they were on their way back to Jewish religiosity, and thus back to the Levitical priesthood and back to the insufficient animal sacrifices of the Sinai law. In their case, their lack of growth in the knowledge of the Son of God and His present function as our high priest, as well as His sufficient atoning sacrifice, was leading them to forsake the superior for the inferior.

Before we are too quick to judge some of the Jewish Christians who were on their way back to the Sinai law, we must take another look at ourselves. We too must heed the exhortation of Peter and grow in our knowledge of the Son of God. Most people have a Matthew-through-John knowledge of Jesus in His ministry in the flesh. Some still only know of baby Jesus in a manger. But unless we grow from knowing Jesus in the flesh to knowing Him according to His present function in and from heaven, we will be as those to whom the Hebrew writer wrote. The transitional point in our knowledge of the ministry of Jesus is summed up in what Paul wrote: “Even though we have known Christ according to the flesh, yet now we know Him thus no more” (2 Co 5:16). This was the mandate of the Holy Spirit as He inspired one to write a special letter to Jewish Christians. Hebrews is the letter that we must study in order to know the Son of God who is now ministering from heaven as our high priest, far beyond His earthly ministry in the flesh.

We can only assume who the writer of Hebrews might be. In view of the antagonism against Paul throughout the Roman Empire by the persecuting Jews (At 13:43), we would assume that he would keep his name off this document if he were the author. He would want his readers to fully understand the awesomeness of the Son of God in His present ministry, that it is not according to His ministry in the flesh (2 Co 5:16). Therefore, in the words of the Holy Spirit through the writer, this is a brilliant piece of apologetical literature that instructs us concerning Jesus’ present ministry.

One of the first points in the letter is that the author did not want his message to be obscured by his own personality as the writer. So there is no specific identity of the writer, and thus, no distraction from the One about whom the writer identifies in the heavens. We can only make deductions as by whom the letter was written, and thus, we would only assume that it was written by the apostle Paul.

The purpose of the Hebrew letter is stated in the final chapter: “And I urge you, brethren, bear this word of exhortation ...” (Hb 13:22). This was a letter of encouragement, reassurance, and finally a warning to those who were on the verge of forsaking all that they had received in Christ.

This was a letter of exhortation. This is Jewish language in reference to the exhortation that comes from the word of God. When Paul and Barnabas were in the synagogue of Pisidia, the Jews of the Jewish synagogue asked of them, “Men and brethren, if you have any word of exhortation for the people, say it” (At 13:15). The recipients of the Hebrew letter were indeed in need of a word of exhortation, for some were contemplating a return to the Sinai law and Levitical priesthood. It seems that a general lethargy in study of the word of God had set in among them, and thus, they were finding that their life in Christ had now grown stale after many years as Christians (Hb 12:3). And thus, the Hebrew writer lays the foundation for exhortation in Christ: “Therefore, we must give more earnest attention to the things that we have heard so that we do not drift away” (Hb 12:1). And drifting they were.

Their spiritual drift was the result of their lack of growth in the knowledge of Jesus. By the time the writer inscribed these words of exhortation, they should have spiritually grown to be teachers (Hb 5:12). In order to spur them on to growth, therefore, the letter was written to rehearse those teachings that should have continually inspired their spiritual growth. In order to generate enthusiasm in their hearts, the writer reminds them that God is living and active through the present heavenly ministry of the Son of God (Hb 4:12). In order to spur them on to learning, the writer reminds them of a day approaching wherein God will openly manifest again that He is actively working in the affairs of men (Hb 12:25).

Jesus did not ascend to idleness. He is active as our high priest. However, the day was coming in the lives of the immediate readers when He would be active in terminating national Israel. It is our conclusion that the writer inscribed the words of this letter in view of the physical finality of national Israel in the destruction of the Jewish state in A.D. 70. The Hebrew writer thus wrote with urgency in order to dissuade any thought of returning to a dead covenant and law under which most Jews of the day hopelessly sought to please God.

Because they had not spiritually grown, it seems that the recipients had fallen victim to a faith in which they concluded that Jesus was no longer active. When our Christianity digresses to a faith in One whom we feel is passive on our behalf, then our Christianity becomes cold formalism wherein we legally perform the ceremonies of our faith in order to “maintain the faith.” Such Christianity is dead and brings no satisfaction to the spiritual soul of its adherents. In the cold formalism of their knowledge of elementary principles, the Hebrew writer considers it fundamental that we know Jesus according to how He now functions. We must move on from a knowledge of the fleshly ministry of Jesus to His heavenly ministry as He functions as priest and king in heaven.

Because of their lack of growth, the adherents had grown spiritually lethargic in their maintenance of the elementary principles of the faith. It was beyond the time that they should grow beyond the elementary knowledge of Jesus Christ (Hb 6:1,2). For this reason, the writer placed little emphasis on the earthly ministry of Jesus in the flesh. Except for his note on the resurrection of Jesus in 13:20, emphasis is on the eternal sacrifice, and the subsequent active result of that sacrifice through the eternal priesthood of the sacrificial Lamb of God. The resurrection and ascension are assumed in reference to Jesus’ ministry from the time of the cross to His ministry at the right hand of God. So in the following statement of the writer in 7:25, the active ministry of Jesus on our behalf is highlighted: “... seeing He always lives to make intercession for them.”

Christ does not now live for Himself. He lives for us. He entered into the holy place “*to appear in the presence of God for us” (Hb 9:14). He is our priest and king who is enthroned in heavenly places. He is not there with outstretched arms in pleading to the Father. He is there with the authority of the Godhead, exercising all authority for God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. The old Catholic picture we often have in our minds is that Jesus is pacing about before the Father in priestly liturgy to plead the case of the righteous on earth. But this mental picture is simply not the picture that the Hebrew writer paints.

The writer seeks to picture Jesus as among His “family.” Quoting from the psalmist, he reminded his readers of the declaration of Jesus: “I will declare Your name to My brothers, in the midst of the assembly I will sing praise to You” (Hb 2:12; see Ps 22:22). Depending on whether we as interpreters would consider the word “firstborn” in 12:23 as a reference to Jesus, and not to those of His family, does not deny the truth that Jesus is the firstborn from the dead, never to die again (Cl 1:18; Rv 1:5). In the 12:23 text, the word “ones” is italics, and thus added by the translators. Reference could be to the firstborn “One,” or the firstborn “ones.” In either case, Jesus is the firstborn of all those who will be resurrected never to die again. Paul reminded his readers of this fact: “But now Christ has been raised from the dead and has become the firstfruits of those who are asleep” (1 Co 15:20).

As the firstborn of His family, the ekklesia (the church), Jesus is not ashamed to call us His brethren (See Mk 3:34). Isaiah led the faithful remnant of God in order to preserve those who would survive the apostasy of Israel (See Is 8:18). In the same way, Jesus led the faithful out of the apostate Israel of His day in order that they enjoy the final rest that God would give to those who obey the gospel. Jesus is thus pictured by the writer as leading the faithful under the protection of His blood and His ministry as our high priesthood.

The writer's quotation of Isaiah in reference to this ministry of Jesus was appropriate: "Behold, I and the children whom God has given Me" (Hb 2:13). God had given a faithful remnant to Isaiah. In the same way He had given a faithful remnant into the protective hands of the Son of God. It was to these that the Hebrew writer was writing a word of exhortation in order that they remain faithful to their calling through the gospel.

Chapter 1

THE DIVINE HIGH PRIEST

A letter concerning the heavenly ministry of the Son of God could not have been introduced in a better manner than what is stated in verses 1-3. Indeed, "God, who at various times and in different ways spoke in time past to the fathers by the prophets" (Hb 1:1). The Gentile king and priest Melchizedek will later be introduced as one of these prophets. God did speak directly to the people through prophets as Melchizedek. In particular, God spoke directly to Moses "face to face" (Nm 12:8). So in the succession of prophets, Jesus' statement to the Jews in John 14:10 is significant: "The words that I speak to you I do not speak from Myself. But the Father who dwells in Me, He does the works."

Jesus' Jewish audience understood this statement, though they highly disagreed with His claim that the Father was speaking through Him. Many of the religious leaders rejected Him as one to whom God would speak directly, but the Hebrew writer wanted to first remind his Christian readers that they at one time believed this claim of Jesus. So the Hebrew writer validated Jesus' claim with the statement that God "has in these last days spoken to us by His Son, whom He has appointed heir of all things, by whom also He made the universe" (Hb 1:2).

The writer has now taken our minds into the realm of Deity, a realm of existence for which there is no comparison with anything or being on this earth. In order to captivate the minds of his readers, he exalts the One we do not know according to the flesh. It is this One who is now the sustainer of all creation. "And He [Jesus] is the brightness of His [the Father's] glory and the exact image of His nature, upholding all things by the word of His power" (Hb 1:3). It does not get better than this when we search for knowledge that functions as the foundation for our faith.

In making the statement of verse 3, the Hebrew writer essentially humbled those who would purport angels as elegant in comparison to the Son of God. They were misguided. The reason is simple. Jesus became "so much better than the angels" (Hb 1:4). Those who are obsessed with angels often minimized the significance and being of the Son of God. It may be that our obsession with angels reveals either our lack of understanding of who the Son of God now is, or our efforts to avoid judgment by Him in the end (At 17:30,31). At least some feel comfortable with angels because angels will judge no one.

We must now move into the present tense of the verbs in the context. Since we do not now know Jesus according to the flesh in which He tabernacled among us during His earthly ministry (2 Co 5:16), the Hebrew writer wants us to refrain from using the verb "was" in reference to the Son of God in the flesh. We thus move into the present tense of the verb in order to understand who Jesus is now and His present ministry. When speaking of the present existence and function of Jesus, past tense is used only when the Greek verb is perfect tense, that is, something that happened in the past that has continued results in the present, and into the future. But when we seek to know Jesus as He now is, and not according to the flesh, it is Jesus in the present tense. He continues in the "flesh" of His resurrected body. We will be changed into this "flesh" when He comes again (1 Jn 3:2). But He is not now in the flesh of His earthly ministry.

So in comparison to angels—and there really is no comparison—"He has by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they [angels]" (Hb 1:4). Authority is inherent in the name of the Son of God. Since "He sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high" (Hb 1:3), He has assumed a position that was never given to any angel. Though He lowered Himself through incarnation into the flesh of man, and also lowered Himself to angels in His earthly tabernacle. But now in His heavenly ministry He has authority and existence far above the angels (Hb 2:7,8).

We can now understand the mandate of belief that Paul expressed in 2 Corinthians 5:16. The writer seeks to move us beyond our knowledge of Jesus according to the flesh in which He tabernacled and ministered among us on earth. It was in that existence that He was lower than angels. But the Hebrew writer takes us on a mental journey to discover the Jesus that is now at the right hand of God, where the Father “has put all things in subjection under His feet” (Hb 2:8).

During His earthly ministry, the apostles had a personal relationship with the “lowered” Jesus. But at the time of the writing of the Hebrew document, their relationship with Jesus was a covenant relationship with One who sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high. They, as we, now have a Lord (Master)/servant relationship with the Son of God. In this existence, He has “become so much better than the angels” (Hb 1:4). And it is in reference to this existence that we would not dare claim a “personal relationship” with Him as we would have with one who is of this fleshly world. The Hebrew writer wants us to understand that he is discussing Jesus as God. In no possible way must we seek to humanize this God in order to satisfy our urge to have our own personal God. Our relationship with the Son of God is different from our personal relationships that we have with our friends in the flesh.

God never adopted any angel. But to the Son He said, “You are My Son, this day I have begotten You” (Hb 1:5; see Ps 2:7). Jesus was brought forth into this world through incarnation. “In the beginning was the Word [Jesus] ... and the Word was God” (Jn 1:1). The Word, Jesus, preexisted. He could not have given up being on an equality with God if He were not first in the form of God (Ph 2:5-8). John continued to explain, “And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us” (Jn 1:14). There could have been no incarnation if there were no preexistence in the spirit form of God (Jn 4:24). The phrase “was made flesh” demands preexistence. The phrase “dwelt among us” demands initial dwelling with God in His preexistent state as spirit (Jn 4:24).

The presumption that the word “begotten” infers that God adopted Jesus because He was a righteous Jew is simply preposterous. Such a conclusion denies the total foundation upon which Christianity is established. If one does not accept the preexistence of the Son of God, as well as His transition into the flesh of man, and now His eternal existence in heaven, then he has no right to take the name Christian. If one does not take ownership of the eternal existence of the Son of God, then he has created a religion after his own misunderstanding of the eternality and divinity of the Son of God. Jesus as the eternal Son of God is not an option to Christian faith. The fact that He is the Son of God is the Christian faith.

The Father brought “the firstborn into the world” through incarnation (Hb 1:6). No angel ever took this journey. And because no angel has ever been incarnate as the Son of God, “the angels of God worship Him” (Hb 1:6). Only Deity is worthy of worship, and since angels are not Deity, then they have no right to be worshiped. The fact that the Son of God is worthy of worship, means that He is far beyond the being and existence of angels.

“He makes His angels spirits” (Hb 1:7). It seems that the writer is now laying the foundation for the resurrected Son to exist in His present state, the nature of which state we know little. All the apostle John could say about Jesus’ present bodily existence was the following: “But we know that when He appears, we will be like Him, for we will see Him as He is” (1 Jn 3:2). So by faith we will accept the abstract of the expression of Paul that Jesus is now, “not according to the flesh” (2 Co 5:16). Angels, on the other hand, must remain as spirits, having never experienced incarnation.

This Jesus whom we are now struggling to know beyond the flesh of His earthly ministry, is enthroned “forever and ever” (Hb 1:8). Righteousness is the scepter of His kingdom reign that extends far beyond submissive servants. He “has gone into heaven and is at the right hand of God, angels and authorities and powers having been made subject to Him” (1 Pt 3:22). The realm of His reign extends to all things (Hb 2:8). Those who cannot comprehend the extent of the kingdom reign of the Son, have a limited view of the Son as He now is “far above all principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named” (Ep 1:21). The Hebrew writer explains, “You have made him a little lower than the angels. You have crowned him with glory and honor, and have appointed him over the works of Your hands” (Hb 2:7).

Too many theologians have limited the reign of the ascended Son to a church family here on earth. But His scepter of rule comes with all authority over all things, Satan and demons included (Mt 28:18; 1 Pt 3:22). Insurrectionists to His kingdom reign cannot exclude themselves from His authority and the realm of His reign. All the church of the submitted are under the scepter of His rule, but all the kingdom of His reign is not confined to the church of the obedient. To affirm that the kingdom reign of Jesus is limited only to the church of the submitted, is a failure to comprehend the totality and extent of who the Son of God now is at the right hand of God. If we would impose limitations on the scepter of Jesus’ present reign, then we are denying the very proposition that the Hebrew writer is trying to substantiate in this very first chapter. The reigning King Jesus now has and exercises all authority over all things (See Ph 2:9-11).

Though the angels were the companions of Jesus during His earthly ministry (Mt 4:6,11; 26:53), He is now above the angels (Hb 1:9). The writer takes us back to the beginning of time in order that we understand where Jesus is now. In the beginning, the Word “laid the foundation of the earth” (Hb 1:10).

For by Him all things were created that are in heaven and that are on earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones or dominions or principalities or powers. All things were created through Him and for Him (Cl 1:16).

Only God can create, and thus, Jesus is God with the Father and Spirit. Nothing was created without Him. “All things were made by Him, and without Him nothing was made that was made” (Jn 1:3). The writer’s argument declares the foolishness of the Jews’ exaltation of angels. Some were equating angels with Christ.

This Jesus Christ from whom they were about to walk away, was God! He was the Creator of all things. He now has authority over all things. He reigns supreme over the created world, “upholding all things by the word of His power” (Hb 1:3). If He were to sneeze, the universe would be blown back into nonexistence, that from which it came, for “we understand that the universe was formed by the word of God [Jesus], so that the things that are seen were not made of things that are visible” (Hb 11:3).

The religions of Islam, Buddhism, Confucianism, Hinduism, and an assortment of other misguided religions of the world, all pale in the face of who Jesus now is, and the authority of His reign over all things. To compare this Jesus to Muhammad, the Dalai Lama, or some other exalted religious leader, is blasphemy in view of the teaching of the Hebrew writer. It has taken the Hebrew writer only one chapter of Holy Script to banish all comparisons of Jesus to any Baal religion of human invention.

And when the end of Jesus’ creation finally fulfills its purpose for existence, He will “fold them up” (Hb 1:12). The earth’s purpose to populate heaven will have been finalized in the end. In fact, when the purpose for which all things has been climaxed, then the end will come. When God deems that the world is worthless to produce any more residents for heaven, then the present existence of this world as it is will be finalized.

But in reference to His existence, we need not fear. “Your years will not fail” (Hb 1:12). If all that now exists, including all humanity, would be terminated from existence, God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit would continue on without end. This Jesus about whom we speak, therefore, does not exist because the world and all humanity exists. All exists because He first existed. They are sustained by the word of His power.

He will continue throughout our existence on this earth until the last enemy is destroyed (1 Co 15:25,26). In order to reassure his readers of the supremacy and reign of the Son, the Father said to the Son, “Sit at My right hand until I make Your enemies Your footstool” (Hb 1:13). In this life we need to be assured that Jesus is now at the right hand of God, functioning as our high priest on our behalf. It is this Jesus we want to know. We will thus move beyond the earthly ministry and person of Jesus that is recorded by Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, and move into the heavenly realm of Jesus that is recorded by the Hebrew writer.

The recorders of the life and ministry of Jesus while He was in His earthly flesh, were limited in their definition of who Jesus now is as God over all things. Matthew, Mark, Luke and John were limited by the humanly defined words to which they were confined in defining the person of the God who indwelt the earthly tabernacle of the flesh. In guiding their hands through inspiration, the Holy Spirit knew that it would be difficult for any humanly defined words to explain the God who is beyond our dictionary. And so, through a description of the function of Jesus as He now exists apart from earthly flesh, the Hebrew writer allows his hand to be moved by the Spirit to describe the One who is now functioning with all authority over all things. However, even with this explanation, we must acknowledge our frustration in trying to comprehend fully this God who is beyond the words we read when we open our Bibles.

We can only assume that part of the problem with the Hebrew audience of this document was that by reason of the amount of time they had been Christians, they should have grown in their knowledge of who Jesus became and was after His resurrection and ascension. They too may have been frustrated. So they remained stuck in “the elementary principles of Christ” (Hb 6:1). Nevertheless, after the length of time they had been Christians, they should have been teachers (Hb 5:12). They should have moved beyond a legal understanding of who Jesus now is. Unfortunately, they found comfort in remaining within the legal confinement of an elementary knowledge of Jesus.

The problem may have been that they became “dull of hearing,” that is, they stopped learning because of their frustrations. The result of their lack of knowledge of Jesus Christ as He now is, laid the foundation for their apostasy from the One who upholds all things by the word of His power. If there were ever a lesson that we could glean from the life of the Hebrew Christians, it is how to guarantee apostasy from the truth. If one does not continue to grow past the “elementary principles” of truth, he is sure to fall when the heat of persecution tests his faith. The Hebrew Christians failed to learn who the Son of God is now, and thus, in their lack of knowledge they were on their way back to that from which they had come. They were going back to a legal religiosity in which they experienced a sense of security. They were sacrificing the abstract for the fleshly religiosity of Judaism.

In order to stop them at the brink of destruction, the Hebrew writer takes his readers on a discovery of what they had failed to appreciate throughout the time they had been disciples of Jesus. He takes them past legal religiosity into the realm of a God who functions on our behalf in the heavenly realm. By understanding the continued ministry of this God, they could better deal with the God who is beyond their comprehension. Through faith they would learn to depend on those things that were beyond their full comprehension. By the time the writer concludes his arguments at the end of chapter 10, the readers will better understand the faith of Noah and Abraham, and the other heroes of faith who remained faithful without all the knowledge we have of Jesus Christ this side of the cross.

Chapter 2

THE INCARNATIONAL HIGH PRIEST

In view of what the writer revealed in chapter 1 concerning who the Son of God now is, what better way could he have introduced the details of Jesus' present ministry than with the following statement: "Therefore, we must give more earnest attention to the things that we have heard so that we do not drift away" (Hb 2:1).

His exhortation is powerful. Under the Sinai law that was given to Moses for Israel through angels, "every transgression and disobedience received a just punishment" (Hb 2:2). The obvious conclusion would be, "How will we escape if we neglect such a great salvation" that has been delivered to us through the Son of God (Hb 2:3). If one falls from what the Son of God now offers as our mediating high priest, then he has no escape from condemnation. And thus, it will be as the writer will conclude later, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Hb 10:31).

In chapter 2 the writer launches into the opportunities that we have under the reign of King Jesus. And unless one might run to angels for help to escape the certain punishment awaiting the backsliders, the writer reminds his readers, "For He did not subject the world to come to angels ..." (Hb 2:5). We must not forget this. Since the world to come was not subjected to angels, then angels have no right to judge. The writer explained this in clear terms: "For in subjecting all things to Him, He left nothing that is not put under Him" (Hb 2:8). "We see Jesus" (Hb 2:9) on the cross making atonement for our sins. But we now see Him in heaven "crowned with glory and honor" (Hb 2:9). It is He who is our glorious king and savior.

The setting of the text of Hebrews 2:14-18 is verse 10. It was "fitting for Him," the Father, "to make the author [captain] of their salvation perfect through sufferings" (Hb 2:10). The saga of Jesus' high priesthood on our behalf began in the beginning when He breathed life into that which He created out of the dust of the earth. He too had to become that which He created. He too had to suffer for those into whom He was incarnate.

Since "by Him all things were created," (Cl 1:16), then by Him only could an atoning sacrifice be made for all. Since "all things were created through Him and for Him," (Cl 1:16), then He had to come in the flesh for those who were created in the flesh for Him. John added, "All things were made by Him, and without Him nothing was made that was made" (Jn 1:3). The Maker had to come for those who were made by and for Him.

Thus, "it was fitting ... to make the author of their salvation perfect through suffering" (Hb 2:10). The perfection of what Jesus created was completed with His perfect blood sacrifice and high priesthood ministry on behalf of the created. Jesus was perfected as our high priest because He identified with the body that He created in which we dwell. Through incarnation He lowered Himself to be as we are in the flesh (See Ph 2:5-11). "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us" (Jn 1:14). In order that we not complain about being confined to the flesh wherein we cannot live perfectly according to His directions, He became as we are in order to complete us through His offering for our eternal dwelling.

Since we as His created children "are partakers of flesh and blood" (Hb 2:14), it was only reasonable for Him to likewise partake of the same, "so that through death He might destroy him who had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Hb 2:14). Paul explained how Jesus accomplished His incarnation and salvational mission in reference to delivering us from death. He explained that the grace of the Father ...

... has now been revealed by the appearing of our Savior Christ Jesus, who has abolished death and has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel (2 Tm 1:10).

In all our fleshly humanity in which we are confined, therefore, Jesus became the same on our behalf. He too had to be able to die physically in order that He might identify with the fear we have in reference to the destiny of all flesh.<sup>9:27</sup> He sacrificed His eternity in the form of God in order to bring us into eternity with Him.

As an argument to solidify the mission of Jesus to bring life and immortality to light (2 Tm 1:10), the writer touches on a point that is sensitive to all men. He reminds his readers that man was not created to live in fear of death. He was not created to live an estranged life from his Creator. On the contrary, man was created to walk with God (See Gn 5:24). Before Adam and Eve took their fateful bite of the forbidden fruit, both were in fellowship with their Creator. But sin changed the fellowship to separation, and thus, death and the fear thereof was introduced into the world (See 1 Co 15:22). Jesus came, therefore, to restore our walk with God in the fellowship of His care (See 1 Co 15:20,21). We now walk with Him in the light because we walk in the continual cleansing of that which separates us from God (See Is 59:2; 1 Jn 1:7). We are not the “walking dead,” but those who walk in the life that comes through Christ Jesus our Lord.

Our walk in the light assumes that the source of our life, Jesus, continues to exist. We would assume from John’s use of the present verb tense that there was eternity in reference to His becoming as we are, and as we will be in our changed habitation for eternity. John wrote many years after Jesus’ ascension, “And we know that the Son of God is come ...” (1 Jn 5:20). And again, “Every spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh is from God” (1 Jn 4:2). At the time of his writing over twenty years after the resurrection of Jesus, John affirmed the continued existence of Jesus in His present heavenly state as that which we will be when we are bodily raised and changed to be as He presently is: “... it has not yet been revealed what we will be. But we know that when He appears, we will be like Him, for we will see Him as He is” (1 Jn 3:2).

The Holy Spirit, through Paul, taught that after our death we will not be spooks floating in the air, but will be blessed with a new habitation from God at the time of our resurrection (2 Co 5:1-5). We simply connect the dots and come up with the truth that we will be as we will see Jesus when He appears again. John did not understand the resurrected body of Jesus, though he and the other disciples sat at a table and ate with him (Lk 24:36-43). They touched and hugged the resurrected body of Jesus (1 Jn 1:2). We too will be raised with a changed body that will be as the present body of Jesus. But we keep in mind that Jesus is not at this time existing in the fleshly body in which He dwelt during His earthly ministry. His flesh changed for His ministry that He now carries out on behalf of His spiritual body, the church.

When we speak of the sacrifice that Jesus made by coming in the flesh of those for whom He would be a high priest, we must conclude that His sacrifice through incarnation was more than existing in the flesh of man for a brief thirty-three years. His sacrifice was both in being and in atonement. It was a sacrifice forever, as truly His high priesthood will be for all those who have given themselves to His eternal priesthood ministry.

“He does not give aid to angels” (Hb 2:16). There were those to whom the Hebrew writer addressed this document who gave too much honor to angels. But the writer’s arguments of Hebrews 1 crushed the presumption that we should reverence angels above Jesus. Another argument is presented here in reference to the ministry of Jesus on behalf of those for whom He came.

Through His incarnation, Jesus did not have the angels in mind. The redemption through His blood was not for those who were not flesh and blood. The text is saying that Jesus did not incarnate Himself into the form of angels in order to aid them in reference to salvation. His sacrificial atonement on the cross was for those into whose flesh He was found in a manger in Bethlehem. Therefore, He came to “give aid to the seed of Abraham” (Hb 2:16).

It was this seed that needed the aid of His sacrifice, not angels. We would assume, therefore, that angels do not live in the same realm of sin in which we live. They needed no atoning sacrifice for sin. If they sinned, there was no forgiveness. If Revelation 12 sheds any light on the sin of angels, it is banishment from the presence of God to await destruction if there is rebellion against God (Mt 25:41). There was and is no atoning sacrifice appropriated to angels who sin against the One who created them (Cl 1:16). Their existence in the continual presence of Deity restricts them from the opportunity of redemption if they rebel. We have the opportunity for redemption because we exist in the realm of faith. Jesus brought the angels into existence who eventually rebelled, though they resided in the reality of His presence. Because of their rebellion, He will eventually take them out of existence (Mt 25:41). Jesus offered none of His blood for the redemption of fallen angels.

Unless we might misunderstand who this “seed of Abraham” (Hb 2:16) is by faith, Paul explained, “For you are all sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ” (Gl 3:26,27). “And if you are Christ’s, then you are Abraham’s seed and heirs according to the promise” (Gl 3:29). Jesus aids those who have been baptized into Him. He aids those who have become the seed of Abraham through their obedient faith (Rm 6:3).

The Hebrew writer argued that the incarnation of Jesus was necessary. “In all things He had to be made like His brethren” (Hb 2:17). The wording, “had to be made,” means necessity. In other words, the Son of God could not have accomplished His atoning mission for the salvation of His creation without incarnation into that which He created. There could have been no redemption if He only stood on the sidelines looking on our suffering. He had to be more than an onlooking coach. In creation, “the universe was formed by the word of God, so that the things that are seen were not made of things that are visible” (Hb 11:3). And since the Son of God was invisible to man as spirit (Jn 4:24), then He had to follow His creation into the realm of the flesh He created for man. He had to join in the existence of our suffering. John’s commentary is fitting: “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God .... And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us” (Jn 1:1,14).

Chapter 3

THE SALVATIONAL HIGH PRIEST

In order for the Son of God to function as a high priest on behalf of those whom He confined to the flesh (Cl 1:16), He had to become as they were in the flesh. In order “that He might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God” (Hb 2:17), He had to become flesh as those for whom He would mercifully function as a high priest. Without the incarnation, therefore, there could have been no “atoning sacrifice” on the cross “for the sins of the people” (Hb 2:17). In this revelation, we discover that the purpose of the incarnation was not only to present a body for sacrifice for the sins of the people, but also to offer to those who are redeemed One who could empathize with their predicament of humanity. In order to be the captain of our team in the game of life, He had to lead among us. In all ways He had to participate in our struggles. And certainly, the cost of His participation in the game of our struggles was severe.

Many years ago the story was told of an American, Mrs. Samuel Untermeyer, who was traveling in Europe. She found a very beautiful Gobelin tapestry she wanted to buy. But the price was a staggering $25,000, which in today’s pricing would have been well over $100,000. So not to displease her lawyer husband, Samuel, Mrs. Untermeyer sent a telegram to Mr. Untermeyer with the question, “Should I buy the tapestry for $25,000?” He immediately responded, “No, price is too high!”

When Mrs. Untermeyer returned home with the tapestry, Mr. Untermeyer was quite upset with her, and complained, “Why did you disregard my instructions in my telegram?” Mrs. Untermeyer calmly replied, “I didn’t. I followed your instructions in the telegram.” And pulling the telegram out of her purse, she read it: “No price is too high!” The telegraph clerk had left out the comma after the word “No,” which small error cost Mr. Untermeyer $25,000. We wonder what would have been the result if Jesus had in the Garden of Gethsemane cried out to the Father, “No, price is too high!” If we were there with Jesus, all of us would have cried out to Jesus, “Leave out the comma!”

There has been debate throughout the centuries concerning the extent to which Jesus went in His incarnation. Our conclusion to all arguments of this debate is that the incarnation was complete. Jesus was truly human in all that we are in order that we might become all that He is now in His resurrected body (1 Jn 3:2).

While in His incarnate existence, Jesus was “being tempted” (Hb 2:18). There would have been no real and complete incarnation if Jesus could not have been tempted to sin as those for whom He came to offer Himself as an atoning sacrifice. There could have been no merciful Savior if there were no possible way for Him to submit to temptation as those for whom He offered Himself. Therefore, because He could be tempted to sin as we, “He is able to aid those who are tempted” (Hb 2:18). We do not have a high priest who is without empathy for our predicament in the flesh.

He “was in all things tempted as we are, yet without sin” (Hb 4:15). This statement of fact would not be true if Jesus could not have fallen to temptation. This was a fact that Satan knew, and thus he tried his best to submit Jesus to the greatest temptations this world has to offer (See Mt 4:1-11).

In being tempted as we are, then “He is able to aid those who are tempted” (Hb 2:18). With this statement verse, we understand that the reference to God in 1 Corinthians 10:13 is a reference to Jesus who now functions as our high priest to aid us in times of need.

No temptation has overtaken you but such as is common to man. But God [Jesus Christ as our high priest] is faithful, who will not allow you to be tempted beyond what you are able to endure, but will with the temptation also make a way of escape so that you may be able to endure.

Chapter 4

THE FAITHFUL HIGH PRIEST

The writer continues the revelation of the text of Hebrews 2 into chapter 3 with the conjunctive word “therefore.” He thus draws a conclusion to the preceding arguments of chapters 1 & 2 in order to bring our minds to the point of comprehending the superiority of the high priesthood of Jesus over the priesthood of the Sinai law. He wants his readers to “consider the Apostle and High Priest of our confession” (Hb 3:1).

Jesus was an “apostle,” that is, “one who is sent.” John the Baptist said of Jesus, “For He whom God has sent speaks the words of God ...” (Jn 3:34). “Sent” is from the Greek word apostolos. Jesus was sent into the world by the Father in order to function as a high priest on behalf of those He would call through the gospel. He cried out to the multitudes, “My food is to do the will of Him who sent Me and to finish His work” (Jn 4:34; see 5:23). If Jesus had simply assumed the title “apostle” without ever leaving heaven, then there would have been no offering for our sins. It would have been as many today who claim to be apostles, but never leave their homes to go into all the world. If Jesus would have functioned as many self-proclaimed apostles today and stayed home, then He would have never left heaven. We would remain in our sins.

But glory be to God that Jesus was the One sent as an apostle from the Father to minister on behalf of our sins (Ph 2:5-11). In doing so, He did not present to the Father the sacrifice of animals as the priests of the Sinai law. He brought Himself to the throne of the Father, dripping with His own blood from the cross, and eternally given for those whom He had created. On the basis of His apostleship and sacrifice, Jesus could offer to everyone what He stated while in the flesh: “Truly, truly, I say to you, he who hears My word and believes in Him who sent me, has everlasting life” (Jn 5:24).

Moses was a faithful intercessor to God on behalf of Israel. But the One under consideration in the context of Hebrews 3 “was counted worthy of more glory than Moses” (Hb 3:3). He was counted worthy of more glory because He was the One who built His own house.

“Upon this rock,” Jesus said to His disciples during His earthly ministry, “I will build My church ...” (Mt 16:18), which church is the house of God (1 Tm 3:15). Moses never made any such claims, for it was God who built the house of Israel. Moses only assumed a divine call from God to intercede on behalf of the house that God built (Ex 14:31; Nm 12:7).

Now he who builds “the house has more honor than the house” (Hb 3:3). In this one statement we guard ourselves from glorifying the church over the Builder. We give honor to members who deserve honor (1 Pt 2:17), but we must never forget that Jesus as the Builder has more honor. Therefore, “whatever you do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through Him” (Cl 3:17). We must, as Abraham, be “strong in faith, giving glory to God” (Rm 4:20). We must remember that “no other foundation can man lay than what is laid, which is Jesus Christ” (1 Co 3:11). Jesus built His church on the foundation that He was the Christ and Son of God (Mt 16:18). Moses could not make this claim.

Moses was faithful in the house that God built and gave to him to bring into the land of promise. However, Jesus built the house to which He remains faithful. He will eventually present this house before the Father (Jd 24). Jesus was sent as an apostle from the Father in order to function as a sacrifice that would allow us to be presented before the Father without our sins. If He had not assumed His going forth from the Father as one sent, then we would never have had the opportunity to be presented before the Father through the cleansing blood of the cross (See Ph 2:5-11).

Jesus has more honor than the house simply because He was the creator and the foundation upon which the church was built, and by which the church will be presented before the Father. Paul reminded the Colossian disciples that Jesus has the right to be considered the foundation upon which His house is built. “For by Him [Jesus Christ] all things were created .... All things were created through Him and for Him” (Cl 1:16).

The Hebrew writer wanted to remind his readers in this context of a statement by which he introduced the letter: “*And He [Jesus Christ] is the brightness of His glory and the exact image of His nature, upholding all things by the word of His power” (Hb 1:13). Not only was Jesus the creator of all things, and His house, He is the sustainer of all that He created and built. The writer thus affirms, “He who built all things is God” (Hb 3:4). This is the writer’s affirmation that Jesus as God was the creator. We would not, therefore, consider Jesus Christ in His present existence either equal to or less than angels. And for sure, we would not compare Him equal with Moses in any sense. Though those to whom the writer was addressing this defense were considering a move back to the Levitical priesthood, in this context he seeks to shock them into the reality that Jesus is not only our Apostle and High Priest, but our God. He is as Thomas confessed when he finally witnessed the resurrected Christ: “My Lord and My God” (Jn 20:28).

The Hebrew writer compares the ministry of both Moses and Jesus. “Moses indeed was faithful in all His house as a servant” (Hb 3:2). However, his servanthood over God’s house was in view of something yet to come. The example of his servanthood was “a testi- mony of those things that were to be spoken later” (Hb 3:5). And those things that were to be spoken later were the Sonship and Messiahship of Jesus.

Though Moses was a faithful servant over his house, “Christ was faithful as a Son over His own house” (Hb 3:6). Moses could not claim ownership of the house over which God made him a servant. But the house over which Jesus was and is faithful is His own. It is His own house because He is the Son, the heir of all things. Therefore, He is our faithful high priest who will not give up on that which He built.

We are now the house of the Son because we believe that Jesus is the Christ and Son of God (Mt 16:18). We are the house of God “which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth” (1 Tm 3:15). However, there is a subjunctive in reference to remaining a part of this house. The subjunctive is “if we hold fast to the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm to the end” (Hb 3:6). There is no such thing as “once saved, always saved.” If one does not hold fast to Jesus, then he relinquishes his right to be a part of the house. He relinquishes His right to receive Jesus as his Apostle from the Father and his High Priest on behalf of his sins.

Chapter 5

THE APPROACHABLE HIGH PRIEST

The Hebrew writer introduces the subject of chapter 4 with questions of warning in response to his statement of 3:7,8: “Today if you will hear His voice do not harden your hearts ....” Moses led Israel out of Egyptian captivity, but some rebelled against the authority of God that was invested in Moses (Hb 3:16). Moses led the Israelites through the wilderness, but those who rebelled by not initially entering into the promised land died in the wilderness (Hb 3:17). Those who were disobedient because of their unbelief were not permitted to enter into the rest of the promised land (Hb 3:18,19). “Therefore,” the writer calls for the attention of his readers by saying, “*Let us fear if, while a promise remains of entering into His rest, any of you may seem to come short of it” (Hb 4:1).

We must fear because “the preached word did not profit them, because it was not united with faith in those who heard” (Hb 4:2). Our faith, therefore, must be unwavering in the priesthood of Jesus. If it is not, then we have forfeited our right to the rest which God has promised in our future.

The argument is that we “hold fast to our confession” because our high priest, Jesus, “has passed through the heavens” (Hb 4:14). He not only passed through the heavens, but also, “*we have such a high priest who is seated at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens” (Hb 8:1).

The high priests of the Sinai law began with Aaron. They continued throughout the history of Israel. But all those priests died and were buried. Their high priesthood was terminated with their death. The high priesthood of the Son of God, however, continues because He continues to live. He not only continues to live, He resides at the right hand of God (Hb 8:1). It is because He has made this journey through the heavens on our behalf that we should remain faithful to Him as our high priest.

We must not forget to understand the phrase “through the heavens” from the perspective of the Jewish audience to whom this document was directed. To the Jews, the first heaven was the sky (earth's atmosphere) in which birds dwell and clouds form. The second heaven was space in which the heavenly bodies dwell. But it was the third heaven unto which Paul was caught up, "whether in the body or out of the body" (2 Co 12:3). It was into this heaven that he "heard inexpressible words" (2 Co 12:4). To the Jews, this third heaven was the dwelling realm of God.

When Jesus ascended, He went into the third and final heaven wherein, according to Jewish thinking, God dwells. He passed through the first two heavens in order to be seated at the right hand of God in heavenly places, the third heaven.

Nevertheless, though Jesus may have passed out of the sight of us on earth, He has not passed out of mind or existence. Though He ascended so high according to Jewish thinking, He through the weakness of His incarnate flesh, will not forget our weaknesses. It is not, therefore, as that which is theorized by Catholic Church theologians. They teach that Jesus supposedly ascended into the unapproachable realm where He cannot be contacted directly by man. We will not, therefore, develop a theology of Mariolatry wherein it is affirmed by Catholics that Jesus is so far away that we must access Him only through Mary. It is not as Abbe A. Boulenger, a Catholic theologian who wrote the following in La Doctrine Catholique: "... it is by Mary that one goes to Jesus and that one is more certain to obtain the graces of which one has need" (pp. 30,31). It is affirmed by Catholic theologians that the virgin Mary "intercedes for us in heaven and that her intercession is so universal that every grace passes through her hands" (Paul H. Hallett, What Is A Catholic, p. 77). If Mary performs such on behalf of the saints, then we would wonder what function is left for Jesus to perform at the right hand of God as our high priest? If Mary does the function of a high priest, then what is the present work of Jesus? The doctrine of Mariolatry is a direct attack against the present high priesthood function of Jesus on behalf of the saints.

Faithfulness to the ministry of the Levitical high priests continued only while they were alive. Adherents could not be faithful to the individual high priests because each high priest died. The people could be faithful only to the law, not to the person. But because Jesus continues to live in the "third heaven," our faithfulness to Him and of His priesthood is far beyond that of any earthly priest. We are faithful to Him, and in return, He is faithful to function as our high priest on our behalf. Therefore, we must caution ourselves lest our faithfulness to Him diminish through a hardened heart of unbelief. The Hebrew writer pled, "Today, if you will hear His voice, do not harden your hearts" (Hb 4:7).

There may be an unspoken reason why some Jewish Christians were moving toward the existing priests of the Jews. These priests were living people with whom they could personally relate. Jesus, on the other hand, was in heaven and could not be related to in a face to face manner. Some of the Jews simply wanted to hug a priestly man. The problem in the Jewish converts' transition from Judaism to Christianity would have been a change back to the ministry of the Son of God as our high priest in heaven. In their apostasy to Judaism, they were willing to change the high priesthood of Jesus for a personal relationship with priests on earth.

Chapter 6

THE SYMPATHETIC HIGH PRIEST

The Levitical high priest who functioned among the Israelites on earth could sympathize with the sufferings of those for whom they ministered. They too had the same weaknesses and sufferings as those for whom they ministered the sacrifices. Jesus was incarnate into the flesh of those for whom He ministered His sacrifice in order that He might identify with their weakness. Therefore, "we do not have a high priest who cannot sympathize with our weaknesses, but was in all things tempted as we are, yet without sin" (Hb 4:15).

Jesus was on earth in order that we might relate with Him as a person. He was on earth in order that we understand the One against whom we sin. In order for Him to identify with our sufferings, He had to "pass through the heavens" in order to come to where we are. He came in order that He might be able to empathize with our sufferings. He had to pass through the heavens, and then return to the right hand of God where He now functions with empathy as our high priest.

In reference to the priesthood of Jesus, we now have another reason for His incarnation. He had to be made in all ways as those for whom He would function as a high priest. Therefore, He, "being in the form of God, did not consider it robbery to be equal with God. But He made Himself of no reputation, taking the form of a bond-servant and being made in the likeness of men” (Ph 2:6,7). He was God in the flesh on this earth for our behalf concerning things that needed to be rectified for us in heaven (Jn 1:1,2,14). He was incarnate into our flesh in order that He might be tempted in all ways as those whom He would redeem for eternal glory. His incarnation in the flesh validated Him to function rightfully as a high priest from a heavenly position.

The extent of the incarnation of the Son of God is defined by the extent to which He could be tempted. If He did not have the possibility to sin, then He would not have incarnated into the flesh with which we are presently in bondage.

The incarnate Son of God was not a phantom. The Gnostics were wrong. Since what the Hebrew writer here states is true, then the Son of God was “found in the appearance as a man” (Ph 2:8). He was fashioned according to the flesh of this world, and thus, humbled to our weaknesses. Since He was the creator of flesh (Cl 1:16), then He knew before the incarnation the risks that came with the deed of both creation and incarnation. Creation thus necessitated incarnation. This is a concept that none of us can in our most profound knowledge fully understand. But one thing is certain. Those who would categorize Jesus as simply a good Jewish teacher who lived and walked the Palestine pathways have totally missed the One who is here described by the Hebrew writer.

The consequence of His incarnation is our right to “come boldly to the throne of grace” (Hb 4:16). It is not that we live perfectly in the flesh in order to arrogantly approach the throne on the basis of self-justification. We can come boldly before the throne of grace because He too had the possibility to sin through weakness. He “was in all things tempted as we are, yet without sin” (Hb 4:15). “As-we-are” qualified Him to be merciful to us who are confined to the weaknesses of the flesh. We thus boldly come to the throne of grace because of our inability to live without sin. Because of His conquest over sin, though humbled to our state, we can have boldness to approach Him. We know that He understands, and thus can render to us mercy. We thus “obtain mercy” because He understands our weaknesses. We “find grace” because He knows the difficulty of living in the flesh (Hb 4:16).

Because He was made in all ways as He made us, He can extend mercy. He understands all the struggle it takes to resist Satan, which thing He did (See Mt 4:1-11). Nevertheless, because Jesus understands that “there is none righteous, no, not one,” He must extend grace (Rm 3:10). We are thus “justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus” (Rm 3:24). If any would turn away from this high priest, there is no forgiveness. There can be no mercy. So the writer pleaded with his audience, “Therefore, let us labor to enter into that rest lest anyone fall after the same example of disobedience” (Hb 4:11).

Chapter 7

THE DIRECTY-CALLED HIGH PRIEST

“Every high priest taken from among” (Hb 5:11) the Israelites was appointed for Israel through the original instructions of the Sinai law, which instructions designated that priests come from the lineage of Levi. The function of the Levitical priests was to “offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins” (Hb 5:1). Since those priests who were taken from among men were tempted in all ways as those for whom they offered gifts and sacrifices, they too were “subject to weakness” (Hb 5:2), and thus, they also had to offer for themselves. These priests could identify with those who sinned in ignorance and weakness.

Because the priests of Israel were subject to the weaknesses of the flesh, they were “obligated” to offer sacrifices both for themselves and for the people (Hb 5:3). It was their obligation to offer sacrifices for the people because they were originally called into priesthood by the Sinai law since they were of the tribe of Levi. As the sons of Levi, therefore, they could not deny their destiny and duty as priests.

Levitical priests who offered sacrifices for Israel were indirectly called into a priesthood ministry. They were priests because the tribe of Levi was originally called out by God from among all the tribes of Israel in order to be the priests of Israel. They could not, therefore, boast in being called personally by God as Aaron was personally to be the first high priest of Israel. After the initial calling of the tribe of Levi and Aaron, all priests before the cross were called by God indirectly through the law that God established at Mount Sinai.

Aaron did not call himself to be the high priest for Israel. Neither did Christ “glorify Himself to be made a high priest” (Hb 5:5). Aaron was directly and personally called into priesthood by God. In like manner, Jesus was directly and personally called by God to be our high priest because He was the only begotten Son of God. Because He was the Son of God, He was called by the Father and sent into our world in order to be a high priest on behalf of those whom He had created. As a short story of redemption, Jesus created us to be free-moral individuals with the ability to love and to sin. And because we all sin, He had to come for us with the destiny of going to the cross on our behalf.

Jesus appeared in our history as Melchizedek. There is no genealogical record of the beginning or ending of the Gentile priest Melchizedek. Genealogy was important to the Jews, for through genealogy the descendants of the original settlers could prove their inheritance to the land that was given to their fathers. In reference to the right of priesthood, genealogy was the validation for one's priesthood as a descendant of Levi. Genealogy was also necessary in order to prove one's high priesthood as a descendant of Aaron. But there was no genealogy in reference to the priesthood of Melchizedek. He was a high priest who was called directly by the Father.

Though there was an earthly genealogy of the physical family of Jesus (Mt 1:1-17; Lk 3:21-38), there was no heavenly beginning or ending of His existence. Jesus Christ was a high priest "according to the order of Melchizedek" (Hb 5:6) because His priesthood will exist eternally as the statement infers, "You are My Son" (Hb 5:5). The Jews accepted the high priesthood of Melchizedek, though he had no genealogy to prove his right to such according to law. Jesus also could not prove His right to priesthood according to the records of Jewish genealogy.

Jesus was personally and directly called into priesthood by the Father because He was begotten by God. "You are My son. Today, I have begotten You" (Hb 5:5). It was not that Jesus became a son at the time He was begotten by God while He was in the world. His existence was eternal before He emptied Himself into the realm of corruption in the flesh. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. He was in the beginning with God" (Jn 1:1,2). And so He was eternally destined to priesthood on behalf of those He knew would sin. His incarnation qualified Him for that which was His destiny for us. As the creation of man was determined by God, so also the priesthood of Jesus. Since the function of priesthood is to offer gifts and sacrifices on behalf of those who sin, then Jesus' priesthood also had to be in the initial plan to create man. The sin of man was not an unforeseen event to God. Jesus knew the first free-moral being would sin. Because He foreknew the sin, He also foreknew His priesthood before the beginning of all things.

Chapter 8

THE RESURRECTED HIGH PRIEST

"In the days of His flesh" (Hb 5:7), assumes that Jesus was in a state of possible termination in His incarnate body. We often do not understand the extent of the incarnation because we recoil from the possibility that in reference to the Son of God, the word "death" would have the same meaning as when it is applied to our carnal flesh. But the Hebrew writer makes the statement that the Son of God "offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears to Him [the Father] who was able to save Him from death [termination]" (Hb 5:7). Was this salvation from the termination by death as it would apply to our mortal existence, or was it salvation from the experience of death?

His prayers and supplications were based on His godly fear. His godly fear existed because of the possibility of the finality of something in reference to His being while in the flesh. Could it have been that the word "death" in this context means more than the actual experience of the termination of the body? When Jesus cried out from the cross, "My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?" (Mt 27:46), could it have been that it was at that time that Jesus could have been forsaken to eternal separation from the Father in death because He bore the sins of the world? In answer to His prayers and supplications, we better understand what the Holy Spirit wrote in prophecy through David in reference to His death: David "spoke of the resurrection of the Christ, that His soul was not left in Hades, nor did His flesh see decay" (At 2:31; see 1 Pt 3:18-19). It could have been, therefore, that His soul would have stayed in Hades if it were not for the Father's deliverance of Him from the Hadean existence.

Though not recorded, there was certainly an end to the life of Melchizedek. So in Jesus' priesthood "according to the order of Melchizedek" (Hb 5:6) there may have been the possibility that He could have been terminated in death, confined to Hades, as all the priests of the Old Testament because He personally took on the sins of all men. But glory to God for our salvation. “He was heard because of His reverent submission” (Hb 5:7). Only through “strong crying and tears” (Hb 5:7) Jesus was heard by the Father, and thus, He escaped the corruption of the flesh in death and the confines of the Hadean world.

We would conclude, therefore, that we can come to the throne of grace because of the “strong crying and tears” by the One who went to the cross for us. His redemption continues because He remains alive. Since He was heard by the Father, the Father was “able to save Him from death” (Hb 5:7). It seems that only the Father was able to do the deed of resurrection. The Spirit directed Paul to write that the Father “raised Him from the dead and seated Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places ...” (Ep 1:20).

Though we might meander in our thinking concerning the possible termination of the Son of God, we would conclude that it was His incarnate body that would be terminated, not His being, for God cannot die. All emphasis in reference to Jesus’ death and resurrection concerns His incarnate body. It was His body that was not allowed to see decay (At 2:31). It was His body that was resurrected (At 2:32). And it was His body that ascended before the eyes of the disciples (At 1:9,10). According to John, it is in this present body that He continues to exist and will come again. It is not a body according to our flesh, but it is indeed a resurrected and changed body as we will have at the time of our resurrection (1 Jn 3:2). It is our task to know Him now according to His present bodily existence. The theme of Hebrews is to take our minds from Jesus’ fleshly body ministry on earth, to His spiritual body ministry as our high priest in heavenly places.

However, before His resurrection and ascension, suffering in an earthly body was necessary. “He learned obedience by the things that He suffered [in His earthly body]” (Hb 5:8). His suffering, with the possibility of termination in the flesh, manifested that He was in all ways as we should be, that is, obedient to the Father.

We must not forget that at the time of His incarnation, the Son of God gave up being on an equality with God (Ph 2:6,7). Before the incarnation, there was an equality with God that He sacrificed for His humanity. And so we learn another reason for the incarnation. He had to be made in all ways as we exist in order to be obedient as we should be.

He could have appeared in a form that would endure no suffering of the flesh. Since the Gnostic could not handle a complete incarnation, he affirmed that the Son of God appeared only as a phantom. But such an appearance would have been far short of that which would have been required for a sufficient sacrifice for sin. The Son of God was thus “made perfect” (Hb 5:9) through His suffering in the flesh. Only in this way could He become “the author of eternal salvation to all those who obey Him” (Hb 5:9). Without His model of obedient suffering in the flesh, we would have no encouragement to do the same. Peter reminded his readers of this truth: “For to this you were called, because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example that you should follow His steps” (1 Pt 2:21).

Our joy is that His high priesthood was predestined to suffering before the incarnation. His destiny was revealed when the Father raised Him to be seated at His right hand (Hb 8:1). We have a high priest, therefore, who has been personally designated by God “a high priest forever after the order of Melchizedek” (Hb 6:20). We thus have hope in the priesthood of Jesus because it will continue without end in His present resurrected body. When we all transition into a realm of heavenly dwelling, we can be assured that Jesus will dwell among us in His present form into which we will also be transformed (1 Jn 3:2). Therefore, by the unchanging promise and oath of God, we “have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us” (Hb 6:18).

This hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast and which enters within the veil where Jesus, the forerunner, has entered for us, having become a high priest forever after the order of Melchizedek (Hb 6:19,20).

Chapter 9

THE LEGAL HIGH PRIEST

In the context of Hebrews 7, the Hebrew writer continues his argument for the priesthood of Jesus with a question. It is a question he knows his readers can answer correctly. “If perfection were through the Levitical priesthood,” the writer questioned, “what further need was there that another priest should rise according to the order of Melchizedek?” (Hb 7:11). The writer knew that his readers reasoned that there was no perfection from sin through the ministry of the Sinai law priests who offered gifts and offerings for the people. However, when they came to the priesthood of Jesus, they knew enough about His priesthood that they could conclude that the Levitical priesthood and its offerings were insufficient.

The writer knew that his readers would understand that there was no sufficient offering for sin by the blood of bulls and goats (Hb 10:1-4). It is interesting to note that when men reason correctly concerning sacrifices, they come to the conclusion that the offering of animals as a sacrifice is futile in reference to reconciling one to an eternal God. The priests who officiated at the altar according to the Sinai law, certainly reasoned that this was true. Nevertheless, in respect for and obedience to the law, they continued to offer animals in hope of a better sacrifice that would surely come in the future.

But now a problem had arisen in the minds of some Jewish Christians in reference to Jesus functioning as a high priest. He came forth from another tribe than Levi. Jesus was born of the tribe of Judah (Hb 7:14). Therefore, when Jesus became our high priest, there was also the necessity to change the law in order that His priesthood be according to the declaration of God.

Under the Sinai law, no one who was of the tribe of Judah “officiated at the altar” (Hb 7:13). The law, therefore, had to be changed in order for Jesus to lawfully function as our high priest. But the only one who could change the law was the One who originally instituted the law. And now we understand what Jesus meant in the following statement: “For verily I say to you, until heaven and earth pass away, one jot or one tittle will by no means pass from the law until all is fulfilled” (Mt 5:18). When He was seated at the right hand of God to function as our high priest, the law was fulfilled, and thus, the law could be changed. The Sinai law that validated only the sons of Aaron to be high priests, had to be changed in order that Jesus locally function as our high priest. Therefore, God took away the Sinai law in order that His Son be validated as our high priest.

When every “jot and tittle” of the Sinai law was fulfilled in Christ, it was time to go away. When Jesus proclaimed from the cross, “It is finished” (Jn 19:30), more was included in His statement than the conclusion to the eternal redemptive sacrifice. We must also conclude that all was finished that brought Israel to Him on the cross. The purpose for the Sinai law was fulfilled in the atoning sacrifice of the cross. The school master (tutor) that brought Israel to Christ had fulfilled its purpose (See Gl 3:24,25), and thus, it was finished. Christians do not live under the Sinai law that was to bring Israel to Christ.

When Jesus came to fulfill the law through the cross, there may have been a question in the minds of some Jewish Christians concerning His right to officiate as a priest under the first law. The fact that no one of the tribe of Judah “officiated at the altar” (Hb 7:13) constitutes an argument from the silence of the Scriptures. “Moses spoke nothing concerning priesthood” (Hb 7:14) from the tribe of Judah. Though he spoke nothing, it would have been unlawful under the Sinai law to choose a priest from the tribe of Judah. Therefore, if the Sinai law were still in force, Jesus could not lawfully officiate as our high priest under the law.

When God commanded that priests come from the tribe of Levi, that silenced any priest coming from any other tribe of Israel. The Sinai law did not have to contain a commandment against a priest coming from any other tribe. All that God had to do was state that which was the law. And when He stated the law, all other means by which the law could be fulfilled were made unlawful. In other words, when God stated that priests would come only from Levi, then that silenced priests coming from any other tribe of Israel. This restriction would have included Jesus if the Sinai law were still in force today.

Jesus, therefore, had to come after the order of the Gentile priest Melchizedek. Melchizedek became a priest after the direct calling of God before the existence of the Sinai law, even before the Jews existed as a nation. The Sinai law had to be nailed to the cross (Cl 2:14). Under the new covenant and law that was instituted at the cross, Jesus could ascend to the throne of God contrary to the restrictions of that law, in order to reign as king and priest as Melchizedek. Because the Sinai law and covenant died at the cross, Jesus could lawfully be called into priesthood when He ascended on high (Hb 8:1). He could function after the priestly order of Melchizedek, and not after the law for priests under the Levitical priesthood.

Jesus’ priesthood is “not according to the law of a carnal commandment” (Hb 6:17). The validation of His priesthood is not dependent on the temporary Sinai law that legally declared one a priest. On the contrary, Jesus’ priesthood is “according to the power of an endless life” (Hb 6:17). He was directly and personally declared our high priest by the Father: “You are a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek” (Hb 7:17).

Validation of priesthood under the Levitical system could only be made while the law lived. But when the law died at the cross, the validation of the priesthood of Jesus had to be based on His being called directly by the Father. It is for this reason that the Father testifies concerning the priesthood of Jesus.

Jesus is our high priest in heaven. He is continually making intercession for us. He is a high priest “ap- appropriate for us” because He was appropriated to us by the Father. He functions as such because He is “holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners and exalted above the heavens” (Hb 7:26). He does not continually have to offer sacrifice for our sins. He needed to offer no sacrifices for His sinless life. On the contrary, He offered “once for all when He offered up Himself” (Hb 7:27). His was a onetime and eternal sacrifice, and since it needed to be offered only once, then it was sufficient for all eternity.

The high priests before the cross were weak in that they had to offer sacrifices for themselves because they too sinned. But our high priest, Jesus, has been designated such by the oath of God “which came after the law” (Hb 7:28). The statement “after the law” affirms that the Sinai law passed away in order that Jesus be a priest forever after the order of Melchizedek. His priesthood was mandated by the direct call of God, not through the Sinai law.

The Father has appointed “the Son who has been perfected forever” (Hb 7:28). The Sinai law, which validated the high priests of the Old Testament era, was temporary. When the Sinai law passed away at the cross, the appointment of high priests could only come according to the order of Melchizedek. And coming according to the order of Melchizedek meant that the Father had to be directly involved in Jesus’ call to high priesthood. The Father, therefore, directly appointed Jesus as our high priest, not according to the Sinai law, but by His own right to appoint high priests as He appointed Melchizedek.

Since the oath of the Father is eternal, then the high priesthood of Jesus is eternal in the heavens. He has appointed the Son once and for all eternity to be our high priest. In other words, the Father’s appointment of Jesus as our high priest has been perfected, that is, it has been completed once and for all eternity. There will never be another appointment of any other high priest, and therefore, the high priesthood of Jesus must be without end.

Chapter 10

THE BETTER-COVENANT HIGH PRIEST

Covenants are based on the trust of the covenanted parties. Each party obligates himself to conditions for the establishment of the covenant. Once the covenant is established, then each party is obligated to keep the conditions of the covenant (See Book 24, Authentic Church, chapter 5).

The Sinai covenant that God made with Israel was guaranteed on the basis of God’s initiative and was sanctified with the offering of the blood of animals. But as our high priest after the order of Melchizedek, Jesus was “made a guarantee of a better covenant” (Hb 7:21). The guarantee of this better covenant “was with an oath” from God (Hb 7:21). It was based on God’s promise that Jesus would continually be our high priest. The Father said to the Son, “The Lord has sworn and will not change His mind, ‘You are a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek’” (Hb 7:21).

Before the Sinai covenant, the high priesthood of Melchizedek was without beginning and ending. Melchizedek was the king of Salem. The word “Salem” means peace, and thus, the reference was fitting for Jesus to be the king of peace among the redeemed (Hb 7:2; see Ps 110). Therefore, it was appropriate for the Hebrew writer to illustrate the unending high priesthood of Jesus as an eternal blood offering that sanctified the new covenant which was also eternal. The result of His offering was without end since we must always live under a covenant relationship with God if we would live forever.

The new covenant is better because it came with a high priest who was designated such as Melchizedek. God appointed Melchizedek directly as a high priest. And in such a manner He designated Jesus as our high priest. The God who never changes His mind in reference to covenants, swore through the cross that Jesus would be a priest forever. And because of the eternity of Jesus, He is made the guarantee of the better covenant that will not pass away. The eternity of the covenant is based on the eternity of the priesthood of Jesus.

The ministering priests of the Sinai covenant had a “death problem” in reference to their officiating on behalf of the people. The problem was that it is appointed that all men die (Hb 9:27). And because the priests of the Sinai covenant died, “they were prevented by death from continuing” (Hb 7:23) their priesthood before God on behalf of the people.

But with the Son of God, everything changed. “Because He continues forever,” Jesus ministers with “an unchangeable priesthood” (Hb 7:24) for a covenant that is without end. It is for this reason, therefore, that “He is able also to save those to the uttermost who come to God through Him” (Hb 7:25). In contrast to the changing of the priests of the old covenant, Jesus is unchangeable. He officiates as “an unchangeable priesthood” (Hb 7:24). The reason is that “He always lives to make intercession for them” (Hb 7:25; see Rm 8:34). His intercession on behalf of the people continues without end because He is without end.

Jude was so confident of the intercession of Jesus that he concluded his short letter with the words, “Now to Him [Jesus] who is able to keep you from falling and to present you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy ...” (Jd 24).

All religions that are invented by men function with holy men, priests, witch doctors or a dalai lama. The problem with these religions is that the spiritual leaders die. If the faith of the adherents is based on the existence of the spiritual leader, then the faith often dies with the death of the spiritual leader.

Israel was reminded at the funeral of every high priest that their faith would have been terminal if God had not ordained that an heir of Aaron would always take the place of the dead high priest. But the frail humanity of the high priest of the Sinai law came to an end in the Son of God who was “made a guarantee of a better covenant” (Hb 7:22). “Such a high priest was appropriate for us” (Hb 7:26).

Chapter 11

THE HEAVENLY HIGH PRIEST

By chapter 8, the Hebrew writer comes to the main point, or conclusion to the things he has defended. Jesus is three things in reference to the inadequacies of the Levitical priesthood: (1) Jesus is our high priest who is seated in heaven at the right hand of God (Hb 8:1). (2) Jesus is a minister of the sanctuary and tabernacle that the Lord built (Hb 8:2). (3) Jesus is our mediator of the new covenant (Hb 8:6). By this ministry we now know Jesus. And because Jesus functions “in the heavens” (Hb 8:1), we seek to maintain our covenant relationship with Him because of the “more excellent ministry” (Hb 8:6) He performs on our behalf.

There is a difference between the priesthood of Jesus and the Levitical priests who came through the mandate of the Sinai law. The Levitical priests under the Sinai law were priests of this world, having been appointed by the law. Their service was thus confined to this world. But we “have such a high priest who is seated at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens” (Hb 8:1). The Hebrew writer’s argument to those Jewish Christians who were considering a move back to the Levitical priesthood was that they were being earthly. They were certainly theologically unwise to exchange the heavenly priesthood of Jesus for a priesthood that was confined to this world. The writer thus argues by contrasting the heavenly priesthood of Jesus with the earthly priesthood of the Levitical law. One was appointed by the direct pronouncement of God, and the other through the mandate of law.

The Levitical priests of this world ministered in an earthly tent that continually wasted away in the weather to worthless rags. It had to be rebuilt every few years.

The sanctuary of this tent was thus temporary. But in contrast to the earthly sanctuary of the tabernacle that wasted away with use, Jesus has gone into a heavenly sanctuary, having built the “true tabernacle that the Lord pitched, and not man” (Hb 8:2). Since it is heavenly, and thus not of this world, it will not waste away as all things of this world.

(We are sure the Levitical priests wearied themselves with the continual moving of the physical tabernacle of the Old Testament from one place to another. But the tabernacle in which Jesus now functions as our high priest is heavenly. It will never wear out. It is not as the tabernacle of Israel that had to be moved and rebuilt continually throughout the centuries. We can understand why David, who was frustrated with moving the tabernacle, offered to God the option to build a permanent temple (tabernacle) that would not wear out. At the time, God knew that Israel would diminish in faithfulness to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin. He thus relinquished to David’s desires. Solomon, David’s son, therefore, built the temple.)

Under the Levitical system, the high priest had to offer gifts in a physical tabernacle. This all transpired before Jesus ascended to heaven to assume the function of an eternal high priest. He offered only one sacrifice. After the sacrifice was offered, He began His function as a mediator on behalf of those of His tabernacle. Under the Sinai law, the priests came before the Lord with the offering of “gifts according to the law” (Hb 8:4). Such was the duty of the high priest, for it was appointed to him “to offer gifts and sacrifices” (Hb 8:3). Since Jesus came to the Father as a high priest, He too had to come with “something to offer” (Hb 8:3). And that which He had to offer was the offering of Himself for the people on whose behalf He would mediate.

We must conclude that what Jesus sacrificed was something that was forever. It was not only His sacrifice on the cross, but something that would continue throughout eternity. Since His was an eternal sacrifice, then there had to be eternal residuals on His part as to what He gave up for those He would eternally mediate. When He gave up His form of God through incarnation, we surmise that the incarnational sacrifice He made for us began with the cry of a babe in a manger in Bethlehem, but did not end with a cry from the cross, “It is finished” (Jn 19:30). He completed the plan of redemption at the cross, but the results of the redemption continued after the cross. The sacrificial offering for the redemption of those who walk by faith was finished, but the extent of His commitment to dwell among His brethren as their high priest was not.

His incarnate and sacrificial body was changed in the resurrection. That into which it was transformed was eternal. The apostles witnessed the changed body of Jesus after His resurrection, which body they saw ascend into heaven (See At 1:9,10). John personally witnessed and touched the resurrected body of Jesus (1 Jn 1:1). But he confessed, “Beloved, now we are the children of God, and it has not yet been revealed what we will be. But we know that when He appears, we will be like Him, for we will see Him as He is” (1 Jn 3:2).

Jesus is not a ghost floating around in a heavenly realm. In His resurrected body, He ascended. John affirms that we will see Him as He now is when He appears again. We will not only see Him, but our bodies will be transformed into what His body now is. Paul called this a mystery, and such it is. In our resurrection, our mortal bodies will put on immortality; our perishable body will be changed into that which will not decay away (See 1 Co 15:35-57). All this is enough to make us greatly wonder what we will be. But we can be assured that we will receive a new habitation from God, one that is not confined to the sufferings of this world, but one that will be eternal as the Son (See 2 Co 5:1-8). It will be in this new habitation that we will be personally present with our eternal high priest. It is then that we will have a truly personal relationship with the Son of God.

Now if Jesus “were on earth” (Hb 8:4), none of this would be possible. He could not be our high priest since the Sinai law provided priests who continued to minister the sacrifices. From the time the Sinai law came into force at Mount Sinai, there were “priests who offer gifts according to the law” (Hb 8:4). However, what the earthly priests served was only “a copy and shadow of heavenly things” (Hb 8:5). All the services the priests under the Sinai law ministered were a copy and shadow of that which was to come. The copy was not the true substance from which it came. The shadow was not the substance. It was the substance that casts the shadow, to which substance the Old Testament priests looked forward.

God commanded Moses to make the tabernacle according to the pattern that was given to him on Mount Sinai. Those who ministered in the shadow of the substance, ministered according to the pattern that was revealed on Mount Sinai. Moses was instructed to make correctly the shadow in order that Israel not misunderstand the substance when it arrived. At the time the Hebrew writer wrote, Jesus was ministering according to the true tabernacle that He constructed, which tabernacle He was, when through incarnation, He tabernacled with men. It was the priesthood of Jesus that casts the shadow of those things that led to His tabernacle and priesthood.

Jesus has now “obtained a more excellent ministry” (Hb 8:6) than the ministry of those who ministered in the shadow from Sinai to the ascension of Jesus. His ministry is more excellent because He is “the mediator of a better covenant that was established on better promises” (Hb 8:6). The foundation upon which His ministry is established is far better than what the Sinai law could provide. The Levitical high priest to whom the Hebrew writer referred at the time of writing needed to make a decision. He needed to decide whether he would continue to minister in the shadow, or hand over his high priesthood to the One who cast the shadow. Of course he refused, and subsequently, God had to physically remove him when the temple worship was destroyed in A.D. 70.

Chapter 12

THE OFFERED HIGH PRIEST

The high priests who were under the Sinai covenant could not come before God without offerings for the sins of themselves and the people. But it was different with Jesus. When Jesus was presented before the “Majesty in the heavens” (Hb 8:1), He too had to come with an offering. It was “necessary that this high priest [Jesus] also have something to offer” (Hb 8:3). However, it was not “offerings” in the plural, but in the singular, for He offered Himself once for all time. And it was not an offering for His own sins, for He was without sin.

The earthly priests “served a copy and shadow of heavenly things” (Hb 8:5), and thus their function was an illustration of that which was to come after them. They were in preparation for that which casts the shadow. And that which casts the shadow was the offering of Jesus on the cross. The insufficiency of their offerings and priesthood exemplified the necessity of the offering of Jesus that was yet to come.

Moses was instructed that he “make all things according to the pattern” (Hb 8:5; see Ex 25:40). The “pattern” was for the tabernacle and the order of priesthood for Aaron and his sons. If the pattern was not followed, then the people would have been confused concerning the substance that was to come. The people would have had a distorted view of the “excellent ministry” (Hb 8:6) of Jesus and His offering. Their function according to the pattern was maintained in order to present a true understanding of the substance that was to come. For this reason, therefore, we understand that the pattern for priesthood that was given at Mt. Sinai was not from man, but from God.

In chapter 7 Jesus was the “guarantee of a better covenant” (Hb 7:22). In chapter 8 He is the “mediator of a better covenant” (Hb 8:6). God’s personal oath that established Jesus as a high priest after the order of Melchizedek guaranteed the better covenant that we now have with God. Because of this guarantee, “He has obtained a more excellent ministry” (Hb 8:6) of mediatorship of a new covenant. “Therefore, He is able also to save those to the uttermost who come to God through Him, seeing He always lives to make intercession ...” (Hb 7:25). And since “there is one God and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus,” then we do not hesitate to approach God through Jesus Christ (1 Tm 2:5). There is absolutely no other medium through whom men must approach God (At 4:12).

The expectation of the Israelites was encouraged by one very important fact concerning the conditions for keeping the first covenant. In order to keep the covenant, and in order to find redemption through animal sacrifices, the conditions of the covenant had to be kept perfectly. But the people knew that this was an impossibility. In reference to the law of the covenant, the people knew “that a man is not justified by works of law” (Gl 2:16). One cannot be justified by perfect keeping of law simply because it is impossible for any man to live perfectly under law. All sin (Rm 3:23). And one sin makes a lawbreaker, and a violator of the conditions of the covenant.

So the Hebrew writer introduces his readers to the “fault” of the law of the Sinai covenant. “For if that first covenant had been faultless, then no place would have been sought for the second” (Hb 8:7). This statement might lead us to conclude that there was a problem both with the covenant and the law by which the people were to live in order to keep the covenant. But this would be a wrong conclusion. We must not conclude that there was any fault with either. On the contrary, “the [Sinai] law is holy, and the commandment holy and just and good” (Rm 7:12). The Sinai law and covenant were perfect for what they were designed to accomplish.

Paul explained, “The law was our headmaster to bring us [Jews] to Christ so that we might be justified by faith” (Gl 3:24). One of the purposes of the Sinai law was to preserve the faithful of Israel until the coming of the Redeemer. When that to which Israel was brought finally arrived, then there was a change. Paul continued, “But now that faith has come, we are no longer under a headmaster” (Gl 3:25). The headmaster (the law) served its purpose. And once the purpose was fulfilled, then there was no more a need for the Sinai law.

The fault was not with the law, but with the people who were under the law. There was no possible way for them to justify themselves through perfect law-keeping, though the Jews were to keep the law as best they could until it had accomplished its purpose (See Gl 2:16).

The Hebrew writer clarified the problem of the Jews’ efforts to keep the law: “For finding fault with them,” he explained, “... the days are coming, says the Lord, when I will make a new covenant ...” (Hb 8:8). The fault was with the people who could not live sinlessly under the law. Regardless of what law God would give to man, we must understand that no law is given by God for the purpose of producing salvation. On the contrary, law in and of itself brings death, for no one can keep law perfectly in order to justify himself before God.

The reason law cannot produce salvation is because those to whom the law is given are at fault. Those who lived under the Sinai law knew this. And for this reason, Paul reasoned with some Jews on his first mission journey that by Jesus “all who believe are justified from all things from which you could not be justified by the law of Moses” (At 13:39).

There should be no difficulty in understanding the Holy Spirit’s argument on this main point. Since there is no justification under law through perfect obedi- ence, then there is no salvation under law alone. Something else was needed to maintain our covenant relationship with God. A new law and covenant were needed. And that which was needed with law was an eternal atoning sacrifice that was sufficient to continue redemption to those who violate law.

Since the honest sinners under the Sinai law knew this, they groaned for deliverance from law in order to be justified by mercy and grace. Several centuries after the giving of the Sinai law, and the failure of those who lived under that law who were on their way into Babylonian captivity because they lived contrary to the law, God promised through Jeremiah, “Behold, the days are coming, says the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah ...” (Hb 8:8; see Jr 31:31).

At the time the Hebrew writer penned the above quotation from Jeremiah 31, the spiritual relief had already come through Jesus. The new covenant came with Jesus. And with the new covenant, there came a new law. So the writer concluded with the following statement: “‘A new covenant,’ He has made the first obsolete” (Hb 8:13). At the time he wrote these words, the old was “becoming obsolete and growing old” (Hb 8:13). It was “ready to vanish away” (Hb 8:13).

At the time the letter of Hebrews was written, the old Sinai law had years before been nailed to the cross in A.D. 30. The new covenant was in force. However, at the time he wrote, the priests of the Sinai law were continuing to “offer gifts according to the law” (Hb 8:4). But this ministry of offering the blood of bulls and goats was also about to conclude within less than a decade after the letter of Hebrews was written. The destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 would bring a total end to the Sinai priesthood ministry in that the temple and the altar would be completely destroyed. The Jewish priesthood would be either killed in the destruction or dispersed throughout the world as slaves of the Roman Empire.

We conclude, therefore, that a subliminal purpose for the writing of the letter of Hebrews was to save lives, particularly the lives of those Christian Jews in Jerusalem who persisted in continuing the offering of the sacrifices at the temple altar (See At 21:17-25). The writer pleads his case for Jesus in order to discourage the first Jewish recipients throughout the Roman Empire from going to Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover and to participate in the offerings that had long vanished away in Christ (See Gl 3:26-29).

God gave the Jews forty years to transition from the cross in A.D. 30 to the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. The death of the covenant and law came with the establishment of the new high priest in heaven. It was now time for all Israel to flee from all the shadows of God’s covenant with national Israel that was established 1445 years before at Mount Sinai. The historical statement of God in the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70 was that His covenant and law with national Israel were over. Through the Hebrew writer, God was telling potential apostate Jewish Christians not to turn back to that which will physically terminate in the destruction of Jerusalem (Hb 10:39).

Chapter 13

THE SANCTIFYING HIGH PRIEST

The good news is that Jesus in His ministry on earth was not all there was of Jesus. In fact, He appeared to make the way for the obedient to find their way to the best there is now. And what the Son of God is now in heaven is our hope for what will be in the future. This is the meaning of Paul’s statement in 2 Corinthians 5:16: “Even though we have known Christ according to the flesh, yet now we know Him thus no more.” Our knowledge and appreciation of who the Son of God is now is the foundation of our hope. We thus seek to move beyond knowing Jesus only according to His fleshly ministry. We seek to have assurance through His present ministry.

“Christ appeared as a high priest of good things to come” (Hb 9:11). The wording in this statement is significant. The statement says that He came as a high priest, that is, He did not come to become a high priest. The babe lying in a manger in Bethlehem was our high priest. When he was about thirty years of age, He began the function of His high priesthood ministry in the flesh while on earth. His earthly ministry was in preparation to procure the sacrifice of Himself, with which sacrifice He entered into the sanctuary of heaven at His ascension.

In contrast to the Levitical high priest, Jesus’ priesthood was not finalized with His death. His high priesthood continues today and into our future in His heavenly existence. During His earthly ministry, therefore,

Jesus was the offering of God in preparation for the altar of the cross. He was a sacrifice without blemish (without sin - Hb 4:15) who was destined to take His own flesh to the cross as a sacrificial offering on our behalf (See Jn 10:15-17).

The Old Testament tabernacle (tent) was made from the wool of sheep. It was temporary. God gave instructions in the Old Testament for its remaking every few years. But in comparison to that tent that wasted away in the heat of the sun and weather, Jesus came with “a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands” (Hb 9:11). It is thus not a tabernacle that originated from anything that is “of this creation” (Hb 9:11). The tabernacle in which Jesus functions as our high priest was not made with wood and wool of this world. It is not, therefore, temporary as the things of this world.

Since the tabernacle of Jesus is not of this world, then with His blood He was able to redeem those who compose His tabernacle. Under the Sinai law, “the blood of goats and calves” (Hb 9:12) were fruitlessly used to deal with the sins of the people who lived (Hb 10:1-4). The high priest of the Sinai law entered into the holy of holies of the tabernacle on the day of atonement every year. He entered with the blood sacrifice of animals for the people. But in his reasoning, the high priest knew the futility of offering the blood of bulls and goats for the sins of the people. He rationalized that there must be something better that was coming. Therefore, out of legal obedience to the law, he faithfully carried on with the offering of animal blood.

“By His own blood” (Hb 9:12) Jesus entered into heaven on behalf of the sins of those who now compose His spiritual tabernacle. The gospel news is that “in Him we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of His grace” (Ep 1:7). And in contrast to the repetitious annual entrance of the high priest into the holy of holies under the Sinai law, Jesus “entered once for all into the holy place” (Hb 9:12; see Lv 16:12-15). There was finality to the sacrifice on the cross. And thus, He “obtained eternal redemption” (Hb 9:12) through His blood for all those who sign up for a covenant with Him.

The “eternal redemption” happened only once. In other words, the cross was a once-and-for-all-eternity event that had eternal consequences. Jesus does not have to offer Himself continually on the cross to redeem His people. The matter of our redemption was a onetime event in history. “Eternal” in this context thus focuses on the result of the redemptive offering. The redemption continues into eternity because of the absolute of the cross. Redemption was accomplished at the cross, and thus, it is made sure because of the eternality of the One who made the sacrifice. Jesus will never offer Himself again for that which continues to exist.

The Hebrew writer now turns to the reasoning of his readers. A question is asked. The question is that “if the blood [of animals] sanctifies for the purifying of the flesh” (Hb 9:13), then “how much more the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without blemish to God, cleanse your conscience from dead works ...?” (Hb 9:14).

If there was sanctification of sin under the Sinai law in view of the cross, then while living in the reality of sanctification this side of the cross, would it not be reasonable to conclude that the reality gives greater assurance than the shadow of animal blood? Those living under the Sinai law offered in expectation of something that would accomplish sanctification. The high priest knew that that which was of this creation could not redeem those in the flesh in order that they be sanctified before God who is not of the flesh. With every animal sacrifice, there was the realization that there was an insufficiency in the blood of animals. We assume that the priests of the Sinai law expected something to come, but no one had any idea that it would be a blood offering of the incarnate Son of God. This mystery was hidden from the minds of men until the event happened (See Ep 3:4,5).

But when the One who was without blemish was offered on behalf of our sins, we have assurance that His sacrifice was final and sufficient. It was sufficient even for all those who lived before the cross who faithfully offered the blood of animals. They too were sanctified by the cross. It was through Jesus “whom God has set forth to be an atoning sacrifice by His blood through faith in order to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins in the past because of the forbearance of God” (Rm 3:25).

The cleansing blood of the cross was offered for all men for all time. Since there was no satisfactory cleansing power in the blood of animals, then the cross was necessary for those who were confined to the sacrifices of the Sinai law. But now, Jesus “is the mediator of a new covenant, so that by means of death for the redemption of the transgressions committed under the first covenant, those who have been called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance” (Hb 9:15). The cleansing power of the cross was applied to sin in retrospect when any animal without blemish was offered for the sins of the people under the Sinai law.

It was not that the sins of the people were rolled forward to the sacrifice of the cross. The sanctification of the cross was rolled back to those who by faith offered the blood of animals for their sins. There was for-givenness of sins before the cross, but the forgiveness was only accomplished in view of the cross. The sacrifices of the Sinai law were offered, therefore, in hope that there was something coming that would accomplish that which the people knew could not be realized with the blood of animals.

God sees our time from beginning to end. He thus functioned in reference to redemption from the perspective of “beginning to ending.” He could forgive before the cross because He knew the certainty of the cross. There was redemption through the blood of Jesus before the cross, therefore, though the people were ignorant of the sacrifice of the cross. The redemption was based on the faith of those who obediently offered animals in expectation that God had something greater for the faithful than the shadow in which they lived.

Our knowledge of the cross today gives us no advantage in sanctification over those who through faith obeyed what God required for an offering under the Sinai law. We only have the advantage of the knowledge of the cross, but it is still our faith that gives us assurance of forgiveness in the cross. Because the blood of the cross was sufficient through the faith of those who lived before the cross, then they too “receive the prom- ise of eternal inheritance” (Hb 9:15). Their walk with God was based on promise. Ours is based on the reality of the cross. But the end result of both is the same.

The Hebrew writer concludes the “once-and-for-all” offering at the cross, by contrasting it with the annual offerings of the high priest of the Sinai law. If the offering was not sufficient as a onetime event in history, then He would have had “to suffer often since the foundation [creation] of the world” (Hb 9:16). The sufficiency of His offering is in the fact that “now once at the end of the ages He has appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself” (Hb 9:26). Jesus needed to suffer only once. And because He needed to suffer only once, demands the conclusion that the offering of the cross was entirely sufficient for all sins for all time.

“Christ was offered once to bear the sins of many” (Hb 9:28). When He comes again, it will not be for offering, “but for salvation” (Hb 9:28). Because His offering was sufficient, then He can appear again for our salvation, not for our condemnation. This is the function of our high priest on our behalf. And for this reason we can come to the throne of grace with boldness. We can therefore patiently wait for Him because our faith is in the eternal redemption we have through His blood.

Chapter 14

THE REDEPTIVE HIGH PRIEST

In contrast to the old covenant and law that God established with Israel at Mount Sinai, Jesus Christ “appeared as a high priest of good things to come (Hb 9:11) ... by His own blood” (Hb 9:12). So the Hebrew writer concludes with Jesus’ right to function as “the mediator of the new covenant” (Hb 9:15). His offering to function as the mediator of the new covenant was based on the sufficiency of His blood sacrifice with which “He entered once for all into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption” (Hb 9:12).

The sufficiency of His sacrifice is exemplified in the fact that it was not only for our sins this side of the cross, but for those, who through faith, were obedient to the law of the Sinai covenant before the cross. Therefore, He is the mediator of the new covenant, “so that by means of death for the redemption of the transgressions committed under the first covenant,” they too may “receive the promise of eternal inheritance” (Hb 9:15).

The writer of Hebrews has now set forth the reason why a new covenant had to be established. He explains why it had to be sanctified by death. “For where a covenant is, the death of the one who made it must be established” (Hb 9:16). This is necessary because “a covenant is ratified upon death” (Hb 9:17). A person may write a will (testament) concerning all things that he seeks to leave with those who follow him. But as long as he lives, his will (testament) has no legal power to distribute his possessions. And so it is with a covenant, “since it has no force while the one who made it lives” (Hb 9:17). There must be the death of the testator before his testament (will) is activated.

The Holy Spirit wants to remind us that the first covenant was inaugurated through the death of something that was living (See Ex 24:5-8). When Moses had finished reading before the people all the law of the covenant, “he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water and scarlet wool and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book [of the law] and all the people” (Hb 9:19). A great number of animals died in order that blood could be used to ratify the covenant. Moses’ actions came with the pronouncement, “This is the blood of the covenant that God has commanded you” (Hb 9:20).

In order to sanctify all the instruments the priests were to use in their ministry of the covenant Moses “sprinkled with blood both the tabernacle and all the vessels of the ministry” (Hb 9:21). The reason for all this “sprinkling” was that death must occur in order to provide the blood that is used to set apart (sanctify) that which was to be dedicated to God. The Hebrew writer wanted us to reflect on the fact that “without shedding of blood there is no remission” (Hb 9:22), that is, there is no bringing into force the benefit of a covenant with God for those who seek to be set apart for God. In this way, therefore, because of the blood of the covenant, God is able to establish a covenant with the obedient. Through the blood of Jesus, the sins that have separated us from God are remitted. In reference to our covenant with God, “everything is to be cleansed with blood” (Hb 9:22). Under the new covenant, death had to occur in order that blood be provided to cleanse us of our sin that continually separated us from God before we obeyed the gospel.

“Therefore, it was necessary that the copies of things in the heavens should be purified [through blood] with these” (Hb 9:23). “But the heavenly things themselves [must be sanctified] with better sacrifices than these [sacrifices of animals]” (Hb 9:23). It was not possible for Jesus to take any blood of any animal on earth in order to enter into heaven. His function as our high priest of the new covenant had to be founded upon His blood. There was no redemption through the blood of animals (Hb 10:1-4). And since there was no redemption through the blood of anything that originated from this world, then redemption had to be provided by that which was not of this world. If we would be permitted to use the word, it took an “amalgamation” of the heavenly and the earthly in order to provide an effective sacrifice for those who would transition from the earthly to the heavenly. This was the end result of incarnation, and thus, an explanation of how the eternal Son of God became that which was a sufficient sacrifice for humanity. The Word “was in the beginning with God,” but “the Word was made flesh ...” (Jn 1:2,14). The Word was made flesh in order to offer a sacrifice that would transition those of the flesh into the eternal realm of being with God.

When Jesus ascended into heaven, He did not go without blood. The priests on earth “entered into the holy places made with hands” (Hb 9:24). But Jesus entered into the true substance of that which casts the shadow to the earthly, which substance was not made with hands. Jesus entered “into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us” (Hb 9:24). He did not ascend unto God “with the blood of another,” that is, the blood of an animal (Hb 9:25). Neither did He have to enter continually with blood into the presence of God as did the priests of the earthly tabernacle. In contrast to the priestly ministry of the Sinai covenant, the Hebrew writer informs us that Jesus has “now once at the end of the ages ... appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself” (Hb 9:26). When Jesus entered into heaven on behalf of all those who are now in a new covenant relationship with God, He did it once with His own blood. Therefore, when it comes to blood sacrifices in reference to covenants with God, all killing of animals for sacrifices was finalized in Christ. With His own sacrifice He has cleansed forever those who would draw near unto God through Him.

Chapter 15

THE SACRIFICIAL HIGH PRIEST

We have come unto an awesome sacrifice, one that has eternal consequences. With this appreciation, we can understand how foolish the readers of the Hebrew document were in their efforts to return to the animal sacrifices of the Sinai law. We can understand the uselessness of all those today who carry on with similar animal sacrifices in their system of humanly devised religiosity.

It “was necessary that the copies of things” should be purified with sacrifices, but “the heavenly things themselves” must be purified “with better sacrifices than” those that originated from this earth, that is, animal sacrifices (Hb 9:23). We have now come into a covenant that has the better sacrifice of Jesus.

We can only imagine the frustration of the Levitical priests of the Sinai covenant. Theirs was a futile effort of “daily ministering and offering time after time the same sacrifices that can never take away sins” (Hb 10:11). They knew that the blood of a killed animal could never rectify the spiritual gap that exists between man and God. They knew that a sacrificed animal was useless in mending the separation that was caused by their inability to keep law perfectly in order to be justified before God (See Is 59:2). Theirs was a ministry of frustration. Nevertheless, they remained faithful in offering animal sacrifices in view of the fact that something greater must be in the final plan of God.

When the fullness of time came, the better was revealed when God sent forth His Son (Gl 4:4). And “by one offering He has perfected forever those who are being sanctified” (Hb 10:14). The cross was a day of historical celebration. What was a momentary time of grief for the immediate friends of Jesus who stood at the foot of the cross, later became a joyous event when they encountered Him alive after the resurrection. On the day of Pentecost, it was revealed that the cross was the event for which all the sons of Abraham by faith had waited for millennia.

A new covenant relationship was activated with the words from the cross, “It is finished” (Jn 19:30). What Jesus had finished on the cross had been in the foreknowledge of God since the first day He breathed into Adam the breath of life. The sacrificial offering of the cross declared God just in creating those whom He knew could not live perfectly before Him. If there had been no plan when the first “Let there be ...” came forth from God (Gn 1:3), then God would have been fiendish to create those whom He knew could never live a life of self-justification. The foreplanned blood offering of God was thus in place before the first human existed who needed redemption (See 1 Pt 1:17-21).

Our encouragement comes from the fact that “by one offering He has perfected forever those who are being sanctified” (Hb 10:14). Such was not the promise of the old covenant relationship that God had with Israel. Since those who lived under that covenant assumed that the blood of bulls and goats could not take away sins, they looked forward to the One whom God promised to raise up from among them as He raised up Moses (Dt 18:15). It would be this One who would bring in what the prophets foretold: “This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days ...” (Hb 10:16).

The new covenant that was enacted was different because it was based on something far different than the old Sinai covenant. Under the old covenant, Israel as a nation was in a covenant relationship with God. Therefore, when a babe was born, he or she was born into a covenant relationship with God. And because Israel was in a covenant relationship with God, then sacrifices of necessity had to be made for the people as a nation. As children grew up under this covenant, they had to be taught the reason for the sacrifices.

But under the new covenant everything changed. God had promised under the new covenant, “I will put My laws in their hearts and on their minds I will write them” (Hb 10:16; see Jr 31:33). Sacrifice under the new covenant was necessary, but the sacrifice that was made resulted in the declaration, “And their sins and iniquities I will remember no more” (Hb 10:17). Since “it was not possible that the blood of bulls and goats could take away sins” (Hb 10:4) under the old, the priests had to stand “daily ministering and offering time after time the same sacrifices” that could never take away sins (Hb 10:11). Under the new, however, Jesus “offered one sacrifice for sins forever,” and then He “sat down at the right hand of God” (Hb 10:12).

But there was a difference between the old and new in reference to the time the sacrifice was made for those who would be in a covenant relationship with God. Under the old Sinai covenant, a Jewish babe was born into a covenant relationship with God. The newly born babe had no choice concerning the establishment of this covenant. And thus, from childhood the Jewish child had to be taught the law (conditions) of the covenant. The sacrifices were then offered year by year as one sought to remain in his covenant relationship with God. The sacrifices, therefore, were made after the acts of sin.

But under the new and better covenant, everything changed. The offering for sin has been made once and for all time before we sinned. Jesus has “offered one sacrifice for sins forever” (Hb 10:12). For all those who have life after the cross, during His earthly ministry Jesus revealed to His audience the key to understanding what would come in the lives of His immediate audience: “And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up” (Jn 3:14). Jesus continued, “When you have lifted up the Son of Man, then you will know that I am He ...” (Jn 8:28). And why? Jesus revealed, “And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all men to Me” (Jn 12:32).

We are drawn to Christ because we are drawn to the sacrifice of the cross that has already taken place. We realize in this sacrifice of the past that we have the promise, “their sins and iniquities I will remember no more” (Hb 10:17). It is not that one is born into a covenant relationship with God today as under the old Sinai covenant. We are drawn into the new covenant relationship with God because of what God did for us in the past. The drawing power of the cross is determined by our knowledge of the Son of God and His offering.

Our present relationship with God continues if we continue to grow in the knowledge of Jesus (2 Pt 3:18). The Hebrew writer cautioned, “But if any man draws back, My soul will have no pleasure in him” (Hb 10:38). Throughout the book, therefore, the writer emphasizes the emotional power of understanding the function of the cross in our lives. It is our knowledge of the function of the blood and cross that draws us to Jesus. Through the cross we have “a better hope, through which we draw near to God” (Hb 7:19). Therefore, let us continue to “draw near with a sincere heart in full assurance of faith ...” (Hb 10:22). If in our hearts we lose the drawing power of the cross, then we will “draw back to destruction” (Hb 10:39).

It is at this point in the Hebrew document that we understand what the writer previously meant when he said that his readers had become dull of hearing (Hb 5:11). Their knowledge of Jesus and the cross had waned, and thus, the drawing power of the cross had subsequently waned. When the sacrifice of the cross fails to bring a gasp of awe in our hearts, then we know that we have become dull of hearing. And if we have become dull, then it is time to study this document of the Holy Spirit.

In order to prepare His disciples for the cross, Jesus held up the cup during His last Passover meal and said to His disciples, “For this is My blood of the covenant that is shed for many for the remission of sins” (Mt 26:28). And now we know why Peter said to those who believed on Jesus on the day of Pentecost in Acts 2:38, “Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.” His Jewish audience knew that there was no remission without blood. They also knew that unless one somehow connected with that blood of sprinkling, then there would be no sanctification. Peter’s statement on the day of Pentecost explained how they could connect with the blood of Jesus, and thus, receive the redemption that is in Christ through His blood. “In Him we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of His grace” (Ep 1:7). When one is baptized into Jesus (Rm 6:3), he is baptized into the realm of the continual cleansing blood of Jesus (1 Jn 1:7). The minds of about 3,000 people on the day of Pentecost had not become dull of hearing. They were willing to hear, and thus, they asked what to do in order to reconnect with God (At 2:37).

By faith, individuals responded on that day to the sacrifice of Jesus on the cross. They were drawn to Jesus, and subsequently sought remission of sins in the cleansing blood of Jesus that flows from the cross. When one comes forth from the grave of water, and subsequently comes into a covenant relationship with God in Christ, he has been washed of sins because of the cross of the past (At 22:16). This is not all. “But if we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship with one another and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanses us from all sin” (1 Jn 1:7).

The story only gets better when we are delivered from this body of death into the loving arms of the One who made a onetime sacrifice in the past that drew us into a covenant relationship with God. In this covenant, we do not need to be taught to know the offering of the cross. It was because of our knowledge of the sacrifice of the cross that we were drawn to Jesus. It was our own volition to establish a covenant with God based on that knowledge, as opposed to those who lived under the Sinai covenant who had to be taught to “know God” because they were already in a covenant with God.

Because the Jewish child was in a covenant with God at the time of his birth, he had to be taught the conditions of the covenant that God had established with Israel. But because we are taught to know Jesus before we make a decision to be drawn into a covenant relationship with God, we already know the conditions of the covenant at the time we are cleansed with the blood of the covenant. And because of the continual cleansing blood of Jesus as we walk in the light, God promises every day, “Sins and iniquities I will remember no more” (Hb 10:17). Those sins that were washed away in baptism, are gone forever. Those sins that we commit while faithfully walking in the light are also gone because of our continual confession and the sufficient sacrifice of Jesus on the cross in the past. We do not, as Israel under the Sinai covenant, have to remember our sins throughout the year, and then again at the end of every year, they had to be remembered when the high priest on the day of atonement offered the blood of animals.

And just in case we might forget the beauty of the new covenant we have with God, the Hebrew writer made one last statement in reference to the continuing effect of the cross. “Now the God of peace who brought up our Lord Jesus from the dead, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, equip you in every good work to do His will” (Hb 13:20,21).

The covenant we have established with God through our faith response to the cross, has eternal consequences. When one establishes this covenant with God through obedience to the gospel, he enjoys the blessings of an eternal sacrifice. It is eternal because of the effect of the sacrifice. Jesus “offered one sacrifice for sins forever” (Hb 10:12). Even when we come into heaven we can be assured that the covenant continues because the effect of the sacrifice continues. It is an eternal covenant because of the eternal effect of the cross. This is the difference between the gospel of His offering, and our own efforts through religion to self-sanctify ourselves. Our efforts to self-sanctify ourselves are simply inadequate in reference to the sanctifying power of the cross. They will terminate at our death.

Chapter 16

THE BLOOD-OFFERED HIGH PRIEST

In Conan Doyle's book, The History of the Boer War, Doyle described one of the skirmishes that the British soldiers had with an overpowering South African Boer (farmer) regiment during the Anglo-Boer War. The occasion was that a British regiment of soldiers was surprised at one time by a Boer regiment that was twice their number. Under fire, the British troops were able to retreat to their camp. However, many of their wounded lie in the field between the two armies, dying of their wounds. Among the British soldiers was a corporal of the Ceylon Mounted Infantry. He later reported that the British troops needed something to stop the fighting in order to help their wounded. He later recounted, "We had a pillow, but no red paint." He recalled that some British soldiers took their own blood and made a cross on the white pillow, and held it high on a pole. They knew that the African farmers (Boers) were God-fearing men after the spirituality of their leader, Paul Kruger. The result was that the attack was terminated by the Boers and the British were allowed to retrieve and administer to their wounded.

Hebrews 10:19-23 is a conclusion to the writer's arguments that Jesus and His blood sacrifice are far superior to that which was only a shadow of good things to come. It was His blood that was held high on the cross in order to stop the impending annihilation of all those who sought healing from their wounds of sin.

The writer uses the conjunction "therefore" in 10:19 to lead his readers, and us, into his final conclusions. His arguments have been so strong that he will make a final statement at the end of chapter 10 that "we are not of those who draw back to destruction, but of those who believe to the saving of the soul" (Hb 10:39). We will not fall back into the futility of the insufficient sacrifices of high priests who died one after another under the Sinai law. If we do, that fall is to destruction, not life. In the preceding dissertation, the writer is confident that he has proved his point. If one would leave Jesus Christ, the Son of God, then he has gone back into that which will only lead to destruction (See 2 Th 1:6-9). The writer concludes that his readers must find a pillow and blood at the foot of the cross in order to stop the impending destruction. Only Jesus can supply the blood.

"Therefore," the writer pleads, we must have "boldness to enter into the holy place by the blood of Jesus" (Hb 10:19). Our acceptance of the atoning sacrifice of the Son of God is sufficient to bring us boldly unto the throne of God. "For through Him we both have access by one Spirit to the Father" (Ep 2:18). Our boldness, therefore, is not based on our meritorious works that we would presume to be sacrificial offerings for our sins. Our boldness is based totally on the blood that flows from the cross. Our right to enter into the holy place is guaranteed only by the blood of the One who has passed through the heavens to the right hand of God (Hb 8:1). Those who do not live under the sanctifying shield of His blood, therefore, have no right to enter into His presence.

Under the Sinai law, only the high priest was allowed to enter into the holy place. He could enter only if He came with the blood of animals. It would be unthinkable for the high priest to enter without sacrificial blood. If there were no sacrifices, then there could have been no entrance into the holy place.

The Hebrew writer now places us in the position of the priest who would enter the holy place. We are the holy priesthood of God (1 Pt 2:5,9). We now have the privilege of entering into the holy place "by the blood of Jesus" (Hb 10:19). If there is no blood of Jesus with us, then we cannot enter. Since Jesus has offered us His blood, then by His blood we have the right to enter. Therefore, it is necessary to determine how one would appropriate the blood of Jesus to his own soul in order to have the right to enter the holy place. If we would enter with boldness, then we must access the blood of the Son of God.

We not only enter into the holy place, but we can go beyond the veil into the holy of holies with the blood of Jesus. This is the "new and living way that He has consecrated for us" (Hb 10:20). It is "new" because it is not as the priests of the Sinai law who entered the holy place on behalf of the people with the blood of animals. As priests of God ourselves, we cannot personally enter on our own behalf. It is a "living" way because we have applied to ourselves the blood of the One who is the way. Jesus affirmed, "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No one comes to the Father but through Me" (Jn 14:6). To think that there are other ways to the Father except through Jesus, is to be detoured by our own ignorance of the sanctifying power of the blood sacrifice of Jesus (See At 4:12). We must never forget that it is only by the cleansing blood of Jesus that we are allowed into the presence of God.

By pouring out His blood on the cross, He went before us into the place He has now allowed us to go. Jesus is thus our “high priest over the house of God,” which house we are in Christ (1 Tm 3:15). When Jesus said, “I am the way, the truth, and the life,” He essentially said, “Follow Me and I will take you where no high priest on earth can take you.” He also meant that we are not to be detoured by man-made faiths that supposedly lead us into the eternal realm of God without the appropriation of the blood of the Lamb of God.

The Hebrew writer is so confident with these conclusions that the Spirit moved his hand to write a note of assurance. He adds that with “full assurance” we can draw near “with a sincere heart” (Hb 10:22). We now have “a better hope, through which we draw near to God” (Hb 7:19). We are able to draw near through the blood and the water. Moses sprinkled the blood of animals on the tabernacle and priests in order to sanctify (set apart) that which was to function in service to God (Ex 24; 29). With the background of this historical illustration, the Spirit directed the hand of Peter to word it differently in reference to the time when he knew that we had contacted the blood of Jesus:

The like figure whereunto even baptism does also now save us—not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the appeal of a good conscience to God—through the resurrection of Jesus Christ (1 Pt 3:21).

We can boldly draw near to God “in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from the evil conscience ...” (Hb 10:22). That by which our hearts are sprinkled is the blood of Jesus. But the story is incomplete without “washing.” The writer asserts that we can “draw near with a sincere heart ... having ... our bodies washed with pure water” (Hb 10:22). The Hebrew writer reflects on Jesus’ words, “Truly, truly, I say to you, unless one is born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God” (Jn 3:5). There is no drawing near unto God without passing through the waters of baptism, wherein one comes into contact with the sanctifying blood of Jesus. Ananias meant the same when he with urgency said to a sinner, “And now why are you waiting? Arise and be baptized and wash away your sins, calling on the name of the Lord” (At 22:16).

There is no cleansing power in water. There is no salvational result from a legal obedience to “being baptized.” It is only at the moment of baptism that we can have a good conscience toward God. It is only then that we know that we have done all that was required of Him to come into contact with the blood of His Son. It is then that we can have a good conscience before God, knowing that we have obediently completed all that He requires for our sins to be washed away. Sins are washed away by the blood, not by the waters of baptism. It is at the event of baptism that God appropriates the blood of Jesus in order that our sins be washed away. Our faith brings us to the water, but it is God’s work to wash us clean in the blood of His Son. It is not the literal water that washes away sins. However, there is no greater illustration to demonstrate the washing of the blood of Jesus than when one is literally immersed in water for remission of sins..

Since God knew that we needed a point of reference in our lives where we could confidently affirm that our sins were gone, then He promised He would do His work of forgiveness when we manifested our faith in Him at the point of our obedience to the gospel through immersion.

If we “hold firm to the confession of our faith without wavering” (Hb 10:23), then we can have full assurance that He will deliver on His promises because our faith delivered us to obedience of the gospel. In fact, the text actually says that we should hold fast to our confession “for He is faithful who promised” (Hb 10:23). Because of the faithfulness of Jesus who went to the cross for us, we should be faithful to go through suffering for Him in order to reach our eternal redemption because of the blood of the cross.

“Morality may keep you out of jail,” Spurgeon wrote, “but it takes the blood of Jesus Christ to keep you out of hell.” The statement “Let us hold to the confession of our faith without wavering” (Hb 10:23) is certainly an affirmation that one could possibly let go of the cross. But if he does, he has condemned himself to hell. The one who draws back from the blood of Jesus, is without hope. “For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins” (Hb 10:26). One can surely fall from the faith, and thus, fall from the cleansing blood of Jesus. Those who “willfully” turn back to the Sinai law, or any religious invention of men, have no hope of entering into the holy place with the sacrificial blood of Jesus. They have thus, drawn “back to destruction” (Hb 10:39). If one becomes dull of hearing about the cross, then he will fall back into destruction. When the preaching of the cross becomes boring, then one knows he is gone. We are reminded of the sincere desire of Peter in reference to his message to his readers:

I will not be negligent to always remind you of these things, though you know and are established in the present truth. Yes, I think it right, as long as I am in this tent to stir you up by reminding you ... (2 Pt 1:12,13).

The statement of Hebrews 10:37 is significant in view of what Jesus said in Luke 18:8. Verse 37 is not a quote from the Old Testament. It is a reference to the context of Jesus' prophecy in the context of Luke 17:20 – 18:8 concerning the termination of national Israel. On the occasion of the prophecy, the Pharisees questioned Jesus concerning the coming of the kingdom of God (Lk 17:20). Contrary to their thinking concerning the kingdom, Jesus said to the Pharisees that "the kingdom of God does not come with observation" (Lk 17:20). The kingdom of God is spiritual, not physical. The Pharisees' physical kingdom of Israel was coming to an end, but the spiritual kingdom of God would continue forever.

In answer to the Pharisees' misunderstanding of the kingdom of God, Jesus responded by saying that "the days will come when" they would yearn for the days of peace in which they lived while the Son of Man was with them on the earth (Lk 17:22). Jesus said of these days that were coming in their lives, "For then there will be great tribulation, such as has not occurred since the beginning of the world to this time [of His ministry], nor ever will" (Mt 24:21).

Jesus then took the questioning Pharisees into an era when turmoil would engulf them because of their rejection of Him as the Son of Man. A time was coming as "the days of Noah" (Lk 17:26,27). "The flood came and destroyed" the wicked (Lk 17:27). The wicked were taken and the righteous Noah and his family were left. A time was coming when it would be like Sodom when "it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all" (Lk 17:29). The wicked were taken and righteous Lot was left. Jesus concluded, "In this way it will be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed" (Lk 17:30).

Jesus was prophesying His coming in judgment on Jerusalem in A.D. 70. What the self-righteous Pharisees did not understand was that they were the spiritually dead body around which the Roman army would gather. Jesus said of them, "Wherever the body is, there will the vultures be gathered together" (Lk 17:37). The Roman army would gather around the dead body of national Israel in A.D. 70 in order to consume it.

After giving a parable of the pleas of the persecuted Christians—those who accepted Jesus as the Son of Man—Jesus concluded, "I tell you that He will bring about justice for them quickly. Nevertheless, when the Son of Man comes, will He find faith on the earth?" (Lk 18:8). Reference in the context to what Jesus states is to the Pharisees and the destruction of Jerusalem. This is the event about which the Hebrew writer refers in Hebrews 10:37.

We affirm that the reason why some Jewish Christians were considering an apostasy to the Sinai law was that they were being intimidated by the radical Jewish zealots who were at the time rising up in insurrection against the Roman Empire. The insurrection became so great that Rome once and for all decided to terminate the Jewish problem. The Hebrew writer wanted to remind his readers of what Jesus had prophesied, and what was in their near future. Those to whom the Hebrew writer directs his warning were going into apostasy. If they continued on their course, they would be taken away in the destruction of the Jewish state in A.D. 70. They would be taken away just as the wicked in the days of both Noah and Lot. So the following translation of Hebrews 10:39 is appropriate: "But we are not of those who draw back to destruction ...." The writer was warning that if his readers went back to Judaism, they were going back to destruction, which future destruction they learned from Jesus' prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem (See Mt 24; Lk 21).

Every judgment of God in time is an illustration of His judgment that will take place at the end of time. Those Jewish Christians who were contemplating a return to the Levitical faith of national Israel, were in danger of suffering the consequences of God's judgment on national Israel in A.D. 70. It is not surprising, therefore, that after Jesus spoke of the judgment of God on Israel in time in the context of Matthew 24, that He would continue to warn everyone in Matthew 25 of God's judgment that is coming at the end of time. For everyone on earth there is an impending judgment placed on the world that will come. In this judgment that is yet to come, the disobedient will be separated from the righteous. The disobedient will suffer the same fate as the devil and his angels (Mt 25:41). The righteous will go into eternal life (Mt 25:34,46). We give heed to the exhortations of Hebrews, therefore, as the readers to whom the writer initially directed the letter. If we turn from Jesus Christ, we too will be drawing back into destruction that will come at the end of time when Jesus comes again (2 Th 1:6-9).

There may be an immediate destruction that would be in the historical context of when this letter was written. If the Jewish Christians forsook Christ as the Messiah, in order to promote their nationalistic urges to deliver national Israel from Roman oppression, then they would be destroyed in the destruction that came in A.D. 70. We would think that the Hebrew writer was writing to save lives, for during those times many Jewish Christians were being intimidated to join the resistance and make their way to Jerusalem. But the Hebrew writer says that that would be the way of destruction.

Chapter 17

THE ONLY HIGH PRIEST

Because of the grandeur and finality of the sacrifice of Jesus, we can now understand why there is no forgiveness for those who would turn away from not only the person of Jesus, but also the eternal sacrifice of the cross. If the compelling arguments and statements of eternal facts that the Hebrew writer has given to this point in the book do not convince one to hold faithfully to the blood of Jesus, then there is no hope for that person. Peter's metaphorical description of such apostates from the blood sacrifice is appropriate:

For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled in them and overcome, the latter end is worse for them than the beginning. For it would have been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than having known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered to them. But it has happened to them according to the true proverb, "A dog returns to his own vomit," and, "a sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire" (2 Pt 2:20-22).

Peter speaks of those of whom the Hebrew writer states, "*if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins" (Hb 10:26). Those who turn away from the cross have made the sacrifice of the cross void in their lives because they have turned from the only hope one has for eternal salvation. There is a condition, therefore, for enjoying the eternal blessing of the sacrifice of the Son of God. The condition is to walk faithfully in the light of the covenant conditions (1 Jn 1:7).

The Hebrew writer is specific in reference to the apostate who turns from the sacrifice of Jesus. He is emphatic in the following statement:

For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift ... if they fall away, to renew them again to repentance, since they crucify to themselves the Son of God and put Him to open shame (Hb 6:4,6).

Two things are certain that we can draw from this pronouncement of the Hebrew writer: First, one must willingly be drawn to Jesus' sacrifice on the cross. There is no such thing as being destined by God to be drawn to the cross. Being drawn to the sacrificial offering of Jesus must be based on one's own choice. If one is predestined to be born into this salvation, then Jesus' use of the word "drawn" would be meaningless and without emotion. Why would He even speak of being drawn to the sacrifice of the cross if God had predestined one to do so without his own volition? Being drawn infers individual volition and emotion, not prompting by the Holy Spirit, or preprogramming by God.

Second, once one is drawn to the cross, he or she must obediently submit to being born again. But there is no guarantee that once he is saved by obedience to the gospel he will continue to be saved. Every statement of Scripture that speaks of Christians falling from the faith is a teaching against the misunderstanding that once one is saved, he cannot fall away. The entire audience to whom the Hebrew writer was addressing his arguments of the book was on the verge of apostasy from the priesthood and sacrifice of Jesus. Those who would assert that once one was saved he cannot fall from the grace of God, are not comprehending the book of Hebrews. The writer was addressing Christians. They had been Christians for many years. But now they were on the verge of forsaking the blood and present ministry of Jesus, and thus, putting Jesus to an open shame. They were giving up the blood sacrifice, and like dogs and pigs, returning to their former religiosity of futile sacrifices.

The Hebrew writer's statement of 10:26 is a complete refutation of those who believe that once one is saved by the blood sacrifice of Jesus, that he is continually and forever saved, and thus, cannot fall. The writer's illustration of the truth of verse 26 goes back to the Sinai law of Moses. Under that law, "anyone who has set aside Moses' law died without mercy on the testimony of two or three witnesses"<sup>10:28</sup> (See Dt 17:2-6; 19:15). If the testimony of two or three witnesses was sufficient to have one condemned to stoning under the Sinai law, then the testimony of one's rejection of the sacrificial blood of Jesus will be revealed when one stands before Jesus Himself in final judgment (2 Co 5:10). What is awaiting those who would stand before Jesus without His blood is nothing but terrifying destruction at the time of the final coming of Jesus (2 Th 1:6-9). What is awaiting is "*a certain fearful expectation of judgment and fiery indignation that will devour the adversaries" (Hb 10:27).

If telling the old story of Jesus from the word of God does not stir emotion, then we are cold in reference to the cross. The Holy Spirit has revealed the knowledge of the cross in the Bible. It is our responsibility as disciples of Jesus to grow in this revealed knowledge of the truth. If we conclude that it takes a direct act of the Holy Spirit to generate any emotional response to the cross, then we are saying that the Spirit failed in revealing the knowledge of the cross through the written word of God. We make the Spirit pick and choose those in whom He would generate a response. And if no emotional response to the cross is generated, then we want to blame the Spirit.

We must keep in mind that the Holy Spirit did not blame Himself for the Hebrews' dullness of hearing the story of the old rugged cross. Those dull of hearing could only blame themselves. It is not the work of the Spirit in our lives to keep us emotionally charged about the sacrifice of the cross. We can blame only ourselves if we fall into a state wherein it is impossible for us to be renewed to faithfulness. When our dullness embarrasses the Son of God, then it is not the Holy Spirit who is to be blamed.

The words of the Hebrew writer in this text are meant to terrify any Christian who would by chance even consider turning from the blood of the cross. In view of the profound arguments and statements of fact that he has already made in the previous chapters concerning who Jesus is and what He did on the cross, and how He now ministers on behalf of the saints, he asks his readers a question that he knows they can answer correctly:

Of how much severer punishment do you suppose will he be thought worthy who has trodden under foot the Son of God, and has counted as a common thing the blood of the covenant by which he was sanctified, and has insulted the Spirit of grace? (Hb 10:29).

Those who have turned from the blood of the cross, and the existing intercession of Jesus from the right hand of God, are truly like the dogs who return to eating their own vomit. They are like pigs who were washed, but then again return to filth. If two or three witnesses could condemn the lawbreaker of the law of Moses, then in horror will be the words of Jesus in the final day who have turned from Him: "Depart from Me you cursed into everlasting fire that is prepared for the devil and his angels" (Mt 25:41). Those who would turn away from the eternal sacrifice of the Son of God will suffer an eternal destruction, for they have "insulted the Spirit of grace" (Hb 10:29). And for this reason, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Hb 10:31).

We must not deceive ourselves. God says, "Vengeance is Mine" (Hb 10:30). "The Lord will judge His people" (Hb 10:30). If one claims to be a child of God, then certainly with fear and trembling he or she should guard their walk in the light of His Son's will. The Hebrew writer reminds his readers of the words of God: "But if any man draws back, My soul will have no pleasure in him" (Hb 10:38). If any would "draw back," then he will "draw back to destruction" (Hb 10:39). So if anyone would ask concerning the Hebrew writer and those faithful with him, he would reply, "But we are not of those who draw back to destruction, but of those who believe to the saving of the soul" (Hb 10:39).

Chapter 18

THE ETERNAL HIGH PRIEST

By chapter 11, the Hebrew writer has concluded his arguments for one to remain faithful. He has warned against apostasy from the sacrificial blood of Jesus with the statement, "The just will live by faith" (Hb 10:38). If one would live justified before God, therefore, he must totally trust in God and the current ministry of Jesus Christ on behalf of the sons of God.

The writer concluded chapter 10 with a warning that those to whom he was writing should guard themselves against returning to the futility of animal sacrifices and the inferior Levitical priesthood. In reaffirming that the justified will live by faith, he wants to remind his readers of the faith that they must maintain. He called on them to "remember the former days in which, after you were enlightened, you endured a great conflict of suffering" (Hb 10:32). He thus encouraged them to be "of those who believe to the saving of the soul" (Hb 10:39).

They indeed needed the following exhortation: "For you have need of endurance, so that after you have done the will of God, you may receive the promise" (Hb 10:36). Their confidence in the blood sacrifice of Jesus "has great reward" (Hb 10:35). But if they allowed their faith to wane in the face of persecution, then there would be no reward, but "a fearful thing" of falling "into the hands of the living God" (Hb 10:31).

Chapter 11 is the writer's final exhortation and encouragement to remain faithful. After giving illustrations of enduring faith, he will come to the conclusion, “These all died in faith, not having received the promises” (Hb 11:13). But those to whom he was writing had received the promises, and thus, there was no excuse for them.

Several illustrations of faith are presented. But there is something interesting about many of those he personally named. These heroes of faith lived before the giving of the Sinai law. “By faith Abel offered to God a more excellent sacrifice ...” (Hb 11:4). “By faith Enoch was taken up ...” (Hb 11:5). “By faith Noah ... moved with fear, prepared an ark ...” (Hb 11:7). “By faith Abraham ... obeyed ...” (Hb 11:8). “Through faith even Sarah herself received strength to conceive seed” (Hb 11:11). All these remained faithful though they did not experience the fulfillment of the promises. “But having seen them afar off were assured of them and embraced them ...” (Hb 11:13).

The argument of the Hebrew writer is very powerful. He is writing to Jewish Christians about Gentiles who lived before the existence of the nation of Israel, even before the event of Jesus and the cross. These faithful heroes had not witnessed the dividing of the Red Sea. They had not witnessed the terrifying event of God descending on Mount Sinai in order to establish a covenant with His people and deliver His commandments. They had not witnessed the enduring youth of Moses as he walked among them for forty years without growing old. The pre-Sinai heroes of faith had no history of how God worked through the judges and prophets of Israel. Their endurance was based solely on their faith in God and His promises. We must conclude that the Hebrew writer wants to somewhat embarrass those of his readership who were thinking about giving up on Christ, even though they had all the knowledge of the Christ.

Those to whom the Hebrew writer addressed his message, as well as we who live today, are totally without excuse if we follow the trail of dogs and pigs back to vomit and mire. The apostate Christian has no excuse for insulting the sacrificial Son of God with a life of denial. With all the miraculous testimony that God has given through Jesus and the apostles, any who would fall from the grace of God after the cross are without excuse. Jesus had this in mind when He said in reference to those Jews who refused to believe in Him, “If I had not come and spoken to them, they would have no sin. But now they have no excuse for their sin” (Jn 15:22). The Son of God stood before them and worked the supernatural power of God. And yet, they would not believe. Paul had the same concept in mind when he wrote of those who refused to listen to the testimony of the created world: “For the invisible things of Him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and divinity, so that they are without excuse” (Rm 1:20).

This was certainly in the mind of the Hebrew writer who spoke of those who would turn away from the awesome testimony of God through the resurrected Son. They condemned themselves in following after a dead covenant and law that had long been nailed to the cross. Therefore, “if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there no longer remains a sacrifice for sins” (Hb 10:26). For those who chose to reject all of God’s historical witness to the sonship of Jesus Christ, the Hebrew writer stated that “... it is impossible ... to renew them again to repentance, since they crucify to themselves the Son of God and put Him to open shame*” (Hb 6:4,6).

Harsh warnings are in order for those who would fall from their faith that Jesus is the Christ and Son of God. Once one has forsaken his belief that Jesus is the Christ and Son of God, he has denied the foundation upon which Jesus built the church (See Mt 16:18,19). Therefore, what some were contemplating was truly trampling under foot the blood of the Son of God. If one leaves the foundation upon which the church of Jesus Christ is built, then he has left the fold of the saved and returned to a religion that will profit him nothing in reference to eternal existence.

We must not miss this point. Throughout all the arguments of Hebrews, there is one central theme. Peter concurred with this theme in the following statement: “And there is salvation in no other, for there is no other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved” (At 4:12).

This is the proposition of Hebrews. All those religions of the world whose adherents do not believe that which was set forth by the Hebrew writer concerning the Son of God, are only the futile efforts of religious people who invent religions that conform to their own desires by seeking to shun accountability for their sins. If salvation were based on ignorance of Jesus, then there would have been no reason for Him to incarnate into this world. If salvation were based on ignorance of Jesus, then one would have to assume the argument that one can be saved through meritorious works, regardless of what he believes. One would have to conclude, therefore, that there is atonement in good works. It is for this reason that the Hebrew writer argues earnestly and convincingly with those who were about to give up the grace that was revealed through Jesus, and return to a meritorious system of law-keeping wherein there never was forgiveness of sins through animal blood.

Those heroes of faith who died without realizing in their lives the promises of God, trusted that God would eventually bring forth the One who would redeem them. They walked by faith in “having seen them [the fulfillment of the promises] afar off,” and thus by faith they “were assured of them and embraced them” (Hb 11:13).

It is faith that focuses our minds on that which is before us, not on that which is behind. There is a little of “Lot’s wife” in all of us, since we often seek to turn back to a life that is consumed with this world. But Jesus warned, “No one, after putting his hand to the plow and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God” (Lk 9:62). In this manner, the heroes of faith that the Hebrew writer uses as an illustration of faith, were those who were determined to look forward, not backward.

Because they “confessed that they were foreigners and pilgrims on the earth” (Hb 11:13) through their faithfulness, they declared “plainly that they seek a homeland” (Hb 11:14). “And indeed if they had been thinking of that country from which they came out, they would have had opportunity to return” (Hb 11:15). But they were as Paul: “Brethren, I count not myself to have laid hold. But one thing I do, forgetting those things that are behind and reaching forward to those things that are before” (Ph 3:13). The reason the Christian looks forward is because he desires “a better country” (Hb 11:16). It is a heavenly country that will not pass away. Those whose faith keeps them looking forward to the heavenly country, make God proud. “God is not ashamed to be called their God ...” (Hb 11:16).

Chapter 19

THE UNSHAKABLE HIGH PREIST

In chapter 4 the writer introduced his readers to the boldness by which we can now approach God through our “great high priest who has passed through the heavens” (Hb 4:14). In view of our mediator Jesus who is now our high priest at the right hand of God (Hb 8:1), “... let us come boldly to the throne of grace, so that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need” (Hb 4:16). We can have boldness to approach unto God through Jesus because He “was in all things tempted as we are ...” (Hb 4:15).

In chapter 10 the writer gave the reason by which we can have boldness before God. By a new and living way we can have “boldness to enter into the holy place by the blood of Jesus” (Hb 10:19). Through our obedience to the gospel, the blood of Jesus has been appropriated unto our souls, and thus we do not enter into the holy place by our works or perfect keeping of law, all of which come short in making us just before the One we seek to approach. It is the cleansing blood of Jesus that gives us boldness, for we know that we can come before the One against whom we sin by having been cleansed of our sins. He is thus the One who remembers our sins and iniquities no more (Hb 10:17). “So we may boldly say, ‘The Lord is my helper and I will not fear’” (Hb 13:6).

In the section of encouragement found in Hebrews 12:18-25, the writer seeks to remind those who are tempted to draw back from the blood that they “have not come to a mountain that might be touched and that burned with fire” (Hb 12:18). They are not in a situation as Israel was at the foot of Mount Sinai. The heavenly mountain unto which we have now come was not as the mountain from which God spoke to the nation of Israel. The physical circumstances that surrounded the giving of the law on Mount Sinai must have been terrifying to the Israelites who stood at the foot of the mountain (See Ex 19 & 20). The mountain burned with fire. Anyone who dared to touch it would be consumed. There was fire, thunder, lightning on the mountain, and danger everywhere as God came down on the mountain to deliver the law to Moses. The danger was so imminent that even if some unfortunate animal touched the mountain that animal was to be stoned to death. The people recoiled in fear at the sight and sound. Even Moses was exceedingly fearful, and thus, cried out to God, “I exceedingly fear and tremble” (Hb 12:21).

Now in contrast to that scene of terror, the writer encourages us by saying that we “have come to Mount Zion and to the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels ...” (Hb 12:22). Through the blood of Jesus, we can come boldly to the throne of grace. We have come “to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaks better things than the blood of Abel” (Hb 12:24). Therefore, the writer cautions us that we “do not refuse Him who speaks” (Hb 12:25). Those who violated the sanctity of Mount Sinai when the law was given, did not escape punishment. God spoke to them from the mountain on the earth, and thus, they could not escape. “For if they did not escape when they refused Him who spoke on earth, much less will we escape if we turn away from Him who speaks from heaven” (Hb 12:25).

Writing in view of the coming judgment on national Israel in A.D. 70, the writer compares the shaking of the earth when the law was given and the covenant instituted with national Israel, with the time in a few years when both will be shaken out of existence. “Yet once more I will shake not only the earth, but also heaven” (Hb 12:26). And this “yet-once-more” signified “the removing of those things that can be shaken” (Hb 12:27). And those things that can be shaken are those things that were temporary. The law brought Israel to Christ, but now it was time for the custodians of the law to be shaken, for the law had been nailed to the cross. When the Jews obeyed the gospel, they were made dead to the law. They became “dead to the law through the body of Christ.” (Rm 7:4). They had been baptized into the body of Christ (1 Co 12:13), and now they were no longer under that which was fading away. They were “receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken” (Hb 12:28). In view of the fact that “our God is a consuming fire” (Hb 12:29), it is incumbent on us to hold on to the present kingdom reign of Jesus our high priest that will never be shaken. We have received the kingdom reign of Jesus. It is indeed comforting to be reminded of the following words in reference to the present high priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ:

You [the Father] have put all things in subjection under His feet. For in subjecting all things to Him, He left nothing that is not put under Him. But now we do not yet see all things put under Him (Hb 2:8).

Book 67

Survivors

The primary message of the instructions that Peter, James and Jude wrote to the Jewish Christian Diaspora was that they would survive. They would survive the traumatic social chaos that was about to be unleashed by the Roman Empire on nationalistic Jews. Two millennia of Jewish heritage was about to come to an end. The prophecies of both Daniel and Jesus were coming into fulfillment. It was the “end of all things” in reference to national Israel, and thus, it was as if the Jews’ world was coming apart as the Son of God worked by proxy from heaven through Rome to consummate national Israel. Jesus was coming in time in judgment on those Jews who rejected Him as the Messiah and Savior of the world. The exhortations of Peter, James and Jude, therefore, were written to Christian Jews in order to prepare them for the end of national Israel.

Once the Jewish Christians suffered through the consummation of national Israel in A.D. 70, all Christians would then be headed into another dark hour of history. Rome would eventually arise to be a theocratic beast that would persecute those she considered to be insurrectionists to the state by not confessing Caesar as lord. Before this state persecution, the Holy Spirit would again deliver a specific letter of encouragement to Christians who were headed into two centuries of trial. The visions of Revelation would offer this encouragement. The Christians who would endure this persecution would have the letters of 1,2 Peter, James and Jude as encouragement that God would deliver on His promises that the saints would survive. The saints must simply remember that they have the victory if they only remain faithful. We thus have these inspired letters of encouragement today where God made good on His promises to His people. We read the message of these New Testament letters to be reassured that God will do the same for us, regardless of the hard times we must endure before the final coming of His Son. As secondary recipients of the message of these letters, we know where we must focus in our discipleship if we are to overcome any suffering that Satan would bring upon us.

The rewarding experience about studying through the document of 1 Peter is that this letter came forth from the pen of a married man who had led his wife here, there and who knows where throughout the ancient world (1 Co 9:5). We are never informed concerning the name of Peter’s wife, but from his younger days before he was called into apostleship, he had taken a wife before he met Jesus (See Mt 8:14).

We consider what this married man wrote in these two epistles from the perspective of one who is concerned about families in the existing historical turmoil of his latter years. These were not the best of times, but times of apprehension and international turmoil. Over thirty-five years before, Jesus had forewarned His disciples of these times. They would be times when “nation will rise up against nation and kingdom against kingdom. And there will be famines and earthquakes in various places” (Mt 24:7).

In writing around A.D. 65, we are only five years away from Rome’s crackdown on Peter’s heritage, the Jews. All his Jewishness was about to be destroyed with the death of over one million Jews during the war against national Israel that culminated in the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple in A.D. 70. Regardless of the turmoil of the times, Peter sought to comfort his Jewish Christian readers by reminding them of what Jesus promised: “But he who will endure to the end, the same will be saved” (Mt 24:13).

As all the other disciples of Jesus, Peter’s audience believed the last prophecy of Jesus in Matthew 24 concerning the termination of the Jewish state. When they finally accepted Jesus as the resurrected Son of God, they believed His judgment on Jerusalem: “Do you not see all these things? Truly I say to you, there will not be left here one stone upon another that will not be thrown down” (Mt 24:2).

We are sure that these words cut to the heart of the Jewish disciples who had 2,000 years of heritage behind them, specifically 1,400 years of history since they had resided in the land of promise as a nation. But it was all going away, and Peter writes within only a few years of the consummation of national Israel in order to comfort those who would suffer the termination of their Jewish heritage.

So his first words that are directed by the leading of the Holy Spirit are words of hope in the midst of all the political turmoil of the day. In the middle of so much suffering that his fellow Jews were about to endure, Peter sought to give hope in the midst of social chaos. Since they were disciples of the only begotten Son of God, then they must look past the turmoil of the day and rejoice in the victory that they would have over all that is of this world. They would suffer for a brief period, but they would be survivors through the power of the name of Jesus.

We must conclude that there lies behind Peter's exhortation a plea that his fellow Jews throughout the Roman Empire must stay away from Jerusalem. He writes "to the sojourners of the Dispersion in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia" (1 Pt 1:1). He writes to keep them away from Jerusalem, which some possibly would periodically visit as Jews during the annual Passover/Pentecost feast. But in a few years, Rome would choose this feast time to surround Jerusalem in order to eradicate from the Empire the most radical zealot Jews. Since Peter assumed the ministry of being the apostle to the circumcision (Jews) (Gl 2:7), then we conclude that he accepted the responsibility of watching over his fellow Jews in reference to the coming fulfillment of the prophecy of both Daniel and Jesus concerning the consummation of national Israel (Dn 12). He thus writes to all the Jews who are scattered throughout the Roman Empire to stay home and away from Jerusalem.

We can only identify indirectly with the first recipients of 1,2 Peter, James, Jude and Revelation. These five letters were written specifically to those Jewish Christians who were moving into the fulfillment of the prophecy of Daniel and Jesus concerning the consummation of national Israel. (Some commentators assume that even Revelation was written with the same purpose.) The consummation of national Israel would turn the world of Jewish Christians upside down. According to the Jewish historian, Josephus, an estimated 1.1 million Jews across the Roman Empire would die. We may not be able to fully identify with his slaughter of a race of people, but certainly, the message of encouragement of the Holy Spirit has permeated history to this day.

We must suppose that there were Christian Jews during this "end of times" who were going to suffer greatly as a result of this crack down on nationalistic Jews. If we were there as Jewish Christians, we would have believed Jesus' prophecy of Matthew 24. Therefore, we would know that we would have to endure the times because we were Jews. During the conflict, some Roman soldiers had little desire to separate a Jewish Christian from an unbelieving insurrectionist Jew. Both were going to endure the heat of Rome's determination to put down the Jewish insurrectionists throughout the Empire.

The Jewish Christians, therefore, were going into great suffering regardless of their submission to the state of Rome. Rome's war against the political Israel was against the radicalization of Jewish nationalists. Because the Jewish nationalists promoted a theocratic government according to the Old Testament law, Rome was going to put down any rebellion against Roman government. We understand, therefore, why Peter exhorts Jewish Christians to submit to Roman rule (1 Pt 2:13,14).

Christians, on the other hand, did not promote a theocratic state. Nevertheless, Roman soldiers might not make the distinction between the faith of believing and unbelieving Jews. To many Romans, all Jews were insurrectionist terrorists who were working to overthrow the power of the Roman state. The political state of affairs of the time was not much different than today when a theocratic system of religion seeks to overthrow a secular government that promotes the freedom of religion. At the time Peter wrote, Rome allowed the freedom of religion. Though Nero had a personal vendetta against Christians, this was not the policy of the Roman government. What the nationalistic Jews wanted to do, however, was to carve out of the Roman Empire their own theocratic state in Palestine as it was in the days of David. So in the background of what Peter, James and Jude wrote, was this political tension between secular state government and Jewish theocratic religiosity.

In the historical context of Peter's Jewish readers, it was time to confess that one was a Christian (1 Pt 4:16) in order not to be associated with the nationalistic Jews who wanted to set up their own theocratic state that was independent from Rome. In these times one's confession to be a Christian would possibly save his life. At least this is what transpired during the final days of Rome's battle against Jerusalem. Confessed Christians escaped death by being allowed to flee from Jerusalem.

Unfortunately, there would come a time after theocratic Judaism had been suppressed that confessing that one was a Christian would mean going to the lions. Nevertheless, during the tyranny of Nero's rule of Rome that ended with his suicide in A.D. 68, Christians in Rome were intimidated into hiding in the middle 60s. But at the time Peter wrote of things that would come a few years later, Nero would be dead. Galba, Otho and Vitellius momentarily reigned as Caesars of Rome in 68 and 69. The tyranny of Nero's personal vendetta was gone, and eventually Vespasian followed Vitellius (69-79) and brought relief to the Christians.

This relief from direct persecution of Christians would last until the years of Caesar Domitian. It would be during the reign of Domitian that Christianity would head into its darkest hour of persecution. It would be during these years of persecution that the apostle John, through the book of Revelation, would bring comfort to Christians, who for the next two centuries, would go in and out of persecution. But until that time came, the Christian Jews of Peter, James and Jude's time needed comfort. They needed to know that God was in control. We could conclude that the Holy Spirit would give Jewish Christians of their day words of encouragement that were relevant to their immediate situation. Many of them would suffer wrongfully during the time of the consummation of national Israel. Nevertheless, they must remain faithful as disciples of Jesus Christ.

What would be unfair on our part today is to assume that the messages of encouragement that were initially written to the early Jewish Christians somehow bypassed them. We often steal the immediate message of comfort written directly to them by supposing that the Spirit was speaking directly to us today in reference to the end of all things. In other words, some today suppose that when 1, 2 Peter, James and Jude were written, the Spirit was speaking something that was directly related to us today in reference to the coming of the Lord. The Spirit somehow bypassed the Jewish Christians who lived in the middle 60s when their world was coming apart.

If we lived two thousand years ago, and concluded that these letters of encouragement were not written specifically to us, then encouraging statements of the letters would have little reference to our suffering. If we, living two thousand years ago, were to interpret these letters correctly, therefore, then we would have to suppose that the message of the letters had little reference to us as we were going into times of social chaos as a result of Rome's termination of Jewish nationalism. In reference to the message of Revelation, we would have to ignore the message of the entire book because it would have little reference to our immediate suffering at the hand of the state persecution of the Roman Empire.

It seems that some today are very narcissistic in their interpretation of the Bible in reference to messages of encouragement that the Spirit wrote specifically to give the initial readers of His inspired letters of encouragement in times of international turmoil in the first century.

We must keep in mind that the Jews of the first century were experiencing the end of 2,000 years of heritage. So we must not deprive these Jewish brethren of the direct encouragement of the inspired letters written to them, while we bask ourselves in some end-of-time fantasies that supposedly had no relevance to them. In fact, when Peter, James and Jude spoke of the "end of all things" and the "coming of the Lord," we often want to steal from the early recipients of these letters the encouragement the Holy Spirit meant to send to them to prepare for the consummation of their heritage as Jews.

What is the correct view of these letters is the fact that they were written directly to the Jewish Christians throughout the Roman Empire. The message of comfort and encouragement was directly relevant to them in their struggles to endure the end of their Jewish heritage. This does not mean that the message of encouragement is not relevant to us today. Only the historical events of the letters must be relevant only to the initial recipients of the letters. What the Holy Spirit said to the initial recipients would be the same encouragement He would say to us today if we were in similar circumstances.

Though the message was directed to saints who lived two thousand years ago, the encouragement is applicable to all saints who have found themselves in similar situations since that time. If the Spirit would deem it necessary to write a letter today to saints who were going into the same circumstances as the initial recipients of the letters, then He would say the same thing. Therefore, all those today who find themselves in similar circumstances as the initial recipients must gain encouragement from what was said to them. The Spirit needs to write no more letters of encouragement. He needs to raise up no more prophets to speak hope to the people. If people desire encouragement from the Holy Spirit in times of trouble, then they need to study the messages of 1, 2 Peter, James, Jude and Revelation.

In our study of the Spirit's message of encouragement to those who were suffering through Jewish or Roman persecution, we are cautioned not to twist statements of specific finality in time as a reference to us today in reference to the end of time. In Matthew 24 and Luke 21, Jesus spoke of the "end." But the context of His prophecy was not the end of the world. It was the end of God's work through national Israel, which end took place when Rome finalized Israel in A.D. 70.

Nevertheless, any judgment of God "in time" ilillustrates His final judgment at the end of the world. We can apply in-time judgments as illustrations of end-of-time judgment because of Jude's use of the prophecy of Enoch. Jude used the prophecy of Enoch to refer to the destruction of national Israel in A.D. 70. However, Enoch's prophecy was originally spoken in the historical context of the flood of Noah's day when God brought judgment on the ungodly by taking them away in the flood (Jd 14,15). But Jude used Enoch's prophecy in reference to the end of national Israel. We could take the liberty to assume that God will do the same at the end of the world. We do not weaken the power of the judgment of God at the end of time by keeping the original fulfillment of those prophecies that were originally made in reference to events that would transpire in time. All in-time judgments of God illustrate and reaffirm that there is a final judgment to come. In fact, in-time judgments affirm that God does not go back on His promise that the world as we know it is coming to an end.

Chapter 1

SURVIVOR DESTINY

In order to endure tough times, Christians must focus on their spiritual blessings that they have in Christ. In view of the existing circumstances in which Peter's readers lived, it was time to "count their blessings, and name them one by one." Because of the circumstances of the times, it was time for the disciples to be reminded of the spiritual blessings that they had in Christ, for it was going to get worse before it got better.

"Blessed be the God ... who according to His abundant mercy has begotten us again to a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Pt 1:3). The apostles had hoped in Jesus while they were with Him during His earthly ministry. However, their hope was shattered when they stood at the foot of the cross and watched their leader die a painful death which they considered shameful and humiliating. After the crucifixion and burial, the two despondent disciples on the road to Emmaus even said, "We were hoping that it was He [Jesus] who was going to redeem Israel" (Lk 24:21). But all hope was lost at the sound of a nail through an outstretch hand. To them, Jesus' cry from the cross, "It is finished," were words of finality, not beginning. To the disciples, their dreams in Jesus were finished.

But the cross was only the beginning of the story of their lives. All hope was regained when Jesus came forth from the tomb. All Christians now have a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. In contrast to this, the hope of people today who place their faith in their dead prophets is in vain. What hope can a dead prophet give to those who will follow in his steps to the grave. But not so with Jesus. Our hope lives because He lives. It is for this reason that we do not place our faith in dead prophets, but in the living Son of God.

Because of the resurrection of the Son of God, our hope for an inheritance is specific. It is not abstract, though we cannot realize through our humanly defined words the full extent of that which is beyond our experience. Regardless of the limitations of our dictionary, there are some specifics understood that are enough to lay a solid foundation upon which we can have hope. The Holy Spirit assumes that even with our limited understanding of that which is beyond our experiences, we can have a strong hope that will take us through the most difficult times that can exist on this earth. Peter, therefore, seeks to define in few words the inheritance that is awaiting every faithful disciple.

A. It is imperishable.

Ours is an inheritance that is not corrupted by the decay that sets in when any organic material of this world dies. Since our earthly body is organic after this world, it will decay away at death. But the nature of the environment which is coming for all Christians is an enduring immortality. Because we will be in the eternal presence of God who only has eternality, then we will drink from His eternal spirit, and thus, suffer death no more. This is an existence that is not affected by time. And thus, when Jesus comes, "this perishable must put on the imperishable, and this mortal must put on immortality" (1 Co 15:53).

So when this perishable has put on the imperishable, and this mortal has put on immortality, then will be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Co 15:54).

Since that which causes the organic to decay away is gone in the eternal existence that is to come, then we will be in an environment wherein the concept of perishing will no longer exist. We will be able to strike from our dictionary the words “corruptible,” “perishable” and “mortal.” We look forward to an existence that is “reserved in heaven for you” (1 Pt 1:4).

B. It is undefiled.

This reserved inheritance is unstained by that which is of this world. It is unspoiled and pure in comparison to that which we now experience. The Greek word that is translated in the text “undefiled” is also used in reference to the purity of Jesus, our high priest, “who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners ...” (Hb 7:26). John pictured that those who are written in the Lamb’s book of life will go into a realm wherein “by no means will there enter into it anything profane or one who defiles ...” (Rv 21:27). The heavenly inheritance is undefiled because those who would defile it will be denied entrance.

C. It will not fade away.

In the description of the inheritance to come, Peter says that it “does not fade away” (1 Pt 1:4). He uses the Greek word amarantos. The name of the Amaranth flower comes from this word, which name is used by writers to refer to human immortality. And such we will experience in the inheritance to come. We will be immortal beings in the presence of the One who only has eternity.

D. It is reserved.

Peter’s statement is worded to say that it is not heaven that is reserved. It is that which we receive in the existence of heaven. Those who are in heaven will be blessed with immortality, and thus, away from the presence of those who would defile them. They will not wither away because of the sustaining eternity we will recieve in the presence of God. Those things that curse us in our mortal bodies in this life will not be a part of the eternal heavenly realm of existence to come. We thus seek deliverance from our fear of death with which we are burdened all our lifetime (Hb 2:15). Because of our toil in this world, we look for the eternal rest that is reserved for us in a heavenly environment.

E. We are kept by power.

In order to inherit that which is reserved for us, we “are kept by the power of God through faith” (1 Pt 1:5). We remember the statement of the Hebrew writer, that our Lord Jesus is now “upholding all things by the word of His power.” (Hb 1:3). Both the world in which we now live, and we ourselves, are kept in existence until this world fulfills its purpose for existence.

The words “kept” and “upholding” indicate that we do not sustain our existence on our own power. The world is not held together by the force of natural laws. It is God who holds together the natural laws in order to keep this world held together by natural laws. It is He who continues our bodily existence on this earth until our earthly time expires in death. We conclude, therefore, that God did not create the world, and then venture off to a galaxy far away. We are not deist, but of those who have faith that God sustains all that exists in the material and biological world in order to bring His obedient children into the realm of His eternal existence.

It is interesting that the Greek word used here for “kept” can also be translated “guarded.” It is from the Greek word that means to be protected by a military guard. We are protected by our King Jesus while in this earthly realm of existence. As long as we stay in His realm of protection, we are guarded from the roaring lion who seeks to devour us. Therefore, “be sober, be vigilant. Your adversary the devil walks about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pt 5:8).

Chapter 2

SURVIVOR JOY

Hope for the inheritance that is set before the disciples of Christ should be an occasion to “greatly rejoice” (1 Pt 1:6). If our rejoicing has faded, then we need to be reassured by these statements of Peter and other writers who remind us of that which is promised to those who faithfully survive the struggles of this world.

The New Testament writers wrote for the purpose stated by Paul when he pictured the final coming of Jesus and our resurrection: “Therefore, comfort one another with these words” (1 Th 4:18). We need to read more of the encouraging words of our Bible if we are in times of despair. “So then faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of Christ” (Rm 10:17). A struggling faith needs a faithful word of encouragement.

Jesus forewarned His disciples of the suffering that would come as a result of living the life of a disciple. Therefore, He comforted them by saying, “Blessed are those who are persecuted for righteousness’ sake ...” (Mt 5:10). The occasion for such rejoicing that was spoken by Peter, was spoken by Jesus during His earthly ministry. “Rejoice and be exceedingly glad, for great is your reward in heaven” (Mt 5:12). We are blessed in persecution because we are reminded of the reward that will be given to all those who survive the persecution of this world.

A. The suffering will pass.

Peter’s view of suffering is comforting. The duration of the suffering was only “for a little while” (1 Pt 1:6). His readers must suffer the turmoil of the Roman war against the Jewish state. However, during the time of suffering, they must remember that it will soon pass. Paul sought to focus our minds beyond the “little while” of the suffering when he wrote, “For our light affliction that is but for a moment, is working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory” (2 Co 4:17). The one suffering must always keep in mind that that which causes the suffering will eventually pass away. Even in comparison to our lifetime, which times are cursed with “trouble and sorrow,” we must remember, as the psalmist said, that our brief life “is cut off and we fly away” (Ps 90:10; see Js 1:10,11). So we find comfort in the fact that our life “is even a vapor that appears for a little time and then vanishes away” (Js 4:14).

Our life is simply a brief existence of time between two eternities. In view of this brevity, both Peter and James move us to be encouraged by the fact that our lives are but for a moment in comparison to eternity. And since this is true, then the focus of our brief life should be on that which is beyond life. With the following words, Jesus sought to focus our minds beyond the physical body: “And do not fear those who kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul. But rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell” (Mt 10:28).

B. Life is too short to be taken seriously.

When we understand the brevity of life, and the eternal plan of God in the creation of this world, we have reason to rejoice in our sufferings. “Count it all joy,” James reminded his readers, “when you fall into various trials, knowing that the trying of your faith pro- duces patience” (Js 1:2,3). Some poet correctly stated this truth:

O, trouble’s a ton,
Or a troubles an ounce;
Or a trouble is what you make it.
And it isn’t the fact that you’re hurt that counts,
But only how did you take it.

As a pilot of our own airplane, I perfected my skills only when I ventured through thunderstorms of nature that tested my ability to fly an airplane. Once on a flight from Miami, Florida on our way to our home in the Caribbean, my family and I had to fly through a tropical depression of many thunderstorms. As we flew through the storms, the rain pounded against the windscreen of the airplane. The airplane was jolted from one turbulent shake to another. For what seemed to be an eternity, we were jostled around inside that small airplane until we finally flew clear of the storms. All my family was quite shaken by the experience, but they had trusted in their father pilot to take them through the storms. And this is exactly what we must do in life. We must always keep the following precious words of the psalmist in mind when we are flying through the storms of life:

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore we will not fear, though the earth is removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, though its waters roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with its swelling (Ps 46:1-3)

C. Allow faith to be refined.

Too many Christians want to reach the promised land without going through the wilderness. A tested faith is “much more precious than gold that perishes (1 Pt 1:7). This is true because a faith that is refined with suffering will “be found to praise and honor and glory at the revelation of Jesus Christ” (1 Pt 1:7). Our refined faith takes our minds into the heavenly realm wherein Jesus Christ now exists at the right hand of God. It is a faith that allows us to see beyond the confines of our troubled world.

It is our tested faith that allows us to love Jesus beyond the realm of this existence of suffering. It is the nature of the tested faith to “rejoice with joy inexpressible,” regardless of the sufferings through which we must go in this world.<sup>1:8</sup> Peter wants us to remember that it is this refined faith that is necessary in order to receive the outcome of that in which we believe and that for which we hope. So he reminds his readers that the outcome is “the salvation of your souls” (1 Pt 1:9). “For to you it has been granted on behalf of Christ not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for His sake” (Ph 1:29).

D. Thank God for your salvation.

It was the mystery of this salvation that sparked inquiry by the Old Testament prophets who were given only pieces of the puzzle that was finally revealed completely through Jesus Christ. They “inquired and searched diligently” (1 Pt 1:10), but were never given the opportunity to see the full picture of the mystery that would be revealed through Jesus (Ep 3:3-5). It was only through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit that they were given pieces of the picture that we now see clearly in Christ. Through the revealed pieces, therefore, “they ministered the things that are now reported” to us, and now written in the New Testament to build our faith (1 Pt 1:12).

We must note that before the revelation of the hidden things, all was a mystery. Paul used the word “mystery” in the context of Ephesians 3:3-5 to explain that it was something unknown at one time in history, but later revealed through actual fulfillment in life. Paul wrote, “... by revelation He [God] made known to me the mystery” (Ep 3:3). There is no longer a mystery of the gospel, for Paul stated that he “wrote before in few words” the fulfillment of that which was spoken through the prophets (Ep 3:3). And indeed he did in statements that defined the mystery as the death of Jesus for our sins, His burial, and His resurrection for our sins (See 1 Co 15:1-4). “Therefore,” Paul wrote, “when you read you can understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ, which in other generations was not made known to the sons of men [the prophets], as it has now been revealed by the Spirit to His holy [New Testament] apostles and prophets” (Ep 3:4,5).

Chapter 3

SURVIVOR BY THE WORD

Because the mystery of the gospel has been revealed, it is a time to “gird up the loins of your mind” (1 Pt 13). It is a time for sober living and to “hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ” (1 Pt 13). Our hope is our motivation not to live “according to the former lusts” of our lives that we lived before we became disciples (1 Pt 1:14). Our former life was a time when we “walked according to the ways of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, of the spirit that is now working in the sons of disobedience” (Ep 2:2). As God, who is not of the material world, is holy, Christians must separate themselves from worldly living through all holy living that is not of this world (1 Pt 1:15).

A. Live the obedient life.

Peter reminds us that we must be “obedient children” (1 Pt 1:14). The word “obedient” means that we do not live by “faith only.” As disciples of Jesus, we must do something. James asked, “What does it profit, my brethren, if someone says he has faith but does not have works? Can faith save him?” (Js 2:14). The answer to the questions is obvious. “Even so faith by itself, if it does not have works, is dead” (Js 2:17). So James seemingly interrogates the “faith only” person with the question, “But are you willing to know, O fool- ish man, that faith without works is dead?” (Js 2:20). And then James concludes with the demonstrative statement: “You see then that a man is justified by works and not by faith only” (Js 2:24).

The theological hypocrite is the one who stands up before an audience and proclaims that everyone is saved by “faith only,” but in the next breath he reminds the audience that they must obediently show up next Sunday morning, and especially with their contribution.

Obedience to God’s commands does not assume that we are either saved by works or living legally. It is a condemning doctrine to preach that one is saved by ignoring obedience to what God commands as to do in order to be saved. It is an ungrateful faith to believe that one will enter a final rest for which he did not work. We must remember that God, “without respect of persons judges according to each one’s work” (1 Pt 1:17). And work assumes obedience to commands. Work assumes obedience in response to grace (See 2 Co 4:15). Therefore, Peter admonishes that his audience must “pass the time of your journey on earth in fear” (1 Pt 1:17).

The lazy disciple must remember that we “were not redeemed with corruptible things ... but with the precious blood of Christ ...” (1 Pt 1:18,19). If this fact does not motivate faithful obedience, then we are doing as the Hebrew writer stated concerning some of his readers:

Of how much severer punishment do you suppose will he be thought worthy who has trodden under foot the Son of God, and has counted as a common thing the blood of the covenant by which he was sanctified, and has insulted the Spirit of grace? (Hb 10:29).

B. Live in thanksgiving.

The redemptive work of the Son of God was planned before the creation of the world (1 Pt 1:20). Of necessity, redemption from sin had to be planned also in order that we not be able to accuse God of being fiendish in His creation of those whom He knew would separate themselves from Him through sin. There would have been no righteousness in creation if there were no plan in place to reconcile and restore sinners to their Creator. The cross, therefore, was not an accident. When John stated of Jesus, “He came to His own and His own did not receive Him” (Jn 1:11), he was not saying that the Jews’ rejection of Jesus was an accident. The coming of the Son was planned, and the rejection was foreknown. It was God’s plan to use the rejection to accomplish our redemption. If there had been no rejection, then there would have been no cross. If there were no cross, then there would have been no redemption. The cross was thus the eternal plan of God to offer redemption to humanity. Redemption “with the precious blood of Christ” (1 Pt 1:19). was not an afterthought of God to bring His creation back into His fellowship.

The redemption came to us through the grace of God. Listen to what Paul said concerning this grace, and what it causes in the hearts of the redeemed: “For all things are for your sakes, so that the grace that is reaching many people may cause thanksgiving to abound to the glory of God” (2 Co 4:15).

Grace moved God to give His only begotten Son (Jn 3:16). Our response to God’s grace is our overwhelming thanks, and certainly our giving as He gave to us. The life of a disciple is a life of thanksgiving. An old Chinese proverb reads, “When you drink from the stream, remember the spring.” It is as Seneca stated, “Nothing is more honorable than a grateful heart.” We would be honorable disciples by remembering where we quenched our thirst for redemption through the grace of God.

C. Live as begotten children.

In response to the grace of God, Peter’s readers had obeyed the gospel of the death of Jesus for their sins and experienced the resurrection by being raised out of a tomb of baptismal water. We cannot overlook the significance of this example as it is stated in the text of verses 22-25. Peter declared, “... you have purified your souls in obeying the truth ...” (1 Pt 1:22). The verb tense of “have purified” is perfect participle. Something happened in their lives in the past that continued with results into the present. That which was continuing was their “sincere love of the brethren” (1 Pt 1:22). This way of life began at a point of time in the past. Peter explains the time in the statement, “having been born again” (1 Pt 1:23). The verb tense here is perfect passive. In other words, they were acted upon at a time in the past. Some translations use the phrase “begotten again.” We are born free of sin in our physical birth, but sin later enters into our lives (Rm 3:23). So we must be born again in order to live the sinless life under the continual cleansing blood of Jesus (1 Jn 1:7).

Their sanctified life began according to what Jesus stated: “Truly, truly, I say to you, unless one is born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God” (Jn 3:5). Paul used the passive tense of the verb when he reminded the Roman Christians “that as many of us as were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into His death” (Rm 6:3). When one is born again, he is passively baptized by someone. He is washed passively by God with the blood of the Lamb. In words of action, one is lowered in a grave of water by someone else, and then cleansed of sin by God who acts upon our soul. And thus, when the repentant believer comes forth from the grave of water, he has obeyed the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus for the remission of his sins (At 2:38; 22:16). He is thus born again of the water and of the Holy Spirit.

It is the word of God that reveals this message to us, and thus, Peter states that we have “been born again ... by the word of God that lives and abides” (1 Pt 1:23). If the word of God did not exist today, then all men would be ignorant of what one must do in order to be born again. For this reason Peter reminds us to be thankful that “the word of the Lord endures forever” (1 Pt 1:25). It is this word that is the medium by which the good news of Jesus’ death for our sins on the cross and His resurrection for our hope is revealed (1 Pt 1:25). It is this word that reveals the eternal mystery of God that has now been revealed (Ep 3:3-5).

We can now understand the prayer statement of Jesus in John 17:17: “Sanctify them by Your truth. Your word is truth.” Because “the seed is the word of God” (Lk 8:11), when it is preached it brings forth fruit when people obey the gospel that is revealed through the written word of God. When the word of the gospel is preached, then comes to pass that of which James wrote: “Of His own will He brought us forth by the word of truth ...” (Js 1:18).

Christians existed in the province of Achaia because Paul preached the gospel in all Achaia. He later wrote to these disciples that “I have brought you forth through the gospel” which he had preached to them (1 Co 4:15; 15:1-4). We must never forget the revelation that Jesus stated: “The words that I speak to you, they are spirit and they are life” (Jn 6:63). They are spirit and life because it is through the medium of words that the story of the cross and resurrection are revealed. Not only this, but revealed also is how the repentant believer can join in the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus in obedience to the gospel (See Rm 6:3-6).

Chapter 4

SURVIVOR SPIRITUALITY

In the first letter of Peter, Peter writes with his heritage in mind in order to address the new nation of God that was born out of national Israel over thirty-five years before. The covenant and law that God had with Israel came to a close in A.D. 30, but now the state of Israel was coming to a close in less than five years and will be gone forever. There was a new nation of God's people on earth that had taken the place of the old. A spiritual had replaced the physical. As opposed to the citizens of the old who were rising up in rebellion against Rome, the new citizens of the spiritual were characterized by an example of submission, not only to God, but also to civil government.

This is the exhortation from God to all Christians throughout history who would find themselves as residents in hostile environments. Those who would be disciples of Jesus must learn the spirit of submission to civil government in order to bring glory to the God of heaven.

These words of Peter are some of the best there are in the Holy Scriptures that define the difference between the religions of man, and the faith of those who have submitted to the one true and living God. Those who would be tempted to take up arms and commit acts of terrorism and war to promote a theocratic religion, cannot claim to have a faith that originates from God if they live in rebellion against civil government.

Peter's readers were living in a time where Jewish nationalists were launching acts of terrorism against a state (the Roman Empire) that sought to maintain law and order. The nationalistic Jewish terrorists were rebelling against Rome in order to promote their own theocratic state. In this context, Peter was writing to Jewish Christians that they not be caught up in such carnality. They must remember who they are as the spiritual nation of God that is without territory. They must remember that there is a separation between the spiritual nation of God and any state government that is of this world. They must, therefore, keep in mind Paul's words that were written many years before:

For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but powerful through God for the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ (2 Co 10:4,5).

“New born babes” (1 Pt 2:2) as the citizens of God's holy nation are continually in the struggle of “laying aside all malice and all deceit and hypocrisies and envies and all evil speakings” (1 Pt 2:1). It is significant to notice how Peter says they are able to do this. They “desire the sincere milk of the word” (1 Pt 2:2). They study their Bibles, and if they do not, then they are not babes in Christ. We must not forget that a disciple of Jesus is always identified by his worn Bible. Because we study our Bibles, we are not as misguided religionists today who seek out a concert assembly of emotionally charged participants who desire to lose control of themselves in an hour of ecstasy. Such are not as the noble-minded Bereans who “received the word with all readiness of mind and searched the Scriptures daily ...” (At 17:11).

One's identity as a disciple is not in a colorful assembly, but in a daily thirst for the word of God, and a daily living of that word. Therefore, unless they be misled by the religions surrounding them, Peter writes to clarify the identity of the citizens of the kingdom of God.

A. Lay aside wickedness.

In order to accomplish their desire to be disciples of Jesus, disciples must do as Peter instructed. “Laying aside” (1 Pt 2:1) is from the Greek word that was used when one took off his garments and laid them aside. In this context, Peter exhorts that they discard the old way of behavior in order to live the life of a disciple. They must “cast off the works of darkness” and “put on the armor of light” (Rm 13:12). James said the same: “Therefore, lay aside all filthiness and overflow of wickedness, and receive with meekness the implanted word that is able to save your souls” (Js 1:21).

If we would seek a list of specifics as to what must be “laid aside,” then Paul listed them in the text of Colossians 3:8-10. Works (behavior) of darkness would be things as anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy speech and lying (See Ep 4:22-31). The list of the works of the flesh go on in Galatians 5:19-21: fornication, uncleanness, lewdness, idolatry, sorcery, hatred, strife, jealousy, outbursts of anger, selfish ambitions, dissensions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, revelries, and the such like.

A visitor to the coal mining area of eastern America once noticed a unique flower that grew in the midst of the coal mines. He wondered why the flower was not dirty from the coal dust of the area. So he threw some coal dust on the flower and the dust immediately slid off the pedals of the flower. What the Holy Spirit through Peter, James and Paul was seeking to convey to us is that if we lay aside the old garments of darkness, we too will eventually be citizens in the kingdom where wickedness will simply slide off. We will not be tempted beyond that which we are able to bear (1 Co 10:13). When we have resisted the devil, he will flee (Js 4:7).

B. Put on Christ.

We must understand that when one puts on Christ, it is as John wrote: “Whoever abides in Him does not sin. Whoever sins has not seen Him or known Him” (1 Jn 3:6). It is not that putting on Christ is a guarantee against committing a sin. What John means is that those who abide in Christ are no longer living a life of sin. But those who would continue a life of sin, do not know the One who died for their sins. John clarified this in the following statement: “Little children, let no one deceive you. He who practices righteousness is righteous, just as He is righteous” (1 Jn 3:7). The one who is obediently practicing that which is according to the will of God, is righteous because the grace of God is appropriated to his sins. It is the righteousness of Jesus that declares one redeemed. When one has put on Christ in baptism, God puts away his sins through the continual washing of his sins by the blood of Jesus (1 Jn 1:7).

It is not good enough to “put off” wickedness unless we “put on” something in its place. “Putting off” leaves an emotional vacuum. Unless one fills the vacuum, invariably he will return to that which he “put off” (Compare Mt 12:43-45; 2 Pt 2:20-22).

In order to be those from whom wickedness slides off, we must “put on the Lord Jesus Christ” (Rm 13:14). This “putting on” started the day we came dripping wet from the waters of baptism. “For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ” (Gl 3:27). Those who have not passed through the waters of baptism in order to wash away sins (At 22:16), have not put on Christ. They have left themselves vulnerable to return to darkness. Faith alone is not sufficient to keep one from returning to one’s former way of life. One must actively put on obedience in order to survive the committed life. Those who have obediently dressed themselves in the garment of Jesus Christ, and subsequently walk obediently in the light of God’s commands (1 Jn 1:7), have shielded themselves from darkness.

C. Thirst for the word of God.

In order to know what to do to walk obediently in the light, one must know where to walk. We must keep in mind that our fortitude against wickedness is conditioned on our obedience to the word of God. It is not within our power to determine our own steps (Jr 10:23). As citizens of God’s nation, we must continually “desire the sincere milk of the word so that” we may grow (1 Pt 2:2). If there is no growth in the grace and knowledge of Jesus, then spiritual death will soon come (2 Pt 3:18). We must, therefore, “hunger and thirst after righteousness” (Mt 5:6). We must be as David described the true disciple: “... his delight is in the law of the Lord, and on His law he meditates day and night” (Ps 1:2). As a disciple of Jesus, we must be able to say, “Your word I have hidden in my heart so that I might not sin against You” (Ps 119:11). If we lay up the word of God in our hearts, then the world will slide off. We will be able to resist the devil and he will flee (1 Pt 5:9). It is as James said, “Resist the devil and he will flee from you” (Js 4:7).

D. Be a living example.

Each disciple has come “to Him [Christ] as to a living stone” (Pt 2:4). Peter reflected on that which revived their hope as Jesus’ first disciples. God “has begotten us again to a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead” (1 Pt 1:3).

Jesus Christ is not another head stone in a graveyard that marks the termination of so many self-proclaimed prophets. He is not as the crookedly cut stone that the builders would reject in building a building. On the contrary, He is the exact cornerstone from which the measurements of the building have been made. He is the “chief cornerstone” of all that we are as the house of God (1 Pt 2:6).

Christians are the “living stones” who are being built up a spiritual house” by their spiritual measurement from the Chief Corner Stone (1 Pt 2:5). Those who measure themselves from the image of Jesus Christ, are offering unto God their lives as a reasonable response to the Sonship of Jesus (Rm 12:1). And thus, they have come to Jesus “to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ” (Pt 1:5).

In our offering, there can be no compromises. It is as someone said, “Compromise is always wrong when it means to sacrifice a principle.” We must not be like the young soldier during the American civil war of the nineteenth century who supposedly wanted to play it safe. So he dressed in the grey pants of the uniform of the Confederate Army of the south, but with the blue coat of the uniform of the Union Army of the north. The problem was that he was shot at by both sides in the conflict. When we make our sacrifice for Jesus, there must be no doubt as to which side of the mortal conflict we stand in our war against the forces of evil. Paul exhorted that every Christian “put on the whole armor of God...” (Ep 6:11). In doing so, we will “be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might” (Ep 6:10).

During the historical times of the day, many false christs had arisen among the Jews in order to call the people to be patriotic in restoring the Jewish state as it was in the days of David. During His prophecy of the fall of the Jewish state, Jesus prophesied that self-proclaimed christs would come. He prophesied, “For many will come in My name, saying, ‘I am the Christ.’ And they will deceive many” (Mt 24:5). But Jesus warned, “Then if anyone says to you, ‘Lo, here is Christ,’ or ‘There,’ do not believe it” (Mt 24:23). Nevertheless, many did believe the self-proclaimed christs, and thus, they were greatly disappointed either when the self-proclaimed christs were killed in the Jewish wars against Rome, or when they were taken into captivity after the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. But Peter reassured his readers that the true Living Stone will not disappoint them (1 Pt 2:6). He will be good for His promises.

The Living Stone that the rebellious Jews rejected (Jn 1:11), became “a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense” (1 Pt 2:8). He became such to everyone who would not accept Him as the Christ sent from God. So “they stumbled, being disobedient to the word” (1 Pt 2:8). And when the word of the gospel is preached throughout the world today, the same rejection happens.

Peter did not mean in the statement, “to this they were appointed,” that God had predestined them to rejection. Such thinking would make God fiendish for allowing someone to be born into this world whom He had predestined to burn in hell against his own volition.

The “appointed” were “vessels of wrath prepared for destruction” (Rm 9:22) because they chose to rebel against the living God. God is not willing that any should perish, and thus the offer of the gospel of salvation is to all people (2 Pt 3:9). God has predestined the destruction that would come upon all those who would choose to reject the gospel, but He has not predestined anyone individually to reject the gospel. Therefore, if one chooses to reject Jesus Christ, then he becomes “appointed” to the destruction that God predestined would come upon all the disobedient (See 2 Th 1:6-9). If one rejects the gospel, then he has joined with those who are appointed to destruction.

But the obedient have become a part of the royal priesthood (1 Pt 2:9). They are the new holy nation. God “has called you unto His kingdom and glory” (1 Th 2:12). “God has not called us to impurity, but in holiness” (1 Th 4:7). He has called us into this royal priesthood through the preaching of the gospel (2 Th 2:14). It is the message of the gospel that calls individuals into making a choice concerning obedience to that which God requires we do in order to wash away our sins (See At 22:16). It can be no other way, lest we make God fiendish by suggesting that He has predestined individuals to either heaven or hell.

As a reminder, Peter wrote, “You in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God” (1 Pt 2:10). Those who are outside Christ are not the people of God. In order to become a part of the people of God, one must enter into the holy nation through the door of obedience to the gospel. Paul explained it clearly: “For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ” (Gl 3:27). One cannot claim to be of the people of God unless he has put on Christ. And one cannot put on Christ unless he is immersed into Christ. In view of this fact, what do we think Satan would do to keep individuals from becoming a part of the people of God?

If Paul’s preceding statement is true—and it is—then Satan would convince people to think that they were the people of God on the other side of the waters of the new birth. He would convince people that a “sinner’s prayer” or “an acceptance of Jesus into one’s heart” was all that is needed to bring one into a saving relationship with God. Unfortunately, there will be a great deal of disappointed people in the judgment who have not dressed themselves with Christ by refusing to be buried and raised with Christ (See Rm 6:3-6).

E. Be a sojourner and pilgrim.

For those Christians who would engage themselves in efforts to make war against governments who function for our peace, they need to remember that our citizenship is far above any government of this world. We must remember that “our citizenship is in heaven” (Ph 3:20). And because our citizenship is in heaven, Peter exhorts that we “pass the time of your journey on earth in fear” (1 Pt 1:17).

We must be sojourners and pilgrims who war against the lusts of the flesh, not against the state. Paul exhorted, “put on the whole armor of God so that you may be able to stand against the schemes of the devil” (Ep 6:11). Sojourners are passing through every nation that comes into existence. Pilgrims have their minds set on a new destination that is not of this world (Cl 3:1,2). The sojourner, therefore, can remain faithful in his journey because his mind is focused on that which is beyond the land in which he is sojourning. It could not have been said better than in the following words:

Brethren, I count not myself to have laid hold. But one thing I do, forgetting those things that are behind and reaching forward to those things that are before. I press toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus (Ph 3:13,14).

As we sojourn among the unbelievers, we maintain the integrity of our holiness through honesty. We heed the life-style that Jesus directed: “Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven” (Mt 5:16). When the unbeliever observes our good works, he has the opportunity to “glorify God in the day of visitation,” the day when God brings judgment on national Israel (1 Pt 2:12). In other words, when a Roman soldier came breaking through a Christian’s door, a humble disciple should be discovered inside the house, one who was submissive to the law of the state in which he lived. It would be a moment when a disciple of Jesus should immediately confess that he was a Christian, and not some Jewish insurrectionist working against the state of Rome.

Chapter 5

SURVIVOR SUBMISSION

Since the Jewish disciples to whom Peter was writing were living in an era where nationalistic Jews were taking up arms against the Roman state, no better words could have been written to the citizens of God’s spiritual nation than what are inscribed in 1 Peter 2:13-25. This is the Holy Spirit’s instructions concerning our behavior as citizens of any earthly kingdom. Though we understand that our real citizenship is not of any kingdom of this world, we must be subservient to the civil governments of this world. We must rejoice when presidents and kings rule over men in the fear of God. The last words from King David exemplified the blessing of God-fearing rulers:

The God of Israel said. The Rock of Israel spoke to me. “He who rules over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he will be as the light of the morning when the sun rises, even a morning without clouds, as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain (2 Sm 23:3,4).

Rulers of governments must remember that “righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people” (Pv 14:34). Therefore, “Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord ...” (Ps 33:12).

When righteousness is not typical of the king’s house, however, then Christians must remember that their King in heaven is over all kings of this earth (1 Tm 6:15). It is sometimes necessary, therefore, when the earthly rulers work against God, that disciples of King Jesus must take a stand for what is right. It is sometimes as Peter and John said to the religious rulers of Jerusalem: “Whether it is right in the sight of God to give heed to you more than to God, you judge. For we cannot but speak the things that we have seen and heard” (At 4:19,20).

A. Live as a submitted citizen.

If there is no oppression from the civil government, then Christians, as citizens of a state government, must submit as Jesus to the laws of the land (See Mt 17:24-27; Mk 12:17). Therefore, we will not fail in our responsibilities as Paul wrote to Titus: “Remind them to be subject to rulers and authorities, to be obedient, to be ready for every good work” (Ti 3:1). As citizens, we must assume our citizenship responsibilities “to speak evil of no one, to be peaceable, forbearing, showing all meekness to all men” (Ti 3:2; see Ep 4:29). We thus obey the laws of the land for the Lord’s sake (1 Pt 2:13). We will always remember Paul's exhortation to all Christians in reference to our relationship with civil government:

Therefore, I exhort first of all that supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men, for kings and all who are in authority, so that we may lead a quiet and peaceful life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior (1 Tm 2:1-3).

"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake ..." (1 Pt 2:13). In order to give glory to the One whom we have submitted ourselves, we must submit to the authority of the state in which we live. We must remember that the authorities of the state have been "sent by Him [God] for the punishment of evildoers" (1 Pt 2:14). And since we seek to live in a civil environment of peace, civil government must exist.

As Peter walks us through these instructions, we must keep in mind that he is teaching that church and state must remain separate. It is not the work of the church to be the state in which both believers and unbelievers reside. It is not the work of the state to determine the moral standards by which the citizens of the kingdom of God must behave themselves. We will not become as a Nazi Germany when a few unbelievers controlled the moral direction of the state.

The Bible is not a constitution for the state, and thus the church must always function in the spiritual and moral environment of the citizens who live under the law of the civil state. The problem comes when either the state takes on the function of the spiritual kingdom of God (the church), or when the church seeks to establish the civil laws for the government. Christianity is not a theocracy. Christians must never find themselves in a situation where "Christianity" becomes the law of the state, and then Christians use the sword of the state to impose the law of God on the citizens of the state.

Christianity is not like Islam. There is no "Sharia Law" in Christianity that must be imposed on the citizens of the state when Christians are the majority citizenship of the state. If one would choose to be a citizen of the spiritual kingdom of Christ, then he must be called into citizenship through a voluntary submission to King Jesus. One does not become a Christian at the point of a gun, but through the appeal of the gospel.

What happened during the years of the Dark Ages of Europe was the development of an apostate religion. The adherents of this religion (Roman Catholicism) assumed the power of a state in order to intimidate by persecution those who would not submit to the dictates of the state religion, Roman Catholicism. In order to propagate this state religion, and to expand into Palestine, Crusades were organized to make war with Muslims who controlled the "Holy Land." What transpired during the era of the Crusades, was actually two theocratic states making war with one another. Neither theocracy was from God, and thus, historians make a critical error by assuming that the Crusades were a band of sword-bearing Christians in Europe making war with Muslims in Palestine. The reality of the matter was simply one army of apostates making war with army of those who did not accept Jesus as the Son of God. Christianity had long ceased to exist among the army of apostates who marched in crusades from Europe to Palestine.

We must not forget that every Christian must "be subject to the governing authorities" of the civil state (Rm 13:1). This means that Christianity is not a civil state. The reason for the submission is that "there is no authority except from God. The authorities that exist are ordained by God" (Rm 13:1). The authorities of the state are separate from the Christians who are to submit.

It is not that a specific civil government is directly instituted by God to govern the people. The constitution of a state is not inspired by God. Only Israel of old had such a constitution. Today, the rule of civil government is instituted by God to strike terror in the hearts of evildoers who would introduce social chaos into society (Rm 13:3). Therefore, if one would do evil, he should "be afraid, for the [government] does not bear the sword in vain because he is the minister of God, an avenger to execute wrath on him who does evil" (Rm 13:4).

Under the law of civil government, Christians can "live as free men" (1 Pt 2:16). There is no freedom without law, and thus, law protects the free from coming into the bondage of tyrants. Not only is this a principle of living under civil government, but it is also a principle of living under the law of Christ. We have gazed "into the perfect law of liberty," and thus, as James said, continue "to abide in it ..." (Js 1:25). However, though we are set free by law, we cannot use our "freedom as a covering for evil" to sin against law (1 Pt 2:16).

We live under grace that brings God's mercy into our imperfect behavior, but our freedom through grace must not be used as an occasion to live contrary to the law of God. Jude said that some "turn the grace of our God into licentiousness," and thus they "deny our only Master and Lord, Jesus Christ" (Jd 4). If one would behave sinfully according to the law of God, thinking that the grace of God covers his willful sin, then he has denied that Jesus is the Master and Lord of his behavior. But in living the submitted life to our Lord Jesus, it is only natural to "honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the king" (1 Pt 2:17).

B. Live as a servant.

At the time Peter wrote, over half of the population of the Roman Empire was composed of bondservants (slaves). It was among these that the freedom of the gospel spread rapidly throughout the Empire. The bondservants, therefore, needed specific encouragement to emulate in their lives the behavior of a disciple of Jesus. Therefore, Peter instructs the Christian bondservants, “be submissive to your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but also to the harsh” (1 Pt 2:18). He goes to point of stressing that it is commendable to submit even if “one endures grief, suffering wrongfully” (1 Pt 2:19). Here is what he meant: “*But if when you do right and suffer, you take it patiently, this is commendable with God” (1 Pt 2:20).

It is commendable to suffer even though one is innocent because of what Jesus said to those who drove nails through His innocent hands on the cross. “Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they are doing” (Lk 23:34). Such godly suffering was reflected in the last words of Stephen when he was stoned to death: “Lord, do not lay this sin to their charge” (At 7:60). What the enemies of all righteousness were doing in stoning Stephen was sin against God, but still he called on God’s grace that they not be charged with this sin. This is the spirit of true discipleship. When we are suffering wrongfully, therefore, it would be good to remember that it is written, “Vengeance is mine, I will repay, says the Lord” (Rm 12:19).

(We must not forget what was transpiring in the final days of Rome’s war against nationalistic Jews. Some of the bondservants who were slaves to Romans, were Christians. We can only imagine the dilemma these Christians would be in as Romans with Christian slaves persecuted Jewish Christians. This was a moral dilemma that was certainly far beyond any employee submitting to an employer in our modern-day economic culture. Imagine being in the situation that some Christian slaves were in during the war of Rome against national Israel.)

C. Live like Jesus.

Since the Jewish Christians were about to suffer indirectly the punishment that was going to be measured out on the nationalistic Jewish insurrectionists, they needed to remember that “Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example that you should follow His steps” (1 Pt 2:21). Jesus could have commanded that we willfully suffer. But His words would have been empty without His voluntary example of suffering for us. In living the life of a disciple, we must never forget that words of instruction alone are not the main thing. Living the life of the words is the unveiling of the power of the words. Someone correctly advised:

When telling your children a story,
And you use yourself as a sample,
Perhaps you should do it as a warning,
And not a shining example.

Peter said “that by doing right you may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men” (1 Pt 2:15). When Jesus “was reviled, He did not revile again. When He suffered, He did not threaten, but committed Himself to Him who judges righteously” (1 Pt 2:23). When Paul and Barnabas passed through cities where there were Christians who had been such for no longer than a few months, they prepared these new disciples for their future. Luke records that Paul and Barnabas exhorted the new disciples “*to continue in the faith, and teaching that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God” (At 14:22).

We must remember our sins for which Jesus suffered in order to bear “in His own body on the tree” (1 Pt 2:24). We always count our many blessings we have in Christ, but sometimes, we must remember all our sins for which He suffered to bring us into Christ. It was by His wounds that we are made alive. We have heard the voice of Jesus because He laid down His life for us (Jn 10:16,17). And because He laid down His life for us, we were drawn to Him for healing. We must let Him know through our surrendered living that His suffering was not in vain.

Many years ago, there was published in Life Magazine of America an incident that happened after the American Civil War between 1861 and 1865. The Lord’s Supper was being served in a church building in Richmond, Virginia when a freed slave walked forward in order to partake of the Supper. The membership began to stir until an old man walked up and knelt down beside the freed slave. Because of the example of the old man, the entire congregation of defeated slave-owning Southerners eventually followed his example and knelt with the former slave. The old man was General Robert E. Lee who had led the Confederate Army of the southern states of America against the freedom of the slaves. He had in 1865 surrendered the Confederate Army to the Union Army of the northern states, and then, led an example for his fellow slave owners of the south to surrender themselves to the new social order of life in America.

All to Jesus I surrender,
All to Him I freely give;
I will ever love and trust Him,

In His presence daily live.
(Judson W. van de Venter - 1896)

Chapter 6

SURVIVOR FAMILIES

The theme of Peter's exhortations of chapter 3 are expressed in a quoted statement from Psalm 34:12: "What man is he who desires life and loves many days, that he may see good?" The answer, of course, is that we all want to see good days. The psalmist explained what was required in order to enjoy a good life, which requirements Peter places directly in the middle of his own (1 Pt 3:10-12). So in order to see these good days, Peter sets out to explain what is necessary in our behavior as the disciples of Jesus in order to enjoy that about which Jesus promised in John 10:10: "I have come that they may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly."

One might wonder why Peter, in the historical context of the consummation of national Israel, would discuss family relationships. The answer why he gives some final encouragement to families was inferred in Jesus' prophecy about forty years before: "And woe to those who are with child and to those who are nursing infants in those days" (Mt 24:19). The days of fleeing were especially trying to all family relationships. Paul would even advise that men and women remain single: "Therefore, I suppose that this is good because of the present distress, that it is good for a man to remain [celebrate and single] as he is" (1 Co 7:26).

Jesus continued to warn, "And you will be betrayed both by parents and brothers and relatives and friends" (Lk 21:16). On another occasion, but still in the context of His prophesy concerning the termination of national Israel, Jesus prophesied, "And a brother will deliver up brother to death, and a father his child. And the children will rise up against parents and cause them to be put to death" (Mt 10:21).

In times of war, family structures break down. What Peter's readers were heading into was a war environment that Rome would launch across the Empire. They would unleash the sword against Jewish insurrectionists to once and for all break the back of the Jewish rebellion. It would be a time when Jewish fathers and husbands needed to remain committed to their families in order that their families survive. Wives and mothers needed to be strong in following the leadership of their husbands. As their part, children needed to be in subjection to their parents. We thus assume that in Peter's mind all the social turmoil that would come in reference to the end of national Israel drove him to write these special exhortations to Jewish Christian families across the Roman Empire.

In order to reassure Christian families, Peter begins by first speaking to wives (1 Pt 3:1-6), and then to husbands (1 Pt 3:7), then generally to the spiritual nation of God, the church (1 Pt 3:8-12). He concludes by addressing the family of God in the present environment in which they were enduring in order to maintain their faith (1 Pt 3:13-22). The abundant life is enjoyed when our families are directed by God, when our citizenship is maintained by godly behavior, and when we conduct our lives as disciples of the One who reigns over all things.

A. Society needs family norms.

In reference to the domestic relationships of the family, society always needs norms in which to be instructed and guided. These norms can either come from God, or from the society in which we live. Since the family is the heart of the function of society, then any dysfunction in society can be traced back to dysfunctional homes. And when discussing dysfunction in our homes, we assume that the norms of the world have been, to some extent, used to guide our families. Through both Paul and Peter, the Holy Spirit seeks to alert us to the invasion of worldly norms into our families. In the context of Ephesians 5:22-24, Paul's Spirit-directed pen revealed added information to that of Peter in this context.

Peter's instructions are placed in this text in view of the current circumstances in which his readers lived, and the trying days that were coming. In view of what Peter prophesied in 4:7, that "the end of all things is at hand," we conclude from the Holy Spirit's instructions in this context that strong family units would be needed to survive the struggles that were coming. What the Spirit says, therefore, must be understood in the immediate historical context of the day. However, his exhortations should be reviewed at any time in history when the disciples are undergoing struggles that would test their faith. When in struggle, therefore, Christians should focus on Spirit-inspired principles that define Christians to be disciples of Christ.

B. The wife is the trend setter.

The key “player” in establishing a stable family in a troubled society is the example of the wife in reference to setting an example of respect and submission for the children. Though society as a whole may be in a state of chaos, it is the responsibility of the wife and mother to bring peace and calm to the family through the demeanor of her strength. This was particularly true at a time when arrogant Jews were defiantly rebelling against the state of Rome. In order to prepare their children for the coming years of arrogant defiance that would be typical of the insurrectionist Jews, the Holy Spirit instructs Christian mothers to set for their children an example of respect and submission. Her respect for her husband through submission would help prevent her children from becoming radicalized by nationalistic Jews after they left home.

It is the spirit of all Christians to manifest submission in order to establish peace in domestic and civil relationships. Paul introduced his instructions concerning the family with the statement, “... submitting to one another in the fear of God” (Ep 5:21). The culture of the church must be identified by the principle of submission. On the part of every disciple, the teaching of submission starts in the home. If submission is not taught in the home, then the home will produce anarchists as citizens of society.

C. Submission governs society.

Submission is the social mechanism by which society is held today. The character of submission begins in the home and is taught to children through example. And in order to develop this essential quality in the character of future citizens of society, examples must be illustrated for the children. For this reason, therefore, Peter mandated that wives “be submissive to your own husbands” (1 Pt 3:1).

The wife must understand that her work of submission is a ministry of leadership. She leads in the character development of her children by manifesting how one should submit to civil authority and God. If there is no example in societies of submission in the family, then the children are emotionally ill equipped to face a world that is controlled by Satan. They leave the family with a spirit of defiance, not knowing how to conduct themselves with their fellow citizens in society as a whole. Mobs and riots in the streets of a society are evidence that submission was not taught in the homes of the families of the society.

In order for a wife to render submission to the head of the family, the head must be present in the family. Fatherless homes often produce anarchists in society. Children who grow up in a home environment where there is no father, cannot learn from the example of a wife submitting to a husband. Societies that are cursed with marches and riots in the streets are usually those societies with many fatherless homes.

D. God gives law for purposes.

Since the Holy Spirit gave the instructions to wives to submit to their husbands, then we must conclude that there is a divine purpose for the instructions. If wives do not submit to their own husbands, therefore, we must expect that something unfortunate will happen in the lives of the children when they leave the home.

God did not give arbitrary instructions for the home with no purpose in mind. There were reasons behind the instructions. Since the instructions come from God, then we would first obey the instructions without asking questions because we seek to obey God. But if we need reasons for the instructions, then we must simply observe the dysfunctions of society in order to discover what happens when people do not follow the instructions of God.

E. Submission for evangelism.

In the context of Peter’s instructions, there is a contrast made between the way of the world for the married woman, and the example of the godly disciple. A lack of submission on the part of the wife manifests to the world arrogance and defiance on the part of the wife, which is the way of the world. But in the domestic setting that Peter addresses, his reason for giving instructions concerning the submissive example of the wife is not only for the preservation of society, but also for evangelistic reasons. The reason for the submission is for the purpose “that if any [unbelieving husbands] do not obey the word, they, without the word, may be won by the behavior of the wives” (1 Pt 3:1).

This is evangelism through the power of performing the word of God. This is the meaning of Jesus’ mandate for unity which He gave to His disciples during His earthly ministry. They were to maintain their unity with one another “so that the world may believe that You sent Me” (Jn 17:21). The same principle of godly behavior should be manifested by the wife who is married to an unbeliever. The unbelieving husband may be won to Christ when he “observes your pure behavior combined with fear” of God (1 Pt 3:2). If a woman is married to one who is not a Christian, then her submissive behavior is evangelistic, and thus, she is showing her love for her husband in order to illustrate the love of Christ. As Christ submitted to our needs through the cross, and thus drew us to Him, then submissive wives might draw their unbelieving husbands to Christ through their submission.

F. Dress for successful outreach.

In order to be successful in this evangelistic outreach, the adornment of the wife’s body “should not be outward,” and thus according to the world (1 Pt 3:3). Godly wives must recognize that their evangelistic outreach to their unbelieving husbands begins in the closet and before their mirrors. When the Christian wife steps out of the house and into the public, there is a manner by which she can be identified as a woman of dignity, and not a woman of the world. A godly woman manifests her submission to her husband by dressing in a manner by which she is not advertising her body to other men.

Christian women must “dress themselves in modest clothing.” (1 Tm 2:9). Though the word “modest” may be subject to the definition of present times, there is still something that is considered modesty by the world. If a Christian woman first desires the attention of worldly men in her dress, then the concept of modesty and submission to her husband takes second place in her eyes when she sees herself in a mirror. Every Christian woman must remember that in the eyes of the Holy Spirit there is such a thing as modesty. Christian women should dress themselves as if they were presenting themselves before the mirror of the Holy Spirit. When a woman dresses herself in order to sexually arouse a man, then she knows that she has dressed immodestly.

Peter instructs that the Christian woman not adorn herself with the revealing nature of those clothes that advertise her body (1 Pt 3:3). She should dress herself with the modest apparel by which Christian wives reveal their inward spiritual focus (See 1 Tm 2:8-15). The wearing of jewelry should indicate that she is one who seeks to focus on godly matters. Both clothes and jewelry should manifest the dignity of a God-fearing woman who seeks to reveal “the imperishable quality of a meek and quiet spirit” (1 Pt 3:4). It is this inner character that “is precious in the sight of God” (1 Pt 3:4). It cannot be as the world would state, “A wife is usually satisfied with only two things: a mink over her shoulders, and a husband under her thumb.” It is both of these “styles” of behavior against which Peter and Paul advised.

G. Dress for respect.

Spiritual and physical adornment characterize the godly woman, for it is the spiritual that is revealed by the outward physical appearance. “Holy women who trusted in God” in the past “adorned themselves” inwardly with submission “to their own husbands” (1 Pt 3:5). Former godly wives maintained their exalted position in society through their submission to their husbands. Whenever they left this position, they were stepping down from their leadership of the home. The godly wives of old realized, as someone said, that “a good wife is like a port in a storm. A bad wife is like a storm in a port.” But it should be as one grateful husband wrote, “A loyal wife is one who sits up with you when you are sick and puts up with you when you are well.”

In the context of the wives of the times when Peter wrote, it would be the wise wives who would see through her husbands and the understanding wives who would see their husbands and families through difficult times that were coming in only a few years. It was through these times of social chaos that Peter’s readers were going to suffer greatly. Their suffering as disciples of Jesus would increase, and thus, it was going to take strong women to see their families through the social turmoil that would come in the consummation of national Israel.

If the Christian wife would be the spiritual descendant of Sarah, then she will reveal her respect for her husband by the manner she addresses herself to her husband. Sarah’s “calling him [Abraham] lord” (1 Pt 3:6) revealed the fact that she dressed in a physical and spiritual manner that revealed her submissive relationship to her husband. In maintaining her God-ordained relationship with her husband, she had confidence before God.

Sarah’s behavior was such, not because she was fearful of Abraham, but as Paul revealed in reference to the motive for our submission to one another. It was “in the fear of God” (Ep 5:21). We seek to manifest in our behavior what “is precious in the sight of God” in order to be pleasing to God (1 Pt 3:4). And when wives so behave as Sarah, then truly they are her spiritual children. All society, therefore, benefits from the submission that wives exercise toward their husbands.

Chapter 7

SURVIVOR HUSBANDS AND WIVES

Peter exhorts husbands to “ dwell with your wives with understanding ” (1 Pt 3:7). Paul added that “ husbands ought to love their own wives as their own bodies ” (Ep 5:28). As the husband “ nourishes and cherishes ” his own body, so he should do the same to his wife (Ep 5:29). The ideal husband would be the man who remains truly faithful to his wife, but at the same time remains as charming to her as if he were not married to her. If courting would continue until “death do us part,” then there would be no greater and fulfilling relationship on earth than what would exist between a husband and wife.

To dwell with one’s wife means to live in harmony with one’s wife while giving honor to her. Sometimes it might be as someone said, “A good husband is one who stands by his wife in troubles she would not have if she had not married him.” There might be some truth to that statement.

A. Husbands are to love their wives.

A husband who does not love and cherish his wife is either indifferent toward his wife or lives as a tyrant. Unloving husbands are usually focused on themselves. And thus, they usually give little attention to their wives. In order to maintain his headship in the family, an unloving husband often seeks to dominate his wife by subjecting her to be in his ownership. The beauty of Christianity over man-made religions is that the man in a Christian marriage considers his wife a maiden to be loved, not as property to be owned.

It is almost without exception throughout the world that man-made religions are identified by the oppression of the woman in some manner in marriage and in society. Husbands in such religions do not see themselves as encouragers of their wives to be the best they can be in the world in which they live. The well-known Billy Sunday once said, “Try praising your wife, even if it frightens her at first.” Unfortunately, because of their own inferiority complexes, the husbands of man-made religions will seek to exalt themselves by oppressing the women of their religion.

In order to maintain a healthy relationship between a husband and wife, someone gave the following good advice that should characterize the attitude of both the husband and wife. Both should be ...

... slow to suspect, quick, to trust;
 ... slow to condemn, quick to justify;
 ... slow to expose, quick to shield;
 ... slow to reprimand, quick to forbear;
 ... slow to demand, quick to give;
 ... slow to resent, quick to forgive;
 ... slow to hinder, quick to help;
 ... slow to belittle, quick to encourage;
 ... slow to provoke, quick to calm.

B. Husbands are to dwell with their wives.

Husbands must dwell with their wives in a manner that reflects “ giving honor to the wife as to the weaker vessel ” (1 Pt 3:7). “Dwell” means that the husband and father must at least show up at home enough to be considered dwelling with his family. Those homes that have no “dwelling” fathers are those homes that have no example of how authority cherishes a woman.

Socially dysfunctional boys come out of fatherless homes. They are often dysfunctional in that they do not know how to treat a wife in a marriage relationship. If a young man has grown up in a fatherless family, then it must be assumed that his behavior toward a woman in marriage will often be challenged since he had no home life in which to observe how a man should love a woman in marriage. In such cases, it is imperative that the young man learn the love of God as it is carried out in Christian families in order to lovingly dwell with his wife.

From 1957 to 1961, Douglas MacArthur II served as Counselor of the State Department of America in Japan. He served under John F. Dulles. As Dulles, MacArthur was an obsessive worker to rebuild Japan after WW II.

Time Magazine once reported a brief telephone conversation that Dulles had with the wife of MacArthur. Dulles called and asked for Douglas. Mrs. MacArthur, in her frustration of trying to run a family with an absent husband, thought that the phone call was from one of her husband’s aides. She sharply and irritantly replied to Dulles on the phone, “MacArthur is where MacArthur always is weekdays, Saturdays, Sundays and nights ... in his office!”

When Dulles hung up the phone, MacArthur received a phone call with the orders from Dulles, “Go home at once, boy! Your home front is crumbling!”

Nevertheless, we remember reading the 8th century Greek mythology entitled the Iliad. It was a story of how Odysseus, the husband of Penelope, remained faithful to her husband in his absence. Odysseus fought in the Trojan War that lasted for ten years, and then, through a ten-year struggle, he sought to make his way home to his beloved Penelope.

During the twenty-year absence of Odysseus, it was assumed back home that he had died in the war. Therefore, assuming that he was dead, numerous unscrupulous suitors competed for the hand of Penelope. However, Penelope would not believe that her husband was dead. In order to keep the suitors at bay, she told them that she would not make her choice concerning which suitor she would choose for marriage until she had completed the weaving of a funeral pall for her father-in-law. Every night she unraveled what she had woven during the day. The suitors were persistent, but their persistence was weak in comparison to her love for her absent husband. Eventually, Odysseus completed his epic journey home and fell into the loving arms of his beloved Penelope. The suitors disappeared.

C. Husbands must be there for their wives.

The woman's weakness is not in intellect, but physically. In the case of a gentle woman, her weakness is her tenderness and sensitivity in the hostile environment in which she lives. It is the responsibility of the husband to maintain the harmonious relationship of the marriage in order "that your prayers not be hindered" (1 Pt 3:7). His spiritual leadership is manifested in the fact that he maintains a home environment in which all family members may have a spiritual connection with God and a sense of security. The wife leads in the family through her living example of submission to the head of the family (See Ep 5:22,23). The husband leads in his loving consideration for his wife in respecting her thinking. It is like the sign of a frustrated manager of a wallpaper and paint store because he was tired of so much wallpaper and paint being returned: "Husbands choosing colors must have a note from their wives."

Christians must always assume that the societies in which they live are dysfunctional in some way in reference to what God requires in family relationships. This is true because the world does not use the word of God as the standard by which the family is structured. The world establishes its own function of the family. For this reason, therefore, Christian families must be cautious about structuring their family values and behavior after the social environment in which they live.

Christian families must always assume that in some worldly structured families there is behavior that is contrary to the word of God. The only way Christian families can discover these dysfunctions is to study the word of God. We can never know what is abnormal behavior unless we study in the Bible that which is normal.

If we discover that our family is in some way structured after the ways of the world, then we must make a decision. The decision is to whether we will obey God or man. If we choose to obey the way of man to establish the values and structure of our family, then we must be prepared to live with the consequences that come from living contrary to the word of God. As the head of the Christian family, this responsibility rests primarily on the shoulders of the head of the family.

Those wives who have children, but are married with unbelieving husbands, must be assured that they can be successful in bringing up their children to respect the will of God. Eunice, a Jewish woman, lived with a Greek husband, whom we assume, had no faith in the one true and living God. We are told that the couple were the parents of only one child. Nevertheless, Eunice did her faithful work as a believing mother and wife by instilling in her son a genuine faith that eventually led Timothy, her son, to be a great man of God (At 16:1-3; 2 Tm 1:5; 3:15).

Chapter 8

SURVIVOR DISCIPLESHIP

There is nothing greater to take one individually through times of toil and turmoil than the fellowship of a strong family. And that which makes strong families are true disciples of Jesus Christ who take their commitment to our Lord very seriously. The life of a disciple that is guided by the word of Christ is a life that is designed to encounter and conquer every struggle that this world can offer.

A. The life of a disciple:

In order to be more than conquerors over the struggles of this world (Rm 8:37), the first relational strength that disciples must have with one another is that they “be of one mind” (1 Pt 3:8). As stated previously, the strength of their witness to the world is that for which Jesus asked when He prayed that His disciples “may be one; even as You, Father, are in Me and I in You” (Jn 17:21; see 1 Co 1:10). In order to have and sustain this type of relationship as the family of God, each member of the body must have “compassion one for another” (1 Pt 3:8).

Love, kindheartedness and humility should be typical of the social nature of the body of Christ. In order to develop the social environment among brethren, each member must “not render evil for evil or insult for insult” (1 Pt 3:9). Those who would “inherit a blessing,” must be known for blessing others (1 Pt 3:9).

There is a very practical life-style by which, as a group, the family of God can overcome the turmoil that is in the world. In our relationships as a family, everyone must “refrain his tongue from evil and his lips that they speak no deceit” (1 Pt 3:10). Speaking evil of one another destroys relationships. Lies make relationships impossible. Therefore, each one of us must be determined to “turn away from evil and do good” (1 Pt 3:11). Each one of us must be peacemakers if we are to have genuine relationships with one another. We must remember Jesus’ declaration: “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called the children of God” (Mt 5:9). If we are not of the character that Jesus herein infers, then we must remember that “the face of the Lord is against those who do evil” (1 Pt 3:12).

B. The courageous disciple:

Paul wrote to Christians in Rome who had suffered under Nero. Peter wrote to Jewish Christians who would in the near future suffer indirectly at the hand of the Roman against the Jews. Both writers asked a question for which those by faith could answer correctly. Paul asked, “Who will lay anything to the charge of God’s elect” (Rm 8:33)? Peter asked, “And who is he who will harm you if you follow what is good?” (1 Pt 3:13). Both writers were asking their questions in the context of those who would attack both their spiritual relationship with God and their physical bodies. These Christians were going into the turmoil that would result from the end of national Israel. But if their spiritual strength prevailed, then they did not need worry about what might happen to their physical presence in this world. The Christians of the day, while under persecution, must be faithful, even though to many it would mean death (See Rv 2:10). But death for one’s faith is not the real enemy against the righteous of God. The real enemy is unseen.

For we do not wrestle against flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the powers, against the world forces of darkness of this age, against spiritual hosts of wickedness in high places (Ep 6:12).

In this spiritual warfare, many will lose their physical presence in this world. However, there is absolutely no one of this world who can separate us from the love of God. Physical death is only a separation of the body from our spirit (Js 2:26). But this separation will in no way cause a separation of our spirit from God. We must always answer the question correctly that Paul posed, “If God is for us, who can be against us?” (Rm 8:31). The answer is that no one can win against God, and thus, no one can win against those who belong to God. So, “... in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him who loved us” (Rm 8:37). There is nothing of this world that “will be able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rm 8:39).

If one would, therefore, “suffer for righteousness sake,” Peter encouraged, “do not be afraid ... and do not be troubled” (1 Pt 3:14). The means by which we conquer fear and anxiety is to “sanctify Christ as Lord God” in our hearts (1 Pt 3:15). When we behave in a courageous manner in times of suffering, those who are burdened with the worries of the world will inquire concerning our faith. And thus, every Christian must “be ready always to give a defense to everyone who asks” concerning that which empowers him to maintain his strength through the turmoil of this present world (1 Pt 3:15).

C. The hated disciple:

When Jesus said to His disciples that the world would hate you because they hated Him, He knew that the hate of the world would be generated from the evil that is within the heart of the haters (Jn 7:7; 14:18,19). Peter stated that the hate of the world would be revealed “when they slander you as evildoers” (1 Pt 3:16). It would not be that the disciples were doing evil in the sight of God. They would refuse to live according to the evil standards of the world. “If you were of the world, the world would love its own. But because you are not of the world, but I chose you out of the world, therefore the world hates you” (Jn 15:19). Nevertheless, at least most of the world can recognize that which is good. When those who are of the world recognize “good behavior in Christ” they “will be ashamed” (1 Pt 3:16). Because the good of the righteous is pure, all that the world can do to manifest its antagonism against the Christian is to resort to slander. The worldly thus speak lies against those they envy.

D. The slandered disciple:

Slander is speaking falsely in order to bring shame upon the individual against whom it is directed. But when the recipient of slander knows that his heart is right before God, then he knows that his “good conscience” is untouched, regardless of all the slander that would be launched against him (1 Pt 3:16). When one is behaving according to what he believes God wants him to do, then he is undeterred by those who slander out of either jealousy, or simply worldly thinking. If one “suffers for doing right” (1 Pt 3:17), then he can have confidence toward God. When we hear slander against us, we should always find comfort in God as King David:

For I have heard the slander of many. Fear was on every side. While they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life. But I trust in You, O Lord. I said, “You are my God” (Ps 31:13,14).

In reference to those who would engage themselves in slander against their brothers and sisters in Christ, they need to remember the word of God: “Whoever secretly slanders his neighbor, him I will cut off. The one who has a haughty look and an arrogant heart, I will not endure” (Ps 101:5). The slanderous person will be cut off simply because he is as Solomon stated: “He who hides hatred with lying lips, and who utters slander, is a fool” (Pv 10:18). At the time these words were spoken, God was taking national Israel into the Babylonian captivity of 586 B.C. Through the preaching of Jeremiah, one of the social dysfunctions of the Israelites was identified by God: “Let everyone be on guard against his neighbor, and do not trust any brother, for every brother deals craftily and every neighbor goes about as a slanderer” (Jr 9:4). If this would ever become the social environment of the family of God, then the family would be headed for the same judgment that God unleashed on national Israel. Therefore, if one does evil by lying to and slandering his brother in Christ, then he will suffer the vengeance of God for harming God’s family.

E. The obedient disciple:

Jesus led the way on our road to suffering. He suffered as “the just for the unjust” (1 Pt 3:18). And we were the unjust who were dead in our sins, for which He suffered once and for all on the cross.

Peter takes us on a journey with the spirit of Christ after He died on the cross and before His resurrection. Though Jesus’ body died on the cross, He was “made alive by the Spirit” (1 Pt 3:18). In this state of being “He went and proclaimed [announced] to the spirits in prison” (1 Pt 3:19). These were those spirits in the hadean world who “were disobedient when the longsuffering of God waited patiently in the days of Noah” while Noah preached and built the ark (1 Pt 3:20).

Peter does not reveal the purpose for this journey of Christ in the spirit. We would only assume that those who refused to listen to the righteous preacher Noah needed to know that what Noah preached had been fulfilled. As a part of their eternal torment, they needed to gnash their teeth over the fact that they rejected that by which Noah and his family were rewarded. After their death they lifted up their eyes in hades, “being in torments” (Lk 16:23). In contrast to this destiny, Noah and his family found themselves in the comfort of God (See Lk 16:23-31). They were rewarded with the comfort of God because of their faithful obedience.

F. The saved disciple:

In 1 Peter 3:21, Peter did not move us away from the purpose for which he used Noah and his family as an illustration for our salvation. The wicked of Noah’s day could not be saved from the flood waters because of their disobedience to that which Noah preached. In contrast to their disobedience, Noah, by obedient faith, built the ark (Hb 11:7). By faith he and his family entered into the ark. It was in the ark that he and his family were saved. The flood waters separated his family from the world of sin.

Peter cuts straight to the point by saying “the like figure whereunto even baptism does also now save us” (1 Pt 3:21). It is not that there is mystical saving power in the water, but it is at the point of the water that one’s sins are washed away by the blood of Jesus (At 22:16). It is at the point of baptism that one is separated from his old life of sin (Rm 6:3-6). It is then from the water that one is born again (Jn 3:3-5). It took more than Noah’s faith to build the ark to save him and his family from the impending flood. His faith had to be coupled with obedience, as opposed to those who were disobedient. If he had not built the ark in faith, then the waters of the flood would also have consumed him and his family.

Baptism is significant as Jesus said, “He who believes and is baptized will be saved” (Mk 16:16). Noah built by faith, and that which he obediently built saved him. But if one’s belief is not strong enough to get him into the grave of water, then there is no reason to talk about being saved. Noah believed, and his belief both prepared and took him into the ark. One may claim to believe in Jesus Christ, but if this belief does not take him into that which will wash away his sins, then it will be as Jesus said, “... he who does not believe will be condemned” (Mk 16:16).

There is no reason to discuss baptism for remission of sins (At 2:38), if one is convinced that he or she is saved only by faith and without entering the “ark.” So Paul would ask the faith only disobedient, “Or do you not know that as many of us as were baptized into Christ were baptized into His death?” (Rm 6:3). The baptized believer has come into the “ark” of Christ, wherein there is salvation. Because he has been baptized into Christ, he has “the appeal of a good conscience to God” (1 Pt 3:21). He knows that he has done all that God requires that one do in order to be delivered from the flood of his past sins.

The obedient believer has become subservient to the One “who has gone into heaven and is at the right hand of God, angels and authorities and powers having been made subject to Him” (1 Pt 3:22). The resurrected One is the controlling head over all things for the sake of the church. Paul was specific: “And He [the Father] put all things under His [the Son’s] feet, and gave Him to be head over all things to the church” (Ep 1:22).

We can find comfort in the fact that Jesus is now King of kings and Lord of lords (1 Tm 6:15). The obedient can find comfort in the fact that even Caesar of Rome is under the kingdom reign of Jesus. Since all the kingdom reign of Jesus encompasses all things, then the persecuted Christian can gain strength in the fact that he is more than a conqueror than those who can conquer only nations of this world (Rm 8:37). Those who have been baptized into Christ have been lifted from the flood waters of evil, and eventually, will be delivered to a new realm of existence wherein the old will have passed away.

And God will wipe away every tear from their eyes. And there will be no more death nor sorrow nor crying. Nor will there be any more pain, for the former things have passed away (Rv 21:4).

Chapter 9

SURVIVOR LIVES

The person “who has suffered in the flesh has ceased from sin” in the sense that he has committed his life to being a disciple of Jesus (1 Pt 4:1). “Yes, and all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution” (2 Tm 3:12). For this reason, Paul and Barnabas revisited those who had dedicated themselves to living the life of a disciple, “teaching that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God” (At 14:22).

The life of a disciple should be characterized by what Peter instructs in 1 Peter 4:1-11. There were unique historical events that were transpiring among the Jewish Christians at the time Peter wrote these words. Peter’s message in the entire book is directed specifically to Jews who had been converted to Christ, which Jews were moving into some trying times in the near future (1 Pt 1:1). Since the termination of national Israel was looming in the near future, and thus the termination of all things in reference to his readers’ Jewish heritage, then there were some special exhortations of which these Christians needed to be reminded.

A. The life of confession:

Those who have committed themselves to live according to the will of God cease living a life of sin, but do not cease from committing acts of sin. Now “if we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us” (1 Jn 1:8). The disciple has ceased from a life of sin, but is not without sin. Nevertheless, “if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness” (1 Jn 1:9). To be cleansed of “all unrighteousness” means that we become righteous before God through the continual cleansing of the blood of Jesus (1 Jn 1:7). It is not that we have learned to live perfectly before God according to His law, but that we are justified by His grace because we have committed ourselves to His Son. Therefore, we would not say “that we have not sinned,” lest “we make Him a liar ...” (1 Jn 1:10). On the contrary, the disciple of Jesus lives the life of continually confessing his sins before God.

B. The persecuted life:

Peter is continually conscious of the trying times into which his readers are headed. Jesus knew that He was headed for the cross, and thus He prepared His mind to suffer. As disciples of Jesus who suffered for us, Christians are to arm themselves “also with the same mind” (1 Pt 4:1). Peter’s readers had behaved sinfully in their former lives when they lived according to “the will of the Gentiles” (1 Pt 4:3). But since their conversion to Christ, all those unrepentant friends whom they had while doing the will of the Gentiles, “think it strange that you do not run with them in the same excess of riot” (1 Pt 4:4). The repentant disciple is thus mocked by his former friends in the flesh because he no longer enjoys a life of rebellion against God.

C. The prepared life:

Since we would stay in the historical context of both Peter and his Jewish audience, we would understand that Jesus in the near future was ready “to judge the living and the dead” in bringing judgment on Jerusalem (2 Tm 4:1). We do know that the Father has given the Son the right to judge at the end of time (At 17:30,31). But we must not forget that when Jesus ascended to the right hand of God, it was then that the authority of all judgment was given to Him (See Dn 2:44; 7:13,14; Mt 28:18; Ph 2:9-11; Hb 8:1). He now reigns with the authority of all judgment over all things (1 Pt 3:22).

In the historical context of Peter’s audience, there was an in-time judgment coming upon unbelieving Jews who persecuted Jewish Christians simply because they left the heritage of the fathers in their acceptance that Jesus was the Messiah. The Jewish unbelievers went from city to city persecuting all those whom they considered traitors of national Israel (See At 8:1-3). But according to the prophecy of Jesus in Matthew 24 (See Lk 21), judgment would come upon unbelieving Jewish persecutors in the termination of national Israel and the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple in A.D. 70. Peter, James and Jude reflected on this coming judgment. James’ words are more precise:

Therefore, be patient, brethren, until the coming of the Lord. Behold, the farmer waits for the precious fruit of the earth. And he has long patience for it, until he receives the early and latter rain. You also be patient. Establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord is near (Js 5:6,7).

This “coming of the Lord” about which James wrote, was not the final coming of the Lord at the end of time. If it were, then the word “near” would mean at least 2,000 years and James would have deceived his readers into thinking that Jesus’ final coming would occur in their lifetime. Since both Peter and James were writing to the same Jewish audience (1 Pt 1:1; Js 1:1), then the coming of the Lord about which both referred was to happen in time. And in reference to the date of writing of both letters, this coming was going to happen within only a few years after they wrote their letters of encouragement to persecuted Jewish Christians. Therefore, their focus was on the fulfillment of Jesus’ prophecy that He was terminating national Israel (Mt 24). The “end of all things” in reference to national Israel was indeed at hand.

Since the unbelieving Jews “will give account to Him, ... the gospel was preached [announced] also to those who are dead, so that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but living according to God in the spirit” (1 Pt 4:5,6). Jesus was not willing that any should perish (2 Pt 3:9). Therefore, the gospel was preached to those who were spiritually dead and unresponsive to the gospel. On their first mission journey, Paul and Barnabas had said the same to their rebellious Jewish audience: “It was necessary that the word of God should first be spoken to you [Jews]. Since you reject it and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, behold, we turn to the Gentiles” (At 13:46). The Jews had their chance, both during the time of Jesus’ earthly ministry and the early evangelistic efforts of the church. But they rejected the gospel, and thus, they made the choice to remain dead in their sins (Jn 8:21,24). They judged themselves unworthy of eternal life because of their refusal to believe that Jesus was the Messiah. In the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, over one million unbelieving Jews would die in their sins. The fact that these unbelievers died in the destruction was evidence that they had rejected the gospel.

However, those “men in the flesh” who “live according to God in the spirit” (1 Pt 4:6), were saved in that not one Christian is known to have died in the destruction of Jerusalem. Rome took her vengeance out on the insurrectionist Jews during the Passover/Pentecost feast of A.D. 70. Jewish Christians throughout the world had listened to Jesus and the New Testament prophets, and thus, they too stayed away from Jerusalem. The Christians believed Jesus concerning the destruction of Jerusalem. They had heeded the warnings, and thus stayed away from the end of Jerusalem. Jesus was judged just in bringing judgment upon the one million Jews who died in the war of Rome on Israel because the unbelieving Jews had rejected the gospel. That which could have saved them from doom had been preached in Jerusalem since A.D. 27, the time when Jesus first began His ministry.

D. Termination of all things:

Peter was not deceiving his readers when he made the statement, “But the end of all things is at hand” (1 Pt 4:7). This “end” was something that was going to happen soon, and in their lifetime. This statement does not apply directly to us today. It was a coming of the Lord in judgment in time, and thus, it applied directly to those to whom Peter wrote.

“All things” to Peter and his Jewish readers referred to their world of Judaism and national Israel. Encompassed in the phrase “all things,” were two millennia of history that began with Abraham. “All things” was a reference to their Jewish heritage that was coming to an end. The conclusion of all these things was in the prophecy that Jesus made during His earthly ministry when He spoke to the Jews concerning the termination of national Israel:

Then Jesus went out and departed from the temple. And His disciples came to show Him the buildings of the temple. And Jesus said to them, “Do you not see all these things? Truly I say to you, there will not be left here one stone upon another that will not be thrown down” (Mt 24:1,3).

“All these things” in the prophecy of Jesus was the same as the “all things” about which Peter wrote in 4:7. Reference was to God’s finalization of national Israel, for she had served her purpose of bringing the Redeemer into the world.

The termination of “all these things” was “at hand.” “At hand” did not refer to something outside the lifetime of Peter’s audience. The phrase did not refer to something that would take place over 2,000 years later. And thus, Peter, as James and Jude, did not deceive their first readers into thinking that Jesus was coming in His final coming to terminate this world within the lifetime of their immediate readers.

“At hand” means soon to happen. And concerning the time when Peter, James and Jude wrote, the Lord was coming with His messengers in order to rain down judgment on those Jews who rejected Jesus as the Son of God (See Jn 1:11). Jude used the prophetic words of Enoch that were originally used to refer to those unbelievers who were taken away by the flood of Noah’s day. He applied the statement of Enoch to the unbelievers who would be taken away by the destruction of national Israel:

Behold, the Lord came with ten thousands of His saints to execute judgment on all, and to convict all who are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds that they have committed in an ungodly way, and of all the harsh things that ungodly sinners have spoken against Him (Jd 14,15).

In view of the fact that all things in reference to national Israel were drawing to a close, Peter exhorted that his Jewish readers “be sober and watch unto prayer” (1 Pt 4:7). Jesus said the same in the context of the end of national Israel during His earthly ministry: “Therefore, watch, for you do not know what day your Lord is coming” (Mt 24:42). The disciples were to watch and “be ready, for the Son of Man is coming at an hour when you do not expect Him” (Mt 24:44).

Thirty-five years after this statement was made by Jesus, the disciples knew that the prophecy of Jesus was about to be fulfilled. But they did not know when Rome would make the decision to terminate national Israel. As the Roman army marched toward Jerusalem, the disciples were given only the warning that they would “hear of wars and rumors of wars” (Mt 24:6). These events would not be the end. “All these are the beginning of sorrows” in Judea (Mt 24:8). These events would be the warning to believing Jewish Christians that they should either stay away from Jerusalem, or if they lived in Jerusalem, to get out of town.

As for us today, when in times of struggle, the Holy Spirit’s advice is to maintain a sound mind. We must not fret, though it may seem that our world is coming apart. The root meaning for the word Peter uses, “sober,” means to be safe. In other words, he is exhorting his readers to keep their minds in a safe condition. When under either suffering or persecution, we must not react to the circumstances, but act safely and sensible.

E. Maintain love.

It is interesting to note what Peter says in this context concerning the end of Israel because of what Jesus said in His prophecy that is recorded in Matthew 24 and Luke 21. Jesus said in reference to the end of all these things, that “the love of many will grow cold” (Mt 24:12). Peter said, “And above all things have fervent love among yourselves, for love will cover a multitude of sins” (1 Pt 4:8). It seems that our love for one another is strained in times of struggle. Struggle moves us to think more about ourselves than others. Peter, therefore, knew that his readers needed exhortation to focus on loving the brotherhood throughout the Roman Empire, for all believers, Jews and Gentiles, were struggling at the time Peter wrote. They were struggling under the personal vendetta of Nero against Christians. Nero subsequently committed suicide, but the persecution of Christians would continue off and on until Caesar Galarius issued the Edict of Toleration in A.D. 311 (1 Pt 1:22; 2:17).

Sometimes love for others covers a multitude of sins in ourselves. Proverbs 10:12 expresses a great truth: “Hatred stirs up strifes, but love covers all sins.” If we harbor hate, we will behave accordingly. We will sin against our fellow man. But if the love of God is in our hearts, then we guard ourselves from acting in a hateful manner toward our fellow man.

We do know that during the Roman persecution that would come upon the church in the years to come, some would deny their faith in Jesus in order to escape persecution. One of the fellowship problems that developed in the church after the state persecution of Rome was lifted in A.D. 311, was on the part of some who did not want to receive back into the fellowship of the church those who had denied Jesus in order not to die for Him. But in the spirit of love, even this sin of betrayal should be forgiven. We must always remember what John wrote in reference to the forgiveness of God: “If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins ...” (1 Jn 1:9).

F. Hotels for Christ:

There were no hotels in which fleeing Christians could check into during the times of struggle. It is not surprising, therefore, to see the Holy Spirit instituting that every Christian home should be a hotel for traveling evangelists, or fleeing Christians. “Be hospitable one to another without grumbling” (1 Pt 4:9). Gaius was known throughout the brotherhood for being one who received and sent forth those brethren who came his way (See 3 Jn 5-8). His house was a hotel for those on the move.

It may have been that Gaius lived during these times, and thus, some of the “strangers” he took in could have been fleeing Jewish Christians (3 Jn 5,6). We do not know all the circumstances as to why Diotrephes hindered the well-doing hospitality of Gaius and those Christians in the area as Demetrius. But since Diotrephes was one who had a Greek name of aristocracy, it may have been that he did not want to be seen as one who was working against Rome’s efforts to silence Jewish insurrection. We can only assume the circumstances and the political pressure that the early Christians had to endure, even by taking in fleeing Jews from Jerusalem (Mt 24:15-20; compare Ph 1:15-18).

When the “end of all things” transpired, many Jewish Christians would be fleeing their homes. Thirty-five years before, Jesus said that these Christians should flee Jerusalem (See Mt 24:17-20). It would be a time, therefore, when loving hospitality had to be shown to those who were fleeing from their homes in Judea. The flight of Jewish Christians had earlier happened during a local persecution by Jews upon Jewish Christians when Saul led unbelieving Jews against believing Jews (See At 8:4). The persecution about which Peter, James and Jude wrote would come indirectly on Jewish Christians who would be caught up in Rome’s termination of national Israel.

The hospitality of Christians is not to be expressed exclusively toward the household of faith. Hospitality is a behavioral pattern that Christians should have toward all men. In times when we are often burdened with receiving guests, we need to remember that as children of God we are to manifest a spirit of hospitality toward all men. And in maintaining our behavior of hospitality, we must always remember what the Holy Spirit said through Paul: “Do all things without grumbling and disputing” (Ph 2:14).

In the historical context of what Peter foresaw, he was preparing the Jewish Christians of the Diaspora that they should be ready to receive many Jewish Christians who would be fleeing Palestine when the Romans started to bring to an end all things in reference to national Israel. They would certainly carry a great responsibility in housing a large number of resident Jewish Christians whose homes in Jerusalem were destroyed when Jerusalem was burned.

G. Gifted for ministry:

Since every person is born as a gifted human being, then we conclude that God created us to use our gifts to survive in this world. It is evident that our natural gifts that we receive as an offspring of God’s creation are to be used for living. However, in the context in which Peter writes he seems to reflect on the miraculous gifts that were distributed throughout the first century through the laying on of the apostles’ hands (At 8:17,18). Since these gifts were distributed liberally in the absence of any inspired written directions from the Spirit through the New Testament letters, then we must assume that in the background of what is said in the letters that the miraculous gifts were functioning to build up of the body of Christ. This seems to be the situation of Peter’s readers as they headed into some trying times of suffering.

Stewardship involves the use of one’s grace-given gift in ministry for others. The miraculous gifts were not given for selfish gains. This leads us to believe that in this context, the gifts under discussion were the miraculous gifts of the Spirit that Paul explained in the context of 1 Corinthians 12:28-30, which gifts he said would eventually pass away in the first century (1 Co 13:8-10). These gifts were given by the grace of God, but the natural gifts were received at birth.

Since Peter states that the gifts about which he is speaking come with the responsibility of using them to minister to others, then we would conclude that these gifts were the miraculous gifts that were specifically given only by the favor (grace) of God, and for the building up of the early church in the absence of the written word of God. These gifts were given for ministry, not to be used selfishly by the recipient to make a better life for himself.

Natural gifts, however, were different than miraculous gifts. Everyone is born with one or more natural gifts that are to be used to carry one through life. Natural gifts are to be used responsibly in order that one work for his own food and provide for his family. When we discuss natural gifts, therefore, we use the word responsibility. But when we refer to miraculous gifts, we use the word stewardship, for the miraculous gifts were not given for one's own selfish use. This is what some tried to do in Corinth when they arrogantly spoke with other languages they had not learned. Some were using the miraculous gifts to manifest their pride, and in reference to those who had the gift of teaching (prophecy), they were using their gifts arrogantly.

H. Focus on the word:

"If anyone speaks" (1 Pt 4:11) in the context of Peter's readers, they could not quote from the New Testament Scriptures, for most had not been fully circulated among the churches. They possibly had copies of the Old Testament Scriptures that they had read to them at the local synagogue. But we would assume in this context, however, that those who spoke must speak the revealed word of God that came to them from the Holy Spirit's gift of prophecy. In other words, what Peter was speaking against here were those speakers who spoke nonsense, while there was one in the presence of the disciples on whom hands had been laid to receive the gift of teaching (Compare Rm 16:18; 2 Tm 4:3). The speakers of nonsense needed to be quiet while the one to whom the gift of teaching had been given could speak the oracles of God.

The word "oracles" came from its use among the religionists of the day who claimed that their priests delivered to man the "oracles" of their deity. We see such today by the same false teachers who claim before the people, "God told me." When a preacher stands before an audience and proclaims, "God told me," he is trying to intimidate the audience into accepting his word over theirs. Such may have been happening among some of Peter's readers, which thing happened among apostate Israelites in past years (Compare Jr 23). What Peter is cautioning is that his readers not fall victim to the false proclamations of the religionists who were simply false prophets seeking a following.

Years before, Jesus had warned His disciples concerning these matters: "And many false prophets will arise and will deceive many" (Mt 24:11). As today, so it was in the final days of Israel. "Then if anyone says to you, 'Lo, here is Christ,' or 'There,' do not believe it." (Mt 24:23). There are numerous false prophets today who proclaim that they are witnessing the signs of the times that indicate the final coming of Christ. We still follow the advice of Jesus. We do not believe them! We will still heed Jesus' warning that He gave to those who would hear of proclamations of the end: "For there will arise false christs and false prophets. They will show great signs and wonders to deceive, if possible, even the elect." (Mt 24:24; see 2 Th 2:10-12). One can determine, therefore, that he is not a part of the elect if he believes the self-proclaimed prognostications of pseudo-prophets who continually cry out, "God told me!"

I. Dedicated to ministry:

There were those among Peter's readers who had dedicated themselves, as the household of Stephanas, to the ministry of the saints (1 Co 16:15,16). In the case of Peter's readers, they had been blessed "with the ability that God gives" (1 Pt 4:11). Since they had been given the ability to minister, such a blessing assumed their responsibility to use their gift for the benefit of others (See 1 Co 12:28). God's opportunity to use our gift of ministry assumes that we will be a good steward of our ability to help others. Therefore, we must not murmur when an opportunity to minister crosses our path. The crossing may be the work of God to draw out of us our gift.

J. Glorify God.

It is significant to understand why one was to use his or her God-given gift for the benefit of others. The recipients were to use their gifts for others "so that in all things God may be glorified through Jesus Christ" (1 Pt 4:11). God-given gifts were to be used to the glory of God, not for the glory of ourselves. Churches should be careful, therefore, that they do not work in order to bring glory to themselves as a church. God will not profit narcissistic churches. All glory is to be given to God because it is because of His work in our lives that we are able to do that which gives Him glory. Paul's exhortation to the Colossians might help us understand this point better: “And whatever you do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through Him” (Cl 3:17).

Chapter 10

SURVIVOR FAITHFULNESS

Some Jewish Christians would surely suffer wrongfully in Rome’s war against the Jewish state. They must not consider it strange, therefore, that they would undergo some wrongful treatment because they lived in the wrong neighborhood. Since some Roman soldiers made little distinction between believing and unbelieving Jews when engaging the insurrectionists, many knew enough about Jewish Christians that they understood that Christians did not live as insurrectionists to the Roman government. It was a time for Christians, therefore, to openly confess that one was a Christian, and thus, distinguish themselves from the radical unbelieving Jews.

A. Enduring fiery trials:

Peter speaks concerning the fiery trial in this context as if it were something specific, and not the general suffering that Christians generally undergo while living the life of a disciple (See At 14:22). This suffering was something that had before been revealed to them. Therefore, because the fiery trial was previously revealed to them, they must “not think it strange concerning the fiery trial that is to try you, as though some strange thing happened to you” (1 Pt 4:12).

If we have assumed correctly that the social chaos that is soon to come upon them is in reference to the end of Israel, then the fiery trial was over thirty-five years before revealed by Jesus. It had been revealed centuries before through Daniel, and other prophets. In reference to what Rome was about to inflict upon national Israel, Jesus had previously prophesied, “Then they will deliver you up to be afflicted and will kill you. And you will be hated by all nations for My name’s sake” (Mt 24:9). Since this prophecy was in reference to those Jewish Christians who would suffer for the name of Jesus, then this persecution came from the unbelieving Jews. Now it was time for the unbelieving Jews to pay the price for their persecution of the family of God. Jesus went on to say in Matthew 24 that great tribulation would come on the Jewish persecutors: “For then there will be great tribulation, such as has not occurred since the beginning of the world to this time, nor ever will” (Mt 24:21).

The horror that Rome would unleash on a nation would be a genocide that the world had not experienced until A.D. 70. From that time, no such genocide had ever been launched against an entire nation to take the population out of existence. We must not confuse this with the genocide of Jews of WW II. The WW II genocide was against a race of people, not against a state. Jesus and Peter were speaking of the elimination of the state of Israel.

B. Joy of the persecuted:

James wrote to the same Diaspora of Jews as Peter: “Count it all joy when you fall into various trials, knowing that the trying of your faith produces patience” (Js 1:2,3). We must not forget, as someone wrote, that “trial is the structural steel that goes into the building of Christian character.” What is called reinforcement steel is embedded in the concrete that goes into building. It allows the concrete to withstand tremendous stresses. In the coming times of suffering, Peter and James wanted their readers to remember that spiritual structural steel was being embedded in their character through the struggles they would have to endure.

We must keep in mind that we do not deserve the final rest of heaven unless we endure the tests of this world. We must also remember Peter’s exhortations: “But rejoice, inasmuch as you are partakers of Christ’s sufferings ...” (1 Pt 4:13). “If you are reproached for the name of Christ, blessed are you ...” (1 Pt 4:14). We should be as the apostles who survived the beating of the religious council of Jewish hierarchies in Jerusalem. They left the council, “rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name” (At 5:41).

The persecution that would come upon Peter’s readers should not be a strange thing if they believed what Jesus had prophesied thirty-five years before: “And you will be hated by all nations for My name’s sake” (Mt 24:9). At the very beginning of Jesus’ ministry, He prepared His Jewish disciples to rejoice when they were hated. “Blessed are you when people insult you and persecute you and falsely say all kinds of evil against you for My sake. Rejoice and be exceedingly glad, for great is your re- ward in heaven ...” (Mt 5:11). If they are “reproached for the name of Christ” (1 Pt 4:14), then they are blessed. Their persecution was evidence that they were living the life of a Christian.

If one would “suffer as an ... evildoer” (1 Pt 4:15), however, he would deserve the suffering that would come upon him. But if one “suffers as a Christian” (1 Pt 4:16), then he can take pride in the fact that his behavior as a disciple manifests that he is living the life of a disciple. If a disciple stood on trial for being a Christian, then there should be enough evidence against him for conviction. So we would conclude that in the midst of one’s suffering for Jesus, we must at least resort to the famous words of Winston Churchill during the bombardment of England by Germany during WW II: “Never give in! Never, never, never, never!”

C. Doom because of disobedience:

If judgment bypasses the house of God because of God’s grace, then “what will be the end of those who do not obey the gospel of God?” (1 Pt 4:17). Peter asks this question because he knows his readers know the correct answer. The answer is that Jesus is coming in judgment on unbelieving Jews to take “vengeance on those who do not know God and who do not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ” (2 Th 1:8). And since the gospel is the good news about Jesus’ death for our sins and His resurrection for our hope, then there is no hope for those who do not obey the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus (See 1 Co 15:1-4; Rm 6:3-6).

If “the righteous are scarcely saved” through their obedience to the gospel, then “where will the ungodly and the sinner appear?” (1 Pt 4:18; see Pv 11:31). This statement places the meaning of what Peter is writing in 1 Peter in the historical context of the coming in-time judgment on unbelieving Israel. Peter used the word “scarcely” in reference to salvation. But this “salvation” is not a reference to our salvation at the end of time. In the final judgment at the end of time, the righteous will not “scarcely” be saved. They will of a certainty be saved by the grace of God because they have obeyed the gospel. Their salvation will not be based on meritorious works or perfect keeping of law (Ep 2:9,10). The salvation of the righteous will always be guaranteed on the basis of what Paul said in Ephesians 2:8: “For by grace you are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God.” There is no “scarcely” about the Christian’s salvation.

But when the Roman army showed up in Judea before A.D. 70, only a few unbelieving Jews were saved by the end of Rome’s suppression of Israel. In fact, Josephus, the Jewish historian, reported that only 80,000 Jews over the one million who endured the siege remained alive and were sold into captivity. One million died. The 80,000 were those who were scarcely saved alive. However, through their confession of Jesus as the Messiah, Jewish Christians would scarcely escape the sword, but it would not be so with the unbelieving Jews. Unbelieving Jews consigned themselves to be cut off from God because they refused to believe on Jesus.

On the medical records of a hospital in New York City in America is the story of a young 22-year old man who was brought into the emergency room with an arm that was almost severed, which arm was eventually amputated. It seems that the young man and his companion had broken a plate glass store front window in order to steal. When he reached his arm through the broken glass, some of the overhanging glass fell on his arm. Tattooed on the arm that was amputated were the words, “Born to lose.” And such will be the fate of those who are not born again (Jn 3:3-5).

The blessedness of the righteous is that they have entrusted themselves to the grace of God. Their trust is so strong that they are willing to “suffer according to the will of God” (1 Pt 4:19). Through their godly living they have manifested that they have given themselves to God who will faithfully deliver on His promises to them. They have been born again to win.

Chapter 11

SURVIVOR LEADERSHIP

When our home family and church family are functioning according to the will of God, then we live with the two strongest social environments that give us strength in times of trial. In this first letter to the Christian Jews of the Diaspora, Peter wrote to make sure that the individuals of his readership maintained their discipleship. He instructed that the structures of the home be according to the order of God’s will. In chapter 5 he wrote in order to correct any dysfunctions concerning the order of leadership in the family of God as a whole.

In view of the coming struggle, the Christians to whom he wrote would be able to better endure the struggles of life as long as their home and church family relationships, over which they had control, functioned according to the will of God.

It would be the shepherds of the flock who would take the sheep through the social turmoil that was coming. As a fellow shepherd, as well as a Jew, we know now why the Holy Spirit chose Peter to write this letter to fellow elders and Jews. Peter could identify with Jewish Christians with whom he had a common heritage. He could also identify with those persecuted sheep who would be suffering wrongfully at the hand of Roman legions. He was the perfect choice as a writer for such an epistle of encouragement to be written in times of social chaos for Jewish Christians.

A. Be a servant leader.

In order to maintain the true organic function of the body of Christ, the leadership (elders) must take ownership of their leadership responsibilities for which they were designated by the flock. They must tend to the spiritual needs of the flock of God. Peter uses the Greek word that is translated “tend” which means to shepherd or to take care of sheep. This was an injunction that Jesus personally gave Peter many years before (Jn 21:16; see At 20:28). In this context, therefore, Peter is dealing with the organic function of the elders among the sheep, not their qualifications to be designated shepherds. They had already been designated shepherds by the sheep, and now it was time that they lead the flock of God through times of struggle.

B. Be among the sheep.

Peter writes, “I exhort the elders who are among you ...” (1 Pt 5:1). Since Peter was writing to sheep who were scattered in the regions of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia (1 Pt 1:1), then the shepherds were among the sheep in all these regions. It seems superfluous to think that Peter had in mind only the shepherds who were among a small group of sheep who were meeting in a house in some village.

It is the organic function of the shepherds to move among the sheep throughout any particular region. The shepherds move among the sheep. The sheep do not move among the shepherds. The shepherds can lead only by being among the sheep. Shepherds who hold up with only one group of sheep in a particular region are denying the opportunity of the sheep of a region to know them as shepherds.

Shepherds do not function from behind closed doors, or send dictates from head offices. They are not corporate authorities running a religious cooperation. They are moving among the sheep in order to discover the needs of the sheep. If shepherds do not smell like sheep, then certainly they are not functioning among the sheep as they should. Being among the sheep, therefore, assumes that they are not stationary with only a few sheep. In the historical context of those to whom Peter addressed this epistle, the shepherds were functioning among the disciples throughout the provinces of the Roman Empire.

From the location (“Babylon”) where he was writing to those who were scattered in the Jewish Diaspora, Peter still considered himself a “fellow elder” (1 Pt 5:1). If he left his location and journeyed to another location, we would rightly conclude that he would not cease being an elder. If one of the elders to whom he wrote came to him, then we would also conclude that that elder would not cease being an elder while visiting Peter. Peter would have introduced the visiting elder from either Pontus or Galatia as an elder in either Pontus or Galatia. Those elders who fled Judea during the Roman siege of Jerusalem certainly did not cease shepherding the sheep who were also scattered with them. The elders who were seeing over the sheep in Jerusalem did not cease seeing over the sheep once both elders and sheep left the city limits of Jerusalem during the siege of the city.

We must separate the function of the shepherds from the “all authority” of Jesus (Mt 28:18). Elders did not move among the sheep with authority. Only Jesus has authority over His universal body. He has not delegated any of His authority to any person or group of persons on earth. If He had, then He would not be our only Lord who is reigning from heaven over all things with all authority.

Peter carefully worded his instructions concerning the presence and ministry of the elders. The elders are to be among the sheep. It is not that the sheep are to be among the elders. The elders are not a synod of leaders to whom the sheep must cater. Peter wants to make it clear that it is the responsibility of the elders to move among the sheep in order to see after the needs of the sheep. And since nothing is said in this entire context about the assembly of the sheep at any particular location in the provinces to which he writes, then we must assume that the shepherds were moving from house to house throughout the provinces (See At 20:20).

The early church met in the homes of the members in communities throughout the ancient world. Not all the sheep in any region could meet at the same time in the same house. Therefore, for the shepherds to be among the sheep in any region, we correctly conclude that any one shepherd did not hold up in only one assembly. On the contrary, all the shepherds moved among the disciples in order to be known by all the sheep in the provinces to which this epistle was written. Keep in mind that we must not assume that the shepherds moved among assemblies. They certainly did this, but we must not forget that in order to service needs, the shepherds had to move among individual sheep. Discovering the needs of the sheep takes place when elders relate with individuals.

C. Refrain from lordship.

It is not that the elders (shepherds) are a hierarchy of authorities in the universal body of Christ. This was the very problem Peter was addressing in this context. The shepherds were to “shepherd the flock of God” without lording, and thus compelling submission (1 Pt 5:2). Their shepherding of the flock included seeing over the needs of the flock as a shepherd of the field continually looks out over the individuals of the flock in order to service the needs and protect any sheep that might be in danger. Shepherds do not oversee assemblies, but see over individuals.

Their ministry as shepherds was not in the area of being decision-makers for the flock, but servicing the needs of the flock. There is a difference. Decision-makers are always looking for someone else to do the servicing. Servant leaders are always being controlled by needs. Servant shepherds should never find themselves in the situation where they are delegating that which they should be doing. If they do, then they have moved themselves into a corporate boardroom of decision-making, and thus become lords. Any shepherd who delegates that which shepherds are to be doing themselves is actually not doing that for which he has been delegated to do by the flock. It is the flock who delegates, not the shepherds. Once a shepherd moves himself into a function of delegating, then he has become a lord.

D. Encourage voluntary service and submission.

The shepherds’ service was to be “voluntarily according to God” (1 Pt 5:2). They were to be voluntary servants who shepherded those who voluntarily submitted to their service. The household of Stephanas had “dedicated themselves to the ministry of the saints” (1 Co 16:15). It was the responsibility of the saints in turn to “submit yourselves” to their ministry (1 Co 16:16). It is submission to ministry, not authority, that maintains the organic function of the body of Christ, and the function of the shepherds.

Demagogues always get this wrong. They seek to steal some of the “all authority” that rests only with our Lord Jesus (Mt 28:18). And in their act of authority theft, they seek to submit the sheep to their control. They thus move among the flock “to call the shots” in order to reassert their authority over the flock. But this is the very thing that Peter denounces in this context (See 3 Jn 9,10). Elders who “call the shots” are lords over the flock.

E. Do not serve for money.

Since the elders were to be paid double salary (1 Tm 5:17), then we can understand why someone might take advantage of the contribution of the saints because he was “greedy for money” (1 Pt 5:2).

The reason for the double salary was obvious. Those who would be qualified to be shepherds would be those who were the most benevolent among the sheep. The greatest leaders among the sheep are the greatest slaves. If the body was not protective of the shepherds who volunteered to feed and care for the sheep, then they could possibly give themselves and their families into poverty. Through the shepherds, therefore, the entire body ministered to the needs among the sheep. For this reason, serving shepherds were to be given a second salary in order to have sufficient funds to distribute among the needy of the sheep.

F. Remember there is only one Lord.

The elders were not to serve “as being lords over those entrusted” to them (1 Pt 5:3). Lords demand submission. The Christian has only one Lord to whom he submits (Ep 4:4-6). In reference to the use of the word “submission” in our discipleship, we submit to one another’s service (1 Co 16:15,16). We submit to one another because we have submitted to the Lord Jesus. We must remember, therefore, that we submit only to the lordship of Jesus Christ. Our dedication to ministry requires submission to one another and our Lord Jesus in order that we might serve one another (Ep 5:21). Our submission to Jesus’ lordship requires that we live by the authority of His command to submit to one another (Jn 14:15; 15:14).

Since lordship involves commandments to which submission must be made, then the submission of the disciple in reference to authority can only be to our Lord Jesus. If our submission to our Lord is the same as our submission to the shepherds, then we would conclude that the shepherds have the same authority to give commandments as our Lord Jesus. It takes no Bible scholar to figure out the error of this theology. Therefore, the Bible student must understand the context in which the word “submit” is used. If it is used in the context of ministry, then reference is to submission to our ministry to one another. But if the word is used in reference to authority and command, then it is used in reference to the Lord Jesus Christ as our only Lord with all authority.

G. Lead by example:

In contrast to being lords over the flock who might assume authority and demand submission, the shepherds are to lead by example, that is, by the serving example of their lives. They are before the sheep with life-style examples, not behind the sheep with commands. Lordship would demand inherent authority. Example would demand only voluntary submission to those who are dedicated to the ministry of the saints.

When the shepherds lead by example, there is no need for authority. The sheep voluntarily follow them because they seek the service of the shepherds for their needs. The shepherds’ submission to the authority of Jesus as the lord of their lives is the example that draws the sheep to follow them. When shepherds lead in this manner, they know that “when the Chief Shepherd appears,” they “will receive a crown of glory that does not fade away” (1 Pt 5:4).

Since the fellowship of the body of Christ is a community of slaves, then slaves cannot be led by the authority of command. Slaves can only be led by those who manifest in their lives the greatest example of slavehood. This is what Jesus had in mind when He spoke the following words in reference to the Gentiles who have rulers and lords among them: “... among you it will not be so” (Mk 10:43). Therefore, it is as Jesus concluded after He had washed the disciples’ feet during His last meeting with them on the night of His betrayal: “And he who leads, as he who serves” (Lk 22:26).

Chapter 12

SURVIVOR CHARACTER

In order for the elders to shepherd the flock, the younger men of the flock must show a spirit of respect through submission. The elders cannot function if the younger do not show their respect to their elders through submission. In the context of elders leading by example, the younger are to follow the example of the elders who have dedicated themselves to servicing the needs of others. It may have been that the young rose up against some of the elders because some of the elders had moved out of their ministry of serving the needs of the people to lording with commands. Peter, therefore, first corrected the lording of the elders, and then he corrected the young in that they must submit to the servanthood example of the elders. It is interesting to note that when elders start lording, the younger often start rebelling.

The wisdom of the younger is manifested by their desire to learn from the example of serving that is given by the shepherds. Autocratic shepherds will lead the church into a hierarchy of competition for power. But the elders’ leading the younger by example, trains the younger to be future shepherds who will also serve the flock.

A. A community of slaves:

The church is a community of slaves. Peter takes the submission of the younger to the service of the elders beyond the younger men. He does so by stating that “all of you be submissive to one another” (1 Pt 5:5). Paul also stated that we are to be “submitting to one another in the fear of God” (Ep 5:21). In this submission, we must not assume that one member has authority over other members. Reference is to our submission to one another’s service. The church is a community of slaves with dirty towels. It is a community of people who are going about looking for dirty feet to wash, not kingdoms to build. Slaves have no kingdoms. Lords are always in some effort to build one.

Elders lead by serving the needs of the body. The body exalts the shepherds, therefore, by submitting to their care and example of service. This is not a matter of who has power over others, but who is the greatest slave among the sheep. Concerning the organic function of ministry and submission thereof, we must always keep in mind the mandate of Jesus:

You know that those who are recognized as rulers over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them. And their great ones exercise authority over them. But it will not be so among you. But whoever desires to be great among you will be your servant (Mk 10:42,43).

Lords cannot exist without authority and kingdoms over which they can rule. It is for this reason that Jesus is our only Lord (Ep 4:4-6). He is our only Lord because “all authority has been given” to Him in heaven and on earth (Mt 28:18). Some shepherds to whom Peter was writing were seeking to claim some of the lordship authority of Jesus. By doing so, they were seeking to submit others by the compulsion of command. Such behavior, however, is contrary to Jesus’ mandate for the leaders who serve among us. When individuals seek to be the slaves of the needs of others, then there is no problem with a thirst for authority. But when little men try to wear big hats, they are always blinded.

B. A community of the humble:

Servants are to “be clothed with humility” (1 Pt 5:5). The reason they should be so clothed is that “God resists the proud and gives grace to the humble” (1 Pt 5:5; see Js 4:6). And for this reason, every disciple must humble himself “under the mighty hand of God so that He may exalt” us when we can handle His exaltation (1 Pt 5:6). Confucius was right: “Humility is the solid foundation of all the virtues.” In Pilgrims Progress, John Bunyan wrote,

He that is down need fear no fall,
He that is low no pride;
He that is humble ever shall,
Have God to be his guide.

Someone correctly said, “The hard way to learn humility is to act so foolishly as to be humiliated.” We must keep in mind that it is a truth of human behavior that if we humbly walk with God, we are sure to be exalted by Him before all men. Only the humble, therefore, can survive the exaltation of God.

C. A community of trust:

Christians trust in God’s care. If one has little faith in the care of God, then he will often cast few of his worries into the caring hand of God. In fact, we can determine if we really believe in God’s care for us by how often we cast our burdens into His care. Peter exhorts that we should be “casting all” our cares on Him (1 Pt 5:7). His assumption is, therefore, that the life of the disciple is to be lived totally under the comfort of God’s care for us.

It is not surprising that in a context where service, submission and humility are discussed, there is a statement concerning the casting of all our cares into the helping hand of God. The proud, arrogant and self-sufficient feel little need for the help of God. When one feels that he can do everything his own way, then he does not consider the help of God. The more one depends on himself, the less he depends on God. In this way, therefore, the life of a commanding lord and the life of a humble slave are entirely different. Those who have built themselves up with all the successes of life find it difficult to humble themselves under the mighty hand of God.

D. A community of the cautious:

Because our “adversary the devil walks about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour” (1 Pt 5:8), it is imperative that all Christians take seriously his threats. We should thus be on the watch for his tricks. A good study for every Christian is to learn how Satan works. We are very familiar with the behavior of Jesus, but usually very ignorant of how Satan works to take us down. When Peter exhorts us to “be sober, be vigilant” (1 Pt 5:8), he means that it is the responsibility of every disciple to understand how Satan works in order to devour us. We must know our enemy.

He “walks about ... seeking” (1 Pt 5:8). It is Satan’s mission to seek and to devour. We must keep in mind that he has no power outside his realm of search. Jesus has bound this old serpent with the power of the gospel (Rv 20:1,2). Therefore, as long as one stays outside his realm of captivity, then Satan cannot of his own will touch the Christian.

In this context of submission and service, one places himself in the realm of Satan’s devouring by not humbling himself before God. The souls of the arrogant are always torn by the devouring teeth of the devil.

E. A community of faith:

We can “resist him” by “standing firm in the faith” (1 Pt 5:9). Peter uses a military word here that refers to resisting another military force. What James stated is true: “Submit yourselves to God. Resist the devil and he will flee from you” (Js 4:7). We cannot say that we believe this passage, and at the same time, be fearful of walking through a graveyard. If we are afraid of spooks and goblins that are generated in our own imagination, then we are not standing firm in the faith. There is hypocrisy in the one who says that he is standing firm in the faith, and yet, is fearful of the senseless incantations of some voodoo priest. And while we seek to justify our imagined spooks and demons, we need to remember that man always has a problem of trying to be politically correct, and by doing so, we become spiritually incorrect. Philosophers call our sin irrational thinking. Our sociologists among us call sin cultural dysfunction. Our psychiatrists call sin social maladjustment. And then our psychologists call sin behavioral disorder. But the Bible calls sin to be sin.

We will continue to believe that “if God is for us, who can be against us?” (Rm 8:31). There is almost a spirit of defiance in these words of Paul. After listing all the possibilities that might separate us from God, Paul concluded, “I am persuaded that ...[nothing] will be able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rm 8:38,39).

It is spiritual immaturity not to feel the impact of the preceding statement of Paul. Paul added, “I can do all things through Him who strengthens me” (Ph 4:13). This means that one can overcome all his childhood fears of spooks and goblins and witches through the power of God that works in us (Ep 3:20; Ph 2:13; Cl 1:29). If our imagined demons still haunt our thinking, then we must continue to overcome such by the strength of Christ. We must continue in our minds to repent of past thinking that was formed according to the thinking of the world.

And so Peter concluded with the statement in reference to their struggles, “after you have suffered a while” (1 Pt 5:10). His meaning is that the suffering under which his readers were about to go would pass.

He is not talking about the lifetime suffering of living as a disciple, but something specific in his readers’ future that would soon pass away. In other words, the wars of Rome against national Israel would soon pass. But the result of their suffering through these times of turmoil would be the perfection, establishment, strengthening and settling of their faith. What would happen would be the same as what James said to encourage his readers. They must understand that “the trying of your faith produces patience” (Js 1:3). A tried faith is patient to wait on God’s deliverance from any trial. Therefore, “let patience have its perfect work so that you may be perfect and entire, lacking nothing” (Js 1:4).

The example of Peter’s audience is applicable to the times in our lives when we must individually pass through times of struggle. While enduring struggle, we must always remember that it will eventually pass. We must always remember that struggle is producing patience in our character. In the body of this flesh “we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed with our house that is from heaven” (2 Co 5:2). However, we must be patient for the final coming of Jesus when he will relieve us of all suffering that is common with this fleshly body (Rv 21:4). We are, therefore, as John, who concluded the Revelation of encouragement to struggling Christians. We pray, “Even so, come Lord Jesus” (Rv 22:20).

Epilogue

It was “through Silvanus, our faithful brother” (1 Pt 5:12), that Peter wrote the letter we call 1 Peter. Consider the fact that Peter was a young man when he was initially called by Jesus to be an apostle (Lk 6:13). This calling was at the beginning of Jesus’ ministry, which was about thirty-five years before these words were written. Peter, indeed, was an old man at this time. He was probably somewhere in his middle sixties. So it is understandable that Silvanus functioned as his stenographer to put his Spirit-inspired message into a Greek manuscript.

Peter had “written briefly” (1 Pt 5:12), though we wish he had written much more. But all his immediate readers needed at the time was a brief message of encouragement from the Holy Spirit that would spiritually empower them to make it through the brief time of suffering they must endure.

“She who is in Babylon” (1 Pt 5:13) could possibly be a reference to the church in Babylon. But we would prefer that the pronoun “she” was a reference to his beloved wife whom he had led throughout the world since the time Jesus called him to be an apostle (See Mk

1:30,31). She was a faithful woman who followed Peter to the ends of the earth (See 1 Co 9:5).

We do not conclude that this was a reference to the church simply because the church is globally one body. Those to whom he was writing were a part of this universal body, and thus, it would have been misleading and denominational to assume that the body was divided because of the distance between Peter and his readers.

We assume that the pronoun “she” was a reference to Peter’s wife because of the personal reference to another individual in the context. This was “Mark my son” (1 Pt 5:13). This was not John Mark who was the cousin of Barnabas, and temporarily part of the team that left with Paul and Barnabas on Paul’s first mission journey (Cl 4:10). Since Peter would have converted many where he was at the time of writing, this Mark could have been one of his converts, though we would question why he would single out only this one convert that his readers did not personally know. We could conclude, therefore, that this was actually the son of Peter, which son was in the presence of his aged father and mother in order to care for them. Peter wanted his readers to be reassured that he and his wife were cared for by their son at this evening time of their lives.

We have sometimes been too ecclesiastical and theological in our interpretation of what should be personal texts of the Bible. We forget that the inspired documents of the New Testament were written by real people in reference to real and personal people who were certainly not ecclesiastical and theological. The early Christians were people who were struggling through life and needed words of encouragement from the Holy Spirit. I have traveled throughout the world with and without my wife. When she is not in my company, the brethren always ask, “How is Martha?” Why would we not think that the brothers and sisters to whom Peter wrote would not be asking the same thing in reference to the wife of Peter, who had followed her husband from country to country for over thirty-five years. It would take a great deal of interpretive gymnastics to read Peter’s wife and son out of this context.

“Greet one another with a kiss of love” (1 Pt 5:14). Not to bind a custom of the day on the disciples, but to encourage them to continue with this most affectionate signal of fellowship, Peter enjoins on them an expression of their love for one another. We might conclude how far we have moved away from one another in our fellowship in comparing our distant handshake with this kiss of love. We remember when we lived in Brazil for many years where we learned that in every greeting men customarily hugged one another and the women kissed. It became a natural manner of greeting for us. Whenever we met a brother, the men hugged and the women kissed. When we returned to the states, and attended the first assembly of the saints we encountered, I hugged the men and Martha kissed the women upon greeting. The members took a step back in some shock. America was a culture of distant handshakes, not hugs and kisses. Regardless, “Peace be to you all who are in Christ” (1 Pt 5:14).

Book 68

Change For Growth

Those whose faith is not supported by the unchanging authority of the word of God will move endlessly from one organizational religious identity to another. Even when we accept the word of God as the divine written authority of our faith it is difficult to keep our faith focused on the unchanging behavior of true discipleship. A move from the original standard of faith can often happen even before the passing of the first generation of those who restored the word of God as the foundation of their faith. This was why Paul marvelled when he wrote to the first converts of Galatia. “I am amazed that you are so quickly turning away from Him who called you into the grace of Christ to another gospel” (Gl 1:6). This may be understandable since these first followers of Galatia had no written standard to keep them on track.

The letter of Galatians was written by the Holy Spirit to turn them back on course to the one true gospel they had received from Paul. But even with this standard, it is always the desire of men to fabricate their own faith, and then carve a god in a stone or piece of wood who would condone their wayward religiosity. The fact is that we have been created by God to be religious beings, and thus, we will create some religion in the absence of God’s word. Unfortunately, the descendants of the founding fathers of any faith often drift away from the desires of their fathers. The conclusion to this axiomatic truth is that there must always be concrete truth that determines the final authority in all matters of our faith. And it is this truth that must be restored as the foundation of our faith if we wake up one day through the enlightenment of our personal studies of our Bibles and discover that we have moved away from the word of God.

When living in the chaos of religious diversity, there are those sincere Bible students who will rise up among us with a cry to restore the old paths of the faith from which so many have drifted. We call these restorationists rebels. They are leading a rebellion against wayward religiosity. Because they are rebels against the apostate establishment, their efforts to restore the original comes with a great deal of pain. Because of the emotional pain that is inherent in any effort of restoration, there are few brave souls who have the spiritual stamina and knowledge of the Original Directive, to take a stand for the divine order. The number of people who would join the choir of restoration, and sing the melody of change, is always few. There are always few restorationist rebels in the religious world because we find our security in our traditions and reassurance by conforming to the norms of the religious establishment. For most people, therefore, changing from the norms of the establishment is simply too unsettling. It is too painful to admit that what we presently believe and do may possibly be flawed in reference to the word of God.

While living in the comfort of our religious traditions, or customs, change is often considered to be disrespectful to the ways of our fathers. So when a studious anomaly does speak out, or does something different in order to restore the divine order, he or she is often labeled a rebel, a “change agent.” The “rebel” thus suffers the burden of being subjected to all sorts of games the devil plays in order to bring him back into conformity with the crowd. As a rebel to Judaism, Jesus ended up on a cross because He sought to restore the faith of the people of God by steering people away from the Jews’ religion. Those who would rebel against apostasy today will often end up the same.

We were constructed beautifully by our Creator to be an emotional being who seems to be naturally resistant to change from the status quo. But maybe we are understanding our emotional and traditional state of religious behavior from the wrong perspective. Could it be that God created us with the ability to live intellectually and emotionally in an environment wherein change would guard us from stagnation in error and a life-style that is contrary to His traditions? After all, do not the words “repentance” and “restoration” mean change? If there is no repentance, then there can never be a transformed life. If there is no restoration, then there can never be a return to God’s ways if and when we go astray. Without repentance and restoration we are doomed to end up as religious misfits who have all gone our own ways. It is for this reason that if we are not on a continual course of restoration, then certainly we are destined to create a religiosity after our own traditions, and not the original traditions that come from the mandates of the word of God. Once our traditions are moved into the category of law, we are doomed to establish a religious heritage that is based on tradition and not the word of God.

We lived our youth through the 1950s and 1960s in the American farming culture. We grew up on a farm in the state of Kansas that is in the central part of America. In growing up as a farm boy, we had the privilege of being farmers, and American farmers knew how to change to do things better in order to be more productive. And because we had no TV, no cellphones, computers, etc., the creativity of our minds was developed. We could imagine how to change things for the better.

We were the children of a post-pioneering father. When we were very young, we could not understand why our father, who lived in the initial “tractor age” of America in his youth, never wanted to own a horse on the farm on which we children grew up. We did not understand until one day he explained why he had such negative feelings toward these magnificent creatures that were always necessary in building great empires.

On our farm was a horse-drawn, one-bottom plow that was dumped in a rubbish heap in the pasture north of our farm house. There was also in the rubbish heap a horse-drawn and dilapidated, spoked-wheeled wagon. Beside these there were other half-buried instruments of farming as a horse-drawn hay rake and a few other farming items of yesteryear. As youth, we always assumed that these belonged to our great grandfather who had homesteaded the land that we were farming at the time. But they were not. They belonged, as our father explained, to our grandfather and were used by both our grandfather and father in his youth to farm the land that we were farming in the “tractor age.”

Our father went on to explain that as a child he had toiled long hours every day to work the ground behind a horse-drawn plow. While we in our youth rode almost comfortably on a D John Deere tractor, our grandfather and father in his youth had grown up walking behind a horse-drawn plow and hauling grain into town in a horse-drawn wagon. Our father’s labors as a youth were arduous in order to survive as a third generation immigrant from Ireland who was struggling to carve out a life in the New World.

We remember our father telling us the story about coming home from the small town of Stafford one day in a horse-drawn wagon. He was about five years old at the time. The wagon slipped off the side of the path. He recalled, “I fell out of the wagon and rolled and rolled down the hill.” He remembered, “It seemed like I would never stop rolling.”

And now you know why our father cared little for horses. They reminded him of strenuous work and days of toil as a very young farm boy growing up looking through the dust all day at the hind quarters of a horse as he tilled the soil. To him, the introduction to tractors meant deliverance from the toil of the past. It meant seeing farther down the field than the hind quarters of a horse.

Now consider this. One of us three brothers who grew up on that same farm that was cut out of virgin Kansas prairie grass is still farming the same land with his son. It is now being farmed with the most advanced machinery that can be made by the John Deere Corporation—we have always believed that there was no other machinery than John Deere. But as our brother rides in an air-conditioned tractor cab, listening to stereo music, which cab is equipped with a two-way radio, plus a cell phone in his pocket, the days of the horse-drawn plow are long gone. As he sets his GPS to plant a row of corn (maize) a half-mile long that one can look straight down from one end to the other, he farms in comfort. He is thankful that things have changed for the better on the American farm. Our father in his youth could never have imagined that such inventions would till the soil over which he had struggled behind a horse-drawn implement while stumbling over clods of dirt. Change was good.

It was the ability to change that made all this possible. When we went through our high school years in Stafford and Preston, Kansas, we were required to study agriculture every year. The American farmer wanted to always change from the past to new ways of farming for the future. In fact, all farm boys were part of a nationwide organization that was called the FFA (Future Farmers of America). We could not wait for our second year of high school when we could purchase and wear our FFA jackets. Our focus was on the future, not on preserving the horse-drawn plows of the past. To be successful farmers, we were trained to always discover how farming could be better. And when something new and better was developed in farming, we were trained to change to the new and better. Every Kansas farm boy of America grew up in a culture of change. We were taught to do things differently and better for the sake of our children in the future.

This culture of change was a part of the American way of life and our faith. Back in those days when we “went to church,” it was not about going to some Sunday morning concert for which we bought no entry tickets. It was about assembling with other avid Bible students who were obsessed with learning more from God. Our thirsty minds swarmed around the Bible in order to learn something by which we might grow our faith and change our lives for the better. If an incoming preacher did not preach the Bible, he was gone before he unpacked his moving boxes.

Some early Kansas churches had what they called “Bible Readings.” The practice was taken from Moses’ command to the nation of Israel that during the Feast of Tabernacles every year, the nation was to come together and read the Sinai law before the people (Dt 31:9-13).

During the off season when there was no farming, the members of those small Kansas farm churches would come together in their horse-drawn wagons for the purpose of staying several days in fellowship to read the Bible to everyone present. Different people would take turns reading the Bible throughout the meeting. Everyone, some who could not read or write, listened as the word of God was read aloud. Those pioneers had an unquenchable thirst for the word of God because they knew that it would lead them to a changed life that was better. They had moved out of the bondage of denominational doctrines and organized religion. Their quest in restoration was focused on finding their way out of the traditions of their misguided religious forefathers. They wanted to plow through the word of God on their own with the right to think freely.

While many other nations of the world at the time were trapped in the quagmire of their own traditions that kept their economies in stagnation, and thus remained economically dysfunctional, the American socio/economic culture relished in the Christian faith that led them to develop into the most economically powerful country of the world.

We have heard the statement, “If it ain’t broke, don’t fix it.” We grew up with the cultural identity, “If it ain’t broke, we can make it work better.” The view that we must have toward our faith is that we must never relinquish ourselves to a state of thinking that our faith is unbroken and that our forefathers had it all figured out. They did not know it all. We must always assume that we have strayed from God in some area of thinking or behavior, or have been led astray by the world of worldliness, or the deceptions of misguided religiosity. We must always be as the father who had enough sense and faith to at least get his afflicted son to Jesus. He cried out to Jesus, “Lord, I believe! Help my unbelief!” (Mk 9:24).

Our faith always needs fixed. If we convince ourselves that we have come to the climax of faith, that we have arrived and need no changing, then we are doomed to suffer from our own religious bondage and fall in the stagnation of unbelief. We must always assume that our faith needs “fixin’.” If we do not, then we will terminate our thirst for that which builds faith, that is, the word of God: “So then faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of Christ” (Rm 10:17). Those who believe that their “unbelief” does not need “fixin’,” are those who have stopped their ears from hearing the word of Christ. They have become dull of hearing (Hb 5:11).

The early pioneers of America believed that their Bibles would keep them plowing a straight furrow that led them straight to heaven. So instead of coming together in assembly to entertain themselves with their self-imposed religiosity, they came together to be “entertained” by the teaching of the word of God. This is so different from the generation that we witness today among those of the cheerleading preachers of concert assemblies. It is so different from those who have strayed to the institutionalization of accepted methodologies or religious ceremonies that they have created after their own desires. Bible study is a forgotten behavior of many modern churches, and because it is forgotten, millions of adherents to traditional religions throughout the world today have consigned themselves to validate their faith by either the heritage of their fathers, or by an emotional experience with others in a hypnotic assembly of religionists.

Most countries today who are considered to be the “developing world” (Third World) seem to be stuck in the past. They have a difficult time changing for the better. When we travel through Africa, it seems that some are stuck in a time warp from which they cannot escape. In fact, many have said that when traveling throughout different parts of Africa it is like going back centuries in time. The comment has been made more than once concerning some parts of Africa, “These folks have lived this way for two thousand years.”

Change is not conducive to African culture. It is almost unnatural. In fact, if any nation would assert that “we are a developing nation,” then that nation is actually confessing that those of its society have a very difficult time with change. These countries need to keep in mind that Europe, America, and many Asian countries of the world, were once “developing,” “Third World” countries in their past a century ago. But because they were not afraid of change, they moved on. They are now “developed countries” giving aid to those underdeveloped countries who often fight against change, and thus resign themselves to the bondage of their own socio/economic dysfunction.

Our culture often determines how we view the functionality of our faith. If we live in a culture that is resistant to change, then we will often view with caution any changes that we would make in our religious behavior if we learn more truth from our Bibles. Change frightens those who are traditional in their culture. For this reason, it is very difficult to change from misguided and established religious beliefs and ceremonies in order to follow the directions of the word of God.

If we are stuck in misdirected religiosity, and do not change when we discover more Bible information, then we will spiritually die, if indeed we are not already dead. Change can prevent death. The farming community of America changed out of necessity for survival. It was fine when our grandfather walked behind a horse in order to plow and plant the land. His father’s family could survive with a horse. But that land which our great-grandfather homesteaded in the middle of the nineteenth century will not support humans today without all the changes in farming techniques that have been made throughout the years. Farmers had to change to bigger and better equipment in order to live off the land. The farms had to become larger in order to support just one family.

When we grew up in central Kansas, as children we would rummage through old deserted farm houses of farmers of yesteryear who had long moved away. There were old deserted farm houses throughout central Kansas. The farmers who lived in those houses were all gone and their farms were consumed by other farms. In order to survive, change was necessary, both in the lives of those who moved on and those who stayed.

After over a century and a half of farming the land, fertilizers and circle (pivot) irrigation are now absolutely necessary in order to produce any crops from the soil. In other words, if the modern mechanism of circle irrigation did not exist, the land on which central Kansas farmers now farm would have to be vacated, for it would not produce enough crops to pay for the fuel to power the equipment to plant and harvest. Without irrigation, the state of Kansas would subsequently be depopulated and the land would go back to nature. Change, therefore, was necessary for survival.

When change must occur, and we fight against it, then we will die. Those who are resistant to change must take another look at what is necessary to make their faith grow again. Church leaders who are resistant to change will often lead the members of the church to lose their first love (Rv 2:4).

Chapter 1

CHANGE IN THE WINDS

When the apostles spoke through Peter a short time after the “Holy Gust” of wind had blown through Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost in A.D. 30, they proclaimed in the following statement that the winds of change were about to storm through Israel. In order not to be blown away with the changes that were coming, there was only one recourse that everyone must do in order to be pleasing to God: “Therefore, repent and be converted [change your thinking and living] so that your sins may be blotted out, in order that the times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord” (At 3:19). This was a proclamation of change, a change in thinking and behavior. The train of God’s messianic movement among the Jews was passing through Israel. Regardless of whether the Jews boarded the train, it would continue to move on from them to the Gentiles throughout the entire world (See At 18:6). If the Jews who first heard the message did not repent from their legal religiosity that was created after the traditions of their fathers, and accept Jesus as the fulfillment of all prophecies concerning the Messiah, then they would miss the train.

Those in Jerusalem who had the first opportunity to board the train of change through repentance and conversion to Jesus, but refused to board, would be the first to be trampled from existence in fulfillment of Jesus’ prophecy that national Israel was coming to a close (See Mt 24). It was a matter of change or doom.

If we read again the proclamation of the apostles’ condition for the coming of the “times of refreshing,” it is evident that there were two conditions that were necessary to make the coming change. The Jews had to repent and convert from their old ways. When there was repentance and conversion, then there would be change. Without this change, there would be no “times of refreshing.” Unfortunately, most of the Jews would continue in the deadness of their own legal religiosity, dead in their traditions, and thus, doomed to destruction in the consummation of national Israel. The apostles’ statement was a distinct call for a change from the old to the new, from the old covenant to the new covenant, from the law of Moses to the grace and truth of Jesus (Jr 31:31-34; Jn 1:17; Hb 8:7-13). It was a change in order to escape the doom of national Israel in A.D. 70, but ultimately a change in life to escape the doom of eternal hell when Jesus came at the end of time.

The apostles were the “change agents” for Jesus to turn a people from their own traditional religion to the new ways of God. In the historical setting in which they called for repentance and conversion, those Jews in Judea who did not heed the call would suffer the consequences of their rebellion against God. In the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70, over one million Jews died in the consummation of national Israel.

Some have wondered why so many Jews rejected those winds of Messianic change in the first century, and thus discouraged the coming of the “times of refreshing.” The answer is in the nature of the traditional culture of the Jews and the legal religion that they had fabricated after their own traditions. The more traditional a culture is, the more difficult it is for those of the culture to initiate and encourage restorational change.

Traditional cultures will often accept changes that conform to the established culture. However, it is very difficult for traditional cultures to generate and encourage restoration. Restoration involves repentance, and repentance means change. In the case of the Jews of the first century, it meant a drastic change from their traditional religion to the grace of God that was revealed through Jesus (Ti 2:11). It is very difficult to change from one’s assurance that is based on obedience to the traditional requirements of one’s self-imposed religiosity to the grace of God. Specifically, the legal religionist has difficulty making this change. In legalistic religions the adherents find security in the self-imposed traditions of their own religion. But in grace one must trust in the mercy of God.

For the Jews who lived with a theocratic world view, Jesus meant not only a change from legal religiosity, but a change in their isolationist behavior in reference to the Gentiles. It was thus very difficult for the Jews to change in their culture, as it is in all cultures that are theocratic and traditional in function. For the Jews to turn to Jesus, they were turning from the security of their cultural heritage. In the new culture of Christ (Christianity), there would be no Jew or Gentile (Gl 3:26-29). There would be no national Israel to which one could be patriotic, for national Israel was coming to a close in A.D. 70 (See Mt 24). The Jewish world in the eternal plan of God was giving way in the first century to a new community of faith in Jesus as the Son of God.

The early Americans fought for and won their independence from English rule in the middle 1700s. The New World (America) that the revolutionaries built was a world that was built by immigrants, immigrants who had left the old world for the new. They left their cultures of Europe in order to make a new life for themselves in the New World. These were immigrants who were looking for a new life, a life of freedom. They came to America in the thousands during the 1800s in order to think freely and to determine their own future.

Immigrants came with their dreams, and with the baggage of their old cultures and languages. However, when they set foot on the new land of hope and opportunity, they adopted the English language—a nation cannot be united unless it has a common language. With the amalgamation of so many cultures in the New World, they developed a new way of life. Their blending of many foreign cultures formed the American culture of diversity. The people become united in their diversity. The serendipity of the amalgamation of cultures to form a new way of life meant that people learned how to change. The development of the American culture resulted in a subliminal cultural trait that makes it easy to change. Change for a better way of life became a cultural value of the New World.

Those who settled the New World were willing to change for a better life. In severing themselves from the Old World, they were determined to build a nation that was based on the freedom of the individual to think and live. This ability to change for the better spilled over into their spiritual life. As devout Bible students, many would approach their study of the Bible with opened minds, not with the bondage of their past religious traditions.

Nevertheless, there were those who brought with them the religious traditions of the Old World. All the traditional religions of the Old World found a place in the freedom of the New World. However, by the end of the eighteenth century, and specifically at the beginning of the nineteenth century, the spirit of independence and freedom gave birth to what is referred to as the American Restoration Movement. The traditional religions of the Old World could not keep in bondage these free thinkers who studied anew the Holy Scriptures.

The Restoration Movement found its birth in America because, in their spirit of independence and love for the word of God, dedicated people began to think freely, and thus cast off the bondage of traditional religiosity. Because of their culture of independence and freedom, it was easy for them to rid themselves of those traditional catechisms of men that kept them in bondage for centuries in the Old World.

Do not make the mistake of believing that it was easy to make the change. It was certainly a fearful thing to flee from the comfort of traditional religiosity. However, the early restorationists' comfort came from the authority of the word of God alone as the foundation upon which they built their faith. They concluded that if the Scriptures were able to furnish one unto every good work, then certainly the Scriptures were all that was needed to present one pleasing before God (2 Tm 3:16,17). It was the authority of the Scriptures, therefore, that moved them on from the authority of the religious traditions of their fathers. As a result, a massive Restoration Movement in faith stormed across America in the 1800s.

The message of restoration, as Peter proclaimed in Jerusalem two thousand years ago, has now gone into all the world. There are millions of disciples throughout the world today who are the product of that nineteenth century American Restoration Movement. They are not products of restoration movements that were generated within their own traditional cultures. They were initially products of mission efforts of the American Restoration Movement that sent evangelists throughout the world. We know of few independent restoration movements in cultures of the world that generated a worldwide impact that was generated by the nineteenth century Restoration Movement of America.

Chapter 2

TRADITIONALIZED RESTORATION

Restoration movements have occurred among various cultures of the world. However, these movements have generally remained local. Because of the strict traditional nature of the culture in which they were born, they have often gone astray, and thus, faded back into the legal religiosity that is common with other local religions.

We have never found in the world today a worldwide restoration movement that was generated within any highly traditional culture simply because the more impact tradition establishes a culture, the less determination there is within society to allow the Bible to be the final authority in matters of faith. For this reason, the American Restoration Movement was unique.

Cultures that hinder freedom and independence, and thus are very traditional, make it difficult for the citizens to think freely in reference to all aspects of life. Traditional cultures, as the Jewish culture at the time Peter made the announcement of the “times of refreshing,” are highly resistant to change. The Jewish religious leadership (the establishment) had brought the thinking of the people into the bondage of the religious traditions of Judaism. The people were thus in the bondage of the religious leaders, whose duty it was to perpetuate the traditions of the fathers.

When the evangelists of the American Restoration went into all the world, we must note that many throughout the world “bought into” the restoration idea. However, the movement grew only because those who bought into the restoration ideal were converts from the traditional religions of the world. Converts were picked off one by one from the camp of the enemy through one baptism at a time. Missionary reports were considered exciting when we read of “baptism reports.” It was not that the idea of restoration was spontaneous within the traditional cultures when freethinkers studied themselves out of religious error. In almost all nations to which the restorationists went it took the restoration evangelists to spark the concept of restoration. Thus the movement of restoration was generally generated from outside traditional cultures, not from within.

And herein was the Achilles' heel of the movement within those traditional cultures that were not known for generating freethinking from within their religious communities. The imported ideology of restoration was often “traditionalized” by the local traditionalists. The local legal system of religiosity easily legalized the teaching that was introduced by the missionaries. The locals legalized the “outline of doctrine” that was imported and handed to each new convert. The outline had already been generated by the senders, and thus, it was assumed that if the new converts would remain faithful to the outline, then they would remain faithful to Jesus. What often happened was that Christians were identified by the foreign appendages of cultural traits that arrived in the “mission field” through the foreign evangelist. New converts were clones of the outlined thinking and behavior that was imported by the expatriate evangelist.

Because the local folks were not taught to interpret the Scriptures for themselves, but to perpetuate the legal outline of identity of the church, the church where the outline was imported often circled around and became as denominational as the traditional denominations from which the American restorationists fled. National churches that previously bought into the message of the pioneering evangelists buried themselves in traditional religiosity from which they now find it difficult to think freely for themselves in applying the message of the word of God in their own culture.

This did not happen when Jesus came into the world. He and His teaching were radical, so radical in comparison to the teaching of the Jewish religious leaders that it was not possible for them to syncretize the Jews’ religion with the message of the gospel of grace. Some Jewish Christians tried to make the harmony, but they ended up with “another gospel” that the Holy Spirit immediately condemned as a denial of the grace of God (See Gl 1:6-9).

In order to set the people free from Judaism, God had to work great miracles to confirm the fact that there was a change from His relationship with Israel to His new relationship with those with whom He had established a new covenant (See Mk 16:20). The dead were raised, the blind were made to see, and the crippled arose and walked (Hb 2:3,4). God knew that it would be difficult for the Jews to accept the radical change from the law of Moses to the gospel of grace that was revealed through His Son (Ti 2:11).

God knew that it would be difficult for the Jews to change when the “fullness of time” came. Through prophecy, therefore, He laid the ground work for changes the Jews had to make when the Messiah came. In Isaiah 28:11,12, He prophesied that His people would eventually be identified by their speaking in unlearned languages that they had not studied. We understand the prophecy in this manner because this is Paul’s inspired interpretation of the prophecy in his quotation of Isaiah 28:11,12 in 1 Corinthians 14:21. Isaiah stated in the prophecy that God would speak to His people with other languages. This speaking would be the signal of His people. Jesus said that the new covenant people of God would speak with new languages (Mk 16:17). When the early disciples spoke in languages by the Holy Spirit, it was God’s signal to the unbelieving Jews that God had changed from His covenant relationship with national Israel to His new covenant relationship with the new spiritual Israel of God, the church (1 Co 14:22).

The new Israel had been set free from the past in order to embrace the new in Jesus Christ. God will use no confirming miracles today to signal those who are His people. He does not need confirming miracles for such a purpose because He has given His written record of miracles that is able to furnish the people of God unto all good works (2 Tm 3:16,17). No longer do the people of God need to speak with languages they have not studied. God’s confirmation through languages (tongues) was accomplished in the first century. The confirmation was recorded. Since the first century, therefore, we read in the New Testament of those whom God confirmed to be His people. If one needs a confirming miracle of the word of God among men, then he can open his Bible and read (See Jn 20:30,31). Today we read our New Testaments in order to define those in the first century who were God’s new Israel. We no longer need “tongues” of confirmation for this purpose. God expects us to read our Bibles. Nevertheless, we have found that those religionists who are obsessed with speaking in uncontrollable gibberish, while calling such tongues, have little desire to study their Bibles in order to confirm their faith.

When people are set free, they begin to study anew the word of God. And when freed people study their Bibles, unhindered by their fear of being ostracized by those of traditional religiosity, they start enjoying the times of refreshing that come from the Lord. We can understand why Jesus, immediately before His ascension, rehearsed with His disciples the prophecies of Himself and opened their minds to all prophecy (Lk 24:44,45). The apostles needed reassurance that all the prophecies had indeed been fulfilled in the One who was standing before them. They were still in the bondage of the thinking of the Jewish religious leaders. But in a few days on the day of Pentecost, the Holy Spirit would set their minds truly free.

If there is within a culture a lack of free independent thinking, then the religionists of the culture are doomed to live in the bondage of those whose job it is to regiment all adherents of their prospective faiths into conformity to the traditions of the fathers. When religious leaders find themselves making judgments that are based on the traditions of the fathers, then there will be no times of refreshing from the Lord. It is only when men’s minds are set free to study the word of God anew will there be repentance and conversion to the word of God. This understanding is at the heart of what Jesus said: “Therefore, if the Son will make you free, you will be free indeed” (Jn 8:36).

We have traveled and visited numerous religious groups throughout the world who have orchestrated a diversity of assembly ceremonies by which they seek to validate their faith. We have discovered an axiomatic truth in reference to groups who do not have a high regard for the word of God. This truth is in the fact that if there is no open and public Bible study among those of a particular group, the group is on its way to somewhere other than the times of refreshing from the Lord.

Those religious groups that have no Bible study among themselves are usually “Lord, Lord” groups who cry out to God, but His word plays a small part in their religiosity. They thus seek to bind themselves together by their religious ceremonies, or other inventions that are pleasing to all the adherents. The foundation of their fellowship is not according to the desires of the One who seeks to be worshiped in spirit and truth (See Jn 4:24).

It is believed by some of these groups that if enough energy can be expressed in an assembly, then truth can be sacrificed. They thus sacrifice truth for emotional energy. The result is that their coming together in assembly is for the purpose of entertaining themselves—or exhausting themselves—into the bondage of themselves. In their narcissistic religiosity, therefore, self-mesmerizing assemblies have been substituted for worshipful hearts that should be pouring out spiritual sacrifices according to the will of God. These folks need to be set free from themselves. And the only way they can be set free is through the medium of what Jesus said, “And you will know the truth, and the truth will make you free” (Jn 8:32).

There is no possible way to know the truth if we do not open our Bibles. Any group of religious people who would assert that they are following the Lord, must be avid students of the word of the Lord.

Chapter 3

CONFORMING TO THE NORM

That which encourages change is education. The farming techniques of America changed throughout the years because of education. It is very difficult for an uneducated people to make changes, for in their lack of knowledge they seek to find stability in the traditions of their fathers. For this reason, it is difficult for an uneducated people to be delivered from the bondage of their traditions. We forget that our fathers did the best they could with what they knew. But the farming fathers of America knew that their children could do better. And in order for them to do better, every effort was made to educate their children.

Our great grandfather who settled middle America in Kansas had only a few years of school. Our grandfather had a few more years in school. Our father graduated from high school. And the one writing these words graduated at the doctorate level. Every generation exceeded the schooling of the previous generation, and thus, the economic standard of living followed behind the greater education of each generation.

Our fathers’ desire to learn spilled over into their spiritual life. Because the generation of Americans out of which we were born were vibrant students, we became vibrant students of the Bible. Our obsession with Bible study made it necessary to change from traditional teachings that were based on a lack of knowledge of the Bible and were handed down from the fathers of the Old World. When we learned something new in the Bible, we accepted it as the will of God. If changes needed to be made in our thinking, we changed. If changes needed to be made in our lives, then we sought to sacrifice tradition for Scripture. Knowledge of the Scriptures inspired a transition from a foundation based on tradition to a foundation that was based on truth. Such was in the mind of Peter when he wrote to his fellow Jews: “But grow in the grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ” (2 Pt 3:18). In other words, make the transition from tradition to truth.

Religious groups today who purport to be “following Jesus,” but do not have open Bible study, have doomed themselves to carry on with either the traditions of the fathers, or continually invent for themselves a religiosity that is subject to the changing times of society.

After the tremendous migration of people from Europe to America during the 1700s and 1800s, America became a culture of diversity. People considered themselves to be Americans, not Irish, or Germans, or Russians, or any of the nations from which they came. Though immigrants from all over the world came together to the New World, there was the natural development of what became known as the American way of life. This was particularly true as industrialization began to transform American ways into a cultural identity that was unique. It was unique in that difference was accepted as the norm.

Patriotism congealed the American diversity into being one nation under God. When American soldiers went overseas to settle the wars of others, and then returned home, they went as Americans and returned as Americans with an expanded world view. America had a story to tell the world that was based on education, and thus, Americans assumed that everyone could follow the same socio/economic road to development if they would educate their people. They too would be proud of being their own educated and developed nation. Ignorant citizens are rarely patriotic to the nation of which they are a citizen.

But with the conclusion of sorting out the Nazi Germany threat of WW II, American soldiers returned home from being “soldiers on foreign soil”—those for whom we prayed every Sunday when we were children. The soldiers returned home with some different thinking that the war had formed. There were some social rebels among this group who had discovered “overseas” some new ways, ways that were different than the American way. Other people did think differently than Americans. There were different cultures that were parallel with, but not contrary to, the American way of life.

A new word made its way into international relations between nations. “Peaceful coexistence” meant that nations could maintain their “differences” in a world of social and political differences. It was a social behavior that was embedded in the American way of life since its early beginnings. The many immigrants of the many nations of the world who had practiced “peaceful coexistence” gave birth to a unique cultural trait that the international family of nations needed. This “unity in social diversity” has now gone international. After WW I, world organizations as the League of Nations, and then the United Nations were born out of this desire to be united in our diversity.

The rise of individuals who opposed conformity to all social order was beginning to arise in America in the 1950s. Americans were about to discover something almost unique about their own way of life. Americans were about to discover their “peaceful coexistence” culture that made them great as one nation under God. Freedom to think and behave was about to give birth to a new generation of nonconformist Americans who would change America forever. The traditional farming culture of America that brought the nation into the modern world was about to give way to a changing culture that was led by the cities of America.

With his close friend, Neal Cassidy, Jack Kerouac traveled across America during the late 1940s after WW II. For him, he made a marvelous discovery. He discovered and experienced numerous differences in the American way of life and how Americans learned to live as one nation within the definitions of their unique circumstances. It was a beautiful discovery, one that truly revealed that there was accepted diversity within the whole of American society. The outside world was wrong to stereotype America, or as the world today, judging America according to what they see on TV and the international news media. What Kerouac experienced was the rise of a new nonconformist individualism that would not find its expression until the nonconformist revolution that had roots in the 1950s and became a major movement of America in the 1960s.

Kerouac was at first frustrated with what he had experienced on his adventure across America. He was frustrated with the efforts of the norm to work against change into something different. He earnestly wanted to put into words his “quest for self-knowledge and experience.” His travel experiences had revealed that any healthy society must relinquish itself to continual change.

The only way Kerouac believed that he could reveal his discoveries to the general public was to become a “writing monk” until all his thoughts were put on paper. He had a typewriter (remember those), but he was too impatient to be held up in writing by continually changing individual sheets of paper in his typewriter. He felt that he had to write uninterrupted until he dropped. So he found a roll of paper that was used in a teletype machine, inserted it in his typewriter, and then started throwing words on paper through his fingers day after day. After three weeks of constant writing as a literary hermit in the confinement of his quarters, he came out with a document that would later be published as a book that was entitled, On The Road.

Kerouac’s writings laid unpublished and dormant for years. Then finally in 1955 the book was first published. The book immediately hit the best-seller list and has remained on the published book list ever since. On The Road touched a nerve in the “antiestablishment” movement of the 1960s. People were wanting to think freely for themselves, and live contrary to the accepted traditional way of life. Young people of the 1960s were looking for a changed way of life, something that was new, and above all, different. Kerouac discovered that cultural vibrance is discovered only in diversity, but a diversity that allowed individual freedom. When there is diversity within a culture, then there must also be forbearance among those who are of the culture. The citizens of forbearing cultures blend in their diversity. And when individuals are allowed the freedom to blend, then there is freedom to change and freedom to think. If a culture does not allow change in order to blend, then the citizens of the culture are doomed to stagnation in their own traditions. They remain in the subtle fear of education because they are afraid to think freely and change.

How would this “blending culture” affect the religiosity of the world, since all of us live a long way from America? Simple. After WW II America sent representatives of its culture into all the world through the efforts of missionaries. In order to usher change into cultures, European, and then American missionaries, established schools for education around the world. Languages of local tribal groups were transcribed into writing. Grammar books of the local languages were published and taught in the schools. The Bible was translated into thousands of languages.

The first missionaries brought with them the word of God, but often, they also brought with them a legal system of obedience to how the word of God was to be understood and implemented in the lives of the yet “unlearned.” A legal system of faith was easy for the new converts to understand and obey.

In reference to Bible schools that often promoted a legal interpretation of the Scriptures, and a legal application of biblical principles in the lives of different cultures, Bible schools often became “cloning institutions” to perpetuate the religious traditions of the religion of the sending churches. Bible schools sought to teach a legal outline of what constituted “the truth.” Application of truth was often cloned after the religious behavior of the sending churches from the “Old World”. For example, we once visited an assembly of some disciples in the country of Zambia. All the men and boys obediently sat on one side of the meeting hall. All the women and girls did the same on the other side. Families were thus split in assembly by dividing males and females. This arrangement looked somewhat unnatural to us, that is, odd in reference to our Western culture. So we asked one of the leaders why the people were so seated. The answer was, “The missionaries taught us this way.”

When Bible schools become factories of legal religiosity to turn out theological clones whose thought processes are unchallenged to think independently, and thus dysfunctional in reference to common-sense interpretation of the Scriptures, then traditional theology is passed from one generation to another in order to maintain the continuity of the religious establishment. When schools fail to train students to think, then the school has failed its definition of being a school of “higher education.”

What many of the first missionaries failed to understand was that the cultures into which they went were cultures where social order was maintained by keeping the traditions of the fathers. It was easy for the adherents to the new faith of these cultures, therefore, to legalize their faith into a simple catechism of belief and behavior that was written in an outline on paper. Preachers were cloned in many mission schools in order to perpetuate the catechisms of each particular faith. These defining catechisms were subsequently transferred from one generation to another. For this reason, it was necessary that each denominated faith have its own preacher training schools in order to perpetuate the unique catechism that was accepted by each particular faith.

Regardless of any resistance to change by traditionalists, change will always occur. We recall one missionary who came to South Africa long before the American church realized that there was a difference between the word of God and the American cultural manner by which this word was to be implemented in the life of a disciple. When we grew up in America, any effort to “celebrate” Christmas was taboo because some had associated the holiday with the birth of Christ. It was supposedly a Catholic doctrine, and thus, everyone abhorred the possibility of manifesting any theology that remotely resembled Catholic theology. Our missionary friend grew up in this religious culture of “fear theology.”

When our particular missionary friend came to South Africa, he preached the “sin of Christmas.” Since the origin of his theology was strictly legal as the church in which he grew up in the 1950s in America, he established a legal system of faith where he went as a missionary. He thus brought a systematic theology to Africa that not only contained the word of God, but also added legal appendages that he had attached to the word of God. The whole of his theology became a catechism of faith for the new believers. Maintaining the catechism determined one’s faithfulness to the “church.”

Our missionary friend brought an anti-Christmas catechism with him to the new land. Nothing is said in the Scriptures concerning Christmas, and thus, such matters are within the realm of freedom. Unfortunately, those who are legalistic in their understanding of the word of God find it easy to attach their legal appendages to the word of God. They thus seek to fill in the gaps where the Scriptures are silent. Silence of the Scriptures to the legalist means restriction, not freedom.

When the anti-Christmas missionary came to Africa out of the cloned religious culture of his church, he could only preach that which was a clone of that from which he came. So he preached an anti-Christmas theology. When he left South Africa, he left this theology with a very traditional culture that sought to honor the fathers by strict obedience to the traditions of the fathers. For years it was “men on the one side of the auditorium and the women on the other.”

There is an interesting conclusion to this story. The time came for the American missionary to return to his home culture from which he came. When he returned to his home, he returned to a post antiestablishment culture of the 1960s where society had changed and fellow Americans were encouraged to think freely and change. The antiestablishment culture of America had changed forever the cultural function of maintaining the traditions of the fathers. No longer were people expected to clone others with their fathers’ traditions, whether in ordinary behavior of life, or in ceremonial religiosity. In reference to the church, no fundamental doctrine had changed. What had changed was the manner by which fundamental doctrine could be manifested in the life of the individual disciple. There was freedom to think and behave in those areas where the Scriptures were silent. Silence of the Scriptures, therefore, meant freedom of thought, not restriction, the very understanding that the Scriptures teach in Colossians 2:16: “Therefore, let no one judge you in food or in drink, or in respect to a festival, or of any new moon, or of sabbaths.”

So when the missionary reentered his native changed culture, he too learned to think and behave individually and freely. In reference to his faith, no longer did he feel compelled to mold his thinking and behavior around the traditions of the fathers. The subsequent result was that he, and those he taught at home, enjoyed the freedom we all have in Christ, whether Jew or Gentile. We had to laugh when in the 1990s our missionary friend sent us a Christmas card with a glorious Christmas tree on the front. He changed, but many of the traditionalists he taught in South Africa were still living with the legacy of his legalistic binding where God had allowed freedom. Though it is changing in South Africa, there are still the remnants of those who condemn trees, that is “Christmas trees.”

So we in Africa live with what was brought to Africa out of a ceremonial legalism that was a cultural identity of the American church until the middle 1960s when there was an antiestablishment that promoted freethinking individualism. What we have discovered is that those of the American and European faiths have long restored the times of refreshing among themselves, while those in the “mission fields” to which they were first sent as missionaries have hardened themselves in a legalistic religiosity after their own traditional world views. The missionaries who returned to their homeland changed by moving on to freedom. Unfortunately, they left a legal legacy that has been refined into a hardened legal traditionalism.

The good news is that Africa has enrolled in the local university. As young Africans are introduced to free thinking through education, they too are transitioning into an enlightenment of objective study of the Bible. Their interpretations and applications are turning from the “legal catechismal boxes” that were handed to them from a culture that eventually changed from legalistic cloning to freedom to interpret the word of God. We would request that all those in previous missionary-sending nations, who at home transitioned from legal religiosity to freedom in Christ, would in some way let those of their legacy throughout the world know that it is OK to change. We are of a faith that demands growth, and inherent in growth is change. We must never allow traditional religiosity to distort our view of the Scriptures, nor determine the application of Divine principles in our lives. It would be good for those who were left with a legacy of legal religiosity to read what Paul wrote to those of the same theology: “You have been severed from Christ, you who seek to be justified by law. You have fallen from grace” (Gl 5:4).

Chapter 4

OPPOSITON OF THE ESTABLISHMENT

Part I

We have this unique breed of cat in our house. It is a Red Point Siamese. Now this is a very intelligent cat. His intelligence shows up in many things that he does. For example, this cat will choose a nice comfortable location where he will lay his head down and sleep for a definite period of time. He is particular. He will sleep in this location for only seven to eight days. After eight days at the most, it is time to change to another location. He thus selects a new and clean bed where he will again sleep for only seven to eight days. He is not afraid to change locations.

As we said, this is an intelligent cat, and thus, he is willing to make changes in order to keep his snow white hair clean. Now consider dogs. Dogs will sleep in the same old place until they develop mange. Dogs thus stink, and must have their owners bathe them regularly. But cats can clean themselves. Dogs are not freethinkers. They do only that which they are trained to do by their owners. But cats, now they are different. One does not tell a cat what to do. He has already determined what must be done. And for this reason, and many others, the saying is true: “Dogs drool; cats rule!”

Jesus came into a religious environment and culture that had been taught by the traditions of the fathers, the leadership of which Paul referred to as dogs (Ph 3:2). They behaved only as their fathers taught them through their traditions. Religious tradition governed every aspect of the lives of the Jews. Paul’s statement in Galatians 1:13 clearly explains the social environment of the time. He himself was formerly a part of the religious culture that he called “Judaism.” In fact, Paul defined the religion as the “Jew’s religion,” the translation that is used by some to render the Greek text of Galatians 1:13.

At the time when Jesus came into the world, Judaism was not God’s religion. It was a religion that had been fabricated throughout many centuries after the traditions and interpretations of the Jewish fathers. We must understand, therefore, that when Paul wrote in Galatians 4:4 that Jesus came in the “fullness of time,” he meant that Jesus came into a religious environment where many people were seeking spiritual deliverance from the bondage of their own religious heritage. Jesus came, therefore, to generate a paradigm shift, not a reformation or restoration. He was the “change agent” of Judaism that moved the people from the bondage of their own religiosity to freedom that He offered through the grace of God.

Throughout His ministry, Jesus indirectly defined the “Jews’ religion” through His confrontation with the religious leaders. The scribes (religious lawyers) and Pharisees (religious stewards) were the guardians of the religion, and thus in the confrontations that Jesus had with them, the inconsistencies, or apostasy of the Jews’ religion, was clearly evident. Paul himself, as a former Pharisee, was a part of this system of religiosity (Ph 3:5). He was such a zealous fanatic for the Jew’s religion that he persecuted disciples of Jesus who were considered rebels (At 8:1-3).

As we study through the Judaism of the first century, we must not relegate this system of religiosity to the first century. The Jews’ religion was not a religious phenomenon that was unique with the Jews of the first century. The means by which it evolved into a system of religiosity that was confronted by the Son of God, and the manner by which it was perpetuated by its adherents, is as relevant today as it was over two thousand years ago. Change the name to Buddhism, Hinduism, Islam, or even many of the “Christian” religions that are based on traditional religiosity, and the same system of religiosity exists today. We still have traditional religions, though with different names and doctrines.

We still have “scribes” and “Pharisees” today who are the guardians of their respective faiths. And unless we still want to dodge the issue of the first century encounter that Jesus had with the religious establishment of His day, we must always recognize that there are in some areas of the world those who will take the church into being a “Jew’s religion.” They will do so when traditional interpretations and traditional religious ceremonies are bound on the disciples that have no authority of the Scriptures.

Jesus’ confrontation with the type of religiosity that He encountered during His ministry continues unto this day. Satan still uses religious people to oppose those faithfuls who seek to do the will of their heavenly Father. Since there will always be “Lord, Lord” religions in the “Christian world” who pretend to call themselves after Christ, but do not the will of the Father in heaven, there will always be a confrontation between those who seek to do the will of our heavenly Father and those who seek to do the will of their earthly fathers (See Mt 7:21-23). It is imperative, therefore, that we understand the nature of the religion that opposed Jesus in order that we understand the religious leadership of the religion that sent Jesus to the cross. Satan is still using the same tactics today that he used through the Jewish religious leadership during the early beginnings of the church.

In order to effectively lead people from a “Jew’s religion,” we must understand how people end up in a religion that is fabricated after the traditions of the fathers. Mark 7:1-9 (Mt 15:1-20) helps us understand how the opposing religion of Judaism was created over time, and why its leaders were so strongly opposed to Jesus and the early disciples. In the Mark 7 confrontation, Jesus explained why the religious establishment found it difficult to accept the new paradigm of grace that He was introducing.

Religions that are traditional are identified by their legal approach to their catechisms of belief and customary religious ceremonies. It is easy to identify religions in this way, for we identify them by their legal compliance to their catechisms and religious ceremonies that have no biblical authority. In this way Jesus defined the uniqueness of the Jews’ religion. In His confrontations with the Jewish leadership, we are able to identify those teachings that identified the apostasy of Judaism. By identifying the legal structures of Judaism as Jesus did, we are able to understand why many strongly opposed Jesus. Jesus' definition of identity that exposed the Jews' religion is thus our guideline today to identify similar systems of religion.

All cultures of the world respect their traditions. There is respect for the traditions of the fathers in order that the continuity of a culture might continue from one generation to another. This respect for the traditions of the fathers, however, is almost always brought into the realm of the religious behavior of the people. Respect for the religious traditions of the fathers promotes continuity in order to guarantee the continuation of any particular religious heritage.

This was the religious environment that Jesus encountered during His ministry. The problem was not a confrontation with the Sinai law, but the Jews' reverence for the doctrines and traditions that had been added to the original Sinai law. On one occasion during the many confrontations that Jesus had with the Pharisees and scribes, the religious leaders asked, "Why do Your disciples not walk according to the tradition of the elders ...?" (Mk 7:5). This one question sparked Jesus' reply that helps us today understand apostate religiosity.

The Pharisees and scribes had noticed that Jesus' disciples ate bread with unwashed hands, which behavior was contrary to the religious traditions of Judaism. Such was a good tradition in reference to cleanliness, but the matter went beyond cleanliness. The washing of pots, pans and hands had moved into the religious culture of the Jews. And when the disciples failed to show up at the sink to wash their hands before they ate, they had not only violated a rule of cleanliness, but the "Jews' religion."

We wonder among ourselves how many customs we have that are good, but have become a catechism for our religious definition. These would be customs that have no biblical foundation. For example, a group of disciples often do not feel that they are validated in their community unless they meet in a church building. We have even heard of those who complained that the government of their country would not accept them as a valid religious faith unless they were sitting on pews in their own building in the community. This is sometimes true. However, this is a secular government speaking, not the Bible.

The urge for a physical "building identity" for some people is so great in some areas that the adherents to a particular group do not believe that they are an "established church" until they build for themselves four walls in which to sit. And when they supposedly arrive at a higher level of religiosity by having their own building, they often confine their religiosity to the four walls they have constructed around themselves. In doing so, they sometimes look down on those who are still struggling to accomplish the same "walled-in mission."

All discussion centered around purpose-built buildings for the meeting of the saints is discussion about tradition, not Bible, for there is no discussion in the New Testament about buildings. It is not wrong for the disciples to build. What is wrong is the belief that if we do not build we are not "a church," and thus pleasing in the sight of God. It is in the realm of freedom for brethren not to build, but rather channel their money into evangelism and benevolence. It is wrong to believe that those who do not build have somehow not arrived at being an "established church."

We must not underestimate the influence that religious icons play among religious people of today. These icons are so influential that if one comes with the notion that we can meet anywhere in assembly without a purpose-built church building, he or she is considered beyond the norm of the accepted religious norms of the community.

We could extend the list of religious traditions that have become supposed necessities in reference to the belief and behavior of our faith. We could add song leaders in the assembly, a preacher dominating an audience with a sermon, names to identify specific assemblies, and preachers validated by diplomas and degrees. All such practices have a specific origin in the history of Christianity since such things did not exist in the first century. All such beliefs and practices are allowed in the freedom that we have in Christ. However, none are found in the New Testament to identify the church of the first century.

The fact that some readers have at this time become somewhat uneasy with the mention of the examples that we have given proves our point. Church buildings, local preachers, names of specific churches, etc. did not exist in the first century. Such things are "biblical" only because they are teachings that lie within the realm of freedom. Nevertheless, the level of one's uneasiness in discussing these matters reveals the desire that some have in assuming that such things are necessary to validate the existence of a "local church." Add at will to this list, and then we have some idea of what Jesus encountered when He came in the "fullness of time" to a nation of people who had added hundreds of traditional interpretations and practices to the word of God, and thus developed what Paul defined as the Jews' religion. The Jewish religious establishment correctly believed that if the beliefs and practices of their religious heritage came to an end, so would their religion.

The difficulty of turning the thinking of religious traditionalists to the word of God is that the traditionalists have a difficult time separating tradition from Scripture. When the traditionalist learns new information in the word of God that must be implemented in his life, he is often greatly disturbed. He is disturbed because he feels that not only is his faith under attack, but also his culture. His recourse is defensive, and thus, he often negatively reacts to what is revealed in the Bible because he cannot separate his religious traditions from what the Bible actually states. As a result of his frustration, he often takes his frustrations out on the one who has pointed out the error of either his thinking or his traditions that have no biblical foundation. Those who are not accustomed to Bible study, or those who accept something as truth because it is stated by the preacher, are usually those who react with the most hostility to the messengers of the word of God. The cross of Christ will always be a testimony to how vehemently traditional religionists will react to the truth of God's word.

Consider also the fact that when a supposed religious tradition is believed and behaved by a group, those who point out that the supposed "law" has no biblical foundation are often attacked. It is easier to attack the messenger than study one's Bible in order to challenge one's own beliefs. The messenger is often considered a rebel by the group, and thus it is against him that the group will take out their frustrations because they believe that it is he who is attacking their religious heritage, and not the Bible.

Jesus was considered a rebel by the Jewish religious establishment because of this very thing. The fact that He did not bind the washing of hands as a law labelled Him to be a rebel according to the religious establishment. We must not forget, however, that Jesus was not rebelling against the word of God, but against that which had supplanted the word of God in the lives of the people. Restorationists are always considered rebels because they seek to point out the difference between tradition and Bible. They seek to obey God rather than the traditional heritages of man.

Chapter 5

OPPOSITION OF THE ESTABLISHMENT

Part II

In Jesus' confrontation and rebuke of the Jewish religious establishment in Mark 7, He identified what happens among religious people when they start exalting their religious heritage above the authority of the word of God. When the traditions of men become the controlling authority of our faith, the next stage of digression from the word of God is only natural. Jesus explained, "For laying aside the commandment of God, you hold the tradition of men" (Mk 7:8).

We must never underestimate the power that religious traditions have over the authority of the word of God. In fact, we would say that tradition almost always prevails over commandment. The reason is that tradition is the voice of our peers. When the word of God lays silent on our kitchen tables, tradition will always prevail. An individual is often more inclined to believe and behave according to the desires of his peers, than stand alone to believe and behave according to the directions of the word of God. When we desire to be accepted by our religious community that is walking contrary to the word of God, we will succumb to the pressure of our peers. Friends form the foundation of the faith of those who have ceased studying their Bibles.

An example of the intimidation of the community over the individual was manifested in the behavior of Nicodemus when he came to Jesus at night (Jn 3:1,2). He had questions concerning the teaching of Jesus. However, he did not want to risk being rejected by his fellow religious leaders by asking his questions in their presence. The darkness of the night brought to light the intimidation of his peers. He succumbed to the work of Satan through group intimidation, even though he believed that the signs that Jesus worked were from God (Jn 3:2).

The point is that even though Nicodemus believed the miraculous confirmation of Jesus' message, he was still intimidated by his peers. We must conclude that when a religious group has a long history as the Jews' religion, and is extended throughout the world, then certainly the peers of every preacher will be greatly intimidated to conform to the heritage of their religion over the authority of the word of God. Most religious people today would rather follow their peers than the authority of the words of the Prince of Peace.

We must add to this social intimidation of one's peers another point that possibly influenced Nicodemus.

Judaism was the religion of a social Jewish structure that was built on strong Jewish families. Therefore, when Jesus presented Himself to those of the Jews' religion, He knew that those who would come to Him would find resistance even among their own families. Not only would one have to overcome the religiosity of the community, but also the religion of his own family. And for this reason, Jesus said, "If anyone comes to Me and does not hate his father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple" (Lk 14:26).

Though Nicodemus and others were emboldened later in the early beginnings of the church to follow Jesus, the traditions of the religious community during the ministry of Jesus prevailed upon him, and others, to lay aside that which was right according to the word of God. He sacrificed Jesus in order to avoid conflict with his peers. When a group of people have a high regard for their religious traditions, these traditions are usually elevated above the commandment of God. The commandment of God, therefore, is easily laid aside in order that the traditions of the religious group be maintained.

If one is part of a fellowship of erring religious leaders, as was Nicodemus, it is often rare that within the group he will take a stand for the word of God. If one is not willing to forsake an erroneous religious community, then certainly he will not be willing to forsake the religious heritage of his father, mother, wife, children, brothers and sisters. The desire to be accepted is often too great for most people, who through their personal studies or observation as Nicodemus, have discovered that some things the group believes are contrary to the word of God. When an entire group seeks to maintain the heritage of apostate religiosity, the leaders of the religion would rather lay aside the word of God in order to maintain their fellowship with their friends and family. When an entire family is caught up in a religious fantasy, only a few of the family will be willing to break away and follow the word of Jesus. This is simply one method of work that Satan uses to keep the unsaved lost.

Chapter 6

OPPOSITION OF THE ESTABLISHMENT

Part III

In the confrontation of Jesus with the religious establishment that Mark recorded in Mark 7, Jesus moved to the final stage that identified a true apostate religion and how Satan robs the word of God from the hearts of the lost (See Mt 13:1-23). He identified how the Jews developed what Paul called the "Jews' religion." This is Satan's subtle work to move religious people into the comfort zone of their own religiosity. Adherents of the religion become comfortable with the rejection of the commandments of God, for the Bible no longer plays an important part of their faith.

In this stage of development in apostasy from the will of God, the word of God is rejected in order that the traditions of the religious heritage be maintained. When Satan has led a religious group to this stage of digression, then there is little hope for the group as a whole to restore the authority of the word of God.

Jesus came into a religious community that was controlled and maintained by the religious leaders who sought to continue the religious heritage of the fathers. Many of these leaders were sincere in their efforts, for they honored the religious heritage of their fathers. Unfortunately, most of the religious leaders that Jesus encountered during His ministry did not understand the slow progression of apostasy that had taken Israel away from God into the bondage of their own religiosity. Many Jews had moved away in their own religiosity to a point where the word of God was sacrificed for the heritage of the fathers.

The progression of apostasy to the point of rejecting the commandments of God is slow. It is so slow that the adherents of a particular faith suffer no pain in the digression because they do not recognize that the word of God is moving away from being the central focus of their religiosity. When people are too busy with worldly things and activities to study their Bibles, then the digression is certain. When people become so mesmerized by either their works or cult religiosity, they soon forget that the word of God focuses us on God, not on ourselves. In the digression away from God's word, religiosity is maintained. The ceremonies of the heritage-based faith are continued. The adherents to the religion, therefore, feel faithful because they are submissive to their religious structures and ceremonies. However, the Bible is rejected as the source that keeps us close to God.

Once a religious group has established a heritage of beliefs and behavior that identifies the uniqueness of the particular group, then the foundation of faith for the group is no longer based on the word of God. It is based on a heritage that has been delivered to the adherents by their fathers, and perpetuated by the leaders of the group. When the members of the unique group travel from one place to another, the members identify themselves by stating the unique name of their religious heritage, not by the simplicity of being just a Christian who has obeyed the gospel. Notice how many groups are identified on Facebook by the unique name of the heritage after which each group leader seeks to call all adherents of a particular faith into the unique Facebook group.

Any religious group among men that does not respect the word of God as the final authority in all matters of faith, will inevitably develop a religious heritage that rejects the word of God. We would hope that the adherents of all groups that have moved away from the authority of the word of God would make a decision to search the Scriptures in order to validate their beliefs and behavior. But if their heritage (tradition) is considered to be the identity of the group, then the group will struggle to generate a restoration to the authority of the word of God. These thoughts are in the following statement that God made to Israel through Hosea:

My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge. Because you have rejected knowledge [of My word], I will also reject you so that you will be no priest to Me. Seeing you have forgotten the law of your God, I will also forget your children.” (Hs 4:6).

The statement refers to the word of God being rejected by Israel, as it has been rejected in most of the societies in which we minister today. The Israelites had forgotten the law that maintained their covenant relationship with God. Because of their lack of knowledge of the word of God, all but a remnant were destroyed through the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities. There was only a remnant left by the time Jesus was revealed in the fullness of time.

When religious traditions define the religious heritage of a people, then those who would oppose the heritage when they discover a conflict between tradition and the word of God, are often considered rebels within the group. They are shunned by the group. The leaders who consider themselves to be the guardians of the heritage, will shun the rebels, even to the point of crucifying them on crosses. And such they did with Jesus, the leading rebel of heritage religiosity of His time. The agents of change who are crying out for restoration among a “Jews’ religion” are always crucified. If they are not crucified, then they are imprisoned in isolation from the establishment of the leadership.

Jesus came with a ministry to return the word of God as the core of the faith of Israel. In doing such, He was considered a rebel because He led a rebellion against the Jews’ religion. Whenever there are those who seek to restore people to the authority of the word of God, they will always be considered rebels, and such they are. Until men rise up against those who sacrifice the word of God for the traditions of the fathers, we will continue on a road away from God. And as in the case of the history of Israel, there is only destruction at the end of this road. History always needs within the religious function of the people those who will stand firm on the Oracles of God.

Chapter 7

THE RISE OF REBELS

It is imperative that those who have a deep respect for the authority of the word of God in all matters of faith understand fully the tricks of Satan who works through religious leaders to squash any forms of rebellion against what is accepted to be the “identity” of our religious heritage. The majority of people develop their religiosity either after the traditions of their fathers, their own present emotional desires, or both. Many today have focused their religiosity on “feel-good” assemblies, from which they go having confidence that they have validated their faith by some emotional hysteria. Others continue to feel validated by continuing the religious heritage that was given to them by their fathers. The adherents of every apostate religion establish some validation for the religion they maintain.

In our review of how Satan worked to oppose Jesus through the leadership of the Jews’ religion, we must admit that his resistance was formidable. Our task, therefore, is to investigate how Satan worked in the past to misdirect the beliefs and behavior of religious people. Our study of the word of God to discover the ministry of Satan in misdirecting people will give us a foundation upon which we can expect Satan to work today.

Satan continues to go about as a roaring lion, seeking those whom he may devour (1 Pt 5:8). The problem with us is that we believe that his devouring is only in reference to convincing people to do the vices of the world, as drunkenness, fornication, cheating or stealing. But we would not believe for a moment that such vices encompass fully the ministerial tricks of the devil. As in the first century, he has captivated most people today through the lies of religiosity. The judgment that Jesus unleashed on His generation of religious leaders would be the same if He were here today speaking to most religious leaders:

You are of your father the devil, and the desires of your father you want to do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and does not abide in the truth because there is no truth in him. When he speaks a lie, he speaks from his own nature; for he is a liar, and his father (Jn 8:44).

We live in a religious world today where the devil is still the father of many religious leaders. Satan has devoured the majority, and thus, the majority of the people of the world follow after religious lies. The religious world that crucified Jesus, was not unlike our religious world today. The Holy Spirit prophetically wrote,

*... and with all deception of wickedness among those who perish, because they did not receive the love of the truth so that they might be saved. And for this reason God will send them strong delusion so that they should believe a lie, that they all might be condemned who did not believe the truth, but took pleasure in wickedness (2 Th 2:10-12).

A. Old Testament rebels:

The work of rebels as Isaiah, Jeremiah, Amos, and the host of Old Testament prophets, is the story of trials that restorationists will always have in their efforts to turn people away from their own religious adventures back to the word of God. When the people love the lie more than the truth, restorationists to them will always be considered rebels, for the restorationist will always be considered one who is rebelling against the established religion, which religion is based on a lie.

We cannot say that the Old Testament restorationists (rebels) were total failures because Israel refused to turn again unto the commandments of God. The fact that there was a remnant of faithful Israelites who survived the onslaught of the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities is a testimony of two very important points that we must always remember: (1) Restorationists (rebels to the apostate religion) must always keep in mind that there are “7000” in Israel who have not yet bowed to the apostate faith that is promoted by Baal prophets (2 Kg 19:18). Rebels must always remember that not everyone in the apostate religion has given himself over to the apostate faith. They have simply been ignorant in their apostasy. If they had a chance to hear the truth of the gospel, they would come, as Nicodemus, out of the captivity of lies.

(2) The faithful 7000 in comparison to the whole of Israel, was a very small number. Therefore, restorationists must never forget that the whole can never be restored, and thus, they must focus on the few. And because the whole cannot be restored, those “rebels” for God who seek to restore the few to the word of God must never be intimidated by the whole. If one has a difficult time standing alone in the midst of a whole nation of apostates with only a small number of 7000 who would remain faithful, then he will have little effect on leading the faithful few to victory in the truth of God. In fact, the “7000” often do not make themselves known unless there are those brave individuals who stand up for the word of God in the midst of apostasy. Restorationists must always remember that Noah, a preacher of righteousness, stood alone in a world of apostates (2 Pt 2:5). His “7000” faithfuls numbered only the seven members of his family.

B. New Testament rebels:

There is more in the statement of what Paul said in Galatians 4:4 than what we might first think: “But when the fullness of time came, God sent forth His Son ....”

We have often conceived of a host of reasons that would define the “fullness of time” about which Paul spoke. Some have asserted that reference was specifically to the fulfillment of prophecy. But we believe there is more in the statement than fulfillment of prophecy. After all, God could fulfill the prophecies of the Old Testament at any time during the fourth kingdom of Daniel and Nebuchadnezzar’s visions (See Dn 2 & 7).

Some have assumed that since the Roman Empire extended throughout the Middle East, then this was the right time in history for the preaching of the gospel, which gospel could easily be spread throughout the known world. But we must keep in mind that the Roman Empire existed unto A.D. 476 when the city of Rome eventually fell. If only the stability that came with the existence of the Roman Empire is meant in the “fullness of time,” then there was more than one century in which God could have sent forth His Son. We would question, therefore, that the “fullness of time” referred exclusively to either the fulfillment of prophecy at a specific date or the stability of the Middle East for the coming of the Messiah.

We assume that the “fullness of time” refers more to socio/religious matters than physical matters. It was the right time in the socio/religious environment of Judaism for a rebel to come in order to call the people as a whole with the words, “I tell you, no. But unless you repent, you will all likewise perish” (Lk 13:3). And perish the whole did in A.D. 70 because they did not accept the Rebel who could lead them in the “times of restoration of all things” (At 3:21).

When Jesus came, it was a time of great frustration on the part of many. The religious establishment exploited those who were sons of Abraham by faith. The scribes and Pharisees reigned theologically unchallenged until the Rebel came and said to the people, “You have heard that it was said, ... but I say to you” (Mt 5:21,27,33,38,43). There was a new teacher in town, one who spoke with authority (Mt 7:29).

The people were looking for someone to deliver them out of the bondage of religious oppression. They were looking for a Messiah who would lead them to a freedom they did not realize. They thought they would be free if delivered from the Roman occupation of their homeland. But the true freedom that would come would be freedom for a world, not simply some nationalistic Jews who wanted it to be again as it was in the days of David and Solomon. The One who was revealed in the fullness of time brought freedom from time.

When the revealed One did come and proclaim freedom across the land, it was then that Satan rose up his host of deceived religious leaders to quail those who attacked his kingdom of bondage. And to accomplish this feat, he withdrew from his chest of evil every tactic possible that would squash rebels of the religious establishment that he had so carefully manufactured throughout the centuries of Jewish history. He led his forces against the Righteous Leader of those who would eventually prevail against all opposition to preach the gospel of freedom to those in the bondage of sin and misguided religiosity.

It is our human nature to want to be accepted. We want to feel that we are part of the group. With all the emotional negatives that come with our inferiority complexes, the group reaffirms that we are important and a part of the team. And when we speak of religious groups, these feelings are intensified. If we are rejected by our peers in faith for some reason, we feel that we are the outcast who in the end will be cast out by God. When discussing what it takes to stand up as a rebel against apostasy, we must never underestimate our own desires to be accepted. This desire is often greater than our desire to be obedient to the word of God. We too often fear men more than we fear God.

Chapter 8

THE REJECTION OF REBELS

Part I

If we would succumb to the pressures of the majority in reference to restoring the authority of the word of God in our belief and behavior, then we should state our complaints before men as Jeremiah and Daniel, men who stood alone in their time to restore the people to God. Neither men were intimidated to conform to the majority in their efforts to restore the people of God. One ended up in a pit, and the other in a lion's den. What we have discovered, however, is that people are too afraid of pits and lions. The result is that there is no spiritual stamina to stand against the majority that have gone astray. Satan knows this weakness. And because he knows this weak point of our nature, peer pressure is one of the first devices that he uses to silence any opposition against the wayward religious establishment.

We might take another look at how Jesus and the apostles handled rejection. If we would be Jesus' disciples, then discipleship means following Him through the storm of rejection that will come to anyone who seeks to be His disciple by being obedient to His commandments.

We seek to be disciples of Jesus. But we often do not understand the extent to which discipleship will lead us. When John inscribed the testimony of the document of John to substantiate the faith of those who believed, we must seriously consider some of his introductory statements. Note John 1:11: “He [Jesus] came to His own and His own did not receive Him.” If we would be the disciple of Jesus, then we must be willing to be rejected by our own who do not follow the commandments of Jesus.

Our desire to be received (accepted) runs powerful through our veins. If we live in a culture that is very traditional, this emotion is intense. It is for this reason that there are few restoration movements that are generated among those cultures of the world that are very traditional. The desire to be accepted by the people is strong, and thus, any religious rebels to the religious establishment will be intimidated to conform to the majority. Traditional religions still have their “witch doctors” who stand up and cast spells on those who do not conform to the norm. Jesus came into a very traditional Jewish culture. Tradition was the foundation of the Jews’ religion. Therefore, the religious leadership rejected Him because He did not fit into the traditional understanding of who the Messiah should be.

When the “fullness of the time” came, the Jews had intensified their traditional culture and religious behavior in order to establish their identity among the Gentiles (the Romans) who occupied Palestine. They were so intense in their efforts to establish their identity that they would not even venture into a house to eat with a Gentile. Remember the opposition that Peter faced when he went into the house of Cornelius? When Peter, and those Jews who went with him, returned to Jerusalem, the Jewish brethren in Jerusalem “disputed with him” on the matter of violating Jewish religious customs (At 11:2). Keep in mind that these were Jewish Christians, not Jewish unbelievers who disputed with Peter.

Peter surely remembered this harsh encounter for some time to come. A few years later in Antioch, he, Barnabas, and the other Jewish Christians in Antioch, were intimidated by the Jerusalem Jewish Christians to withdraw from the Gentile Christians in Antioch (Gl 2:11-13). The cases of Peter in the house of Cornelius and Antioch illustrate the strict Jewish isolationist culture of the time. This was the “fullness of the time” into which Jesus came with a message that in Christ there would be neither Jew nor Gentile (Gl 3:26-29). Since these were the times in which Jesus came into the world, then we must conclude that it was the right time for His coming. And since it was the right time, then we understand that Jesus came in order to lead us down a road of rejection that can be overcome.

We are not surprised by the Jews’ rejection of Jesus. Neither were the early disciples surprised when they began to understand the prophecy of Isaiah 53:3: “He is despised and rejected by men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. And we hid, as it were, our faces from Him. He was despised and we did not esteem Him.”

The first Jewish disciples knew, therefore, that if the prophecy of Isaiah 53 referred to the Messiah—and it did—then they understood that if they were to be disciples of the Messiah, their own lives would be as the prophecy stated. They too would be despised and rejected by men. They too would be men of sorrows and acquainted with grief. They too would not be esteemed highly by those who rejected them. We remember what the despised One said to His first disciples: “And whoever does not bear his own cross and come after Me, cannot be My disciple” (Lk 14:27). If one is not willing to be despised for Jesus, then he cannot be a disciple of Jesus. Jesus would say to any who would be His disciple today, “If the world hates you, you know that it hated Me before it hated you” (Jn 15:18).

If one would be a disciple of Jesus, therefore, he must always be a rejected rebel when in the midst of apostate religionists. We must remember to always be more afraid of the One who can cast us into eternal destruction, than any who would cast us out of a socio/religious establishment of the day (See Mt 10:28). If we cherish being a part of the crowd in reference to faith, then we must make sure that the crowd cherishes the word of God.

In the parable of the Ten Minas, the ten bondservants of the nobleman said, “We will not have this man to reign over us” (Lk 19:14). The religious leaders about whom the parable was spoken rejected their King. Discipleship to this King means that we also must be willing to be rejected as He was rejected. Those who have committed themselves to be obedient subjects in the kingdom of Jesus, will be persecuted by those who refuse to submit to the present kingdom reign of Jesus. It is for this reason that we can identify those who are submissive subjects of King Jesus. Those who have submitted in obedience to the gospel of the King have placed themselves as rebels against those who have chosen to establish their own institutional kingdoms. Their rejection of the gospel reign of King Jesus bears witness to the fact that they have established other lords on earth to whom they would be subservient. We never forget that we can identify gospel-obedient subjects of the gospel reign of King Jesus by their obedience to the gospel of their King.

Nevertheless, it is King Jesus who said the following to His disciples when they went out to recruit more disciples:

Therefore, whoever will confess Me before men, him I will also confess before My Father who is in heaven. But whoever will deny Me before men, him I will also deny before My Father who is in heaven (Mt 10:32,33).

Chapter 9

THE REJECTION OF REBELS

Part II

We must understand the background surrounding the stoning of Stephen in order to understand why religious people can become so infuriated with their opposition that they will stone someone like Stephen.

This story begins with a religious social club of people called the “Synagogue of the Freedmen” (At 6:9). In a debate concerning Jesus—we must not miss this point—these “Freedmen” viciously debated with Stephen. However, “they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he [Stephen] spoke” (At 6:10).

When men cannot with dignity and truth, win the argument in a fair discussion, they will resort to stirring up a group of fellow debaters to take action as a mob against those with whom they cannot win in a debate. “So they stirred up the people and the elders and the scribes” (At 6:12). The opposition stirs up the people through slander. They write slanderous letters and resort to a multitude who hold their position. They recruit followers (Gl 4:17). They threaten excommunication from their social religious club (3 Jn 10).

Once the accused has been brought to trial before the people and religious instigators, then slander and false witnesses, not truth, are launched against the rejected. The text says in reference to slander against Stephen, “Then they set up false witnesses ...” (At 6:13). These false witnesses proclaimed to the self-appointed court, “This man [Stephen] does not cease to speak words against this holy place and the law” (At 6:13). Now notice what the accusation was: “For we have heard him say that this Jesus of Nazareth will destroy this place and change the customs that Moses delivered us” (At 6:14).

The accusations were true, but twisted. We have often heard the statement made against an accused, “The perception is ....” We must always understand that perceptions are never entirely true. There is always a twisting of thinking or behavior of the accused in perceptions. Perception is just a nice word for gossip, and in gossip, nothing is ever entirely true. Those who are willing to base their judgments on perceptions (gossip), are in company with the self-appointed judges who judged and stoned Stephen. These judges did not want to confuse their perceptions with the truth. Their desires were twisted because they presumed that the temple of their heritage was about to be destroyed, and their twisted understanding of the law, was about to be revealed.

The religious establishment rejected Stephen because he spoke of Jesus’ prophecy, that the symbol of their faith, the “holy place” (the temple), would be destroyed (See Mt 24). And to add insult to injury, they were horrified when Stephen said that Jesus would “change the customs that Moses delivered to us” (At 6:14; see Mt 5:17,18). This did not set well with the religious establishment because they had inseparably tied their customs to the law of God. So after Stephen had delivered a brief history of all that Jesus said was the fulfillment of prophecy concerning the Messiah, and the consummation of national Israel, “they were cut to the heart” (At 7:54).

They were cut to the heart, not because they believed the message of Stephen, but that they could not answer his arguments from the history of the word of God, which history was all true. Stephen only brought to their attention that their Jewish history would find consummation in the Messiah. And Jesus was the Messiah. Jesus, therefore, meant the end of their religious heritage.

Those who are rejected by the religious establishment, as Stephen, must never forget this reaction of religious leaders who could not with truth, answer with dignity those who spoke the truth. Luke records the normal reaction of frustrated religionists who cannot use their Bibles to separate lies from truth: “And they gnashed at him with their teeth” (At 7:54). We have heard of this very behavior taking place among some today who were approached about their binding of religious traditions that have no authority of the Scriptures.

It is almost inconceivable that supposedly religious people would react in this manner to those they oppose. Their reaction helps us understand the psychology of those whose foundation for faith is swept away with the word of God. Dishonest religionists who care more for their purse and positions than the word of God will always react to the truth in this manner. So “they threw him out of the city and stoned him” (At 7:58). Those who would stand for the truth in the midst of the error of the majority must always expect to be the recipient of thrown stones.

Rejection can be intense. Those disciples who are overpowered with the desire to be accepted by the whole can never be as the One after whom they claim to be a disciple. We would correctly affirm that Stephen was a true disciple of Jesus because he was willing to take a stand regardless of the consequences. Those who are not willing to be crucified or stoned for Jesus are fooling themselves if they claim to be disciples of Jesus.

We must not forget that a faith for which we are not willing to be crucified or stoned is really not a faith worth having.

Those who oppose an erring religious establishment must always expect to be rejected by the leadership of the establishment and ejected from its fellowship.

Chapter 10

THE REJECTION OF REBELS

Part III

The occasion for Peter and John's rejection by the religious establishment in Jerusalem was the healing of a crippled man who was well-known among all who went to the temple (At 3:1-10). The result of the healing was the opportunity for the two apostles to preach Jesus to those who were amazed at what they had witnessed. Since there were a great number of people who gathered for the occasion, the religious leaders of the Jews' religion "laid hands on them [the apostles], and put them in custody ..." (At 4:3). The religious leaders were envious of the attention that was given to the two apostles.

Once the key religious leaders gathered, they asked Peter and John to identify the "authority" by which they did the healing, or by whose "name" under whom they worked. It is interesting to note that the crippled man, by whom these religious leaders had walked every day for years, was actually standing there in their midst. However, they were not interested in the healed man, but in the challenge that Peter and John posed to their authority and positions. We must not miss this point: Religious leaders who covet power and positions are more concerned with power and positions than the work of God.

The religious leaders could not deny that the impotent man had been healed (At 4:14). They confessed that a notable miracle had been done (At 4:16). Nevertheless, lest Peter and John gain more notoriety among the people, they sternly threatened them in order that they speak no more in the name of Jesus (At 4:17,18).

The religious leaders had rejected both the witness of the healed man, as well as the testimony of Peter and John. They then resorted to threats. The fact that they could threaten assumes that they had the power to excommunicate anyone from the socio/religious community of the people. They also had the power of imprisonment, or even worse. Stephen experienced that which was worse ... stoning.

The rejection of the apostles continued in Jerusalem as they boldly proclaimed that Jesus was the Messiah, and thus, the end of national Israel. Their rejection by the Jewish religious leaders continued because there were many signs and wonders worked by the apostles in Jerusalem (At 5:12-16). There were so many people healed in Jerusalem that multitudes from the surrounding cities also brought their sick to be healed. As a result, Luke recorded, "Then the high priest rose up, and all those who were with him ... and were filled with indignation" (At 5:17).

At this time in the history of the growth of the church, a movement had begun that was in direct conflict with the religious establishment of the day. As a result, all the apostles were thrown into jail (At 5:18). Nevertheless, an angel of the Lord came and opened the doors of the prison. The persistent apostles were again doing that which was contrary to the desires of the religious establishment. They were preaching Jesus in the temple courtyard.

As a result of their preaching, the apostles were again summoned before the council of the religious establishment in Jerusalem. The high priest scolded the apostles, "Did we not strictly command you that you should not teach in this name?" (At 5:28). When threatened with this type of intimidation from religious leaders in one's community, the response of the apostles to the demands of the religious establishment would be wise to follow: "We must obey God rather than men" (At 5:29). This one statement judges the beliefs and actions of the religious leaders to be from man and not God.

If the apostles were obeying God, and not men, then the religious leaders were obeying men, and not God. Rebels who preach the truth of God must find comfort in this conclusion. If they are rebels for God by preaching that which is Bible, then those who are standing against them are standing against the truth of God's word. Every restorationist wakes up one day and looks back to that from which he came and realizes that he too was obeying men and not God in his former religious life.

We must keep in mind that Saul of Tarsus was there in the midst of the religious leaders who were making all these threats of imprisonment to the apostles. He was there when Stephen was stoned (At 8:1). And it was he who later wrote that the religion that he upheld at the time was actually the “Jews’ religion.” It was not from God. When he turned away from that in which he was caught up, Saul later looked back and confessed that as a Pharisee and religious leader he was actually promoting that which was fabricated out of the traditions of men, which traditions led to the rejection of the commandment of God. When people reject the commandments of God, they will reject those who preach the commandments.

It took a miracle on the Damascus road to convince Saul that he was wrong. But God sends no miraculous encounters today to change the hearts of those who oppose and persecute His people. When in the heat of persecution, many would surely ask why they cannot be delivered. The fact is that we must be like Jesus if we would be candidates for eternal dwelling. We must not forget what Peter said to the disciples of his era who were also enduring hard times: “... Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example that you should follow His steps” (1 Pt 2:21). We must bear our own cross and follow in His steps of rejection in order to be counted worthy to be His rebels.

Chapter 11

THE ATTACK OF IGNORANCE

We must not forget the principle of Hosea 4:6. The Israelites about whom this statement was made did not become nonreligious in their apostasy. They forgot the commandments of God, and thus created a god in their minds who would condone their unrighteous religious behavior. In their ignorance of the law of God, they established religious codes that conformed to their own idolatrous thinking. Satan is still using the same weapon today to keep people led astray. In fact, we would say that this is the greatest weapon of Satan today to keep people away from the word of God.

In the absence of the authority of the word of God, religious people will always resort to all sorts of religious gimmicks in order to maintain the loyalty of every member of their group. What has happened in the area where we live in the last two decades is the rise of the concert assembly. Every sort of invention has been introduced to entice people to participate in the assembly of each particular group. Everything from bands to artificial smoke with ballroom lighting, has been used to set the stage in order to generate an entertaining thrill where attendees are mesmerized. The theatrical spectacle has been generated to appeal to a narcissistic generation who seeks a spiritual thrill rather than an outpouring of one’s heart in worship of God. All sorts of outside stimuli are used to pump into the minds of adherents an emotional hysteria. Being emotionally stirred into hysteria and mesmerized by a concert of entertainers, has replaced coming together on one’s knees in quietness with a contrite heart. Assemblies have been hijacked by entertainers who seek an audience. The concert assembly has become the new idol god to draw people, especially young people, away from a faith that is based on the preaching of the word of God.

When cultures become narcissistic, they seek to change their assemblies from an inward worship to that which mesmerizes their own emotionality. Worship assemblies are thus hijacked from praising God to focusing on what one “gets out of the assembly.” It is a subtle change, but one that is slight enough to keep people focused on what they enjoy instead of the worship in spirit and truth for which God calls on man to offer (See Jn 4:24). When one walks away from an assembly with the complaint, “That was boring,” then we understand that the attendee did not go to the assembly to offer worship to God, but to be entertained by others.

When religious people become ignorant of that for which God desires, they will create a religion after their own desires. When religious people become ignorant of a Bible-defined description of worship, they will manufacture their own worship. There is nothing surprising about this. It has been the ritual of assembly since men first started forgetting the commandments of God in order to follow after their own desires. Ignorance of God’s word always produces ignorant worship. It has always been as Paul wrote: “For they being ignorant of God’s righteousness and seeking to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God” (Rm 10:3).

We are as Paul who wrote to the Achaians who were formerly idolatrous in their worship. We write “lest Satan should take advantage of us, for we are not ignorant of his ways” (2 Co 2:11).

A. Community ignorance:

Ignorance is in some ways a strong word. Nevertheless, it is a word that was used by the Holy Spirit to refer to those who were acting contrary to truth. Out of ignorance, the religious leaders of Jerusalem, through the proxy of Roman law, crucified Jesus. A few years after the event, Peter made this judgment of the Jews in general, but the religious rulers of the Jews specifically: “And now, brethren, I know that through ignorance you did it, as did also your rulers” (At 3:17). What they did was crucify Jesus.

Regardless of their ignorance of the fact that Jesus was the Lord of glory, from the cross Jesus prayed to the Father, “Father, forgive them, for they do not know what they are doing” (Lk 23:34). Stephen was able to request of Jesus that those who were stoning him not be charged with their sin because they were stoning him in ignorance: “Lord, do not lay this sin to their charge” (At 7:60).

What the Jews did to Jesus, and then to Stephen, was still sin. However, Stephen knew that many of those in the midst of the multitudes who were throwing stones would later recognize their sin and repent. Their forgiveness, therefore, was based on their ignorance and repentance. The word of God would grow among those who recognized their ignorance, and thus repented. After some time in Jerusalem, it is interesting to note what Luke recorded concerning many of the priests in Jerusalem who eventually recognized that in ignorance they had crucified the Lord of glory: “So the word of God increased. And the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly. And a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith” (At 6:7).

When Peter proclaimed on the day of Pentecost the words, “let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God has made this same Jesus whom you have crucified, both Lord and Christ,” he was speaking to those people who had called for the crucifixion of Jesus. There people “were cut to the heart” (At 2:36,37). “Then those who received the word were baptized” (At 2:41). Many years later, the finger prints of some repentant Judean Christians were possibly still on the stones that sent Stephen on to glory.

B. Paul’s ignorance:

One young man who was in the company of those stoning Stephen was Saul of Tarsus (At 8:1). He was there giving his vote to throw the stones. It was for these who were acting out of ignorance that Stephen prayed that their sin not be laid to their charge (At 7:60). Many years later, Saul, now Paul, confessed that he was one, who out of ignorance, condoned the stoning of Stephen. He wrote to Timothy, “*I was formerly a blasphemer and a persecutor and injurious. But I obtained mercy because I did it ignorantly in unbelief” (1 Tm 1:13).

Satan will use zealous people who believe that they are doing right to work and speak against the work of God. Ignorance is one of Satan’s greatest tools against the preaching of the gospel. When the ignorant work against God, they are acting upon the knowledge they have at the time of their zealous opposition. However, their lack of knowledge of the facts and truth is no excuse, or a means for automatic forgiveness, for the sin they commit as blasphemers is contrary to the work of God.

A blasphemer is assigning the work of God to be that of Satan. A very religious person, as Saul of Tarsus, therefore, was a blasphemer because in his ignorance he believed that Christ was a false prophet and Christianity was an apostasy from Judaism. He later wrote to the Philippians about his former life in persecuting the church, “... concerning zeal, persecuting the church ...” (Ph 3:6). Paul was a zealous religious person, sincere in his efforts to persecute those who were rebels of the Jews’ religion. Nevertheless, he was dead wrong. The rebels were right and he was in error.

When Jesus knocked Saul off his self-righteous horse on his way to Damascus, Jesus said to him, “Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting Me?” (At 9:4). We can only imagine the shock that caused tremors to go throughout Saul’s body as he lay there blinded by the One whom he had considered for years to be a rebel to his cherished religious heritage.

The conclusion for those faithful teachers who are persecuted because of the ignorance of their persecutors, is that they must behave as both Jesus and Stephen. If one deducts that his persecutors are doing such out of ignorance, then patience should be the response, not reaction. If we were converted out of a religion for which we exercised much zeal, then we must be patient with those who are still in the ignorance of false religion. Patience, with persistence, will always lead men like Saul out of the error of their way.

It is interesting to note that Jesus did not miraculously appear to the main instigator (Saul) of those who were persecuting the church until after the historical diaspora of Acts 8:3,4. Why did Jesus wait so long before He appeared to Saul? It would be good to consider seriously the historical statement Acts 8:3,4 in view of the ignorance of the primary person (Saul) who was leading the persecution against the church.

As for Saul, he made havoc of the church, entering into every house and dragging off men and women, committing them to prison. Therefore, those who were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word (At 8:3,4).

The Judean disciples had not fulfilled their personal duty to evangelize the world until they were persecuted out of their social cocoon in Judea. God allowed Saul, therefore, to flush them out of the Jewish cocoon in Jerusalem and Judea, where they had remained for several years after the establishment of the church in A.D. 30. Once they were flushed, then Jesus appeared to Saul in Acts 9 around A.D. 41,42, for He had no more use for Saul as His “motivator” to get the Judean Christians going into all the world as He had formerly commissioned them (See Mt 28:19,20; Mk 16:15,16). Jesus allowed Paul to remain in his ignorance until He had accomplished His purpose through him to get the message of the gospel moving into all the world.

Another reason why Jesus allowed Saul to scatter the Christians out of Jerusalem and into all the world was to save their lives and prepare the way for those Judean Christians who would later scatter from Jerusalem prior to the A.D. 70 calamity. At the time of Saul’s persecution of the Christians, Jesus was coming in judgment on national Israel in about twenty years. Jesus needed to encourage as many of His people as possible to immigrate out of Jerusalem and Judah in order for them to establish their homes and businesses in other countries for those Christians who would come later.

Not every Christian left Jerusalem in the Acts 8 diaspora. There were still many Christians in Jerusalem when Paul made his last visit to the city around A.D. 58 (At 21:17-25) Nevertheless, many friends and family members left Jerusalem in order to prepare the way for friends and family who would be forced to leave about five years before A.D. 70, the time of the final fall of Jerusalem. Those Christian friends and family members who remained in Jerusalem in order to receive and teach those Jews who continued to come to the Pass-over/Pentecost feast, would later flee, but they would have homes to which to go in the Christian diaspora in the middle 60s. Jesus did the same thing with the members of His body as God did with the Jews when He prepared the way for their scattering among the nations prior to the Assyrian (722/21 B.C.) and Babylonian (586 B.C.) captivities. God takes care of His people.

We must, therefore, be patient with those who oppose the truth. It may be that God is using our enemies for a special purpose. At least we know that those who persecute the saints because of ignorance keep those who know the truth from being too arrogant, and thus motivated to study their Bibles. When one is persecuted for teaching the Bible, he is driven to continue to study the Bible in order to make sure that he is teaching that which is correct.

When those who are ignorant persecute others because of their desire for power among the disciples, then this is something different. (More on this later). But when the persecution comes from sincere people who do not know all the facts and truth, then it is time to be patient, as were both Jesus and Stephen. We must always remember how patient God was with us in our own sin. We must never forget the eternal truth that is revealed in Romans 5:8: “But God demonstrates His love toward us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us.” This statement was written by the hand of the one who formerly persecuted the One who had died on the cross for his sins.

Evil preaches tolerance until it is dominant, and then it seeks to silence good.

Charles Chaput

Chapter 12

THE ATTACK OF SLANDER

In order for one to be condemned by the populace, there must be a trial. If the one who is to be condemned is innocent, then there is no other recourse to generate a guilty verdict than to slander the actions or teachings of the accused. In the case of Jesus, it was both. When the power of religious leaders is under attack by a rebel of the establishment, then the leaders of the established leadership will resort to evil tactics in order to silence the opposition.

Notice what Matthew recorded concerning the trial of Jesus: “Now the chief priests and all the council sought false testimony against Jesus to put Him to death”

(Mt 26:59). One would think that the religious leaders of a community would seek the truth. But in this case, they sought that which was false in order to condemn the One against whom they had great consternation. They wanted a conviction, and thus, they were seeking for those who would give a false testimony concerning what Jesus had taught and done, or would do. Their goal was not to determine the truth, but to convict the innocent.

A. Slanderers judge.

We must never assume that Satan will play fair in any dispute. When he wants to destroy the influence of any individual, he will resort to that which brings into question the character of those who are making the greatest impact on his kingdom of darkness. Unrighteous men reveal that Satan is using them when they either seek false witnesses against their opposition, or they actually become the false witnesses to be called by the court to give false testimony concerning their opposition.

Diotrephes was one who was willing to speak lies against his opposition in order to protect his dominant position. This was the same tactic that Satan used to have Jesus crucified. Because he loved to be first, Diotrephes slandered the apostle John and others in order to convince his followers not to receive them (3 Jn 9,10). When a religious group is dominated by a demagogue, the demagogue will always slander those whom his followers might receive. Therefore, it is not uncommon for a dominant preacher to slander another preacher in order to keep him away from “his” church.

It is important to understand this behavior in order to discover the true motives of the one who slanders. Once slander is discovered, then the one who is speaking evil against another can be identified as one who has ulterior motives for his slanderous remarks.

God does not speak kindly of those who intentionally invent evil things to speak against others. When Paul described the degradation of humanity in times of old, one of the characteristics of those of a morally degenerated society was slander (Rm 1:30). We would conclude, therefore, that slander is evidence of one who is morally degraded. Unfortunately, this behavior existed among the religious leaders of the first century.

Because of a desire for power and recognition, there will always be those who are eager to speak evil of those with whom they feel they are in competition. When jealousy is rife among power structures in the church, slander is the most common method used by Satan for jealous individuals to discredit those whom they project to be of their own motives. The slanderous person assumes that those against whom he launches his lies is also in competition with him for power and recognition. He projects his evil thinking on those he believes are doing the same to him.

It is not uncommon for the slanderous person to go to the extreme of questioning the salvation of the one on whom he projects his slanderous statements. But one conclusion is true, if the one slandering another person assumes that the one he is slandering is in danger of losing his soul, then certainly the slanderous person is bringing his own salvation into question. John concluded the book of Revelation with the warning, “But ... all liars will have their part in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone” (Rv 21:8).

The slanderous person will end up in the lake of fire and brimstone because he has an evil heart. His slanderous words only betrayed his heart. Jesus judged, “For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts,” which evil thoughts, He listed, includes slander (Mt 15:19). So the person who willfully generates lies against another has identified himself to have an evil heart.

B. Slander stops preaching.

Misguided religious zealots followed Paul from synagogue to synagogue, spreading lies about what he believed (At 17:13). They did so in order to have him banned from teaching in any synagogue of the Jews. Some preachers do the same today. Paul’s slanderous opposition said that he was speaking a lie concerning the grace of God that was revealed through Jesus. Paul sarcastically asked his slanderous opponents, “For if the truth of God has abounded through my lie to His glory, why am I also still being judged as a sinner?” (Rm 3:7). The slanderous opponents of Paul in the church of Rome twisted his teaching on grace. They did so because there was jealousy in their hearts. They “slanderosly reported” that Paul taught that we can sin in order that grace may abound, since we are saved by grace (Rm 3:8; 6:3). When teaching on this most fundamental principle of Christianity, Paul’s words were twisted by some in order to bring opposition against him.

The teacher of the gospel of grace will always be slandered by those who would seek to justify themselves before God through the merit of their own law-keeping. This is true because it is the duty of the leaders of the religious establishment to uphold the legal codes that identify the religious establishment. And if the legalities that define the establishment are not legally maintained, then the establishment ceases to exist. Those who would proclaim that we are not saved by grace, but by legal obedience to creeds and catechism, will make slanderous statements against those who proclaim, “For sin will not have dominion over you, for you are not under law, but under grace” (Rm 6:14).

The fact that one stands for the truth of the gospel assumes that Satan will not be silent. Therefore, in order to discredit the preacher’s name, Satan will work among those who love to be first, or who are jealous of the influence of others. He will work to bring false accusations against the preacher of grace.

These “slander games” were happening among the Achaian disciples in reference to Paul. There were those in Achaia who were puffed up, and thus, wanted to discredit Paul among the disciples of the entire province. Nevertheless, Paul wrote the following of his work and other sincere evangelists:

So we labor, working with our own hands. Being reviled, we bless. Being persecuted, we endure. Being slandered, we kindly respond. We are made as the scum of the world and are the refuse of all things until now (1 Co 4:12,13).

Those who would be slandered as a result of teaching the truth of God’s word must not despair. They have simply been added to the host of faithful disciples as Paul and the apostles who kindly carried on, knowing that Satan will always stir up slander against those who endanger the kingdom of darkness. The response to slander, therefore, is kindness. If no slander is coming the way of the teacher of the Bible in a religiously hostile environment, then he should probably check to see if he is actually teaching the Bible.

Paul could respond kindly because slander is stating that which is false or a lie. So when he ministered, or taught in the area of freedom, he was assured that he was right before God. To those in Corinth who slandered him, he wrote, “All things are lawful, but all things are not expedient” (1 Co 10:23). Christians are under grace, not law, and thus those who would establish law where God has not established law will slander those who work in the area of their God-given freedom. Those who refuse to be brought again into the bondage of meritorious law-keeping must carry on in the freedom they have in Christ, regardless of slanderous statements that are made against them (See Gl 5:1).

C. Slander prevents freedom.

One does not have a right to work in the area of freedom in some things until those, whose conscience is still judged by their past religiosity, grow out of their self-imposed restrictions of false religions. Those who might be offended by the eating of all meats, for example, are expected to grow spiritually out of the restrictions they have placed on themselves as Christians when eating meats that were sacrificed to idols in Corinth. In order to help these new Christians grow out of the legal restrictions they had placed on themselves because of their former life in idolatry, Paul helped them along with the mandate, “Eat whatever is sold in the meat market, asking no questions for conscience’ sake” (1 Co 10:25).

It takes time to change one’s conscience concerning erroneous religious practices of the past. But there must be change. If there is no change, then there is spiritual death. In the process of the change, those who walk in their freedom of eating all meats must be patient with others who have not yet grown out of their past religious scruples.

It is interesting to note that the 1 Corinthian letter was written about five to six years after the origin of the first converts in Achaia. We would assume that by the time the letter was written, there would be those who were younger in the faith. We would assume that all those who had been Christians from the beginning to whom Paul was writing in 1 Corinthians could follow the mandate of 1 Corinthians 10:25, that is, that they should be able to eat any meat that was sold in the meat market. Paul expected every disciple in Achaia to grow to the point that their consciences were not controlled by their former life in idolatrous religions. God, therefore, expects spiritual growth. With recent converts, however, the disciples who had grown out of any religious scruples connected to idolatrous sacrifices should be patient with the recently converted.

Because some of Paul’s opposition had not spiritually grown, he rebuked them with the question, “For if I by thanksgiving am a partaker [of meat], why am I slandered for that for which I give thanks?” (1 Co 10:30). Paul was slandered for doing that for which he had freedom to do. He had freedom to eat meat that was sacrificed to idols. But those who opposed him claimed that he was doing that about which he had commanded others not to do, that is, eat sacrificed meats that would offend the consciences of the weak. The problem was in the fact that what they said against Paul was slander because of their competition for power and influence among the disciples in Achaia. Paul had a right to eat all meats. His right, however, could not be twisted by his slanderous opposition to make it seem that he was not practicing what he preached.

Puffed up accusers of Paul were twisted, and thus, false. Their accusations had no foundation of truth by which Paul could be judged contradictory in his teaching and behavior. “All things were lawful” to him, but “all things were not expedient” to do in some situations. If those things within his liberty caused offense, then he would forego such things until the new disciples grew out of their religious scruples of former idolatrous religiosity (Rm 14:21). But this was not the situation in reference to the Achaians’ eating meat that had been offered to idols. By the time he wrote, many should have grown out of their scruples in reference to eating meat that was sacrificed to idols. Paul had the right to eat, and to say that he ate in contradiction to what he taught, was simply a slanderous accusation generated by opponents who were jealous of Paul’s influence among the Achaians.

The lesson to learn is that those who have bound on their consciences those things that God has not bound, will slander those who work in the realm of their freedom in Christ. The slanderous person will seek to bring into his realm of bondage those who seek to live in the area of their freedom in Christ.

D. Slander promotes bondage.

There will always be a conflict between those of bondage and those of freedom. The fact that there will always be those who function in the realm of bondage lies in the fact that there will always be those who stop studying their Bibles. In the absence of belief that is based on the Bible, they begin honoring their heritage as the validation of their faith. The traditions of their religious heritage becomes the standard by which they judge others.

This is the exact religious environment into which Jesus came, and was explained by Him in the context of Mark 7:1-9. When people reject direction by the word of God in order to guard their heritage, then they will create a realm of bondage that is governed by their own religious scruples (traditions). Any who would violate the codes of their bondage, or question any of the cherished catechisms that identify their heritage, are often slandered in order that they be brought back into the bondage of the religious establishment.

Those who function in the realm of their freedom in Christ must always remember the Holy Spirit’s words in Galatians 5:1: “Stand fast therefore, in the freedom by which Christ has made us free, and do not be entangled again with a yoke of bondage.”

We must not make the mistake of believing that those who have created a religion of bondage will not seek to intimidate through slander any who would seek to walk in the freedom by which Christ has made us free. Such people will seek to greatly intimidate others in order to bring them into conformity with the norm. They greatly intimidated Titus to be circumcised when he went into a religious culture of circumcision in Jerusalem. But both Paul and Titus stood their ground. Paul later wrote concerning the incident, “But not even Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised” (Gl 2:3). He identified those who wanted to put the knife to Titus as “false brethren secretly brought in, who sneaked in to spy out our freedom that we have in Christ Jesus” (Gl 2:4). We must always assume that Satan has his spies among us to spy out our freedom in Christ.

In reference to the slanderers in Achaia, we must keep in mind that one of the reasons why Paul wrote the 2 Corinthian letter was to call on the slanderers among the disciples to repent before his arrival (2 Co 12:20,21). If they had not repented by the time he arrived, then he had no choice but to exercise the rod of discipline that he carried as a Christ-sent apostle. In the case of Ananias and Saphira, it may have been a surprise to Peter and the other apostles that these two Christians dropped dead in their presence because they lied—and all slanderers are liars (At 5:1-11). Paul knew that if the liars in the church of Achaia did not repent before his arrival, something tragic was going to happen.

There is no place for the slanderous person in heaven (Rv 21:8), and thus there is no place for such people among the people of God on earth. Therefore, we must heed the warning of the Holy Spirit: “Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away from you ...” (Ep 4:31).

Chapter 13

INSTITUTIONALIZING INDIVIDUALS

We often hear of discussions that use the word “institution” to define an organizational structure that promotes a particular product or stands for a particular theology. In order to separate one institution from another, each institution is given a unique name. In this way we have often heard of the church being defined as an institution. However, this would be an inaccurate definition of the church if the word “institution” is defined according to the corporate/business world in which we live. The church is not a corporate business that is identified by a unique name, though it is defined by a unique organizational structure and product (the gospel). Jesus is the head of the organization of the body, and the function of the members is to preach the gospel to the world.

In order to be cautious about defining the church as an institution, it might be helpful to be more specific in contrasting the definition of the word “institution” in the corporate/business world and the organic function of the body of Christ. For example, Google is a corporation, and thus, the Google Corporation is defined by its unique name, function and organization. It is a corporate institution of the world, and thus defined by the terminology of the world. If an employee leaves Google and moves on to the Facebook Corporation as an employee, then he has left one institution for another. He is no longer a “member” of Google, but a member of Facebook.

This is not how it works with the universal body of Christ. Our statements and words sometimes betray our lack of understanding of the nature of the body of Christ. Ever heard the statement, “He has left the church”? The one making the statement is thinking like the institutional corporate world. He is actually stating that a member has left one institution for another, or has just “left” the institution of which he was a former member. He may have “placed membership” with another institution, and thus, he has left one church for another church.

The institutionalist has forgotten that membership of the body of Christ (the church) is God’s business. God adds baptized believers to His people (At 2:47). Since God is the one who adds, then it is only He who can take away or cast away from His people. No one on earth has the right to cast any of God’s children away from God. Disciples have the right to disfellowship erring members from their fellowship (2 Th 3:6), but they do not have the right to “dismember” anyone from the body of Christ. This is God’s business.

One can be disfellowshipped, but he is only a disfellowshipped member. His fellowship means that the remaining members “have no company with him so that he [the erring brother] may be ashamed” (2 Th 3:14). And while a member is outside the company of the faithful, the faithful are charged, “Yet do not regard him as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother” (2 Th 3:15).

Here is how we betray our lack of understanding of the noninstitutional nature of the church. When we say that one “has left the church,” we have made ourselves judges and lawgivers over the body of Christ. “There is one lawgiver who is able to save and to destroy. Who are you to judge another?” (Js 4:12). Judging in reference to salvational matters is the work of God alone. But if we assert that one has “left the church,” then we have identified our thinking to be institutional, for we have equated being a member of the church with being a member of our unique corporate group. If we determine the “Google church” to be an institution, and when one leaves the “Google church” and goes to the “Facebook church,” can we assert that he has left the church?

When we pronounce one to have “left the church,” we have declared ourselves to be denominational. What we are actually saying is that someone has left the legal definition of our group for another legally defined group. If someone across town makes a decision to cease driving across town to meet with a legally defined assembly, and determines to meet in his own house in his own community, he has not “left the church.” He is still a member of the universal body of Christ who is sitting somewhere else on Sunday morning. If we proclaim that he has “left the church,” then we have declared ourselves to be a denominational institution that one can leave in order to place membership with another legally defined corporate body of believers.

In the context of this book, the word “institution” is often used by religious people who seek to construct a legal outline of laws that would define a unique body (assembly) of people that one can leave in order to join another unique body (assembly). However, we would not codify an assembly as the identity of the body of Christ, for in doing so we would make the body a legal organization according to the definition of the denominations around us. Such is not done in the New Testament, and we are fearful of doing such today lest we bring others into the bondage of our own fabricated “legal laws” that we arrange from our own chosen proof texts to identify our corporate group. The church is not a denomination, but making the church an institution encourages us to denominational one group of members from other groups.

If the church is denominational into individual institutional groups, then each group becomes an individual establishment that must be legally defined and defended. This would be somewhat different from the identity of the universal body according to the beliefs and behavior of the early disciples who were Christians only. What many have done by identifying the church according to a legal code of behavior is to develop a legal identity of the assembly of the disciples, and then from this legal identity of assembly, determined the existence of the church at any particular location.

Allow us to revert back to our early farming history in the rural farming community of central Kansas.

In the nineteenth century, the newly arrived farmers and their families lived on their individual farms and worked the land. In order to meet together for worship, several farmers made the decision to meet on the banks of what was called Peace Creek. So on Sunday they all gathered in assembly on the banks of Peace Creek. After the assembly, the church boarded their covered wagons and went home to their respective farms. Now did the church cease to exist because the members left the banks of Peace Creek?

As time went by, the farmers decided to build a church building for assembly at the location where they regularly met. But the same thing happened after the assembly on Sunday morning. The church got into covered wagons and went home. Did the church remain in a building at Peace Creek? If the church is identified by the performance of legal ceremonies on Sunday morning at a specific location, then when the ceremonies are terminated with a “closing prayer” on Sunday morning and everyone goes home, does the church cease to exist? Or was the church scattered to the homes of the farms when everyone left Peace Creek?

The body of Christ is not identified by assemblies, but by individual disciples of Jesus wherever they may be. In the first century, disciples of Jesus existed before there were any assemblies, simply because the church is composed of baptized people who are added to God’s people by God. And baptized people were disciples before the first assembly of the saints ever occurred the first Sunday after the Sunday when about 3,000 were added to the disciples (At 2:41).

Christians are not validated as such because of their assemblies, but because of their submission to the lordship of Jesus. Assemblies are only the serendipity of being a baptized disciple of Jesus. Therefore, we would be careful in using the word “institution” in reference to the identity of the church of our Lord in reference to assembly, lest we start using the assemblies of the saints as the identity for the existence of Christians. A Christian is not determined by an appearance at a legally defined assembly. (See Book 55, The Organic Function of the Body of Christ, Book 65, The Power Of Many As One.)

Chapter 14

EARLY RISE OF INSTITUTIONAL RELIGION

The Jews of Jesus’ day did not in a short time develop that which rejected Him. Institutional religions develop over decades, if not over centuries. The Roman Catholic Church did not come into existence overnight. However, by the end of the first century there were signs among some of the disciples that hierarchial institutional religion was coming. Paul warned the Ephesian leaders that there would arise those who would call disciples after themselves (At 20:29,30). There were those during the ministry of the apostles who intimidated disciples into conforming to their legal system of religiosity (Rm 16:17,18; Gl 4:17; 3 Jn 9,10). These were all indications that there were those who were seeking to organize the disciples as an institution with a hierarchy of leaders on earth.

By the time Peter wrote in the middle 60s there were some elders who began to lord over the sheep of God (1 Pt 5:1-4). Lords only exist where there is assumed or delegated authority. And thus by the time Peter wrote, there were those who were violating one of the first principles of discipleship that Jesus said should not exist among His disciples (See Mk 10:42,43). Leaders were seeking to lord over the sheep of God as the world exercised authority among the secular institutions of the world.

Throughout the New Testament, the Holy Spirit gave warnings concerning the rise of institutional religion that would be perpetuated by the authority of established rulers. And because the warnings exist in the pages of the Holy Scriptures, we must assume that the Spirit knew that institutional religion would eventually lead a great many disciples away from the sole authority and kingship of Jesus.

We have often witnessed the same today among religious people. There are countless institutional religions throughout the world that are sustained by authorities who perpetuate the religion. These religions exist and have their own unique heritages. In order to separate these groups from one another, a common name of identity has been claimed by the adherents of each group. Succeeding adherents are intimidated to remain loyal to each named institution. This is especially true in reference to the established leadership of the groups who draw any type of salary from the institution. Threats to withdraw salaries are used to bring the preachers of each particular institution into conformity with the unique catechisms that are promoted to identify each particular institution.

In order to solidify a particular religious institution, regular meetings are conducted by the leaders. Reports are made and leaders are checked for their compliance to “doctrinal soundness,” and conformity to the “constitution of the church.” Required attendance at such meetings is demanded by the establishment of the religion in order that each be checked off as faithful to the institution. Schools are often established by the institutional church in order to give a “diploma of validation” to preachers in order that they be indoctrinated with the correct shibboleths to be judged faithful to the institution. Everyone is brought into conformity to the worldwide organization of the denomination, and thus faithfulness to the organization is perpetuated throughout the world and history.

And then comes a rebel as Jesus. He was a rebel because He did not conform to the authoritative structures of the Jewish religious institution. Neither did He promote the legal identity of the organization. In fact, He violated their rules. He had no theological diploma from the “Theological Seminary of Jerusalem.” He preached without the authority or approval of the established urban leadership in Jerusalem. He did not attend the preacher meetings. Nor did He seek to be sanctioned by the existing religious establishment in order to preach in the villages. He was a rebel of both the institution and the established leadership. He was a true protestant for He protested against the leadership of the establishment (See Mt 23).

Jesus was often summoned to appear before the authorities of the religious institution. And because He refused to conform to their wayward religion that they had fabricated after their traditions, they secretly plotted to rid Him from their religious society (Mt 26:3,4). As many today, they would threaten with slanderous letters that they would circulate among the synagogues. They would threaten and intimidate with courts and councils. But because He would not conform to the heritage of their religion, nor submit to the authorities of their institution, it was judged that He had to go, that is, go to the cross. Though He had done no evil, the religious leaders cried out, “Crucify Him!” (Mk 15:13,14; Jn 19:6). So they “... led Him away to crucify Him” (Mt 27:31).

If one would be a disciple of Jesus, he must take the same road of suffering as Jesus. Just in case Timothy forgot this, Paul admonished him with the words, “For to this end we both labor and suffer reproach because we trust in the living God ...” (1 Tm 4:10). In fact, “all who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus will suffer persecution” (2 Tm 3:12).

We would give a word of caution to those who seek to follow after the order of religiosity that was characteristic of the Jews’ religion. When church leaders regularly assemble to encourage one another through Bible study, they must be cautious that such meetings do not turn into synods where opinions are considered doctrine, and thus judgments made in reference with those who may disagree in matters of “doctrinal opinion.”

We live under the authority of the word of God alone, not the authority or pronouncements of any man or group of men. If attendance to meetings of leaders with authority is necessary in order to be considered faithful to the heritage of a particular religious institution, then such meetings have become synods by which the established leadership would judge others. If pronouncements are made during such meetings concerning those who are not present, then the meetings have become the meetings of judges with sectarian motives. If the meetings are exclusive of any disciple being present, then the meetings have become synods of exclusive authorities who have assumed authority over the church. If the meetings represent only those of a sanctioned heritage who conform to a specific name and a legal man-made catechism of definition upon which everyone has fully agreed, then the meetings have become a group of authorities who would pronounce judgments on the disciples.

The Roman Catholic Church started with such meetings where elders gathered in order to make judgments concerning the church. The meetings eventually became synods from which pronouncements of doctrine were delivered to the church. The result was what we witness today as the Roman Catholic Church.

In the beginning of the American Restoration Movement, such meetings were conducted by church leaders in order to establish unity among many independent church groups. In order to promote unity, the representatives of churches drew up a doctrinal statement (“confession of faith”) in order to guarantee conformity for the sake of a fabricated unity. But one day all of those who had signed their names to the document realized that they had become a religious institution, as the religious institutions from which they had all fled. By producing and signing a document that defined their agreed upon doctrinal positions, they became the accepted establishment of leaders who would defend the document of faith. They eventually discovered that they were circling around through the document (creed) and becoming an institutional religion against which they had all previously struggled to leave.

All the leaders eventually agreed to have one final meeting. In this meeting they drew up another document. It was called, The Last Will And Testament Of The Springfield Presbytery. They thus killed their former document that was initially drafted to promote unity, but actually became a catechism to which the supposed faithful were to conform. They determined that everyone go forth from this last meeting only with the authority of the word of God, claiming their freedom in Christ, and thus preaching the gospel of the grace of God according as each individual interpreted the Scriptures. They realized that there was a logical contradiction between promoting a restoration to the authority of the word of God in matters of faith, and at the same time establishing any document of man that would steal the freedom of individuals to study the word of God alone and apply its teachings.

If one finds himself among those religious leaders who seek to morph into a synod of authorities among the disciples, then it would be wise to seriously consider the direction to which the meeting of the established leaders is moving. Meetings for leaders are good, but if such meetings become a means by which to intimidate everyone into conforming to the norm of opinions and organization upon which everyone must agree, then the meetings should be banned. If such meetings are not banned, then each attendee must make a choice. He can remain with the meetings until they become one day just another synod of authorities that identify the institutional religion of the day, or he can simply not show up and move on with his Bible alone.

Paul urged both Timothy and Titus not to show up at those meetings where debates are generated in order to intimidate the attendees into conformity for the sake of a man-fabricated unity (See 2 Tm 2:23; Ti 3:9-11). We should seek to meet with those who seek not to bring us again into bondage (Gl 5:1), but into being better disciples.

As we move on from this point, we must caution ourselves about any religious movement of men. Whether reformation or restoration movements, movements have a tendency of giving too much honor to the man or men who started them. Because there is too much honor given to the initiators of the movements, the followers often call themselves after the “father” of their respective movements. Those churches that align themselves with the movements thus adopt a unique name in order to be associated with a particular movement, or a unique systematic theology that was first taught by the originators of the movements. Many such religious movements originated out of Europe and America, all of which can today be identified by the unique name attached to each aligned church that is associated with each unique movement.

Man-made movements eventually establish themselves as heritages. And when movements established themselves as heritages, it then becomes the duty of the preacher or synods of the movements to defend their heritage. When the “job” of the preachers depends on the existence of the heritage, then it is almost impossible to call any of the leaders out of the heritage since at this stage in the existence of the movement the dedication of the leaders is first to their heritage, and then to Christ. In reference to loyalty, heritages have a tendency to move Christ into second place. And when Christ is moved into second place, the word of Christ is rejected in order that one maintain his identity with the movement (See Mk 7:1-9). When a leader within a heritage does start questioning any particular doctrinal position of the heritage, it is then that he will come to Jesus in the night, or baptize his family in secret. Heritages are always on their way to being firmly established when the leaders start laying aside the commandment of God. The next stage of progression is to reject the commandment of God in order to protect the legacy of the heritage.

As disciples of Jesus Christ, we must establish our heritage only in Him. We are heirs of His kingdom only because of Him, not because of some religious leader who took a stand against apostasy. We call ourselves only after Christ. “The Spirit Himself bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, and if children, then heirs, heirs of God and fellow heirs with Christ” (Rm 8:16,17).

Because we are “justified by His grace,” we are “made heirs according to the hope of eternal life” (Ti 3:7). Christ only is the means by which we are heirs of the kingdom (Js 2:5).

We are not called after Christ via some movement or religious heritage that was initiated by men. For this reason, we call on all men to put away the names of movements that identify their association with unique doctrinal or organizational heritages. We call on all men to be Christians only. This means that all must come together on the foundation of the gospel alone. Religion will never make us Christians only.

In order to make a bold change away from the “Jews’ religion” of a particular religious heritage, it takes great courage on the part of those who have for years validated their existence as “church leaders” by the existence of the heritage that was delivered to them by their fathers. In order to take a stand for unity in Christ alone, we can better understand what Paul, who changed from his religious heritage that existed for centuries. Those who would change from the religious movements of men to Christ alone would do well to read the testimony of Paul: Philippians 3:1-11.

Chapter 15

INSTITUTIONAL JUDAISM AGAINST CHRIST

Nowhere in the New Testament are Christians referred to as an institution according to the definition of institutions of this world. In fact, much of the confusion that hinders our understanding of the organic body of Christ is that we want to create the body of Christ after the definition of worldly institutions. All that is essential to understand the organization of the body of Christ is that there is only one Head in heaven, and this Head has all authority over all things as King of kings on earth (Mt 28:18; Cl 1:18). The word of our King Jesus is the only standard of authority by which all men will be judged (See Jn 12:48). Discipleship is no more complicated than this when referring to the “organization” of the disciples. Neither is the organic function of the body of Christ more complicated.

On earth there are to be no authorities or rulers among the members of the body (See Mk 10:35-45). And thus, there are no authorities as popes or pastors to defend the mandates and propagate the legal codes of an earthly religious organization. We can use our titles and subtitles to define the work of our ministries, but when we start using such titles and subtitles to define authorities among the slaves of the King of kings, then we are moving into the realm of defining the church as an establishment that must be propagated. When this happens among disciples, the “authorities” begin preaching the church and not the Christ. They focus on defending the codes of identity of the institution, and not the discipleship of the believers to Christ.

The best way to define the nature and behavior of an institution, specifically institutional religion, is to use the Holy Spirit’s accounts of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. In these documents, the Holy Spirit defined institutional Judaism, or the Jews’ religion. The Jews had established an institutional religion after their own desires (traditions of the fathers), which definition was not based on the Sinai law. The Sinai law defined God the Father as the King of all Israel, though after about five hundred years in Palestine the Israelites called for a king over themselves at the beginning of the years when they were rejecting God and His word (See 1 Sm 8).

By the time Jesus came into the world, the Jews had the Roman-appointed King Herod. He was not, however, necessarily a king of their choice, since he was appointed by Rome. Herod eventually died in 4 B.C., and his sons were appointed by Rome over different regions of Herod’s reign. The Jews thus continued to have their king.

The Jews’ desire for an earthly king helps us understand the error of institutional religions. When people seek to establish authorities on earth after whom they can call themselves, then the foundation is laid for institutional religiosity, or what is called “organized religion.”

When an establishment of leadership is established among religious people, they are trying to protect their heritage or identity. And in order to protect their heritage and their identity as different from all other religious institutions of the day, they organize in order to exalt authorities among themselves. This progression, or digression into authorities on earth, was the specific thing that Jesus stated would not be among His disciples (Mk 10:42,43). This system of religion was what the Jews had constructed in the “fullness of time” when Jesus came into the world as the Messiah. They had assimilated all the traditions of the fathers into a religion that was contrary to that which God had instituted at Mt. Sinai. Their religious institution, therefore, was identified by Paul to be the Jews’ religion (Gl 1:13).

We must keep in mind that institutions are founded on the authority of individuals who have been entrusted with the responsibility of guarding the heritage of the institution. The authorities that are established by the institution are responsible for defending the institution. When men leave the authority of the word of Christ, they have no other option but to “ask for kings on earth” who can propagate the institution from one generation of authorities to another. The institution is thus preached worldwide in conjunction with Christ, and thus, one is in fellowship with Christ through the institution. Outside the structure of the worldwide institution, it is taught that one cannot be in fellowship with Christ, and thus saved. Therefore, membership in the institution becomes the method by which one is saved, and not one’s obedience to the gospel of Christ. In order for one’s baptism to be valid, he or she must have been baptized by one of the representatives of the institution. “Baptismal authority” is a cherished doctrine of an institutional religion.

If one were to leave the institution, it is pronounced by the establishment, “The rebel will lose his soul.” “He has left the church.” What is meant is that he will lose his soul because he is no longer a member of the institution. And thus, discipleship to Jesus is denied on the basis that one’s salvation is dependent on membership in a particular institutional religion.

Remove Christ from this picture, and we have the definition of the institution of the Jews' religion of the first century. It was this institution of bondage that the religious leaders had constructed by the time Jesus came. All the rules had been established to identify the institution, especially rules concerning the keeping of the Sabbath. All the authorities had been set in place to guard the heritage of the institution and to pronounce judgment on those who made any infractions of the rules. The primary means that was used to keep all the adherents (Jews) in conformity with the mandates of the institution was social intimidation.

Jesus was thus condemned because He did not conform to the legal codes that defined the Jewish religious institution. The Holy Spirit witnessed to the fact that He lived without sin (See Hb 4:15). However, this was not the pronouncement of the Jewish religious establishment, for they affirmed that He had violated their laws, especially their laws concerning the Sabbath. And because He did not conform to their laws, the religious establishment condemned Him to the cross.

Since Palestine was occupied by a Gentile government, the social orders of the Jewish institutional religion were highly organized by the time Jesus arrived. The strictness of the rules that identified Judaism was intensified so that no adherent to the institution (the Jews' religion) be associated with the Gentiles. The Jews were socially structured to the point that no Jew had any dealings with those who were half Jews, the Samaritans (Jn 4:9). If there were social infractions and violations of the rules that identified the Jews' religion, then there were chief priests, Pharisees, scribes, Sadducees, and the senate and councils (the establishment), who would deal with the violators. And since the people were in fear of the established leadership, they were intimidated into conforming to the rules of the institution.

John explained the social scenario in reference to one incident when Jesus healed a blind man at a time when doing such was contrary to the rules of the Jewish institution:

These words his parents spoke because they feared the Jews, for the Jews [the establishment] had already agreed that if anyone confessed that He was the Christ, he would be put out of the synagogue (Jn 9:22).

Social intimidation by the Jewish establishment was one of Satan's greatest tools that he used against those Jews who would accept Jesus as the Christ. It was a very effective weapon. Diotrephes used the same tactic in reference to those over whom he had assumed authority. He threatened to excommunicate from the fellowship of disciples those who would accept other evangelists as the apostle John (3 Jn 9,10). Through his assumed authority, he instilled fear in the hearts of those over whom he functioned as a demagogue. If the members did not submit to his mandates, then they were kicked out of the fellowship of his loyal following. He had established an institutional religiosity that was propped up by his self-designated authority over the people.

Those who would maintain their freedom in Christ will run head on into institutional religiosity. It was this system of religion into which Jesus came in the fullness of time, and it was the leadership of this religiosity that eventually nailed Him to the cross. The problem with the digression of the church into an institutional establishment is that the members are intimidated by the leadership to conform to the rules of the institution that are exalted above the lordship of Jesus in the hearts of the individual members.

Chapter 16

OPPOSITION OF HERITAGE

In reference to religion, it is not uncommon for some people to resist being confused by the facts. Those who are seeking to preach the truth of God's word to the world must understand that this is often common among those who are steeped in their own religious heritage or dogma. One of the means by which the Roman Catholic Church establishes truth is through binding heritage. For example, James Gibbons, a former Catholic authority in "church" doctrine once wrote the following in his book,

Faith of Our Fathers:

For several centuries after the establishment of Christianity Baptism was usually conferred by immersion; but since the twelfth century the practice of baptizing by infusion [sprinkling] has prevailed in the Catholic Church, as this manner is attended with less inconvenience than Baptism by immersion.

The point is that if a particular teaching of the Bible is not convenient, but is historically practiced by the church, then the church has the authority to mandate as law that which is a tradition of church heritage. If the error of this heritage is pointed out by those who stand for the final authority of the word of God, then they are often accused of being “change agents,” and thus, they are threatened with excommunicated from the fellowship of the religious institution.

When confronted with the change that was made by the “church,” it is asserted that the “church” has more authority than the written word of God. Some who strongly disagree with what the Catholic Church did in changing immersion to sprinkling, would often do the same in reference to establishing their own traditional practices or interpretations. Those who would question any teaching according to the word of God, are often questioned why they would question established interpretations in matters of opinion.

A. Religion based on heritage:

The preceding is what Jesus walked into among the Jewish religious establishment of the first century. The religious establishment had laid aside the word of God in order to honor their heritage, which heritage was often contrary to the word of God (Mt 23:23; Mk 7:8). In many areas of their theology, the religious establishment of Israel had rejected the word of God in order to keep the teachings of their heritage (Mk 7:9).

When religions are created after either the heritage of the adherents, or the doctrines that have been established as codes of identity of the religion, then there will always be confrontation between those who teach the word of God and those who seek to maintain their heritage.

Teachers of the word of God must not be surprised at this confrontation. One of Satan’s greatest tools by which he promotes the kingdom of darkness is to convince good and sincere people that their heritage and catechisms of faith are valid in order to be the foundation of their faith. Throughout the ministry of Jesus, and on more than one occasion, Jesus confronted the religious leaders in reference to their heritage upon which they based their faith.

During one encounter when Jesus said that the religious leaders had rejected the word of God, He pointed out that they honored their teachings more than the revealed word of God. Jesus reminded them of what God said through Moses: “Honor your father and your mother ...” (Mk 7:10). But the religious leaders, particularly the Pharisees who were lovers of money (Lk 16:14), said that the children must first give their money to the religious establishment before they take care of their mothers and fathers. (Mk 7:11). Upon the pretense that their support of the religious establishment should be pronounced Corban, that is “given to God,” the religious leaders coveted the money of the children. They convinced the children to give to them first, before considering their God-given responsibility through Moses to take care of their mothers and fathers. For selfish reasons, they thought of themselves, rather than the principle of the law of Moses that the children are to care for their parents.

Jesus reminded these religious leaders that they were “making the word of God of no effect through your tradition that you have handed down” (Mk 7:13). In other words, they were teaching that their traditional teachings should be honored above the word of God. The adherents to the religion, therefore, listened more to the doctrine of the religious institution, than their Bibles. When the religious tradition of the fathers is more important than the teachings of the word of God, then the effect of the word of God in the lives of the righteous is minimized.

Jesus continued in His rebuke of the religious leaders by saying, “And many such things you do” (Mk 7:13). At the time when Jesus came in the fullness of time, the religious establishment had constructed a religion that was not based on the law of God. It was based on the traditions of the fathers. The religious leaders promoted and propagated this religion throughout Palestine. The advantage that Jesus and His disciples had, therefore, is that they could point out the many areas where the religious leaders were maintaining a religion that had been handed to them by their fathers. They brought to the attention of the people that their faith was based on the heritage of Judaism, rather than the word of God. This opened the door for those who were sincerely seeking God. They could see the difference between what Jesus was teaching from the law of Moses, and what the religious leaders were propagating from their heritage.

B. The power of heritage:

The problem with basing our faith on a heritage of teaching is that the minds of the adherents of the heritage are often closed. They are sometimes so closed that even a miracle of God will not convince the adherents to reconsider their beliefs. In fact, the heritage is so strong that the adherents will maintain their faith in their heritage regardless of any teaching of the word of God that would contradict the teachings of the heritage. In the first century most of the Jews maintained the faith of their Jewish heritage regardless of all the miraculous confirmation that Christ and the apostles unleashed in the world.

The Holy Spirit confirmed that the early disciples went forth and preached everywhere, “The Lord working with them and confirming the word by the signs that followed” (Mk 16:20). God bore “witness with them, both with signs and wonders and with various powers and gifts of the Holy Spirit” (Hb 2:4). However, the staunch attitudes by which many of the religious leadership of the day refused to accept the confirming miracles of the word that was preached, also led them to refuse the gospel.

When Peter and John were put on trial by the religious establishment in Jerusalem, their opposition had in their presence the man they had healed. He was standing right there before them (At 4:14). Everyone knew that this healed cripple had begged on the temple steps for years, begging from everyone who passed by. So the people “were filled with wonder and amazement at what had happened to him” (At 3:10). But neither the witness of the man being healed, nor the people who witnessed the healing, was sufficient to change the minds of those of the religious establishment. If they accepted the fact that the man was healed, then the foundation for their religious heritage would crumble. They would have to accept the message that the apostles preached. Since the religious leaders could not work miracles to confirm their own teaching, then we would assume that they would turn to the message of Peter and John since their message was truly confirmed miraculously. But they did not.

We must notice what was affirmed by the religious establishment at the trial of Peter and John: “And seeing the man who was healed standing with them [Peter and John], they could say nothing against it” (At 4:14). When the religious leaders put Peter, John and the healed man out of the court room, they said among themselves something that would be true of those today who maintain their religious heritage and teachings above any confirming miracle of God: “What will we do to these men? For indeed, a notable miracle has been done by them and is apparent to all those who dwell in Jerusalem. And we cannot deny it” (At 4:16).

The statement of these religious leaders reveals the nature of those who are confronted with truth they cannot deny. The two “change agents” in town not only taught that Jesus was the Christ and Son of God, but God also confirmed their message with a miracle that followed their preaching. So when confronted with undeniable proof, those who are in the bondage of their heritage can only use threats. In this case the leaders of the religious heritage “sternly threatened” the two apostles.

When confronted with teaching that is from the Bible, those who have established their faith upon tradition, or their religious heritage, can resort only to threats and violence against those they oppose.

We must never forget that the primary source that establishes a religious heritage is something that originates from the fathers, not the Bible. The heritage may contain Bible teachings, but those of the heritage who are honest and sincere will always maintain that the authority of the Bible must be maintained over any traditional heritage. When those who are sincere students of the Bible point out some contradictions between the heritage and the word of God, those who are in the bondage of their heritage will often resort to threats in order to maintain their heritage. They assume that their threats as religious leaders of the heritage carry some authority among the people. They thus lead by the intimidation of threats. The threats are often covered in the cloak of “the brother’s soul is in danger,” or the brother should be excommunicated from the church (3 Jn 10). But when threats are used to maintain a heritage of faith, then one knows that there are serious biblical flaws in the heritage.

In the case of Jesus during His ministry, the threats did not work, and thus, a scheme was carried out to have Him eliminated from the people (Se At 16:16-24). In the case of the early disciples, the religious leaders, through Saul, “made havoc of the church, entering into every house and dragging off men and women, committing them to prison” (At 8:3). And some, as Stephen, they stoned to death (At 7:54-60).

When religious leaders cannot deny truth, they will first threaten, and then they will often carry out their threats with bodily harm. We have heard of some preachers of the word of God who have been threatened with bodily harm. In the case of some, the threats have been carried out. One elder punched out a brother because he supposedly would not submit. Another brother stood up in a council meeting and screamed to his opposition, “If I had a gun, I would shoot you.” When one resorts to threats, one point is very clear. The one making the threats, as the religious leaders of the days of the early disciples, has no truth to substantiate his position. He believes that threats will prove his position, and thus, bring his opponents under his control.

When faced with threats, there is always the correct recourse of what Jesus said in Matthew 6:44: “... love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you ...” (See Lk 6:27-29). We often conclude that when He used the word “enemies,” Jesus was speaking of wicked people and evil governments. This would certainly include some of the enemies that the disciples would face. However, in the context in which Jesus both made the statement and lived His ministry, His enemies were religious leaders who set themselves against Him. He loved those who became His enemy. He brought them into eternity when they eventually realized that He truly was the Son of God, and subsequently repented. Therefore, if one loves his opposition, and those who would bring a railing accusation against him, he too would be as Jesus concluded. We love so that we “may be the children” of our Father who is in heaven (Mt 5:45).

When was the last time we prayed for another who made a threat against us (Mt 5:44)? We must always remember that God so “loved the world,” which world included the One who came into the world to save it from sin (Jn 3:16). Nevertheless, though we love our enemies, we must heed the warning of Jesus in reference to religious leaders who are more concerned for their positions and purse, than they are for the truth of God’s word: “Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees” (Mt 16:6). Paul was a little harsher when he warned the Philippians: “Beware of the dogs. Beware of the evil workers. Beware of the false circumcision” (Ph 3:2).

Chapter 17

OPPOSITION OF HEAVY PURSES

We were once sitting with several preachers at a conference in Zimbabwe. Many of the young preachers in the conference were complaining that the church would not support them. The discussion carried on for some time until a frustrated old businessman from Malawi yielded out, “Men, get a job!”

That was the end of the discussion, and the introduction to one of the means of attack by which Satan works against the preaching of the gospel. At the conclusion of a parable in Luke 16, Jesus made the statement in reference to the religious leaders of the religious establishment of His day, “And the Pharisees who were lovers of money, heard all these things, and they scoffed at Him” (Lk 16:14). What these preachers had heard from Jesus was a parable that was spoken against them as religious leaders.

In the parable, Jesus spoke of a certain rich man (God over Israel), who had an unjust steward (the Pharisees) who plundered his goods (they stole the loyalty of the people). So the steward was fired. The steward said to himself, “What will I do? For my lord takes away from me the stewardship [his means of support]. I cannot dig [for a living for myself]. I am ashamed to beg” (Lk 16:3). So the steward set out to embezzle support from his Lord’s debtors. In the parable, Jesus stated that the unjust steward did act shrewdly, because he acted according to his character (Lk 16:8). He provided for himself, though the means by which he did so was shrewd. In a moment of desperation when he lost his salary, he did that which any shrewd servant would do. It was in this context, however, that Jesus was speaking against the hiring practices of the Pharisees.

A. Opposition of idol-makers:

When the preaching of the word of God endangers the financial security of fully supported religious workers, one can only expect that they will rise up in opposition. Demetrius, a silversmith in Ephesus, and many others like him, made a great deal of money from the idol-making business that was associated with the temple of Diana (Artemis). But when Paul came to town with the message of the gospel, multitudes of people disposed of their idols and obeyed the gospel. This did not set well with the idol-makers (At 19:23-35). Demetrius rightly stated of the results of Paul’s preaching of the gospel that “almost throughout all Asia this Paul has persuaded and turned away many people, saying that gods made with hands are not gods” (At 19:26). Demetrius then added that the idol-making trade was being disenfranchised (At 19:27). So when his fellow idol-makers heard this, “they were all full of wrath” (At 19:28; see also At 16:16-24).

When men who make money through religion feel that their salaries are in danger, they will be “full of wrath.” They will spill their wrath out on the ones who persuade the people away from gods that are made with the hands of men.

B. Preaching for money:

Sometimes, men who have great abilities to speak to the people use their gift of speaking for the purpose of gain. This often occurs among religious leaders who use their gift of speaking for personal profit. Such happened in the case of Balaam (Ja 24:9ff). He sold his gift for gain. His legacy was that an example was made of him for all time that he ran after money to the extent of betraying his ministry for God (See Jd 11). Balaam ended up dead because he preached for money (Ja 13:22). At least those who do the same today end up spiritually dead.

We can understand why one of the qualifications for being an elder of the body of Christ is that one not be greedy (1 Tm 3:8; Ti 1:7; 1 Pt 5:2). Leaders are often in the position to take advantage of others in reference to money. If one is greedy, the temptation to receive money can become too great, and thus he will sell his gift of ministry for money. This is a common practice among many today who have shamed Christianity for the sake of their own purse. This is especially true of some independent church leaders who see the members as an opportunity for a salary.

Traditional religions ordain those who are to preach for their churches. Being ordained means that the preacher must conform to the doctrinal guidelines of the particular religious organization by which he was ordained. Therefore, when approached with truth that conflicts with the established catechism of the religious organization, the preacher has his hands tied by his salary. We once read an interesting newspaper statement in a Namibian paper. The short article was entitled, “Anglican preachers baptize their families in secret.” The preachers studied themselves out of the practice of infant baptism, but were afraid of losing their salaries because they preached adult baptism for remission of sins.

When a preacher is wedded by money to the message he preaches, then he is in the bondage of money. He is a servant to his support, not knowing what he would do if he lost his “job.” The only answer to those sincere preachers who know the truth, but are afraid to preach the truth because of the intimidation of the religious establishment, is to “Get a job!”

Chapter 18

OPPOSITION OF POLITICIANS

We were once on the island of St. Vincent in the West Indies in the early 1980s, conducting a seminar for church leaders. There was some frustration among the church leaders concerning some brethren on the island who were teaching a matter of opinion, but different from the accepted “traditional interpretation” of the established church. The leaders of the establishment were having some difficulty “refuting” the “erroneous brethren” simply because the matter of contention was a matter of opinion, not a fundamental Bible teaching. So one of the brethren of the establishment made the statement, “We need to take them to court to bar them from promoting their teaching since their teaching infringes on the name of our church.”

And so it goes among church politicians. When the Jewish religious leaders could not win their argument against Jesus, they resorted to the government of Rome to do their dirty work for them. They could not crucify Jesus on their own since Palestine was an occupied land by the Romans at the time. So the Jewish leadership went to the higher court of the Roman governor, Pilate, in order to rid the Jewish religious establishment of a rebel whom they could not refute. They delivered Jesus to Pilate for execution. Satan still uses misguided brethren today to accomplish his evil deeds.

One case in the life of Paul illustrates the motives of church politicians. Paul was in prison in Rome when he wrote the Philippian letter. In the introduction of the letter he made a very interesting statement concerning some local church leaders in the city of Rome. Though we do not know all the details, these political leaders must have been out in the streets preaching against the jailhouse preacher in the local prison.

We might better understand their motives for their political preaching if we better understood the socio/political environment in which both Jews and Christians lived in Rome. Caesar Claudius had run all Jews out of Rome a few years before (See At 18:2). The infamous and narcissistic Nero was in power as Caesar at the time Paul was in prison. It was not a good social situation in Rome in the early 60s, and thus, some of the local church leaders evidently succumbed to the intimidation of the powers that existed. These leaders were locals, but Paul was an expatriate from out of town. They were free, but he was in jail. To them, he may have been an embarrassment to the church. They were willing, therefore, to sacrifice him for their own selfish ambitions. At least this is how Paul explained the situation to the Philippians,

Some indeed preach Christ even from envy and strife, and some also from good will. The latter do so out of love, knowing that I am appointed for the defense of the gospel. The former preach Christ out of selfish ambition, not with pure motives, supposing to add distress to my chains (Ph 1:15-17).

We would not confine Paul's statement to the social culture of Rome. Throughout his ministry, Paul faced envy and selfish ambition (At 14:1-6,19). It continued even to his imprisonment in Rome, for through their envy and selfish ambition, some leaders of the church would be so political that they would add distress to his chains while he was in a Roman prison.

Envy is when one seeks to have the influence or possessions that which another has. Here are some preachers who possibly envied the notoriety that Paul had. Maybe they envied his influence. We are not told exactly what they envied in the life of Paul. But in their envy, they caused strife among the disciples. They were as some arrogant preachers in Achaia who spoke slanderously against Paul, judging him to be afraid to show up in Corinth and defend himself (2 Co 10:10). Paul would show up, but he would show up with a rod of discipline (1 Co 4:21).

When preachers envy other preachers, Satan is at work to sow strife among the disciples. When preachers are cursed with selfish ambition, they will preach and behave in a way that will add to the distress of those who preach out of pure motives. The religious leaders of the Jews' religion envied Jesus. Their envy drove them to remove the influence of Jesus from the people. Pilate "knew that because of envy they [the religious leaders] had delivered Him" (Mt 27:18; Mk 15:10).

When a preacher starts to envy another preacher, only evil will result. And with evil envy, the Jewish leaders followed Paul from one city to another. Luke recorded, "But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy. And contradicting and blaspheming, they opposed those things that were spoken by Paul" (At 13:45; see At 14:19).

When a preacher finds himself "contradicting and blaspheming," and opposing truth that is preached by his fellow preacher, then he should know that he has assigned himself to the company of those envious Jews who opposed Paul. Paul reminded the Corinthians with a question: "For where there is envying and strife, are you not carnal and walking as worldly men?" (1 Co 3:3). Political preachers are carnal. They are walking as worldly men.

Love does not envy (1 Co 13:4). And thus, when one envies his fellow leader in the faith, then he knows that he does not walk in love. He is walking according to the flesh (Gl 5:21). Such a person ...

... is obsessed with controversy and disputes about words, from which come envy, strife, abusive language, evil suspicions, perverse disputings between men of corrupt minds and destitute of the truth, supposing that godliness is a means to gain (1 Tm 6:4,5).

Paul's above instructions to Timothy in reference to his relationship with carnally minded leaders was direct: "From such withdraw yourself" (1 Tm 6:5). Timothy was to personally withdraw himself from those religious leaders who would stir up controversies about "disputable words."

Satan uses church politicians to stir up all sorts of contentions. Paul mandated that both Timothy and Titus not give such carnally-minded church leaders their fellowship in discussions over nonsense (2 Tm 2:23). We must keep in mind that the Holy Spirit wrote the following in reference to church leaders who are obsessed with causing controversies among the disciples:

But avoid foolish controversies and genealogies and contentions and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and worthless. Reject a factious man [a brother] after the first and second admonition, knowing that such a man is perverted and is sinning, being self-condemned (Ti 3:9-11).

Satan uses factious brethren to disrupt the peace of the disciples. Once a person is identified to be a factious man by his obsession with arguments over matters of opinion, then he is to be given no opportunity to express his foolish controversies before the church. We must keep in mind that the factious brother is a politician. He is seeking a following. He is trying to recruit members to agree with his foolish controversies (See Gl 4:17). The church that allows the factious man to have an audience before the church has violated the mandate of Paul in 1 Timothy 6:4,5 and Titus 3:9-11.

A contentious brother can usually be identified by his call for others to meet with him concerning one of his foolish "disputes about words." When those with whom he would argue do not answer his call or letters to come down to Ono, as some enticed Nehemiah, and discuss his matters of contention, then he accuses the godly brethren to be in error because they would not show up for his contentious meeting. Godly leaders need to answer the contentious brother as Nehemiah answered Sanballat and Geshen: "I am doing a great work so that I cannot come down. Why should the work stop while I leave it and come down to you?" (Ne 6:3).

Our advice to godly leaders who have identified a contentious brother in their midst, is that they follow strictly the mandate that the Holy Spirit gave through Paul to both Timothy and Titus. Do not go down to the meetings that are about disputable words of those who are filled with envy and selfish ambition!

Some envious church leaders in Corinth, who were filled with selfish ambition, slandered Paul. They thought that he was too weak to come to Corinth and face their accusations against him (2 Co 10:10,11). Paul answered them: “Therefore, I take pleasure in weaknesses, in insults, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ’s sake. For when I am weak, then I am strong” (2 Co 12:10).

It was not that the Christ-sent apostle Paul was weak in spirit. If he came and found his accusers arrogant in an unrepentant frame of mind, some were going to be delivered unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh (1 Co 5:5; 1 Tm 1:20). As a Christ-sent apostle, Paul had no choice in the matter of exercising the discipline of the Lord. Ananias and Sapphira dropped dead at the feet of Christ-sent apostles (At 5:1-11). Something similar was going to happen in Corinth if the slanderous church leaders did not repent before Paul arrived. Everyone in the church throughout the world had heard of the death of Ananias and Sapphira. “And great fear came upon all the church and upon as many as heard these things” (At 5:11). It was for this reason that Paul wrote the letters of 1 & 2 Corinthians. He wanted to come to them with joy, not grief (2 Co 2:1). He wrote that some repent before he came.

The encouraging thing about the Corinthians is that they stopped listening to those who were causing the strife among them. Paul eventually went to them with joy, for he did not need to use the rod of discipline as a Christ-sent apostle. No one was struck blind; no one dropped dead; and no one was delivered unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh.

God is not working in a direct manner as this today. Nevertheless, we read these things in the New Testament as a warning against anyone who would behave as those who were judged directly in the first century. All judgment for the envious person who is corrupted with selfish ambition, and thus sows strife among the disciples with his disputes, will be his part of what John described in Revelation 21:8.

Chapter 19

GOD’S WORK THROUGH CHANGE

Several years ago in a mission area of the world we had friends from “back home” come and visit us. We always remember the inadvertent compliment of one of these friends. He said, “All of you are always making a liar out of me when I visit you and return home. I make a report of what you are doing, and when I come back the next year, you are doing something different.”

Our friend realized that we allowed God to work in our lives. And as we lived in the ministry, doors would open that demanded a change in ministry. Changes needed to be made according to the opportunity of each open door. If we did not change our methods or tactics by changing our thinking, then we would have been shutting God out of our plans. Our inability to change would have shut God out of our lives.

We have known of several supporting churches throughout the years who have submitted the evangelist they supported to work according to a “contract of work.” The contract would carefully be drawn up after much thinking and prayer, and then committed to paper. The supporters, as well as the supported, would dutifully sign the contract. The evangelist would then begin his designated ministry with his hands tied. What everyone had done when they signed the agreement was to limit

God in the lives of the evangelists. Prayers were made that God would work according to the contract, that is, “God please bless our plans.”

The more one confines his ministry to his plans, the less God can intervene with His plans for His own glory. If we are successful with our plans, we seek to take the glory. After all, did not God bless our plans? God does not work according to the corporate world of good business management that is outlined on a spreadsheet. We cannot manage God with our plans. God is not confined to our corporate agenda.

When an evangelist engages in ministry, he should be thoroughly prepared in his mind to change from what he first envisioned in order to enter those doors that God continually opens. As he encounters open doors that God makes available, he should be prepared to change. When things change, the effective evangelist will change in order to take advantage of new opportunities.

The same is true in reference to the work of disciples who are trying to reach the folks in their own community. We remember when a “gospel meeting” or a “campaign for Christ” was productive in most urban centers of the world. The problem was that this method of preaching the gospel publicly in many urban centers of the world died several decades before we were willing to give up our plans. One day we did wake up. We looked at the audience who attended our gospel meetings. We were looking at ourselves. There were no visitors. We were preaching to the choir.

If churches are not able to change according to the receptivity of the people in their community, then they will die. Their inability to change to enter new open doors will eventually lead to the removal of the lampstand from Ephesus. No matter how many good works we are doing, or how great a name we make for ourselves in the community, our inability to change with the times will vacate the lampstand of the gospel from our community (See Rv 2:2,19; 3:1). Satan will have used one of his best tools to terminate the church in our city.

The apostle Paul sometimes faced this challenge. He worked with purpose and dreams. As an independent personality, we would expect nothing less from him. So the Holy Spirit had to do some fine tuning with him in order that he learn to change his plans. On one occasion he was traveling through Phrygia and Galatia. He planned to go into Asia and preach the gospel. But he was “forbidden by the Holy Spirit to preach the word in Asia” (At 16:6). We do not know how he was forbidden by the Holy Spirit, but we do know that he had to change his plans. At the time, Asia had to be stricken from his “contract.”

As Paul, Silas and Timothy continued on their journey, they came to Mysia. Again he, Silas and Timothy had plans to go into another region and preach the word of the Lord. On this occasion the team of three evangelists wanted to go to Bithynia (At 16:7). “But the Spirit of Jesus did not allow them” (At 16:7). They had made their plans, signed their contracts, but they had to change. They continued their mission to preach the word of the Lord, but their plans had to be changed. After they were informed by the Spirit of Jesus that they were not to go into Bithynia, it seems that they may have been somewhat disheartened. For some special reason, the Lord sent Paul a special vision concerning where he must go.

In the vision, “a man of Macedonia was standing and pleading to him, and saying, ‘Come over to Macedonia and help us.’” (At 16:9).

Now notice how quickly Paul was willing to change his plans once he saw the vision. “Now after he had seen the vision, immediately we sought to go into Macedonia ...” (At 16:10). Paul, Silas, Timothy, and now Luke, were men who allowed God to work in their lives according to His will, not theirs. We must keep this lesson in mind when we make our own plans. We must be people who are entirely opened to God working in our lives. The business world may think that we are unpredictable in our work. We are as predictable as the many open doors we see before us. We work for an unpredictable God who does not open doors until we have launched out of the security of our own plans. If we do not have a spirit of change, we will lock God out.

We have always wondered what Paul’s friends from back home would have said when they visited him in Macedonia. Would they have said, “Paul you made a liar out of us back home. We reported that you were going into Asia. But here you are in Macedonia. And then you said you were going to Bithynia, and you ended up in Macedonia. You certainly are unpredictable in your ministry.”

We are reminded of the following statement of the Holy Spirit: “Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God. How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out” (Rm 11:33). If one finds security in writing up a contract for his own destiny, and is not willing to change when God opens doors along the way, then he may be limiting God in his ministry. But if one seeks to serve the God whose ways are past finding out, then he should be prepared to tear up contracts that may bind the work of God in our lives. When we allow God to plan in our lives, we will be willing to change in order to enter many open doors. We remember that the truth of the gospel never changes, but the methods by which we preach it to all the world change continually throughout history.

Chapter 20

THE RESULT OF PERSISTENCE

When we focus on historical studies of the early beginnings of Christianity, we would become discouraged if it were not for the result of what actually happened in the first century in reference to the growth of Christianity. There was tremendous opposition to Jesus and the preaching of the early disciples. Satan used every tool of opposition that he had at his disposal. He used the religious leaders of the time to crucify, stone, slander and imprison the early messengers of the gospel. But the word of God prevailed. There was nothing that Satan could do to stop the work of Jesus to take the gospel into all the world.

In his efforts to oppose the preaching of the early disciples, it is interesting to note what the historian Luke said actually prevailed over all opposition that Satan could offer: “So the word of God increased. And the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly. And a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith” (At 6:7).

When Christians today are persistent in teaching the word of God, then the number of disciples will multiply. It is interesting to note that the Holy Spirit, in this historical statement of Luke, focused on the increase of the word of God. When messengers of the word persist in their efforts to plant the seed of the kingdom, the number of disciples will be multiplied. God’s word is so powerful when preached that it will bring to Jesus even those who lead in the onslaught of persecution against the word. If the disciples are vigilant and persistent, even the religious leaders will bow to the power of the word of God.

Teaching the word of God must become our customary behavior. “And Paul, as his custom was, went in to them, and for three Sabbaths reasoned with them from the Scriptures” (At 17:2). It was not that Paul taught the word of God when it was convenient, or when he had the opportunity. Many today are “convenient” teachers, that is, they teach the word of God only when an opportunity comes their way. But Paul, and the early disciples, took the initiative. They looked for gathered people who loved their Bibles. Paul once took the initiative to go to a “prayer meeting” where he “sat down and spoke to the women who had assembled” (At 16:13). The early disciples were aggressive to teach the word, not passive as the opportunity offered itself. They were looking for places to teach the Bible.

We have found that the word of God will not increase in any area where Christians have become totally passive in their witness to the word. This is surely what happened in the city of Ephesus. The word of God increased significantly in the city in the early beginnings of the disciples’ teaching the word. Religious people even burned their deceptive religious books when they accepted the word of God (See At 19:19). But many years later when Jesus addressed the disciples in Ephesus, He said, “Nevertheless, I have this against you, that you have left your first love” (Rv 2:4). They had maintained a great number of good works among themselves (Rv 2:2). Jesus had no complaint in this area. But they had lost their first love of teaching the word of God to others. They were great on works, but dead on the word. What disciples often do is content themselves in their good works, but there is no preaching of the word to the unbelievers. And works without the word is death.

Highly organized churches are often highly dead. They have often organized themselves into neglecting that which produces fruit. They grow by attracting “converts” through their enthusiastic activity. But there is no emphasis on teaching the word of God. When a church is built on the enthusiastic activity of good works, without emphasis on faithfulness to the word of God, then the church becomes a social club of religionists who are afraid to focus on the word of God lest members be driven away by the commandments of God. If a church is built on those who have responded to the word of God, and then go to work for Jesus, there is never a fear among the leadership that members will be driven away when the word of God is taught. A church built on works is dead, whereas a church that is built on the word of God is alive with the works of a word-based faith.

The reason why the disciples increased in Ephesus in the early beginning was stated clearly by Luke in Acts 19:20: “So the word of God grew mightily and prevailed.” It is the word of God that will prevail over lies, error and deception. It is the word of God that causes religionists to burn their religious books that are full of lies. Our good works may offer the opportunity to attract many to our group. But we must never forget that it is the word of God that leads us to prevail. Deceived religionists burn their religious books of lies when they are confronted with the truth of the word of God.

The power is in the word of God, not in our person as disciples of Jesus. We must never forget that ...

... the word of God is living and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, and of joints and marrow, and able to judge the thoughts and intents of the heart (Hb 4:12).

When we teach the word of God, we must never forget that people are “... born again, not by perishable seed, but imperishable, by the word of God that lives and abides” (1 Pt 1:23). When this imperishable seed is planted in the hearts of men and women throughout the world, God will give the increase. “I have planted,” Paul wrote, “Apollos watered, but God gave the increase” (1 Co 3:6). If there is no planting of the word of God, then God cannot give an increase. If Christians do not take the initiative to plant the word from city to city, then there will be no increase.

We must always remember that Satan has gone on before us to every city. He has deceived people into being satisfied with their religiosity in the bondage of deception. Only when teachers of the word of God enter into Ephesus will the word of God be able to prevail. If the disciples of Jesus do not take the initiative to enter into the city with the word of God, then the religious people of the city will continue to read their religious books, and thus continue in the deception of that which is false. God can give no increase while we sit idly by and wait for an opportunity to teach the word of God. If we do not make it the custom of our lives to teach the word of God, then God cannot give the increase. Teachers of the word, therefore, must create the opportunities to teach the word.

The power of the gospel is not in ourselves, but in that which comes from God. Paul reminded those in Achaia who trusted in themselves, “Not that we are adequate in ourselves to think anything as coming from ourselves, but our adequacy is from God” (2 Co 3:5). We might think that our social religious club is adequate to draw people to Christ. We will certainly draw many people through our many works (See Ep 2:2). We will even be known in the community for our good works. But we may be as the church in Sardis: “I know your works,” Jesus said, “that you have a name that you live, but you are dead” (Rv 3:1).

Jesus will recognize our good works (See Rv 2:2,9,13,19). He would commend some with the words, “I know your works and love and service and faith and your patience. And as for your works, the last are greater than the first” (Rv 2:19). However, in commending the disciples in Thyatira for the increase in their works, He judged, “I have a few things against you because you tolerate ...” some sin in your midst (Rv 2:20). They were good in works, but lacking in implementing the commandments of God in rebuking the immoral behavior of some among them. They tolerated the immoral among them, though they were known for their good works.

If Jesus’ message of judgment against the seven churches of Asia teaches one clear point it is that the word of God must be implemented in the lives of those who call themselves after Christ. “Lord, Lord” cries to claim allegiance to Christ is not good enough. We must do the will of the Father in heaven (Mt 7:21). We must be doers of the word of God, and not hearers only (Js 1:22). If we do not, then we will eventually hear the words of Jesus when He comes to judge the world, “I never knew you. Depart from Me you who practice lawlessness” (Mt 7:23). Therefore, “... be doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving yourselves” (Js 1:22). When we are doers of the word of God, we can have hope that we will eventually hear the following words from Jesus when He comes again: “Come, you blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world” (Mt 25:34).

If we are confident in teaching the word of God, the word will prevail over error. And in the end, we will prevail over the world when our Lord comes.

Book 69

Building Eternal Relationships

In a 1960s newsletter of the Foundation For Human Betterment, it was stated:

During the past forty years medicine has made tremendous progress. We have almost eliminated the bacterial diseases, such as typhoid fever, bubonic plague, and many others which in the past have wiped out huge segments of mankind. However, we have made very little progress in the so-called psychosomatic diseases, and by that we mean diseases that are caused by or are greatly influenced by wrong mental and emotional attitudes. We now know that the giant destructive emotions of hate, envy, jealousy, fear and guilt produce diseases just as certainly as do bacteria or poisons .... To put it bluntly, when a man harbors these destructive emotions he is slowly but surely committing suicide .... We know that the only way to get rid of these destructive emotions is to replace them with LOVE.

We live in a world that is plagued with diseased minds that destroy every social structure that is the foundation of humanity. In some places of our present world, the Holy Spirit could write the following concerning the social behavior of society: “God saw that the wickedness of man was great on the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually” (Gn 6:5). We seek to encourage those who live in this world—which is all of us—in order that we better cope with the evil of the world by following the advice of our God. Only in following the advice of our Creator will we be able to take ownership of a victorious life. When we follow Him, we wake up every day and thank Him that we made it this far. We continually remind ourselves of God’s directives that make us victorious in any hostile environment that at times seems so contrary to righteousness. Many societies of the world have gone wrong. But this does not mean that we must go wrong with the evil of our environment. As Christians, we are reminded by the evil of this world that this world is not our final home. We view the moral negatives of this world, therefore, as positives to keep our minds focused on that which is not of this world. Our teleology constrains us to focus on heaven. And by focusing on that which is good, we can be that small portion of salt that can preserve those around us.

Chapter 1

STARTING WITH THE BASICS

“He who does not love does not know God, for God is love” (1 Jn 4:8).

The suicide bomber who straps on a bomb and blows up innocent people does not know the God of the Bible. The thief who breaks into and steals that which belongs to his neighbor does not love his neighbor as himself. Life today seems to be the definition of a loveless existence, and thus, the identity of a world gone wrong in human relationships. Nevertheless, our personal lives need not be patterned after the loveless character of a world controlled by Satan. We can be different. We can be so different that we can preserve ourselves through Jesus past this world. We can do this, however, only if we can discover the God of love who offered His Son as a love offering in order to bring us into eternal dwelling in His loving presence. For this reason, therefore, we long to discover this God and how we are to love Him and our fellow man.

Society in general has long forgotten the admonition of the true and living God of love: “You will love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind .... You will love your neighbor as yourself” (Mt 22:37-39).

Society in general does not get better. Satan does his work well, and thus, society always spirals down morally. When God made the pronouncement of Noah’s generation that every imagination of the mind of man was only evil continually (Gn 6:5), He was, in a negative/positive sense, defining the nature of those who would reveal themselves as His children by their love for one another and Him. An unloving world provides the opportunity for God’s children, through their love, not to be identified with a morally degenerate world. Jesus explained:

A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another; as I have loved you, that you also love one another. By this will all men know that you are My disciples, if you have love for one another (Jn 13:34,35).

Jesus’ statement forces us to be positive in a world that always goes morally wrong. If all the world were loving, then there would be no possibility to define who the disciples of Jesus really are, neither would we have any visual evidence of the nature of the God of love. But the fact that the world is burdened with unloving people provides the opportunity for Christians to be identified as the people of God because of their love for one another. They have the opportunity to reveal the one true and living God by the loving nature of their lives that are patterned after the loving character of God.

Jesus’ statement in John 13:34,35 assumed that Christians throughout their lives would dwell in unloving social environments, and thus, have the opportunity to reveal the love of God. The loving Christian, therefore, is taking advantage of his unloving environment in order to manifest the love of God in his or her heart, and thus, reveal the true God of love in heaven. The Bible statement is thus emphatically true: “HE WHO DOES NOT LOVE DOES NOT KNOW GOD, FOR GOD IS LOVE” (1 Jn 4:8). Those who perform wickedness toward their fellow man are atheistic in reference to the loving God that is revealed in the Bible. They are behaving wickedly according to a god they have created after their own wickedness.

If we manifest love for God and our neighbors, then it is by this love that we will be identified to be the children of the true God of love. We are sure that this thought was in the mind of Peter when he wrote: “But sanctify Christ as Lord God in your hearts and be ready always to give a defense to everyone who asks you a reason for the hope that is in you, yet with meekness and fear” (1 Pt 3:15).

The love of a Christian should spark inquiry in the minds of the loveless in order that they ask for a reason concerning the hope of the Christian. A loveless society provides many opportunities to reveal the God of love.

There are actually four words in the Greek dictionary that are commonly translated in English literature with the English word “love.” Each Greek word reveals something unique about the relationship that the Greeks had with one another in their society. However, in the New Testament only two of these Greek words are used. In order to enlighten our New Testament definition of the love by which God is revealed and Christians identified, we will begin with the two Greek words that are not used in the New Testament, but were used in Greek society. All four words will give us some idea of the emotional relationship that existed between people of the first century. The last two words will help us understand better the relationship that the disciples of Christ should have toward one another and the God of love.

A. “Chocolate cake” love:

Most people have a passion for chocolate cake. Unfortunately, many of us can obsess over chocolate cake to the point of sitting down before a large chocolate cake and eating until we are sick. The obsessed eater reaches the point where he or she gags to take just one more bite of chocolate cake. Once the lust for chocolate cake is satisfied, the eating is over. Our passion for chocolate is satisfied, and with a sickened stomach, we move on.

The ancient Greek word eros would be used to define our passion for chocolate cake. The English word “erotic” comes from this word. This is erotic passion that once satisfied, moves on until the next time when a craving arises. The Greek word eros is never used in the Bible.

In ancient times, the word eros was used often in reference to erotic sexual activity. It is the passion that is experienced for a moment, but then is satisfied. When the satisfaction is realized, the “lover” then goes on his or her way.

Eroticism is passion without commitment. In a marital relationship that is exclusively based on passion, one is focused more on one’s self than his or her partner. The use of the word eros in a marital context would explain that there are some dysfunctions in the marriage. Eros would be applied to the individual who has had a moment of sexual satisfaction, but then moves on to the appointments of the day. This would be a relationship that grows dim over time as the passion of the sexual experience fades from the marriage. Therefore, after the honeymoon is over, it is then the time to determine if the married partners truly love one another.

Some people grow tired of being married because the passion of the sexual experience of the marriage has faded away. In such cases, the couple may have been married only on the basis of a passionate sexual relationship. But when the passion of the sexual relationship has faded, then they fade from one another as partners. Their sexual eros was a weak foundation upon which their marriage relationship was initially established.

In the sexual activity of a world that lives in fornication, eros would define the sexual relationship between many men and women. This is erotic sex without any commitments. Sexual encounters without any commitments defines a hedonistic society in which individuals seek relationships only for the purpose of satisfying their sexual impulses.

In a marriage relationship, two individuals have taken the first step in honoring a commitment to one another. Newly married couples must focus on their commitment to grow together for life, enjoying the sexual relationship as God's blessing for the expression of love within the marriage. Jesus' parable in reference to receiving the word of God illustrates too many young marriages. In the parable, Jesus identified those who initially were excited about receiving the word of God, but did not have a deep commitment to continue in their relationship with God.

But he who received the seed on stony places, this is he who hears the word and immediately receives it with joy. However, he has no root in himself, but endures only for a while. For when tribulation or persecution arises because of the word, immediately he falls away (Mt 13:20,21).

This sounds like some marriages. Some people immediately receive the word (get married), but immediately fall away from the word when times get tough (when disagreements come). Those in the parable fell away from their relationship with Jesus because their passion for the Lord had no depth. It was shallow. It was initially based on excitement, but the excitement eventually passed away when hard times came.

In his youth, John Mark may have had this initial burst of passion for the Lord. He sailed with Paul and Barnabas on their first mission journey. Unfortunately, the exciting passion that Mark initially experienced for the Lord was not strong enough to take him through all the trials of the journey for which he volunteered (1 Jn 4:18). He eventually turned back from the journey (At 15:38).

Fortunately, there is a happy ending to Mark's story.

His initial passion eventually grew into a committed love that sustained his relationship with the Lord until the end of his life. Many years later, and while Paul was in prison in Rome, he called on Timothy to "*get Mark and bring him ..., for he is profitable to me for the ministry" (2 Tm 4:11).

Mark's life illustrates the initial commitment of many young people to one another when they are first married. Marriage begins with love and erotic excitement, but then come the trials of stony places. Nevertheless, if a couple hangs tight, the initial eros (passion) of the relationship will eventually grow into a lifetime relational love that will deliver great rewards in old age. "Chocolate cake" passion alone for one another will not take a married couple to the rewards of marriage in old age. However, when the passion of two young people eventually morphs into sacrificial love, then the couple is on their way to holding one another's hand into an inexpressible love commitment until they part in death.

Passion will initially connect two people in marriage, but it takes sacrificial love to keep them connected until death do them part.

B. "Uncle John" love:

This definition of love is inherent in the Greek word stroge. This Greek word is not in the New Testament. In Greek society it was a word that was commonly used to express family relationships. Reference here is to a legal love. Uncle John is a relative, and thus, we must love him because he is a blood relative. And besides this, Uncle John gives out candy when he is around. We deeply cherish Uncle John, but our affection for Uncle John can be tested if he hangs around too much.

"Uncle John" love is as a trained nurse who is dedicated to a sick child in the hospital. She will give the child loving attention and care while she is on duty. But when she comes to the end of the day, she goes home to her own family. However, if one of her own children would become sick, then she would never leave her child.

Sometimes in marriage, the initial love of a couple digresses into a stroge love for one another. It is love out of duty. The husband brings home the money, and the wife cooks the food. Everyone is doing their duty, but the deep loving affection for one another has long passed away. Marriage becomes a duty to perform, not a daily celebration of two people happily growing old together.

Christians sometimes manifest a stroge love in reference to their Christianity. It becomes only a duty to be with the saints. It becomes duty to study one's Bible, which duty is often neglected. We have an affection for our brothers and sisters, but we can take only so much of their company. It is sometimes as one brother said, “One can get too much of his brothers.” The one who would make this statement has not yet grown in the love by which Jesus said His disciples would be identified before the world (Jn 13:34,35). He has not yet learned to love the brotherhood of disciples (1 Pt 2:17).

We can always know when one is about to give up on Christ. All that he does for Christ has become a wearisome habit of duty, rather than total commitment to Jesus. It was for this reason that John wrote, “His commandments are not burdensome” (1 Jn 5:3). When the worship of one becomes empty, then he is about to empty his seat in the assembly of the saints.

C. “Football” love:

As long as one cooperates with the team and manifests the right attitude, he is on the football team. He can play ball with the rest of the team because he has a relationship with the other players. However, if a particular team member starts acting out of place, or is not playing in cooperation with the team, then he is kicked off the team. We throw off the team those who do not play fair, or those who do not have a cooperative relationship with all the team members.

The Greek word phileo is used in the New Testament. This is the friendship love. It is the love that focuses on one’s affectionate relationship with someone or some thing. It would be the friendship that is maintained as long as everything goes according to the conditions that determine a friendship relationship. Michal “loved” David as long as everything went according to the rules of friendship. However, when David behaved contrary to what she believed was appropriate behavior, she no longer “loved” him (See 2 Sm 6:20-23). She kicked him off her friendship team.

If this word were used in reference to the love that existed within a marital relationship, then the marriage would not last long. Everything in the marriage relationship would go fine until one partner did something that was contrary to the rules of the marriage game. When disagreements arose in the marriage, one partner would want to kick the other off the marriage team.

There can also be phileo relationships among members of the body. However, if the disciples’ love for one another does not go beyond friendship, it might happen that in a time of disagreement one disciple might offend another, and then, kick the other disciple “out of the church.” And then there is the preacher. He is a good man of God as long as he is a team member and does not preach any lessons that might offend any of the members. But if he preaches something that offends a member, then the offended member, who has only a phileo relationship with the church, will often kick himself off the team.

Phileo is used in the New Testament to explain many different relational scenarios. The hypocrites “love [phileo] to pray standing in the synagogues ...” (Mt 6:5). “He who loves [phileo] father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me” (Mt 10:37). “Beware of the scribes who ... love [phileo] greetings in the markets” (Lk 20:46).

One’s association with another in Christ begins with a phileo relationship. But when one grows in Christ, the phileo relationship with other disciples must always progress to an agape relationship. It is the agape relationship that defines the relational nature of the body of Christ (Jn 13:34,35).

D. Agape (love):

This is the love that Paul defines in 1 Corinthians 13. It is the love that is defined by God’s love for us (Jn 3:16), love that reached out while we were yet in our sins. It is unconditional love. Paul defines this love in the statement of Romans 5:8: “But God demonstrates His love toward us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us.” This is unmerited love by which God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son (Jn 3:16). In other words, this is the outpouring of love upon those who do not deserve to be loved. It is the love of God that is defined by the incarnation of the Son of God (See Ph 2:5-11). It was this action of God toward mankind that overwhelmed the apostle John: “Behold, what manner of love the Father has bestowed on us, that we should be called children of God” (1 Jn 3:1). This is not as the love of a young man who said on the telephone to his young lady friend, “My love for you is higher than the tallest mountain. It is deeper than the deepest ocean, and wider than the widest river. And I will be over tonight if it does not rain.”

Agape (love) gives when it is not given to. It is love that loves when not loved. It is sacrificial even when no sacrifices are given in response. It works, but does not expect to be noticed. It gives, but does not expect to be given to. It always forgives before even being asked to forgive. It is the love that follows the instructions of Jesus, “But I say to you, love [agape] your enemies and pray for those who persecute you” (Mt 5:44). The psalmist explained, “Hatred stirs up strifes, but love covers all sins” (Pv 10:12). “He who covers a transgression seeks love, but he who repeats a matter separates friends” (Pv 17:9). “Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a fattened ox with ha- ted” (Pv 15:17). And the Holy Spirit was right when He said through Solomon in explaining the loving devotion that should exist in marriage, “Set me as a seal upon your heart, as a seal upon your arm. For love is as strong as death” (Ss 8:6).

One of the interesting contexts where the words agape and phileo are used in the New Testament in a comparative manner is when Jesus called on Peter’s commitment after he had denied Him three times. “Simon, son of John, do you truly love [agape] Me more than these?” (Jn 21:15). Peter responded with the word phileo. “Yes, Lord, You know that I love [phileo] You” (Jn 21:15). But Jesus again asked, “Simon, son of John, do you truly love [agape] Me?” (Jn 21:16). Again Peter responded, “Yes, Lord. You know that I love [phileo] You” (Jn 21:16). And then a third time Jesus asked the question using Peter’s word phileo. “Simon, son of John, do you love [phileo] Me?” (Jn 21:17). It was when Jesus used the friendship word for love (phileo) that Peter was using that Peter got the point. “Peter was grieved because He said to him the third time” (Jn 21:17). He was grieved because he had denied Jesus three times. His denials were based on a phileo relationship, not an agape (love) relationship. Agape (love) would never have denied Jesus. This would be the love by which Peter would later love in order to be martyred for Jesus. When Peter would be old, Jesus said to him, “You will stretch out your hands and another will dress you and carry you where you do not wish to go” (Jn 21:18). It would be then that Peter would understand that he had grown to the love of agape where he was willing to die for Jesus.

Agape (love) is the mortar that holds the bricks together. It is the love that holds disciples one to another. It is the love that flows from one to another. When a magnet is left clinging to a piece of iron, the iron eventually becomes magnetized. When loving Christians hold close to one another, their love grows. Any relational function of the body of Christ, therefore, that does not keep each member close to other members, is dysfunctional. It is not a natural fellowship that is based on the extent of love by which the disciples of Jesus are to be identified. We wonder if this was not the problem among the Ephesian Christians when Jesus said that they had lost their first love (agape)? (Rv 2:4). John concluded, “And now I urge you, lady, not as though writing a new commandment to you, but what we had from the beginning, that we love [agape] one another” (2 Jn 5).

Chapter 2

LEARNING TO LOVE AGAIN

We have just enough religion to make us hate one another, but not enough to make us
love one another.

Jonathan Swift

A young teenager who thought he was in love with a fair maiden defined love: “Love is the feeling that flattens your ego while it flattens your wallet.” And then there was the weary housewife who had labored all day in cooking, cleaning and caring for a family. She had her own definition of love: “Love is a mental disorder that makes a girl eager to give up eight hours in an office to slave fourteen hours all day in a house.”

Anyone who has come to the age of accountability recognizes that we must grow in our understanding of love in all relationships of life. We struggle to learn the “second mile” love about which Jesus spoke (See Mt 5:38-47). We yearn for that love that was defined by Peter De Vries: “Loves blindness consists more often in seeing what is not there than in seeing what is there.” It is this love that is an emotional attitude that is not defined by the object upon which it is applied. It is as some poet once wrote:

It’s silence when your words would hurt.
It’s patience when your neighbor’s curt.
It’s deafness when the scandal flows.
It’s thoughtfulness for another’s woes.
It’s promptness when stern duty calls.
It’s courage when misfortune falls.

In modern times we have moved into a world where too many marriages end in divorce. We thus yearn to discover again that lost love that once bound marriages together until death. And in a chaotic world of dysfunctional societies, we long for a restoration of the divine principle that we love our neighbor as ourselves. Sane minds ache because we live in a world, that in the name of religion, foolish people feel justified to load a gun and kill innocent people on the street. Some feel compelled to execute those who do not conform to the god they have created after their own political agendas. We are thus driven in desperation to discover an emotional and spiritual loving relationship within humanity that is so necessary for survival in a mad world.

Just to refresh our minds, we remember what the conquering military French military leader, Napoleon, once said, Alexander, Caesar, Charlemagne and myself founded empires, but upon what did we rest the creation of our genius? Upon force. Jesus alone founded his empire on love, and at this hour millions of men would die for Him.

It is this love and devotion to our Lord Jesus that we seek to discover and implement in our lives as citizens of the world. Many years ago, Dr. Rene Spitz once surveyed an orphanage that was established in a South American city. It was his conclusion that one third of the babies who died in the orphanage did so because they received only one tenth of a mother's love. The intolerance that we witness in our own world today can only be explained by citizens who have experienced little love in the homes from which they came. It is this love that Christian parents yearn to instill in the hearts of their children before they are sent as citizens into society. The chaos we experience in many societies today reveals that families are doing a very poor job of developing homes that produce citizens who love their neighbors as themselves.

So we yearn for the atmosphere of love that was poetically defined by Helen Steiner Rice:

Where there is love the heart is light.
Where there is love the day is bright.
Where there is love there is a song,
To help when things are going wrong.
Where there is love there is a smile,
To make all things seem more worthwhile.
Where there is love there's quiet peace,
A tranquil place where turmoils cease.
Love changes darkness to light,
And makes the heart take wingless flight.
Oh, blessed are they who walk in love,
For they walk with God above.
And when man walks with God again,
There will be peace on earth for men.

Chapter 3

GROWING TOGETHER

In the early years, you fight because you don't understand each other.

In the latter years,
you fight because you do.

Joan Didion

But Mark Twain was right when he said, "To get the full value of joy, you must have somebody to divide it with."

That which is most precious in one's old age is that the one seated in the chair next to you is the love of one's youth with whom you have grown old together. Throughout all the disagreements, the aged couple can find solace in the fact that they have endured to the time when both can experience the satisfaction that they made it together to the chairs in which they sit side by side in their old age. It is a surreal experience that aged couples can never in words explain to their children. It is something only the children can understand fully when they too get there themselves. It is for this reason that it goes without saying that Christians should marry Christians.

In his book, 30 Lessons for Loving, that resulted from a survey of 700 elderly people, Karl Pillemer concluded, Couples who have made it all the way later into life have found it to be a peak experience, a sublime experience to be together (Time Magazine, June 13, 2016).

Pillemer also added, "But all of them [aged couples] also either said that marriage is hard, or that it's really, really hard" (Ibid). Belinda Luscombe stated that to get to the end of a lifetime of marriage, it takes focus on the end result.

Marriage has become what game theorists call "a commitment device," an undertaking that locks individuals into a course of action they might find dreary and inconvenient on occasion in order to help them achieve a worthwhile bonus later on. And in an era when it's both harder and less necessary to stay together, the trick is figuring out how to go the distance so you can reap the surprisingly rich rewards (Time Magazine, ibid).

In many ways, Paul certainly had more in mind than financial relationships, or relationships with those who would compromise one's faith, when he said, "Do not be unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship has righteousness with unrighteousness?" (2 Co 6:14). Any relationship that a believer has with an unbeliever brings the believer into a contract with what could lead to the compromise of the believer's faith.

When making a decision to make a contract of marriage for life, young people must seriously consider with whom they are signing on the dotted line on the marriage license. It is the love of one's youth that must be remembered throughout a lifetime partnership in marriage. It is this affectionate love that Solomon sought to reveal to us in his loving relationship with the Shulamite woman. The Song of Solomon is a beautiful emotional ballet between King Solomon and a woman who had captured his sincere devotion. In the last verses of the poetic play, the Shulamite responded with her devotion to the king. Her words should be upon the lips of all those who would seek to grow old together in matrimony (See Ss 8:6,7).

A. "Set me as a seal upon your heart, as a seal upon your arm."

The signet (seal) in ancient times was worn as an identity by the one to whom someone had given his or her allegiance. It was usually worn around the neck, and thus, close to one's heart. The Shulamite maiden wanted to be as close as possible to the heart of Solomon, and thus treasured by him. She wanted the signet of her devotion to him to be with him at all times.

The devotion of two people to one another is revealed in the New Testament in reference to the responsibilities that two people must have to one another in marriage. The best counsel for successful marital relationships was given by the Holy Spirit in two statements: (1) Wives, submit yourselves to your own husbands, as it is fitting to the Lord" (Cl 3:18), and (2) "Husbands, love your wives and do not be harsh toward them" (Cl 3:19). In submission there is mutual respect between two parties. It is the husband's love for his wife that draws devotion out of his wife. Regardless of the submission of the wife, true agape (love) is still showered on the wife. Agape (love) has no conditions. It is never a bargaining chip to be offered for a return. Submission and love in marriage define a mutual relationship. It is never an "I-will-if-you-will" interaction between a husband and wife.

When God's relationship directives for marital relationships are violated, marriages will suffer, and eventually, society as a whole will reap the consequences. We must never forget that we are the creative product of our Creator, and thus, we must always assume that He made both man and woman to dwell in a harmonious relationship in marriage according to His emotional blueprint that is embedded within men and women. When society seeks to change the blueprint, then expect problems. When society seeks to rewire what God initially wired, then we can expect several social short circuits.

There is an extent to which both a husband and wife should maintain their roles as mates in marriage. As a wife would submit to the Lord, so she must submit to her husband (Ep 5:22). "Therefore, as the church is subject to Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything" (Ep 5:24). There is also an extent to which the husband must love his wife. "So husbands ought to love their own wives as their own bodies" (Ep 5:28).

When a woman sets the seal of her love on a man's heart, the natural response of the man is love for the woman. When the husband takes the initiative to love and cherish his wife, submission becomes a natural response. The Holy Spirit never gave any instructions in the marriage relationship that were not natural according to the emotional design by which we were created.

B. "For love is as strong as death."

As sure as death will claim its victims (Hb 9:27), so will love claim success in a marriage. There are always times of disagreement in a marriage relationship. There are no perfect marriages. Sometimes arguments can become heated. But there is nothing greater to cool a heated argument than the words, "I love you, dear." Death will certainly claim every human being. However, love will also claim its "victims," for hard is the person who will not respond to unconditional love.

When in times of trying disagreements between a husband and wife, it would be good for both parties to remember the following words that were once spoken to them years before when they were joined in marriage for life:

Wilt thou have this partner to be thy wedded wife (or, husband), to live together after God's law in the holy estate of marriage? Wilt thou love her (or, him), comfort, honor, and keep her (or, him) in sickness and in health; and, forsaking all others, give thyself only unto her (or him), so long as you both shall live?

After remembering the statement, gaze upon the rings of the covenant that were exchanged with an "I do" as the response to the above statement. It is then that we realize that love is as strong as death.

In writing a book on relationships, C. H. Parkhurst wrote a chapter in his book entitled, “Love is a Lubricant.” He tells the story of a trolley car workman who always carried a can of oil in his pocket. When asked why, the workman replied, “I must always carry a can of oil in my pocket, for there are so many things that a drop of oil will correct.” In a successful marriage, we have always noticed an “oil can” in the pocket of each marriage partner. The oil can contained a mixture of love, patience and forgiveness.

C. “Many waters cannot quench love”:

Some translations of this verse read that flood waters cannot drown love. True love between a husband and wife cannot be smothered by trials that occasionally come along in a lifetime relationship. In fact, a couple cannot determine if they have a true love for one another until it is tested with disagreements. And the married couple who says that they never had a disagreement, are not being truthful. We are human, and humans disagree. We are not all of the same mind as cloned individuals. Marriage is not a cloning process where either partner relinquishes his or her right to think to his or her partner.

Disagreements often come to light after the first few months of marriage. Once the passion of a sexual relationship cools, thinking, not passion, establishes a firm relationship. Disagreements subsequently separate passion from true agape (love). Once the honeymoon is over, it is then that the couple discovers their true love for one another. They know that they will both be there for one another. At the time of the marriage ceremony the two were pronounced to be one, but it takes the trials of marriage to fully understand their oneness. When both parties, who have established themselves as one in marriage, understand that neither are going anywhere during any heated disagreement, then the concrete of the marriage has set in.

We use the word “partners” in reference to marriage. However, we use the word with God’s definition of how two work together as one in a marriage relationship. There is a final decision-making process in a successful relationship, as well as mutual respect for one another when this God-ordained decision-making process is obeyed. When couples in marriage seek to work outside the realm of God’s definition of the function of each partner in marriage, then the “partnership” is dysfunctional. When married couples adopt the thinking of the world in reference to partnerships, then we must expect worldly results in marriage, which often means that someone is “fired” from the cooperate board.

One of our Millennial Generation friends in America once asked us why it was so difficult for him to find a marriage partner. He was of a generation where single women were brought up to be professionals in the business world. They were trained “to be their own woman,” to think for themselves, and thus see marriage as a cooperate partnership that is defined according to the business world in which they would work professionally. There is nothing wrong with women being educated and successful in life. In fact, a healthy relationship in a marriage depends much on a husband who encourages his wife to be the best she can be with the gifts with which God has empowered her to serve as a disciple of Jesus. A husband who is intimidated with a wife who is very gifted must work on his own self-esteem. And working on one’s self-esteem does not mean that a woman is to be subjected in a manner by which she cannot exercise her gifts to the glory of God.

Unfortunately, the Millennial Generation is what many sociologists have called the “Me Generation,” that is, the generation that has been given everything, and thus, is trained with an abundance of toys and play things from childhood. The result is a generation that has been taught to think of themselves first and expect everything from others. Our young Millennial male was finding it difficult to find a lifetime mate among women of his generation whose principles for marriage were according to biblical principles.

Our young friend had a great respect for the relationship that existed between his own father and mother, but unfortunately, his father and mother were married on the foundation of sound biblical principles. Our young friend had not yet found one of his own generation who manifested the biblically defined relationship that his father and mother had with one another.

We answered the question of our young friend that it is difficult for two “me” people to come together and make an “us” relationship. “For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and will be joined to his wife, and the two will be one flesh” (Ep 5:31).

The biblical principle of the preceding mandate of the Spirit was that the young man must to some extent disengage from his father and mother in order to have a healthy engagement with his wife. The reason this is necessary is that a young man must be committed to his wife. He must trust her knowledge and wisdom in decision-making. It is not the function of one’s parents to be making decisions in the marriage of their children.

Since the mandate of Ephesians 5:31 was made two thousand years ago, we assume that it has always been difficult for two young people to come together to form a marriage that is based on biblical principles.

The struggle our young friend was having is two-sided. He, as a “me” generation, had to give up some of his “me” in order to give himself in love to another “me” generation person, who also had to give up some of her “me” in order to submit to him as the head in a marriage relationship. Marriage is always “give and take.” But when both partners are trained from childhood to always take, then it is difficult for either partner to have enough to give. And in many cases when two “takers” come together in marriage, it is sometimes difficult for both to be satisfied with what the other has to offer.

In a love-submission relationship, there is always sharing, consideration, discussion, cooperation, giving and taking. A biblically conducted marital relationship has all these qualities simply because these are the qualities of a true disciple of Jesus. Christian marriage must always be defined in a manner by which each partner is encouraged to be a better disciple of Jesus.

D. “If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be scorned”:

Remember the 1964 song of the Beatles that was entitled, Can't Buy Me Love? The song writer revealed nothing new. The Shulamite woman said to her devoted lover, Solomon, that her love was not for sale. She recognized that Solomon, because of his great wealth, might be tempted to put a price on her love for him. If Solomon would have by chance tried to buy the love of the Shulamite, then his love for her would not be true. Everyone would know that this “love” was based on that which was of this world. Solomon would be scorned for trying to buy the love of a woman, and the love itself would be insincere because it would have been purchased. Bought love has little chance of success.

True love can never be bought. It must be worked for and earned. A woman who would allow her “heart” to be bought by a wealthy man has cheapened her relationship with the man. The agape (love) that should characterize the relationship between a man and woman should never be labeled with a price tag.

There are different perspectives of the lobola that is “paid” for a woman in many African marriages. For those of the West who are not familiar with this historical practice that is commonly practiced out among many Africa tribes, lobola is the “price of a bride.” A young suitor who would marry a particular young maiden must pay lobola to the father of the bride, which is usually several cows. The number of cows is determined when the relatives of the young man negotiate with the father of the bride.

The practice of lobola has been judged by the West to be somewhat questionable because the West thinks the opposite in reference to preparation for the marriage of a young man to a woman. In the West, it is the desire of the parents to make sure that the young couple are financially secure in order to begin their marriage. They do not seek to “impoverish” the couple from the beginning of the marriage by demanding “payment” by the future breadwinner at the very beginning of the marriage. But the West often misunderstands the lobola of African cultures.

It is true that some African fathers of brides are trying to reap a profit with their daughters in demanding, for example, ten cows, when a young man can give only five. But we must not overlook how the young man should view his love for the young maiden whom he would wed. The lobola is his expression of love. If the father of the young maiden asked for ten cows, and the young man was willing to give only one, then the young maiden would think, “Am I not worth more to you than one cow?” The giving of one cow would be an embarrassment to her worth as a woman and wife.

What is often not understood in reference to lobola is that regardless of how many cows the hopeful young man might give to the father of the bride, he will eventually inherit the father’s herd. The father of the bride is simply making sure that the young man builds up his inheritance, not leaving his daughter to live a poverty-stricken life with someone who has no ability to raise a herd of cows and provide for his grandchildren. Would this not also be the desire of a father of the West to see in the young man who would marry his daughter?

In the West, provision is made by the fathers at the beginning of the marriage in order to encourage the financial success of the young man. In Africa the fathers are trying to guarantee provision for their children at the end of their marriage. It depends on whether one is viewing the financial security of the marriage at the beginning or at the end when the couple are in their old age.

And then consider the fact that the emotional energy that is needed to continue a successful marriage actually depends more on the man than the woman. Luscombe wrote,

One of the more controversial ideas therapists are now suggesting is that men need to do more of the “emotional labor” in a relationship—the work that goes into sustaining love, which usually falls to women (Time Magazine, ibid).

Drs. John and Julie Gottman published the result of forty years of research in their book entitled, A Man's Guide to Women. They essentially concluded that husbands must “man up” to their responsibility of being the primary sustainer in the emotional bond between a husband and wife. They wrote,

What men do in a relationship is, by a large margin, the crucial factor that separates a great relationship from a failed one. This doesn’t mean that a woman doesn’t need to do her part, but the data proves that a man’s actions are the key variable that determines whether a relationship succeeds or fails (quoted by Time Magazine, ibid).

We would conclude that the science of human behavior is now discovering the biblical meaning of the husband as the head in marital relationships. In the Bible, the Holy Spirit is trying to tell us that the man is wired to be the spiritual and emotional head (leader) in the marriage. However, headship is more about emotional and spiritual leadership than authority and rule. It is for this reason that women are always attracted to a man, who to the best of his ability, seeks to be in tune with the emotional needs of a woman. If a husband seeks truly to be the head, then he will sensitize his feelings to be in tune with the emotional needs of his wife. We do not know of any woman who would refuse to having her emotional needs lovingly nurtured.

Before marriage, a young man must examine whether he is able to emotionally lead the young maiden with whom he would be partner for life. His commitment to emotionally nurture a woman in marriage is not something to be taken lightly. How this commitment is made in a particular culture is based on how a commitment is made. When a commitment is made with more than words, as with lobola, the commitment is sincere. If a young African man does not keep his commitment, he will not get his cows back. We must never consider lightly the commitment that two make to one another in the bond (not bondage) of marriage. Think of the commitment in this way: The husband commits himself to be sensitive to the emotional needs of his wife. The wife in turn commits to submitting herself to his loving emotional sensitivity.

Someone once said, “Being someone’s first love may be great, but to be their last is beyond perfect.” It is always good to dream for the perfect love in marriage. However, it is always an impossible dream. It is impossible simply because we are human, and humans have a habit of failing. Therefore, it is not that a married couple never becomes angry with one another, or even irritated. The beauty of agape (love) is not in the problem of how quickly we might become angry with one another, but in how quickly we can resolve our anger and make up.

We must always keep in mind that a young man or woman will never find that perfect person to marry. The perfect mate does not exist. One should seek to find the imperfect person whom they see perfectly through love, just as God sees us as perfect through the blood of Christ. When one discovers the perfect person through love, then it is determined that that person is truly worth fighting for. The love of one’s life is always worth “ten cows.”

When in a time of confrontation, a married couple would do well to remember the following words that they uttered to one another many years before:

For as much as these two have consented together in holy wedlock, and have witnessed the same before God and this company, and thereto have given and pledged their oath each to the other, and have declared the same by giving and receiving a ring and by joining hands; I pronounce that they are husband and wife, and what God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Chapter 4

GROWING INTO ETERNITY TOGETHER

We heard the joke about the aged man who bought what he thought were “youth pills.” The first night after purchasing the pills, and before he went to bed, out of desperation to be young again, he swallowed the whole bottle of pills. In the morning his wife kept shaking him to wake up. After some vigorous shaking, the man rubbed his eyes, but grumbled, “Ok, Ok, I’ll get up, but I don’t want to go to school.”

We remember one time in the kitchen on the Kansas farm many, many years ago that uas children we asked our father how old he was. He replied, “40.” All of us children gasped and responded, “That is so old!” A person of 40 is old to some, but young to others, depending on which side of 40 you are. A person of 60 starts to reconsider that his father was not that old when he died at 80. We just never want to be considered “old timers,” regardless of how old we are. Nevertheless, we must all remember the words of the Holy Spirit:

The days of our years are threescore years and ten, and if by reason of strength they are fourscore years, yet their span is but trouble and sorrow, for it is soon cut off and we fly away (Ps 90:10).

We seem never to be ready for that day when we “fly away.” Nevertheless, we must remember the words of James: “For what is your life? It is even a vapor that appears for a little time and then vanishes away” (Js 4:14). We must always live as if we were about to vanish away into eternal dwelling. It is for this reason that old age is a beautiful thing when in the company of one with whom the promise was made many years before, “‘Til death do us part.” But until that time when either partner “flies away,” it would be good to reconsider some precious concepts that will preserve one’s youthful attitude until the flesh takes its first steps to dust—no “youth pills” needed.

A. Be old in flesh, but not in spirit.

It was Shakespeare who said,

Some men never seem to grow old for they are always active in thought, always ready to adopt new ideas. They are never chargeable with foggyism; satisfied, yet ever unsatisfied; settled, yet ever unsettled. They always enjoy the best of what is, and are first to find the best of what shall be.”

They are as Paul wrote, “Therefore, we do not lose heart. Though our outward man is perishing, yet the inward man is being renewed day by day” (2 Co 4:16).

Paul surely felt age slowly creeping upon his body, but he would never allow the inevitable wasting away of his flesh to damper his spirit. We have seen those who are old in spirit when they were only 30. But we have also witnessed those who are 60 to be 30 in spirit. The old proverb is still true: “You are as old as you think you are.” There is divine revelation behind this statement. For the “aged youth” we would resort to the following encouraging words of God:

He gives power to the faint. And to those who have no might, He increases strength. Even the youths will faint and be weary, and the young men will utterly fall. But those who wait on the Lord will renew their strength. They will mount up with wings as eagles. They will run and not be weary. They will walk and not faint (Is 40:29-31).

The word “age” must apply only to the body, but never to the state of one’s spirit. If one would preserve a youthful spirit, then he must not leave his dreams behind as his body ages into its evening years. His mind must always be nursed with the invigoration of hope of what yet lies in the future. If our dreams are dead, our hope will grow cold, and we will no longer look forward to great things. If hope is old, then our mind is old. If the fire of ambition has long cooled, then our spirit has aged. But aging does not have to be this way. We must remember the following words of a poet:

If from life you take the best,
And if in life you keep the jest,
If love you hold;
No matter how the years go by,
No matter how the birthdays fly,
You are not old.

O. H. Tabor gave some very good advice for those who let down their guard in old age, and subsequently, relinquish themselves to becoming old in spirit. You can know if your mind is old, Tabor wrote, when the following starts to characterize your attitude and behavior:

- When you start making something out of nothing and allow your imaginations to build the wrong images of others.
- When you are easily annoyed by little things that should be disposed of in a Christian sort of way.
- When you are afraid to face up to the future and dread what may lie ahead.
- When you lose interest in life and look to the past most of the time.
- When you withdraw from others and want to shut the door of your life.
- When you find yourself growing more critical of others, especially the young people.
- When you look on the dark side of life most of the time and feel mistreated and unloved, and find you are becoming bitter and sour.

We might find ourselves in those words somewhere, and thus have allowed the spirit of being cranky to come into our attitudes. If so, then we have proven true what Solomon wrote, that “... the evil days come and the years draw near when you will say, ‘I have no pleasure in them’” (Ec 12:1). But this does not have to be the character of our inner spirit. Solomon’s “evil days” were only evil because in old age this is how some people view their lives. But “evil days” exist only in the minds of those who have grown old in spirit.

B. Stay young in spirit.

If one finds himself with the spirit of the “evil days” in mind, then he does not have to remain in the bondage of despair. Life is too short to spend time on wishing we were young again, and then become cranky in spirit during the rest of our few years on this earth. Whether we are 40 or 80, we must think positive. We must not be surprised that age will bring its marks in the flesh, but this does not mean that fleshly marks that come with years be accompanied with marks in the spirit. We must not have remorse over those things in the past for which God has already dealt to us a bountiful portion of grace and forgiveness. We must be as Paul when he was sitting in a cold prison cell in Rome: “... one thing I do, forgetting those things that are behind and reaching forward to those things that are before” (Ph 3:13). These are wise words to the aged. But he was not finished. “I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus” (Ph 3:14). To Paul, the past had passed. His focus was on the future. Because he never lost his vision of good things to come, he was worthwhile for God’s business until the end of his life. An aged body may hinder our mobility to put ourselves in the presence of others, but if we maintain a youthful spirit, others will seek to put themselves in our presence.

The key to maintaining a spirit of youth is to focus our interest on something that is worthwhile to others. We must never pity ourselves in whatever portion of trials that life has dealt to us. We must always count it with all joy when we fall into different trials (Js 1:2), knowing that our faith must be tested to the day we die (Js 1:3). For this reason, we must never give into troubles and fears. In order to guard oneself from being critical of others, we must always keep our minds on saying something good about others. We may make ourselves feel good by griping about the government or others, but doing such only encourages our spirit of negativity. And the more negative we become about life, the less others will desire to be in our presence.

Worship is the cure for negativity, for in worship one focuses his mind on the One who gave all for us. Worship is inherently encouraging. It refocuses our thinking off ourselves for a moment in order to concentrate on the God of all creation. Worship is the best medicine for those who have been stricken with the virus of negativity. We once attended a small assembly of saints in a house in Cape Town, South Africa. Before the assembly, in came an aged sister who needed someone on each side to bring her broken body to a seat in the assembly. Regardless of her apparent physical disability, she had a continual smile on her face. Her spirit was delightful. She had learned the secret of how to maintain a spirit of youth through worship. After struggling for two city blocks to make it to a seat of relief in the assembly, she forgot all her aches and pains for a moment as she poured out her heart in thanksgiving to the One who would eventually give her a new body (See 2 Co 5:1-10).

C. Eternal relationships must be nourished.

Every Bible student remembers the aged Anna. She was at least 84 years old, but continued her ministry at the temple. She served God with fastings and prayers night and day (Lk 2:36,37). She had discovered the secret to growing old with a good spirit. One is never too old to serve, for in serving, as worship, one is focusing on others. Anna may have been somewhat immobile, but she still served God. She was the embodiment of the promise of God in Psalm 92:12-14:

The righteous will flourish like the palm tree. He will grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Those who are planted in the house of the Lord will flourish in the courts of our God. They will bring forth fruit in old age.

Emmanuel Kant was in his 70s when he wrote Anthropology, and The Metaphysics of Morals. The Italian opera composer, Guiseppe Verdi, was 74 when he produced the masterpiece, Otello. At 80 he produced Falstaff, and then at 85 the famous opera Ave Maria, Stabat Mater and Te Dum. At 79 Oliver W. Holmes wrote Over the Teacups. At 83 Alfred Tennyson wrote Crossing the Bar. Productivity has no age limits.

When in one’s aged years, it is a time to be proud, not regretful. In one’s latter years he or she must remember, “With the aged is wisdom, and in length of days understanding” (Jb 12:12). “The gray head is a crown of glory, if it is attained by the way of righteousness” (Pv 16:31). It had to have been some aged person who remembered the preceding words of the Bible when he or she wrote,

Let me grow lovely growing old,
So many fine things to do;
Silks and ivory and gold,
And laces need not be new.
There is healing in old trees,
Old streets a glamour hold.
Why not I as well as they,
Grow lovely, growing old?

The responsibility of the aged couple is to help one another grow old gracefully. A tender nudge, a patient word, and a loving smile will signal years together and spiritual growth. It is not as Agnes and Andy. Agnes complained to Andy, her aged husband, “You haven’t said you loved me for years.” Andy responded, “I told you I loved you when we got married. When I change my mind I’ll let you know.”

When an aged couple arrive in the twilight of their years together, their words are more custom made to express every thought. Barbs have been filed from words of disagreement. Roads that led to disagreements have been posted with signs that read, “Road Closed!” The beauty of aged couples is that they have learned to fine tune their communication in order to make their relationship carry them on the road that ends in eternal dwelling. Heaven will be much sweeter when they recognize one another in their eternal rocking chair. At the age of 70, the best advice I can leave for the aged is to wake up every morning with goals to do, knowing that this will be the best day of your life . . . considering the prevailing physical circumstances.

Chapter 5

THE SANTUARY FOR SURVIVAL

And a brother will deliver up [a Christian] brother to death, and a father his [Christian] child. And the children will rise up against [Christian] parents and cause them to be put to death (Mt 10:21).

It is necessary to understand the context of Jesus’ above statement in order to understand why we have inserted the word “Christian” before those who would be delivered up. In the context, Jesus had just stated to His disciples, “I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves” (Mt 10:16). These wolves will “deliver you up to councils and they will scourge you in their synagogues” (Mt 10:17). The Christians would “be brought before governors and kings for My sake” (Mt 10:18). And then He forewarned them, “You will be hated by all men for My name’s sake” (Mt 10:22). Jesus was picturing a sociological environment in the days of the Roman Empire when the home would digress to the point that family loyalties would vanish. It would digress to the point that unbelieving parents would deliver up their believing children, and unbelieving children would deliver up their Christian parents.

In his monumental six volumes entitled The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Edward Gibbon (1737-1794) concluded that there were seven major reasons why the Roman Empire came to its demise with the fall of Rome in A.D. 476. One of the seven reasons was the “devaluation of the home,” which “devaluation” Jesus foretold in Matthew 10.

According to statistics in America in 1870, 1 in 34 marriages ended in divorce. In 1900, 1 in 12 marriages ended in divorce. In 1930 it was 1 in 6 marriages, and by the 1970s it was 1 in 2. But the good news is that since the 1980s divorce in the American society has declined, except among older people. Time Magazine reported that research “in 2014 found it [divorce] has doubled among people 50 and older in the past two decades; more men over 65 are divorced than widowed” (Time Magazine, June 13, 2016).

Many people think that marriage will work itself out automatically. But that does not seem to be the case. It takes a lot of hard work to make a marriage work and a home successful. As socio/economic conditions of today take both the husband and wife out of the home, it is increasingly difficult to bring both back home to sustain a healthy marriage relationship, and a family that nurtures children who are assets to a healthy society. Unfortunately, in many cases it is true what the aged preacher Marshal Keeble once wrote, “There is no such thing as juvenile delinquency. It’s parental. That’s the problem. The children are doing pretty good considering who’s raising them.”

The American, John Howard Payne, had lived in Paris, France for over nine years. He was extremely homesick for America. In 1822 he wrote the words,

... ‘mid pleasures and palaces
we may roam,
be it ever so humble,
there’s no place like home.

The home should be a place where the strife of the world is shut out, and love locked in. It should be a social environment where those who have been put down and bullied by the world can be lifted up to mountain peaks; where the small can be considered great. As someone once said, the home is “the father’s kingdom, the mother’s world, and a child’s paradise.” The home is a paradise where we have the opportunity to grumble the most, but are treated with respect, not criticism, for our opinions. It is a paradise where our stomachs are filled, and our hearts are comforted. It is truly as the preacher wrote, “The only place on earth where the faults and failings of humanity are hidden under the sweet mantle of charity.”

The biblical prescription for a successful home is clear. The husband (father) is the primary lover (Ep 5:24,28), the provider (1 Tm 5:8), the trainer (Pv 22:6; 29:15; Ep 6:4), and the spiritual and emotional leader (Pv 21:9; Ep 5:23,24; 1 Tm 3:4; Ti 2:5). No, it is not as someone said, “Home is the only place where a man can do as he pleases ... when his wife is away.” Neither is it as the Ghanaian proverb: The husband is the head, but the wife is the neck.

In the home, the wife (mother) is a lover (Ti 2:4), and a helper (Gn 2:18), and keeper (Ti 2:5). There are beautiful women about whom we hear. And there are career women and sophisticated women. And then the modern reference is to be the liberated woman. But we hear little about godly women who are the keepers of homes. In the home, the husband/father may run the show, but the wife/mother, as the keeper of the home, should make sure that she is writing the script according to God’s rules. Successful homes produce successful societies.

In many societies today, street gangs are a sociological function of the youth. Gangs exist because homes have failed. Too often the gang has become the new home for those young people who come from dysfunctional homes, or no homes at all. It is often as someone said, “Kids are on the streets today because they don’t want to stay at home by themselves.” When both parents are forced into the work place of the urban environment, then responsibility for the children becomes second place. It is not surprising that when the children are nurtured by the environment of humanistic schools, the father and mother are both off to work and home late, that the home becomes only a place through which family members pass on their way to somewhere else.

Since God instituted the home for the procreation of the world, and the social environment to produce citizens for society, then we would naturally assume that He would lay down correct rules for successful family life. And He has. We are only kidding ourselves to think that we can violate His rules for a successful home, and then not pay the price, both in our homes and in society. Any dysfunction in society can always be traced back to some failure in the home.

John R. Mott once reported on the family of the world renowned Andrew Murray, a South African. He reported that in the family of Murray there were eleven children who grew into adulthood. Five of the sons become preachers and four of the daughters became the wives of preachers. Ten grandsons became preachers and thirteen grandchildren became missionaries. There is power in the Christian home to preserve the world.

The beauty of a house is harmony.

The security of a house is loyalty.

The joy of a house is love.

The plenty of a house is in children.

The rule of a house is service.

The comfort of a house is God Himself.

Frank Crane

Chapter 6

REFOCUSING THE FAMILY

*Behold, children are a heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb
is His reward.
As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, so are the children of one’s youth.
(Ps 127:3,4)*

We have experienced in life more than we desire to remember concerning the following scenario that was written in a long-forgotten church bulletin:

A telephone rings in the middle of the night. The caller weeps uncontrollably. A teenager is ... dead. Hearts are broken; there are no words that bring comfort; comfort flees into the night; all advice is not relevant. A funeral happens; final “good-byes” are whispered in the ear of broken parents; classmates mourn; friends grieve. God is blamed; and everyone cries out, “WHY?”

Some churches lose their young people to the wilderness of sin at such a rate that they fabricate any type of appeal to keep them drawn to something that somewhat reflects the spiritual side of man. Regardless of all the efforts to “keep our children,” many children simply wander off into the wilderness. These wandering young people often look back and say, as our good childhood friend said to his mother, “I want to experience life.” And sometimes that experience ends in a shocking call in the middle of the night.

A. Why do young people wander?

The psalmist wrote, “Behold, children are a heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb is His reward” (Ps 127:3). B. Linda Mayhue wrote,

What a responsibility—to know that our children will build a life on what we teach and the love we show them. No wonder parenting is a job that brings more joy and challenge than any other.

Children are like arrows in the hand that we propel toward the target of life. The psalmist continued, “As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, so are the children of one’s youth” (Ps 127:4). Children must be launched from the home toward the target of heaven. In order to accomplish this feat in parenting, parents must have a clear vision of the target. It is more than speaking the words of heaven. It is living the example by which children can be a designed arrow for direct flight. The sure way for parents to direct their children toward heaven is to make sure that they are going in the same direction.

We repulse in horror when we read of child abuse. But we must remember that the one who is guilty of abusing children was also the child of some parents who had no clear vision of heaven. The parent’s ungodliness was only perpetuated through their children who in turn abuse their grandchildren. Perpetrators of child abuse were created in a dysfunctional home. When we dig deep into the dysfunctional home of a child abuser, it is easy to see that the abuser was someone born out of a home of abuse.

B. Restructuring the factory:

We often hear that an automobile company must recall several thousand of their vehicles, if not millions that they produced at their factory. The reason for the recall is to correct a dysfunctional part in the manufactured product. The dysfunctional vehicles often resulted in accidents, some of which may have ended in the death of the vehicle occupants. The factory, therefore, must be remodeled to correct the dysfunction in the products.

The same is true in society. If we wake up one day and discover tragedy in society, we must first focus on that which produces the products for society. It is the home that produces citizens for our society, and when the home is producing dysfunctional citizens, then society must take another look at the home and do some remodeling. Unfortunately, there is no recall of those children who have been released into society. They must live with the dysfunction of their parent’s home. However, this does not mean that their own homes must continue the dysfunctions of the home from which they came. A new home can always begin a new heritage of the family. The Lord Jesus can do wonders in molding a great family.

When parents bring their children to Jesus, they have brought them to One who can mold them for life and direct them to the target of eternal glory. Jesus once rebuked His own disciples when they rebuked some parents who were bringing their little children “to Him so that He might put His hands on them and pray” (Mt 18:19). Jesus had just reminded his disciples about the preciousness of little children:

But whoever causes one of these little ones who believe in Me to stumble, it would be better for him that a millstone were hung around his neck and he were drowned in the depth of the sea (Mt 18:6).

It would be good for parents to research this statement, for it may be the parents who are hindering their children from coming to Jesus. Jesus’ invitation to children is explicitly clear. Parents, grandparents and relatives must work as a unified force to bring the children to Jesus. Bringing a child to Jesus, while the child is in the home, is not a guarantee that the child will remain faithful to Jesus when he leaves the home. The parents who have worked the best they could to keep their children close to Jesus in the home, are not responsible for any wayward child after the child has left the home. Leaving the home means that children are responsible to God for their own behavior. There is no parental responsibility that guarantees the faithfulness of children once they are on their own. When the Bible speaks of each one giving account of himself before God in judgment, it does not mean that the parents will give account for the sins of wayward children (See 2 Co 5:10).

C. Writing road maps:

We know the well-known exhortation of Solomon: “Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it” (Pv 22:6). It may be that a well-trained child takes a misguided walk in the wilderness, but when he is old he will remember the values that were implanted in his behavior when he was a child. The problem is when parents do not implant a spiritual road map in the minds of their children. If the young person wanders off in the wilderness of this world, it is difficult for him to find a spiritual road map back to God if the parents did not implant in his mind spiritual values.

The first responsibility of parents is to give their children a spiritual road map that will bring them back to God if they wander off the straight and narrow way. Parents who have not built into their parenting a spiritual road map for their children are spiritually endangering their children when they leave the home. If a spiritual road map is not instilled in the moral fiber of their children, they are constructing an arrow that will fly from the home in the wrong direction. The child, when grown, will find it difficult to find his or her way to God when he or she has no spiritual inclinations to seek God.

Parents must realize that respect for God and His word must be instilled in the minds of children when they are young. This is the only guarantee against developing a society where every imagination of man is only evil continually (Gn 6:5). If the word of God is not instilled in the minds of young people in the home, then when they leave the home the world will instill in their hearts its own set of values.

What destroyed Israel is the same that destroys societies today. God judged Israel, and thus condemned her to captivity for one reason: “My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge” of My word (Hs 4:6). As parents, we encourage, if not demand, that our children learn a host of secular books in school in order that they graduate and be successful in life. However, we neglect to demand that they know the Book of Life in order to graduate into eternal life. When a biology book is worn with use, but a Bible lies in dust, then we can be assured that a young person is bound to develop a wrong arrangement of priorities in his or her life.

D. Prepared for life:

This world is not going away soon ... maybe. Therefore, Christians will always live in a world that has gone morally wrong. And this world is very immoral (See Js 4:4; 1 Jn 2:15). In order to prepare our children for the world, we must not forget the fact that someone will be their teacher in reference to moral values. Parents have a choice as to who will teach them and what they will be taught. Because the world is a strong teacher, Christian parents must be stronger than this world. In order that our children “shine as lights in the world” (Ph 2:15), parents must remember that “greater is He who is in you than he who is in the world” (1 Jn 4:4). Therefore, parents must teach their children the following strong mandate from the Holy Spirit: “Do not love the world nor the things in the world. If any loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him” (1 Jn 2:15).

Parents are often challenged with the competition of their local public schools. When parents send their children to public schools that are void of the word of God, they are sending them into an environment of humanism, and in this day, a science of men that is void of the existence of God. In their book, The Evolution Conspiracy, Caryl Matrisciana and Roger Oakland wrote,

... traditionally the school room has been an open forum of learning. Today it has become a pulpit for the aggressive conversion of impressionable minds. It is the battlefield where war is being waged against the Judeo-Christian God, His principles, His morality, and the Bible (Sept., 1991, see Amazon Kindle).

In his book, Humanism: A New Religion, Dr. Charles F. Potter wrote,

Education is thus a most powerful ally of Humanism, and every American public school is a school of Humanism. What can a theistic Sunday School’s meeting for an hour once a week, and teaching only a fraction of the children, do to stem the tide of the five day program of humanistic teaching? (See Amazon.com.)

Since almost all young people come out of families that are spiritually dysfunctional, we are sending spiritually dysfunctional youth into a lion’s den of secular humanism where spiritually is deemed mythological. A Sunday morning religion that offers only a brief spiritual encounter for a couple hours once a week has no chance of winning the war against five days a week in an environment of humanistic teaching. The only chance parents have in saving their children is in daily study of the word of God in their homes.

We now live in a religious world where many church leaders know little of the Bible. We are as Israel who grew ignorant of the word of God. They were led by spiritual people, but leaders who knew little of the word of God (Hs 4:6). It was not that Israel became irreligious. The Israelites maintained their religiosity, but refocused on gods they created after their own imagination and religious behavior that satisfied the emotional hysteria of idol worship. Today, we are as them. When parents and their children show up at a “church house of Bible ignorance,” it is rare that they will hear preaching and teaching from the word of God. They cannot because those who are leading the religious clan have themselves long forsaken a love and study of the Bible.

These are the times of biblical ignorance in a multitude of misguided religions. We have long forsaken the time when church leaders used good sense from the Good Book in order to lead the people to Him only who is good.

E. Refocusing parenthood:

Parents must move beyond the common statement that is often said to children, “Do as I say, not what I do.” Children need examples. We too often forget that we are teaching our children through two mediums of education: (1) We teach our children through oral instructions. (2) We teach our children through behavioral example. If parents lack in any of these two areas, they will reap the consequences through their children. Their children will either know what to do, but have no living example of how to do what they know, or they will follow the behavioral example of their parents, but not know why they are doing it. Atheists can have good families. But their children are not directed by their parents to an eternal dwelling with their Creator.

Young people must not be burdened with the task of sifting through parental dysfunction in order to find their way in life. If parents do not live up to what they teach, their children, after they leave the home, are constantly challenged to make decisions concerning good and bad behavior on their own. This should not be the responsibility of the children. Children must not be given the responsibility of sifting through our actions in the home in order to come up with what the Lord would have them do.

When our children leave the home, they must take with them two primary principles that will keep them focused in their lives:

1. You will love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind (Mt 22:37).
2. You will love your neighbor as yourself (Mt 22:39).

With the guiding principle of seeking first the kingdom of God and His righteousness (Mt 6:33), children are well prepared for life with the above two principles as the foundation for their behavior.

Parents must remember that the Bible is their best friend. There are nugget principles for child rearing throughout the Bible. Someone said, “Rearing a child is like drafting a blueprint; you have to know where to draw the lines.” It is the Bible that has already drawn the lines for child training.

A young teenage daughter asked if she could go to a recently released adult movie. But the mother drew a line. She said “No!” The daughter responded to the mother, “All the other parents are allowing their children to go.” As the mother continued sweeping the kitchen floor, she picked up a handful of garbage that she had swept into a pile and threw it in the salad of the noon meal. She then said to her daughter, “I suppose that if you don’t hate garbage in your heart you shouldn’t mind it in your stomach.”

Parents must always remember the exhortation of the Holy Spirit: “Be not deceived, evil company corrupts good morals” (1 Co 15:33). There was once a man who had a canary who would sing a beautiful song. So he decided to hang the cage with the canary outside his window to enjoy the company of the sparrows. The sparrows thus became the neighbors of the canary. It did not take long for the canary to learn to sing only, “Cheep, Cheep, Cheep.”

There is an exhortation from the Bible we must not forget: “‘Therefore, come out from among them and be separate, says the Lord.’” (2 Co 6:17). And, “Abhor what is evil. Cling to what is good” (Rm 12:9). Goethe said, “Tell me with whom thou art found and I will tell thee who thou art.” Solomon has not yet been proven wrong in the statement: “He who walks with wise men will be wise, but a companion of fools will be destroyed” (Pv 13:20).

Parents must first talk to God in prayer about their children, and then they must talk to their children about God. God gave Israel a great mandate for parenthood in Deuteronomy 6:4-9, in which were the following words:

And you will teach them [commandments] diligently to your children and will talk of them when you sit in your house and when you walk by the way and when you lie down and when you rise up (Dt 6:7).

Now before we become cynical of our own generation, consider the following words:

Children now love luxury, have bad manners, contempt for authority, show disrespect for their elders, and love chatter in place of exercise. Children are now tyrants and not the servants of their households. They no longer rise when elders enter the room. They contradict their partners, chatter before company, gobble up their dainties at the table, cross their legs and tyrannize over their teachers.

Socrates

Written around 475 B.C.

Chapter 7

GOD'S MANUAL FOR PARENTHOOD

In order to keep Israel on the road of righteousness, God gave the parents of Israel specific instructions on parenthood in reference to guiding the nation in the right direction. The system by which parents were to implement these instructions is given in the context of Deuteronomy 6:4-9. If the parents maintained God's educational system by which they should teach their children the law of God, then the nation would be preserved in the land of promise.

In Deuteronomy 6 are instructions on how Jewish parents were to impart the commandments of God to their children. In Deuteronomy 11, God explained the reason why the parents of Israel were to be so vigilant to instruct their children in the word of God. Moses recorded,

Therefore, you will keep all the commandments that I command you this day so that you may be strong and go in and possess the land into which you go to possess it; so that you may prolong your days in the land that the Lord swore to your fathers to give to them and to their seed, a land that flows with milk and honey (Dt 11:8,9).

Failure to be obedient to the commandments of God, therefore, meant that they would not be able to possess the land, as well as retain the possession of it after the land was conquered. Their obedience to the law of God was necessary for them to function as the nation of God in order to be a beacon of obedience to the world that they were God's people. If they forsook the law of God, and went after the gods of the nations around them, then their purpose for which they were called to be a nation would no longer be valid.

As Israel among the nations, Christians live in a world that is hostile to the will of God. It is imperative, therefore, that Christians take a firm stand for the word of God in order to survive as the spiritual Israel of God. Unfortunately, the majority of the physical Israel of old eventually forsook the word of God (Hs 4:6). The result was that the Israelites were scattered among the nations, from which only a faithful remnant returned. The Jewish nation lost her identity as the people of God in the land of Palestine. If Christians today become ignorant of the word of God, they too will lose their identity as the people of God. They will be religious, but they will have no claim to being called Christians. They may do many wonderful works, but they will only be "Lord, Lord" religionists who have forsaken the commandments of God (See Mt 7:21-23). Since Israel is God's example of warning to the church today, then we too must expect that only a remnant will remain faithful (See Rm 15:4; 1 Co 10:11).

In order to guard against the unfortunate destiny of apostasy, the following statements of Deuteronomy 6 are the Spirit-inspired educational manual on how Hebrew parents were to teach their children in order to preserve their identity as the people of God. If we fail to follow these instructions, the church too will become as Israel of old who departed from the word of God. The Hebrew writer warned, "Take care, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God" (Hb 3:12).

A. Teach diligently the word of God.

Moses instructed that the parents "teach them [the commandments] diligently to your children" (Dt 9:7). Before two people are married, this is one of the agreements to which they must first commit themselves. When children come into the family, both parents must be committed to teaching their children the word of God. Though one parent can be successful in the task of teaching the Bible to the children, when there are two on the teaching staff, the task is much easier.

In the case of Timothy, it was only Timothy's mother, Eunice, with her mother, who assumed the role of teaching the word of God to her son (Tm 1:5). No credit is given to Timothy's father for being a believer (At 16:1-3). Though it is best to have a team of teachers to impart the word of God to the children, sometimes the mother or father must struggle alone if one is an unbeliever. In the case of Timothy, the mother was successful in imparting the word of God to her son from the time Timothy was a child (2 Tm 3:15), to the time an apostle came by and called him into ministry (At 16:1-3).

The use of the word "diligent" in the instructions of Deuteronomy 9:7 means that the parents must put their minds to this task. If parents believe that sports and school activities are more important on the list of training their children than the word of God, then God's word will take second place in the lives of the children. If parents believe that secular education is more important than spiritual education, then they will develop children who arrange the priorities of their life according to what the parents deemed most important in their lives. Parents must require of their children regular Bible study and memorization of the Scriptures. As in secular education, assignments in Bible study are in order. Greater diligence must be placed on Bible learning than on any other learning in the home.

It is interesting to note the difference between the King James Version (KJV) translation of the Greek text of 2 Timothy 2:15 and other translations. The KJV reads, “Study to show thyself approved unto God....” The word “study” is not in the Greek text. However, the meaning of study is strongly assumed in the text, though other translations retain the literality of the Greek text with the following translation: “Be diligent to present yourself approved to God as a workman who does not need to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of God.”

If one were to rightly divide the word of God as a diligent workman for God, then certainly he must study the word of God. A diligent workman for God has no idea how to work unless he diligently studies his Work Manual. This is the reasoning behind the translation of the original KJV translators. Diligent workmen diligently study in order to rightly determine what the Boss would have them do. Those parents who are diligent students of the word of God will diligently teach the word to their children in order that they follow God’s instructions on living.

B. Teach the word of God in the home classroom.

The inspired manual for parenthood continues in Deuteronomy 6 with the following instructions: “Talk of them [the commandments] when you sit in your house” (Dt 6:7). In the field of secular education, “home schooling” has become a worldwide environment where millions of children are taught by parents outside the public school environment. For centuries, the home has always been the primary classroom for successful education of children in the word of God. In fact, when parents started giving their children over exclusively to the Bible class teacher, the education of children in the word of God diminished. Deuteronomy 6:7 emphasizes the home as the primary environment in which children are to be taught the word of God. The primary teachers are the parents. The Bible class at the local assembly of the saints must always be in second place as the Bible school house.

The best environment in which children can be instructed in the word of God is when the family is together in the home. The problem that is facing many Christian homes today is that Christian parents have delegated all teaching of the Bible to their children to those who are outside their own homes. The instructions in the statement of Deuteronomy 6:7 means that parents have the responsibility of teaching the Bible to their children in the home. Parents are the designated teachers. Other teachers outside the home are only blessings who should support the teaching of the parents in the home.

We live in an era where every sort of entertainment has been invented in the assemblies of churches. If one would ask the parents of these assemblies why some have gone to such extreme systems of entertainment, they would unanimously state that they wanted to “save their children.” Most of these parents have failed to follow the instructions of Deuteronomy 6:7. Most have often failed to have daily Bible study in their homes from the time their children were small children, and thus, they have turned to “saving their children” through some concert assembly outside the home. They fail to understand that the necessity for the “entertainment assembly” is the last resort to keep their children because they have failed to teach their children in their homes.

It is the responsibility of the Christian home to impart Bible knowledge to the next generation of citizens of every society. It is advantageous to have public Bible classes outside the home, Bible schools and Vacation Bible Schools. But if there is no Bible teaching in the home, then the success of public Bible teaching of the children will always be limited.

Albert Taylor once said, “One percent of the child’s time is spent under the influence of the Sunday School; 7% under the influence of the public school; 92% under the influence of the home.” Now who would have the greater influence over the children in the matter of influence and teaching?

The Christian’s home must be the primary school environment for the children. And in this school, the word of God must be the primary textbook. It must be this way from the time the children can listen to their parents reading the word of God to themselves, to the time the children eventually leave the home to start another home Bible school in their own home.

C. Teach the word when you walk.

God continued His instructions in Deuteronomy 6 with the following: “Talk of them [the commandments] ... when you walk by the way” (Dt 6:7). Not only is Bible teaching to take place in the home, it must also to be a characteristic of the parents’ interaction with their children when they are outside the home. Moses’ mandate is that the parents spend time with their children in and out of the house when they are instructing their children in the word of God.

The instructions of Deuteronomy were written to the people of a farming culture. When the parents were in the field with their children by their side, there was to be Bible instruction. Unfortunately, modern families in urban environments have moved into a more challenging schedule in reference to parent/child relationships outside the home. A frustrated parent once said, “Most homes nowadays seem to be on three shifts. Father is on the night shift; mother is on the day shift, and the children shift for themselves.” Nevertheless, the instructions of Deuteronomy encourage parents to focus on their children in Bible teaching regardless of where the children are.

Since many live in the modern urban world, and not a rural farming culture, then it takes special efforts on the part of parents to fulfill the mandate that parents teach their children as they “walk by the way.” It takes planning for parents to be with their children outside the home in a manner where the word of God can be taught. Parents should plan work days together, vacations together, sports together, and any activities that will allow them to live an example of Bible teaching, as well as speaking the word of God to their children. At times the parents need to plan travel or outings together when it is only the father, mother and children as a family unit. This means that a family must be by themselves without the influence of others. This also means that each parent should plan to have personal one-on-one time with each child of the family. When parents develop a means by which they can walk with their children along the way with a Bible in hand, then they are on their way to preserving a spiritual heritage for their grandchildren.

D. Teach the word of God at night.

Moses continued that the parents talk with their children about the word of God when they lie down at night (Dt 6:7). This means nightly reflection on the word of God and prayer. Timothy was blessed with a godly grandmother (Lois) and mother (Eunice) (2 Tm 1:5). These two people passed on to Timothy a genuine faith that carried him throughout his life. The implanting of this genuine faith in his heart started when he was a child. Paul wrote, “... and that from a child you have known the Holy Scriptures ...” (2 Tm 3:15). From childhood Timothy had been instructed in the word of God. We assume, therefore, that there was evening Bible teaching in the house of Eunice when Timothy was old enough to understand the Scriptures.

Night time is a precious time for Bible study. It is a time when the day is over and the family is in the quiet solitude of the home. It is a time when the last impressions of the word of God can be implanted on young minds as they slumber off into quiet sleep. Bible reading, Bible stories, spiritual songs, and a host of other Bible related activities can be experienced in the quietness of the evening as children find rest in sleep. The Bible is a source of sweet dreams. Evening Bible teaching is a time of joy and reverence when the word of God becomes the center of attraction for the last awakened moments of the day.

We will always remember the family in the nation of Uganda with whom we stayed many years ago. This family was isolated in the country. There was no electricity, no batteries for radios, and thus, no radios. No TV, no cellphones, no internet, etc. There was no newspaper and no books in school for children. We asked the family with whom we stayed what they did at night when they came in from working in the fields. The father replied, “We have about two hours of spiritual singing, reading the Bible by candle light when we have a candle, and telling Bible stories.” We might think this odd, but keep in mind that this was the way the world lived for thousands of years before people were “blessed” (or, cursed) with modern means of communication, or distractions. This was the way it was until the home became a place to go in order to get ready to go somewhere else. People actually sat down and looked at one another when they communicated, without some electronic communication device in their hands.

Some poetical parent surely wrote the following in reference to parenthood:

Before your child comes to seven,
Teach him well the way to heaven.
Better still the truth will thrive,
If he knows it when he is five.
Best of all, if at your knee,
He learns it when he is three.

E. Teach the Bible in the mornings.

Deuteronomy 6 exhorts parents to teach their children the commandments of God “when you rise up” (Dt 6:7). The morning is a precious time for Bible reading as children sit and eat their breakfast. Parents who start the day with their children around a feast of the word of God are giving them spiritual nutrition for the remainder of the day. Before the family launches into a world of unbelievers, the morning is a time to remind the children that their house stands for God. It is a time to remind the children of the stand that Joshua proclaimed before the nation of Israel.

And if it seems evil to you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom you will serve, whether the gods that your fathers served on the other side of the River, or the gods of the Amorites in which land you dwell. But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord (Ja 24:15).

F. Teach the word as a way of life.

In reference to the commandments of God, Moses mandated, “And you will bind them for a sign on your hand, and they will be as frontlets between your eyes. And you will write them on the doorposts of your house and on your gates” (Dt 6:8,9).

The phrase, “God Bless This House,” has been committed to countless designs and signs. It is a statement that reminds everyone who steps foot in one’s house that the house is a place where God is and His word is studied. The blessed house is one where everyone who resides is reminded that a stand has been taken for God.

The word of God must always be before our eyes. It must be written on our doorposts so that everyone approaching our house will know that our house is dedicated to God. We must never forget that the devil makes good friends of parents in order to reach their children. Therefore, if we seek to rear up our children in the way that they should go when they leave the home, then we need to make sure that we are going in the direction we would have our children go. The Christian home is a launching pad from which godly people are launched into society. If we are disgusted with what we see in society, then we must remember that what we experience in society is the result of dysfunctional citizens that were produced in the home.

Many years ago on a Kansas farm, our mother always instructed us to be prepared in the home just in case Jesus showed up. She would say that we should always suppose that Jesus was coming to our house to spend a couple days, or maybe just come over and watch the ball game on TV. If He were going to spend the night, she stated that we would most assuredly give Him the best room in the house to sleep. And if He were to sleep in our bedroom, she asked what posters we would tear down from our bedroom walls.

Upon His appearing at our front door, we would probably disguise our apprehension about having Him in our home by reassuring Him that we were happy to have Him in our company. When we first saw Him coming up to our door, we would probably rush around, possibly clearing some nasty magazines from the table, maybe hiding the beer and whisky. Would we hurriedly search for the Bible, dusting it off, and placing it in the middle of the coffee table in the front room? If we had time, we might even change our clothes into something morally descent. And then we would probably extract from the cassette player our worldly songs and put in the song, “Amazing Grace.”

Our mother’s point was that if Jesus were to come to our house to spend a couple days, would our life carry on as usual, or would we make some serious changes? Would we change our speech? If our house is dedicated to the Lord, then there should be no change if Jesus came to visit us. The challenge of being a disciple of Jesus means that we conduct the affairs of our house in a manner that there should be no change of affairs in our lives if Jesus were to knock at our door.

Leo Tolstoy once said, “All happy families are alike, but each unhappy family is unhappy in its own way.” Bringing up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord is a difficult task, especially in these times when sin is so commonly accepted as a way of life (Pv 22:6). Teaching children to honor their father and mother takes a great deal of nurturing (See Ex 20:17). Teaching children to be receptive to the instructions of the Lord takes a life of parental example and teaching (See Pv 1:8). And teaching children to be obedient unto the Lord demands a strong committed example of Christian living on the part of the parents (See Ep 6:1-3). And sometimes it is still as Don Marquis said, “I would rather start a family than finish one.”

Chapter 8

GOD’S INSTRUCTIONS FOR CHILDREN

When we were in our early teens, and decided to get serious about knowing the word of God, we were advised to start reading the book of Proverbs. The advice was relevant to our needs in our youth. Proverbs is still one of the most favored Bible books for the guidance of young people.

The American writer and preacher, Alexander Campbell, once made a trip to Ireland and England in the middle nineteenth century. The promise of his eight-year-old son was that he would quote to his father the book of Proverbs upon his return. Tragically, the eight-year-old son died in a drowning accident before Alexander's return. Nevertheless, at the time of his death, the son was ready to fulfill his promise to his father.

The book of Proverbs is filled with exhortations for young people. Throughout the Bible, there are many directives to help young people find their way in a world that offers so many distractions from the right ways of God. The book of Proverbs is unique in that it was written by one, Solomon, who had so many material distractions in his own life. We would thus encourage all young people to meditate their way through the book. They should do so in order to find their way through a modern world of endless material distractions.

Before we launch into some of the more important concepts for youth in Proverbs, and in general the entire Bible, Solomon offered an admonition to all young people:

*Rejoice, O young man, in your youth. And let your heart cheer you in the days of your youth, and walk in the ways of your heart and in the sight of your eyes. But know that God will bring you to judgment for all these things (Ec 11:9).

Young people must not forget to study the Bible in reference to finding guidance in their youth. They must be motivated to do such in view of the fact that they will give account of their behavior before God. If a young person is tempted to walk contrary to the will of God, then he should remember that he will eventually stand before God in judgment. Young people must remember, therefore, to “put away evil from your flesh, for childhood and youth are vanity” (Ec 11:10). The only guarantee for young people to keep their lives focused on God is that they give heed to Solomon's final exhortation: “Remember your Creator in the days of your youth, before the evil days come and the years draw near when you will say, ‘I have no pleasure in them’” (Ec 12:1).

Paul was direct in his admonition of young people in reference to their relationship with their parents:

Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. ‘Honor your father and mother’—which is the first commandment with promise—” so that it may be well with you and you may live long on the earth” (Ep 6:1-3).

With this admonition directing the focus of their lives, the following are some Spirit-inspired instructions for young people to keep their minds focused on God:

- Proverbs 1:8: “My son, hear the instruction of your father and do not forsake the law of your mother.” One of the purposes of the family is to produce obedient citizens for society. Only when the children adhere to the instructions of the parents, can this purpose be fulfilled. God's ordained objective for parents, therefore, is to equip their children with behavioral skills that will enable them to function for the benefit of society. The primary textbook to source these skills must be the word of God, for only God has given the final word that will guarantee a society wherein every citizen loves his neighbor as himself. Solomon warned, “Cease listening, my son, to instruction and you will stray from the words of knowledge” (Pv 19:27).

- Proverbs 6:20: “My son, keep your father's commandment and do not forsake the law of your mother.” In the preceding mandate of Proverbs 1:8, the emphasis was on the children hearing the instruction of their parents. In this statement, emphasis is on the children continuing in the parent's instructions throughout their lives (Pv 22:6). Children must not only listen to their parents in the home, they must also walk in the instructions of what they hear from their parents. It is worth noting that when Paul wrote, “in the last days perilous times will come,” he mentioned that those days, among other things, would be a time when children were disobedient to parents (2 Tm 3:1,2). Disobedience to parents is a sign of a society that has moved into a state of anarchy. Anarchy prevails when citizens rebel against the laws (instructions) of civil order. For this reason, children must learn respect for authority (law) in the home, before they move into society. Civil unrest, therefore, is often the evidence of failed homes.

- Exodus 20:12: “Honor your father and your mother ....” A civil society begins in the home. Children honor their father and mother through their obedience. They then carry this honor for authority in the home into the society when they leave the home.

The responsibility of the children to maintain the home is their obedience to their parents. Through their obedience to their parents they are preparing themselves for life. A disobedient child not only breaks down the function of his family, but he is also preparing in his behavior to break down of civil order when he leaves home. It is not surprising, therefore, that Jesus quoted Exodus 20:12 of the Sinai law during His ministry to restore the Jews to the life-style that should be governed by the law of God (See Mt 15:4; 19:19).

When we witness civil disorder in society, we are witnessing the result of citizens who have graduated out of homes where children were not taught to respect their parents. Undisciplined children in the home will always lead to undisciplined citizens in society. When parents allow their children to show disrespect in the home, they are handing over to the police a dysfunctional citizen whom they must now discipline.

- Exodus 21:15: “And he who strikes his father or his mother, will surely be put to death” (Ex 21:12-17). The respectful relationship that children are to have toward their parents was clearly stated in this law for the Jews. Capital punishment was due to any child who would lay a hand on a parent simply because an undisciplined child in the home would lead to the destruction of society as a whole. It was best that the anarchist be stopped in the home before he or she brought ruin to society as a whole. In 1971, President Bokassa of the Central African Republic, celebrated one Mother’s Day by executing all prisoners in the state prison who had committed some crime against their mothers.

- Exodus 21:17: “And he who curses his father or his mother, will surely be put to death” (Lv 20:9). In the Jewish society, capital punishment was to be meted out on those children who even verbally showed disrespect to their parents. The reason for this was that any society will disintegrate into anarchy when children begin showing disrespect for their parents. When there is no respect for parents in the home, there will be no respect for civil authority in the streets. The next stage of this social digression into anarchy is when citizens start blaming civil authority for any efforts to bring disobedient children, who have left the home, under the control of civil law. A society that must have a strong police force to maintain law and order is a society where respect for law and order was not demanded in the home. Before one would argue with this truth, he must remember that Israel had no police force outside the home. The Jewish home produced citizens who respected the law of God.

- Proverbs 19:26: “He who mistreats his father and chases away his mother, is a son who causes shame and brings reproach.” The disrespectful child brings reproach and shame on his parents because of his lack of respect for his parents. Rebellious children are a shame to the family. Young people manifest respect for their parents when they leave the home by continuing in their obedience of what was taught by their parents in the home.

Children must understand that their rebellion in the home brings shame upon the name of their parents. And in bringing shame upon the name of their parents, they must remember that they will live with the same name upon which they brought shame in their youth. The disrespectful child will always live with the guilt of his disrespect until the day he dies. The rebellious child in his or her youth should remember that he or she is creating unpleasant memories of their childhood with which they will have to live the rest of their lives.

Regardless of the forgiveness of their parents, one will still remember the rebellion of his or her youth. The apostle Paul never forgot that he persecuted the family of God (1 Tm 1:13). However, he found solace in the grace of God. And so must rebellious children when they eventually wander out of the wilderness of sin.

- Proverbs 23:24,25: “The father of the righteous will greatly rejoice, and he who begets a wise child will have joy in him. Your father and your mother will be glad, and she who bore you will rejoice.” Children make their parents proud when they follow in the righteous instructions that were delivered to them by their parents. When they are old, children must remember that they will live with the guilt of their own disobedience toward their parents in their youth. For this reason, the wise child will seek to follow the instructions of his or her parents in order to bring joy to their hearts. A righteous son or daughter always makes his or her father and mother proud.

In contrast to disrespectful youth, we can only imagine how much joy filled the heart of Timothy’s mother, Eunice, because he continued in the genuine faith throughout his life that she had taught him from his youth (2 Tm 1:5). The inheritance of a genuine faith that Eunice passed on to her son was far more precious than any financial stocks and bonds that he may have inherited. Because he focused on faith in his youth, he could always remember spiritually obedient times with his mother who gave him a precious spiritual inheritance. When he left the home, Timothy had no guilt with which to deal in reference to his childhood.

- Proverbs 15:20: “A wise son makes a glad father, but a foolish man despises his mother.” The wise son is the one who has continued in the instructions of his father. This is the son of whom his father is proud. If one does not continue in the instructions of his parents, it is the same as despising the parents when he is on his own. Children who have left the home bring honor to their parents by continuing in the godly life about which they were instructed as children in the home. When children rebel against the godly instruction of their parents, they are living a life that despises their parents. A life that is contrary to the godly instruction of one’s parents is a life that brings despite upon one’s mother.

- Proverbs 10:1: “A wise son makes a glad father, but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.” A wise son is defined as one who continues in the instructions of his father. He is wise because he listens to his father. Solomon’s definition of wisdom in the context of the preceding statement is when one listens to the instructions of one’s parents.

The son who rebels against the godly instruction of his father brings grief to the heart of his mother. A godly mother will have a heavy heart in reference to a wayward child until the time of her death. A wayward child who does not perceive this, is selfish, disrespectful and unconcerned about the emotional well-being of his mother. The child's wayward life after leaving the home reveals his rebellion against the teaching of his father. His rebellion always affects his reaction to correction when he encounters in life opportunities to repent.

- Proverbs 28:14: “He who robs his father or his mother, and says, ‘It is no transgression,’ the same is a companion of a destroyer.” The skill of loving one's neighbor as himself begins in the home. A thief does not love his neighbor as himself. Theft, therefore, is always wrong because it is behavior that is contrary to the principle that one love his neighbor as himself. Simply because one takes something from a parent through theft still means that one is a thief. When theft is uncorrected in the home, a thief is turned loose on society.

Theft from a parent reveals disrespect for the parent in the home. It reveals disrespect for one's neighbor in society. If one believes that theft from a parent is not wrong, then he cannot have a civil relationship with his neighbor in society. Thievery becomes a culture. It is often learned in the home when children steal from their parents. They learn the culture of thievery in the home, and then, simply maintain the same behavior when they leave the home.

- 2 Timothy 3:15: “... and that from a child you [Timothy] have known the Holy Scriptures that are able to make you wise unto salvation through faith that is in Christ Jesus” (See Dt 6:1-9). One of the primary functions of parents is to teach their children the word of God. If they fail in this function as parents, then the children will learn their behavioral morals from the world. And the world has always been a good teacher in teaching bad moral conduct.

Society digresses into moral chaos when the citizens are left to determine their own standards by which the citizens will morally relate to one another. Parents must never forget that “it is not in man who walks to direct his steps” (Jr 10:23). Since this is true, then it is imperative that parents instruct their children in the ways of God in order that their children have a God-ordained standard by which to make their journey through life. The atmosphere of the home must always be as some poet wrote:

How God must love a Christian home,
Where faith and love attest,
That every moment every hour,
He is the honored Guest!

- Titus 3:4,5: “The older women likewise are to be reverent ... so that they may encourage the young women to love their husbands, to love their children, to be discreet, pure, workers at home, good, subject to their own husbands so that the word of God not be blasphemed.” Herein is revealed the relationship that must exist between older and younger women. At least the mother in the home should be teaching their daughters the principles of this verse. The heritage that mothers are to leave with their children is a genuine faith of life skills that will continue the godliness of the mother.

The wife of Isaac Goose, Mary, was born in Charleston, Massachusetts. She became well-known because of what she did for her children. Unfortunately, Mr. Goose died after Mrs. Goose had given birth to several children. She was left with the responsibility of teaching alone her children the principles of life that would guide them throughout their lives. So she wrote and sang to her children many nursery rhymes in order to entertain her children with moral principles. The rhymes, which were written in the seventeenth century, were eventually published by the son-in-law as the rhymes of Old Mother Goose. (Mrs. Goose died at the old age of 92 and is buried in the Granary Burial Ground, Boston, Massachusetts.)

If parents do not instruct their children in the word of God, then they are allowing their children to seek another teacher. In these modern times, this teacher is usually the public school, wherein is taught secular humanism. The product of such teaching is a world view that we are the product of evolution. This is a world view that is based on humanity being the result of an amoral process of evolution that is entirely different from the world view that is defined in the word of God.

We live with the consequences of societies that have given up on the word of God as the moral basis of our moral relationship in society. Many societies today are thus suffering the same as Israel of old when she gave up the word of God (See Hs 4:6).

It is incumbent on Christian parents to take spiritual ownership of their homes. Ownership is more than a deed to property. It is ownership of the spiritual future of their children. This is the inheritance they must pass on to their children.

Book 70

Living The Word Of God

(Inscriptions I)

Each chapter of this book was written as an independent concept that covers a specific subject. This material originally appeared under the heading of Inscriptions when it was first published as editorial installments on our Facebook Page (Africa International), and on our blog website (www.blog.africainternational.org). They were written as editorials concerning theological discussions and events that were relevant at the time of writing.

There is no particular order by which the chapters are arranged. Though we have sought to organize together some of the Inscriptions that relate to one another, please keep in mind that these are random editorials that were on the author's mind at the time of writing.

The reader should not treat the information of the entire book as an effort to bring the reader to a validated conclusion. Each chapter must stand alone in reference to the particular subject that is covered.

It is the prayer of the author that the reader will glean from the material some concepts that will enhance personal Bible study and teaching. In reference to those Inscriptions that are directed to the social/religious environment of the world today, it is the prayer of the author that his understanding of the Bible as expressed through this material will aid the Bible student in his or her daily teaching and living of the word of God.

The author has sought through the writing of the Inscriptions to challenge readers in reference to the application of biblical truth to the life of a disciple of Jesus. In challenging long-held traditional thought, the Inscriptions were written in order to encourage Bible students to research again those favorite passages of scripture that need to be reexamined.

Chapter 1

GAMBLING WITH FAITH

The atheist and Christian are in a confrontation of faiths concerning origins. Both believe in a beginning, whether launched by a Big Bang, or the whispered word of a Supreme Being. Neither atheist nor Christian was there when it all began, and thus each depends on faith in Whom or what started that which now exists. Both fervently analyze extracted bones, or dig up rocks, in order to seek some solution to the beginning of all things. Regardless of the world view of either, each promotes a faith as to how all things began.

In order to answer the question concerning the present existence of life, the atheist is subject to the theory of evolution, which theory he labors zealously to convince others that it is actually "fact." The Christian, on the other hand, holds to a faith in the power of a Creator, who, sometime in the past, spoke life and the material world into existence. He too is zealous to convince all that his faith in origins must be accepted because his faith too is based on geological, biological, plus Bible "facts" concerning past events

So here we are in a confrontational debate where there is mutual rejection of one another's faith. In reference to beginnings, the atheist rejects the answer of a Creator, and the Christian rejects the answer of materialistic evolution. It is a passionate standoff between dedicated “theologians” or “philosophers” who reject the faith of one another because each contends that his faith is the answer for the existence of that which now exists. Unfortunately, some on both sides of the debate seem to forget that both beliefs concerning origins are a matter of faith, for neither was there when it all began. Each faith concerning origins, therefore, depends on deductive reasoning from what we now presently observe.

So with whose faith would you side? Now consider this: Both the atheist and the Christian will die. If the atheist is correct, then the Christian, when he dies, loses nothing in reference to his faith, which in the end, was false. There really was no God. Nevertheless, because of his faith, he lived as if he would give account of his behavior before an eternal Judge. He lived a good life. He helped others. He lived morally the best he could because of his belief that he would eventually be held accountable for his behavior.

On the other hand, the atheist, when he dies, sits with a tremendous gamble if the Christian is right. The atheist lived according to the mandates of human laws, and his desire to do good to his fellow man. He sought to be a good citizen only because of the motivation that a peaceful and orderly society is best for humankind. But if the Christian is right, The atheist misses out on everything!

Now the question is with whose faith is one willing to gamble? For us, we would rather live with the Christian’s faith, with the hope of being right, than with the faith of the atheist, with the possibility of being wrong.

Chapter 2

THE MAN IN THE MOON

As children, we were told about the “man in the moon.” So at night, we gazed intently at the moon in order to see this man. But he was not there. He was only the imagination of some creative mind.

Some never grow out of their childish desire to imagine God after their own physical and emotional image. The psalmist wrote, “The Lord’s throne is in heaven. His EYES behold. His eyelids test the children of men” (Ps 11:4). And thus the childish adult concludes that God has literal eyes and eyelids.

In missing the metaphor of such statements in the Bible, our spirit of idolatry moves us to create a god after our own physical image. In our yearning to conceive of a god with whom we can identify, we bring God down to the definition of our earthly terms. Some even go so far as to carve an image of their imagined god in a stone or piece of wood. In all our child’s play to create a god with whom we can better identify, we forget that God is spirit, and the definition of “spirit” is that there is no physical form (Jn 4:24).

Our efforts to create a god after our own image result in a very unfortunate conclusion. If the God of heaven were no greater than the appearance of a physical man, then there could never have been an incarnation of the Son of God into the flesh of man. Statements in the Bible as John 1:14 would simply be theological contradictions: “And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us.” If the Word were already flesh—some supposedly conclude that Moses saw some fleshly hinder parts of their fleshly god—then there could never have been an incarnation of God who “was made flesh.” If the Son of God were already flesh, then His incarnation would have been only a parallel transfer from some heavenly location in the galaxies to this planet.

Our spirit of idolatry urges us to move even beyond the creation of a being who conforms to our physical image. We seek to create a god in our minds who is no greater than our own emotionality. It is true that “he who does not love does not know God, for God is love” (1 Jn 4:8). But we must not confine the extent of God’s love to the limits of our own capacity to love. Human loving is only a beginning to understand the God of love. We must remember that when our love toward our fellow man has reached its limit, God’s love continues without limits. It must. Upon repentance, the most vile person can still be brought into the loving “arms” of God. God’s love could have extended to Hitler if only Hitler would have truly repented of all his wickedness. If we believe that God’s love could never have extended to such lengths, then we have limited the love of God to our idol god who is no greater than our own capacity to love.

We thus use the English word “incomprehensible” when speaking of the God of the Bible. We do so because there are no words in any dictionary of man that fully define God’s existence, being and character. We catch a glimpse of His love through His loving behavior as it was demonstrated through the sacrificial offering of the incarnate body of the Son of God on the cross of Calvary. This “incomprehensible” act of love is recorded in the pages of the Bible, but with the limitation of the words of our dictionary. If we throw away the Bible—as many do in their failure to study the Bible—then we would be driven to create a god after our own image and according to our own limited love. (Idol gods are always humanly defined gods.) People who do not know the Bible, therefore, can never know the loving God of the Bible. Without the recorded message of the incarnation and cross, we are doomed to limit God’s boundless love to the boundaries of our own limited love. In our ignorance of the Bible, we become idolaters, worshipping a god whom we have sculptured according to the limitations of our own limited reasoning.

We believe in a loving God who is beyond the words of our dictionary. We so believe because it is only reasonable to believe that God, the true God, is far beyond what we can comprehend. If He is not, then He is no god at all. He would only be the figment of our imagination.

Chapter 3

NO LOVE WITHOUT LAW

The Bible records the words of Jesus concerning the most important commandment (law) of all commandments: “You will love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind” (Mt 22:37). And the Holy Spirit defined this loving of God in the statement, “This is the love of God, that we keep His commandments [laws]” (1 Jn 5:3). There is no loving of God unless one obeys the laws of God.

Now apply this definition to what Jesus said was the second greatest law: “You will love your neighbor as yourself” (Mt 22:39). Loving one’s neighbor as himself is to obey law in reference to one’s relationship with his neighbor. Civil government is ordained by God to establish law in order that there be order among the citizens of society. “Therefore, whoever resists authority [of the government], resists the ordinance of God. And those who resist will receive judgment on themselves” (Rm 13:2).

The problem with addiction to drugs is that the addiction works against the second greatest law among the citizens of a nation. Government laws against substance abuse are established for the purpose of maintaining civil order among the citizens of a country. Drug abuse is almost always the problem of those citizens who have no financial basis by which they can support their addiction. The addicted, therefore, must resort to stealing from their fellow citizens.

Crime rates soar in those communities where drug addiction prevails. The drug addicted citizen cannot maintain any love for his neighbor when he persists in stealing from his neighbor in order to continue his selfish addiction. He does not love himself, for he is destroying his body. And in his self-destruction, he does not love his neighbor, for he or she must steal in order to continue the addiction. It is for this reason, therefore, that there can be no law and order in a drug addicted society.

If a government for and by the people would maintain law and order in a society where substance abuse is running rampant, then it has no option but to crack down on drug users. The citizenry, therefore, must make a decision. Either they as a government for themselves be lenient with substance abuse and theft, or will they rise up against all forms of drug abuse and its consequences?

Civil societies take a stand against those who behave in a manner by which society is destroyed. It is for this reason that a society that is infested with substance abuse must rise up against those who would destroy the fabric of a civilized society.

Chapter 4

ISLAM . . . AND THE REST OF US

When discussing the subject of Islam, the “rest of us” is everyone but a Muslim. The Hindu, the Shinto, the Buddhist, and even the Christian, are included in the “rest of us.” The political Muslim seeks to make this clear so there will be no confusion concerning the teaching of the Quran and the implementation in society of its “constitution” (sharia law).

We would like to think that all faiths (religions) are somewhat the same in reference to morals. In some areas this is true in reference to most basic morals. But this is not true in reference to the totality of the teaching of any particular faith, especially political Islam. For this reason, the political Muslim strives to help the “rest of us” understand the very nature of true Islam. The personal struggle of some Muslims to modernize Islam in order that they conform to being citizens with the “rest of us” in secular governments is somewhat difficult. Maybe the following will help the “rest of us” better understand the dilemma of the Muslim, and in particular the political Islamist:

- In theology and practice, Islam encompasses the totality of the human experience. According to the Quran, there is no such thing as a separation between religion and state. For the Christian, the existence of a secular state is necessary, for in this separation, state never takes control of religion, and vice versa. When the Holy Spirit said to every Christian, “be subject to the governing authorities” (Rm 13:1), we understand that there is a difference between the state (“governing authorities”) and faith (religion). When the Holy Spirit explained that the “governing authority” (state) was given the “sword” by God in order to prevent anarchy (Rm 13:4), Christians get the point. Being separate from the “governing authorities,” Christians do not have the authority of the “sword” to enforce their faith on others. But with the political Muslim, there is no separation between religion and state. And for this reason, political Muslims will perpetually be resistant to the existence of a secular state in which they would reside as citizens along with the “rest of us.”
- In the beginning of Islam, the Prophet Muhammad was initially a war lord. In order to accomplish his “secular” ambitions in the Middle East in the early part of the seventh century, he mustered his adherents together both politically and theologically. Unlike Jesus Christ, Muhammad led a military conquest to acquire territory by preaching to his followers both his theology and political ambitions. He built a new state by capturing and holding a particular territory of land, making Mecca in Saudi Arabia the capital. In order to accomplish his political end, therefore, there could be no separation between the faith of the followers and his political ambitions. Thus state functioned through the implementation of sharia law (“civil law”). For the political Muslim, therefore, sharia law must always exist in contrast to the governance of any people through secular (nonreligious) constitutional law. For the political Muslim, state and religion are one.
- For Christians, Jesus was the Word who was revealed as God’s message (gospel) to man. As the bearer of the message (the good news of the Word), the Son of God was incarnate into the flesh of man (Jn 1:14). Eventually, the message of the gospel (good news) was recorded in words of men (Matthew, Mark, Luke, John) in order that the message not be lost or distorted throughout history (See 1 Co 15:1-4). But for the political Muslim, the very Arabic words of the Quran are the direct and literal communication of Allah to man. It is this communication, this written word, that is sacred. And since it is believed that this “incarnation” of Allah in the words of men came directly to Muhammad in Arabic, then the distribution of the true word can only be in Arabic. For the Christian, translations of the Bible can never change the message of the gospel. But for the Muslim, translations of the Quran into other languages are always questionable, for the “true word” can never be exact in a translation. For Muslims, therefore, the text of the Quran in Arabic can never be dismissed, and must always be idolized as the “incarnation” of Allah.

Now here is the challenge for the political Muslim: Political Muslims can never settle for residence in a secular state wherein is guaranteed the freedom of all the religions of the “rest of us.” As a state religion, Islam is the religion that establishes the constitution of the state, and thus, must govern the function of all other religions in a politically controlled Islamic state. And unless Islam becomes the sole politic of the state, forming its policies and determining the judgment of its courts (sharia law), then the political Muslim can never feel comfortable as a citizen with the “rest of us” in a secular state. Political Muslims, therefore, find it difficult to assimilate into the culture and society of a secular state. Their very existence as Muslims makes it difficult for them to accept the fact that they must simply join the “rest of us” in allowing a democratic government of elected authorities to maintain the sword of the state through constitutional laws.

Those Muslims who have modernized in a secular state, therefore, are not considered true Muslims by those political Muslims who are citizens of a supposedly true Islamic state. In fact, political Muslims who are seeking to follow the Quran in its literal application, seek to make the modernized Muslims, who are living comfortably in a modern secular state, feel guilty about their modernized life-style. This is why some modernized Muslims in a secular state can be “radicalized” by a recruiting political Muslim who seeks to restore the life-style of a society that is trapped in poverty in the mountains of Afghanistan or the deserts of the Middle East. If one is made to feel guilty enough about going to a shopping center and fulfilling the material desires of the flesh, while his “brother” suffers in a struggle to survive in a hostile environment in the Middle East, then eventually he will take out his frustration on those who encourage him to indulge in fulfilling the desires of the flesh in a secular state.

If those of a secular state demand that a Muslim must assimilate into the culture and politics of a secular state, then we must understand that the modernized Muslim, with great struggle, must remove sharia law (his civil constitution) from this faith. If in a secular state a Muslim stands up and brandishes the constitution of the secular state in which he lives, giving allegiance to it, then you can understand that with great sacrifice he has compromised a great deal of the authority of his faith (the Quran) by conforming to the demands of a secular state. As a part of the “rest of us” we would commend this commitment, but we also understand that those Muslims who seek to modernize with the rest of the world in order to maintain peace, are doing so with great sacrifice of some of the mandates (sharia law) of the Quran. And they are doing so by separating themselves from political Muslims who claim to have established again a true Islamic State.

We thus indeed commend those modernized Muslims in their efforts to convince the “rest of us” that they too do not want to go back into a “dark age” socioeconomic environment where there are no hospitals and modern medicine for their children when they are sick and nigh unto death. If the “rest of us” can understand this struggle of the modernized Muslim, then we can exercise a little more support, and less suspicion. They too want to live in a state where secular civil law guarantees the right of all citizens to discuss their religious beliefs in an environment where there is no fear of physical reprisals.

---

Research:

Book 56: The World As It Is, Chapters 8-15

Chapter 5

THEATRICAL RELIGION

Have you heard of the spectacle of religious showmanship that has been circulated throughout the world on the Internet? It seems that there was this bizarre religious reality show sometime in the past where several preachers climbed upon an altar and started jumping up and down on a sacrificed animal like a troop of drunken monkeys on steroids. They were screaming at the top of their voices, which screaming eventually made their voices so hoarse that they could no longer speak. They then resorted to cutting themselves with knives in order to excite an entranced audience of onlookers. The preachers were so intense in their outlandish performance that blood gushed from their severed veins and was strewn on the audience, many of whom were likewise stirred into a hypnotic frenzy of uncontrollable emotionality. It was a display of religious nonsense. Some in the audience were moved to uncontrollable rolling on the ground. Some were crying out at the top of their voices. Others just fell to the ground as stunned mummies because of what they saw in the behavior of the preachers. They laid there emotionally paralyzed in the exhaustion of a semiconscious stupor. We are sure you did not miss this hysterical display of reality religiosity that has gone viral throughout the world.

If you looked closely at this theatrical picture of a religious extravaganza—maybe somewhat embellished by our imagination of the account—you could notice that there was this one preacher seated off to the side by himself from the enraptured crowd. He was calmly watching the outrageous behavior of the entire spectacle. He was unmoved by all the horrific experiential display of humans who were emotionality out of control in their fit of hysteria. After observing this psychotic and misguided religiosity for some time, do you know what he did? He mocked the theatrical preachers. He mocked them by chiding that they appeal more intensely to their god that they had created after their own imagination: “Cry aloud,” he mockingly chided, “for he is a god. Either he is meditating or he is busy or he is on a journey. Perhaps he is sleeping and must be awakened.”

We are sure you have read the account of this theatrical spectacle. If not, then you can download from the Internet the Bible book of 1 Kings that gives a historical account in chapter 18 of this bizarre event. It is interesting that this event has been circulated on the Internet for years, but it is seldom read by those who seek to lose themselves in their own ignorance of the word of God.

1 Kings 18 is an ancient record that reveals how long experiential religion has been with us. Theatrical religiosity is an obsession of misguided religionists who believe that their release from their struggles in life is a Sunday morning outburst of emotional hysteria. It is an obsessive behavior that we seek to move into our religion by justifying our biblical ignorance with the plagiarized word “worship” from the Bible. In our efforts to validate the being and behavior of a god we have created after our own experiences, we imagine a god in our minds whom we have subjected to sitting and listening to our obnoxious theatrical performances.

We thus create this idol god whom we would narcissistically worship, and whom we suppose would accept as worship our religious theatrics. We produce the most exotic and spiritually toxic assembly by which we reassure ourselves that such experiential events must exist every Sunday morning when we seek to “awaken our idol god from his sleep,” or call him back in our minds from a “journey” on which he may have gone. The more noise we can amplify, and the more rabid our emotionality can become, the more we dupe ourselves into believing that our hysterical extravaganza will call him up from the quietness of his sleep in order to give attention to our worshipful chaos. So we combine the deafening noise of a rock concert, plus the preachers’ rhythmic cheerleading cries, and then suppose that we have awakened our god out of his sleep in order to administer a spiritual placebo that will carry us through to the next Sunday extravaganza. It will be then that we will again proceed through the same theatrical ritual of jumping up and down on a vainly offered sacrifice while severing our emotional veins with unspiritual knives.

So you think we are being somewhat critical? You think we are mocking when we chide these theatrical religionists with the words, “Cry aloud, for you suppose he is a god! Maybe your god is asleep! Maybe he is on a journey!”? You are exactly right. We stand with Elijah, the prophet of God, the preacher who mocked the 450 Baal preachers in 1 Kings 18 who had lost their dignity before an audience of people whom they had led into the captivity of uncontrolled religious hysterics. These preachers had sacrificed the word of God for an experience of religious theatrics by which they thought they could conjure up the dead god they had created in their own minds. They presumed that their emotional hysteria on the stage of the altar would lead the people to believe in the nonsense of their misguided religiosity that was void of any knowledge of the Bible. The biblical record of this theatrical spectacle proves that nothing has changed among some religionists since the day Elijah challenged the Baal prophets on Mount Carmel almost three thousand years ago.

---

Research:

Book 44, Experiential Religion vs Word-Based Faith

Chapter 6

EXPERIENTIAL RELIGION

Not long ago we were lounging in the humble house of one who was an “ex-preacher” of a particular urban church. There too, and across the room, was the brother-in-law who was the ex-band leader of the same group. These two men told us a very intriguing and relevant story that could be repeated many times over throughout Christendom today.

In the hands of our aged preacher friend was an old dilapidated and cherished Bible that was inscribed with laborious marginal notes that evidenced many faithful years of diligent Bible study. His brother-in-law likewise clutched his Sacred Volume that also revealed the same evidence of a sincere love of God’s word. These two “exes” revealed to us a misguided journey in their ministry where they confessed that they in the past made a wrong turn in their leadership of those whom they led spiritually.

As church leaders in the changing times of the postmodern urban church in which they ministered, they explained that the young people started leaving “their church.” The youth were going over to neighboring altars where prophets and bands were theatrically entertaining on stages with ear-piercing concerts and performances that led the people into a rapturous hysteria that would equal that of the Ephesian temple of Diana (At 19:28,29,32).

Our two discouraged hosts explained that the experiential younger generation of “their church” had become bored with Bible preaching and study. With itching ears, they explained, the youth were drawn to the experiential assemblies that neighboring temples offered. The youth were thus leaving what they considered a “boring worship” from which they “got nothing,” and thus, were going out in search of an experiential assembly where their narcissistic personalities could be nourished with the noise of a modern-day religious concert.

When the flight began, the preacher and his brother-in-law explained that they said to themselves, “We will do likewise in order to retain our young people.” So the brother-in-law started a Sunday morning concert that would appease the ears of an experiential generation who sought an outward stimulus to generate an inward response. He and his band friends thus organized and commenced to play their hearts out before a people who had become “bored” with Bible. Their instrumental playing with guitars and drums went from background to foreground as they turned up the amplifier to generate some emotional response from the temple attendees. After the theatrical concert was over, the preacher said that he stood up with his Bible and vigorously preached the word of God.

But then they realized something that puzzled both of them. The young people were still leaving. So they asked the young people what the problem was. The answer shocked the two leaders. “We love the band,” the youth responded, “but we are not so much for the boring Bible sermon that follows.”

Eventually, the preacher who loved his Bible, with his brother-in-law, who loved the same, realized the futility of their efforts to compete in the urban environment of neighboring temple concerts that drew great assemblies of young experiential religionists, but did so without any Bible preaching. But it was too late. Both of our leaders concluded that if this was the experiential road on which many temple religionists desired to continue today, then they must start over. So there they sat together with their wives, families and Bibles in the solitude of their home. It was there that they sought to start again a solemn assembly of worship of the one true and living God, who seeks to be worshiped reverently in spirit with focus on His revealed truth (Jn 4:24).

Not long after the preceding encounter another preacher in our area called, and then related to us the same story over a cup of coffee. “The young people want to come together to jump up and down in experiential praise,” he related, “but they could care less for the preaching of the word of God.” There was frustration in his voice when he said, “I’m fed up with it. I want to start over with a group who truly loves to study and teach the word of God.”

In the present environment of religious experientialism, we are constantly reminded of God’s following statement to His apostate children of Israel:

“My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge. Because you have rejected knowledge [of My word], I will also reject you so that you will be no priest to Me. Seeing you have forgotten the law of your God, I will also forget your children” (Hs 4:6).

The children of the religious experientialists will have truly lost their way because their parents did not nurture them in the word of God. If the parents forsake teaching their children the Bible, then the destiny of the children is that they will be forgotten by God. They will be forgotten by God because their parents did not assume their parental responsibility to bring their children up in the nurture and admonition of the word of God.

---

Research:

Book 44: Experiential Religion vs Word-Based Faith

Chapter 7

NARCISSISTIC RELIGIOSITY VERSUS WORD-BASED FAITH

The problem with experiential religion is that it does not challenge us to change our behavior. It does not because we often validate our faith by our religious experiences. The result is that we live as frustrated disciples who have a difficult time in correcting our behavior according to the instructions of the word of God. When we place our experiences above the word of God, the power of God’s word to transform attitudes and behavior is minimized in our lives. What happens next in this psyche of religiosity is that we are fearful of studying our Bibles lest we discover that our lives are out of tune with the will of God.

The primary problem is that the religious experientialist is depending on experiences to confirm his often narcissistic (self-centered) psyche. He is not looking for direction from the Bible to direct his way, nor instruction on how God seeks to be worshiped on His terms (See Jn 4:24). He is not seeking a God who gives commands and demands obedience. He is trusting in a god who supposedly creates experiences that would validate his self-imposed religiosity. It is for this reason that the experiential religionist argues so vehemently against any suggestion that one should obey the commands of God as conditions for salvation. In reference to salvation, he must sustain a truly “faith only” theology lest he be driven to commandments in the word of God that must be obeyed in order for one to be saved.

In the realm of religious psychology, it would do one well to caution himself about what is the true validation of faith. This is particularly true in a world of religionists who are obsessed with subjective emotional experiences that one uses to validate one's relationship with God. This experiential psyche is often revealed in religious assemblies. For example, if one uses the word "boring" in reference to any assembly where believers come together to worship God, then "the bored" should know that they are probably seeking an experiential assembly that pleases themselves.

Such narcissistic "worship" could not be further from the true worship that Abraham experienced with his family in his wanderings, and David with his sheep in quiet meadows. These heroes of faith did not need or seek a subjective experiential assembly with people in order that they not be "bored" in worship. Can you imagine young David being "bored" in worship in a quiet meadow with his sheep?

When our assemblies must be choreographed in order that the attendees not become bored, then we can be assured of one specific truth: We are focusing on what we want, and thus, we have become immune to what God instructs through His word. In satisfying our experiential desires, we personally push God and His word away in our efforts to create a "worship" that awakens the spiritual deadness of unchanged lives. God's word, therefore, becomes peripheral to our worship, for our faith is validated by our self-imposed subjective experiences we idolize as the validation of our faith. The problem is that the experientialist can walk away from an exciting assembly with unchallenged and unrighteous behavior. He lives in a self-imposed bondage by which he is self-justified by his own subjective experiences.

Those who are legally dead spiritually do the same. Legalists are in bondage to their religious ceremonies. Dead legalism and subjective experientialism have one thing in common: The assembly for both the legalist and the experientialist often allows the adherents to continue with unholy living outside the "hour of worship." When the switch of the "closing prayer" is flipped, both go on their way, having been validated by either a legal ceremony or an experiential performance in the assembly.

The experiential religionist can arrive at the altar on Sunday morning with a drunken hangover, but still feel justified before God if he has an emotionally driven experience in assembly. The legalist does the same in a different way. As long as assembly legalities have been performed, the legalist, who may be living in adultery before the assembly, has justified himself to go home and continue the same adulterous relationship after the assembly. The argument of a husband and wife on their way to the assembly, and before the "opening prayer," continues on their way home after the "closing prayer" concludes the "hour of worship."

The religious experientialist has a particular problem with "double tongued" religiosity. As long as the experientialist can validate a superficial spiritual relationship with the god he has created in his mind, which god he supposes condones an unrighteous life-style, he then feels little motivation to change any unrighteous behavior. This is the spirit of idolatry. The idolater creates a god in his mind who condones his self-centered (narcissistic) religiosity.

However, to the experientialist, the Holy Spirit writes: "He who says, 'I know Him,' and does not keep His commandments, is a liar. And the truth is not in him" (1 Jn 2:4). And to the legalist, the Holy Spirit writes: "But whoever has this world's goods, and sees his brother in need and closes his heart against him, how does the love of God abide in him?" (1 Jn 3:17). The experientialist seeks to be a disciple by minimizing, or being ignorant of the word of God after the "opening prayer" and before the "closing prayer." The legalist seeks to be legally correct in his assemblies while minimizing or ignoring the needs of his brother before the "opening prayer" and after the "closing prayer."

In reference to discipleship, experiential religionists have a particular problem in being led by a false validation of faith. Since the commandments of God are minimized as the foundation of his faith, the experientialist must find something to take the place of his Bible (the commandments of God). He thus substitutes Baal for Bible. The spirit of idolatry takes over. When one believes that subjective experiential worship is the validation of one's faith, then one's self becomes the foundation upon which faith is built. Every Sunday experience is an event to resurrect the "emotional idol" that validates one's faith until the idol is raised again the following Sunday. We have found very few experiential religionists who cry out, "Jesus, Jesus," but at the same time, are serious Bible students.

John 6 is a record of this truth during the ministry of Jesus. When people could no longer "experience" the free handouts of fish and bread, they left Jesus (Jn 6:64-66). The experience of filling bellies with fish and bread will sustain a physical life, but we must remember that it takes the words of Jesus to produce and sustain eternal life (Jn 6:63,68; Rm 10:17). Many of the people who wanted to be disciples of Jesus could not handle His words, though they loved the free bread and fish experience. They thus turned away from Jesus when He said "hard" statements that demanded change in thinking and obedience to commands (Jn 6:66).

In their carnality, some of the Corinthians behaved narcissistically in the exercising of tongues and prophecy as the center-of-reference for their assemblies (See

1 Co 14). They were so drawn to the experience of speaking in languages and prophecying, that confusion and chaos characterized their assemblies. Paul said that the unbeliever who might visit their assemblies had enough sense to conclude that they had all gone mad in their narcissistic behavior (1 Co 14:23). We would conclude from Paul's exhortation that if any unbeliever judged our behavior in assembly to be madness, then we must take another look at how we are behaving in assembly.

We must never forget that it takes obedience to commandments, not subjective experiences, to draw us closer to the One who can preserve us for eternity. It takes knowledge of the word of the God of heaven to know whom we should worship. The Jews crucified Jesus through ignorance, and thus they were seeking to form God in their minds according to their own desires (At 3:17). The Athenian philosophers worshiped in ignorance the one true and living God (At 17:23). If we create a god after our known experiential desires, then we, too, will be worshiping contrary to the worship that the true God desires (Jn 4:24). It would be good to heed the words that Paul uttered in Acts 17:30: "The times of this ignorance God has overlooked, but now He commands all men everywhere to repent."

Idolatry is defined as something of this world that is outside us that is used to spark a subjective emotional experience within us. True worship is defined as a spirit of gratitude within us that pours out thanksgiving to the God in whom we live, move and have our being. Grateful hearts need no outside stimulus to pour out worship to God. If our assembled worship is diminished when the electrical power goes out, then we know we have created a necessity of this world that is outside our hearts to produce that which we should spiritually pour out to God from within us. The drums of spiritists in Africa are used to generate hypnotic trances in which the worshipers lose control of their senses. We must be careful that a failure to pay the electricity bill does not reveal that we, too, have created an idol that must be plugged in to create worship as that when Nebuchadnezzar set up his great idol before the people (See Dn 3). We must not forget that the idol worshipers of Corinth committed fornication with the priestess of the temple in order to experience their religiosity before an idol deity. When one starts down the road of experiential worship, there is no end to the moral confusion that awaits at the end of the road.

---

Research:

Book 44: Experiential Religion vs Word-Based Faith

Chapter 8

A POSSIBLE CONVERSATION BEFORE TIME

"If We do this thing, then Our action will come with many risks."

"I know, but Our very existence and nature necessitates that We act."

"That's true. If We do not act, then Our lack of action will be the very denial of Our existence. Our existence as one eternal divine entity would not be a reality if we did not create beings who would be terminal in the presence of Our eternity. As there is no light without darkness, then there is no eternity with finality. If Our eternity must be evidenced by those who can miss out on eternity by not conforming to the nature of who We are, then Our eternity would be the only reality, and thus, have no definition. How can We say that We have existed for all eternity if there never existed those who were not eternal, for eternity is defined by that which is not eternal."

"So We are all in agreement that We must create.

But if We create, then that which We create must in some way emulate the essence, nature, and character of who We are. Those We bring into the realm of 'terminableness' must be created with the possibility of becoming eternal in Our presence. If Our created ones cannot become as We are in existence, then there will be those who conclude that We do not exist as We are. As the origin of that which is terminal, the terminal must have the possibility of eternity. If not, then We have left ourselves with the task of continually creating in order to reveal Our power to create. And if this were the case, then the created would conclude that their existence was only the result of some natural process of spontaneous generation."

"I know. But creation comes with a risk. If We do not take the risk, then We are an eternal anomaly without definition. Because of Our nature and being, therefore, it is necessary that We create. In creation of that which has the possibility of entering into eternity, the created must be given the freedom to make moral deci- sions—we must not create preprogrammed robots. If there were no risk in creating individuals who have the freedom to make moral choices, and thus have the possibility of eternity, then there would be no reason for creation. We would thus remain in eternity as We are, having not expressed Our love through creation.”

“In order for those We create to emulate the true nature of who We are, then We are taking the risk that Our creation will go wrong. In fact, most of those We will allow to exist will take selfish control of the image after which We create them in order to make themselves, on their own volition, as We are.”

“Yes, but it is a risk that is necessary. It is necessary in order to reveal to Our created ones that We are who We are in eternity. We must, therefore, plan the revelation of one of Us in a way that will evidence Our nature of love, and at the same time, offer them the possibility of eternity if they emulate in their lives Our nature of love. Since the risk of choice on the part of those We create infers the possibility of some exercising extreme hate, We must still take the risk of creating free-moral individuals. Unless those whom we create have the freedom to choose, they will never understand the extremity of Our love if they do not have the freedom to go extremely right or extremely wrong.”

“So we must embed within their nature the instinct that their origin is extraterrestrial. After Our image they must be given an innate desire to search for Us in the terrestrial environment We will create for their temporary dwelling. In their search beyond themselves, some will conclude that there must be ‘something’ beyond their own existence. In their search, therefore, some will find Us. However, the fact that most will not discover Us in their search must not deter Us from creation. There will certainly be those whose search will not go beyond the limits of their imagination. Because these will not see beyond themselves, they will create in their imagination beings that are contrary to the very nature of who We are.”

“Yes, those who create gods after their own earthly natures will go wrong. In fact, most of Our creation will go after the carnality of the environment that they create for themselves. Dominant individuals among them will rise up and dominate. The instinctive nature We will place within them will be confused with their own carnality, and thus, they will seek to destroy their own kind. They will subsequently follow after the original rebellious one whom we will allow to roam among them for the purpose of destruction. Therefore, Our created beings will invent for themselves cults of death by which they would destroy their fellow man.”

“But their religious cultures of death will manifest the extreme of Our culture of love by which We are identified. Their death cult will reveal that they have created a god after their own carnality and a religion that justifies their desires to dominate.”

“The risk of freedom to choose comes with the possibility that Our creation will often throughout time turn on itself. Self-extermination will always be a possibility. However, if there are no extremes to the freedom of our creation, then there can be no final identity of who We are. If Our creation will follow the deceiver to the extreme of destroying themselves in the name of religion, then one of Us must reveal to humanity that We are not that way. We are an extreme culture of love, and thus, Our visitation among those whom We create must reveal Our love.”

“We recognize that Our dilemma is that We must create because We are love. Nevertheless, We must allow hate to exist in order that those who choose to be as We are, will understand that the environment in which they live cannot be their final destiny. Those who choose Us will be identified by the nature of who We are. The religions of hate and death that are invented by the carnally-minded will give the honest searcher the opportunity to conclude that We exist, and that Our existence is based on love, for We created because of love.”

“In order for those who love to understand that We have everything under control, We must reveal to them that before We spoke one atom into existence, We had a plan to bring them out of their finite environment into an infinite existence of that which We are.”

“Therefore,” spoke the Father, “we all agree that when We utter the words, ‘Let there be ...,’ one of Us must have already volunteered by saying, ‘I will go.’”

“I will volunteer,” agreed the Son.

“So We all agree,” repeated the Father.

“Let the beginning begin,” replied the Spirit.

---

Research:

Book 12: God the Father

Book 13: God the Son

Book 14: God the Holy Spirit

Chapter 9

HYDROPHOBIA

We once concluded with the outpouring of our heart to an electric audience of attentive Bible lovers. After the lesson, one seemingly apprehensive, but convicted believer, stood up and valiantly said, “I want to be baptized right now!”

So after initial preparations for the event, both of us proceeded down into the water. There was a sense of nervous apprehension in the willing subject who had declared his intentions to follow Jesus. He was quite nervous with his first step into the water. As the subject was in the process of being laid back into the water in order to be immersed, arms and legs went flinging everywhere. Hands and feet grabbed after everything that was above water. He was hydrophobic (terrified of water).

After some reassuring persuasion, the self-confessed hydrophobic believer fought against his fears. Nevertheless, we almost both went down into the water, he wide-eyed and struggling, and me not seeking to be rebaptized. What was so encouraging was that he overcame his fear of water in order to follow Jesus into the Jordan River. He had not informed us before of his phobia. However, regardless of his phobia of water, he was determined to be baptized as Jesus had commanded. After the experience, no one in the attentive audience let him pass without hugs and encouragement for his courage to overcome his fear of water in order to obey the gospel.

It is unfortunate today that there are thousands of “believers” who claim to be followers (disciples) of Jesus, but they do not have the courage to overcome their hydrophobia. They claim to be followers of Jesus, but they will not follow Him to Aenon where there was much water into which they would be immersed after the example of Jesus (Jn 3:23). They will not follow Jesus by obedience to His instructions to be baptized in order to be saved (Mk 16:16). And thus, they are not willing to be “of Christ” by baptism into His name (1 Co 1:12,13).

Paul said, “Be imitators of me even as I also am of Christ” (1 Co 11:1). But there are hydrophobics today who will not follow Paul to the grave of water as he imitated Christ by following Him (Acts 22:16). Some hydrophobics today are so afraid of the water that they would never even “follow the crowd” of those who followed Peter’s instructions on the day of Pentecost to be “baptized for remission of sins” (At 2:38). A crowd of about 3,000 men and women followed Peter’s instructions on that day to be immersed for the remission of their sins (At 2:41). They followed his instructions right into and out of the water in obedience to the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus (See Rm 6:3-6). We are sure there are some who could not say as the Ethiopian eunuch, “See, here is water! What hinders me from being baptized?” (At 8:36). Instead, some religious hydrophobics would say, “See, here is water! Get me out of here!”

Too many seem to forget that when a pagan idolater responded to what a Christian believed in the first century, he was not initially told to either repent or confess that Jesus was the Christ and Son of Christ. He was not initially informed about baptism. Pagan unbelievers were initially told what Paul said to the idolatrous Philippian jailer, “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and you and your household will be saved” (At 16:31). Idolatrous unbelievers had to first believe that Jesus was the Son of God, and then they were taught the rest of the story. Paul and Silas continued with the rest of the story to the Philippian jailer by speaking to him “the word of the Lord” (At 16:32). And the result? “And immediately he [the jailer] was baptized, he and all his household” (At 16:33). One must first believe in Jesus, and then obedience to the rest of the story will follow. And the rest of the story involves repentance and washing away of sins in the waters of baptism.

The entire gospel according to John was written that the idolatrous unbelievers to whom John wrote “might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing” they might have life through His name (Jn 20:31). In his book, John was not writing to believers. He was writing to idolatrous unbelievers who knew nothing or little about the life and ministry of Jesus, especially the fact that Jesus was the Word (Jn 1:1-14), the Son of God who came down out of heaven for the salvation of man (Jn 3:13). Idolatrous unbelievers must first, as the eunuch and idolatrous jailer, believe that Jesus is the Christ and Son of God. After belief, that which was necessary to be born again would come (Jn 3:3-5).

It is highly unfortunate that so many throughout the religious world have twisted the gospel of John out of John’s purpose for which he wrote the book. His message, that was only to be the beginning of the message of the gospel, has been made the conclusion. We must not forget, however, that belief is only the beginning of one's journey to do all that God requires of each individual in order to be saved. If one stops at the beginning, then no obedient repentance will occur (Lk 13:3). There will be no confession that Jesus is the Christ and Son of God (Romans 10:9). There will be no baptism into Christ (Gl 3:26-29).

When those on the day of Pentecost believed that they had crucified the Lord and Christ, they said to the apostles, "Men and brethren, what will we do?" (At 2:37). The apostles did not leave them at belief by telling them that they were saved by "belief only." Instead of allowing them to remain lost in a "state of belief,"

Peter instructed that they follow through with their belief. We read the gospel according to John in order to believe that Jesus is the Christ and Son of God. We read the book of Acts to find out where to go from belief. Belief in the New Testament is more than a smile on one's face, or a warm feeling. It is an inward activation to follow Jesus to the Jordan River in order to be immersed for the remission of all past sins. Once they believe, true believers will overcome their hydrophobia by asking, "Where is the water?"

---

Research:

Book 7: God's Covenants

Chapter 10

BAPTISM: A RELATIONAL RESPONSE OF FAITH

If one seeks to establish and maintain a relationship with God, then it is only reasonable to believe that one must establish this relationship on God's terms. To believe otherwise would be an effort to manipulate God to conform to one's own terms, and thus, demand that God accept our terms to establish a relationship with Him.

We live in a world of Christendom today where most religious people have sought to have a relationship with God, but on their own terms. And because we are living in a world where most people have very little knowledge of the word of God, then we would suppose that the vast majority of Christendom is seeking to establish a relationship with God on their own terms without ever considering the terms of God.

John did not initially write to believers. The New Testament book of John was written to those whom John urged to believe that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of God (Jn 20:30,31). If the unbelievers to whom he wrote believed, then they would have an eternal relationship with the Son of God. They could have this relationship if they followed through with what God required to be born again (Jn 3:3-5). John affirmed that belief in Jesus was the foundation upon which they could establish this eternal relationship with God. In this way, belief was relational in reference to their salvation.

We find throughout the New Testament the rest of the story about the "relational belief" about which John wrote. In reference to the eternal relationship into which his readers must come with the Son of God, John wrote briefly about the door of entry, that is, being born again (Jn 3:3-5). To be born into this relationship with the Son of God in whom one believed, a response to belief (obedience) was necessary on the part of the believer. Belief, therefore, could not be an end within itself. It could not be a simple acceptance of facts. It had to be a relational response to what God required in order to connect with His Son. The eternal relationship with God that John desired that his readers have had to be a behavioral response to the intellectual information that he wrote in words.

How one establishes a relationship with God can only be defined by God, and thus, only in His word are we to determine how and what a relationship is with our Lord Jesus Christ. We have found that most people are more inclined to use the common religious definitions of the confused religious world in which they live to define how one establishes a behavioral relationship with Jesus. The common accepted theology of the majority is often easier to believe than opening one's Bible to determine how God defines these matters and establishes His terms for being born again.

In order to explain what John meant when he introduced the subject of being "born again," Jesus continued to explain at the end of His ministry what He meant by the term. The declarative statement of Jesus in Mark 16:16 is a record of concluding thoughts of Jesus that reveal the seriousness of what is most important in one's restoration to a relationship with God. Jesus' statement was simple, but loaded with meaning when considered in the context of His entire message of the gospel.

Jesus said, "He who believes and is baptized will be saved." Every theological wiggle possible has been made in the religious world to discount what Jesus meant in this statement. But the statement is blatantly clear. The meaning can be clearly understood in the context of the truth of the gospel of Jesus. If we do not consider the whole text of His message, and what the Holy Spirit explained in the whole of the New Testament, then belief becomes a simple legal recognition of facts with no resounding confession or repentance in one's life. Baptism is subsequently relegated to a legalistic plunge into water in obedience to a command to "get baptized." Such a conclusion is both impersonal and a denial of the truth of the gospel and the relationship that the Father seeks to have with those who believe on His Son.

The "belief" about which Jesus spoke was relational in that it must move one to respond to Jesus as the Christ and Son of God. The gospel (good news) must be received in mind (intellect) and in heart (emotional). It is God's ultimatum for sinners to bring themselves into a relationship with the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Belief, therefore, is an emotional response and foundation in reference to the death of Jesus for our sins and His resurrection for our hope.

In 1 Corinthians 15:1-4 Paul explains, "I declare to you the gospel which I preached to you, which also you received and in which you stand" (1 Co 15:1). The word "stand" is metaphorical in reference to emotional security. Belief in the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus (the gospel), therefore, is an emotional response to an intellectual knowledge of the event of the gospel that Paul explained in 1 Corinthians 15:3,4: "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, He was buried, and rose again the third day according to the Scriptures" (1 Co 15:3,4). One must intellectually know and believe that Jesus, as the Son of God, died for our sins. However, one's intellectual belief in the death of the Son of God for our sins is not good enough. Intellectual belief is not relational in reference to connecting with the saving power of the gospel. There must be an emotional attachment, and subsequent action, to the event of the gospel in order to emotionally "stand" upon an assurance that we are saved by the event of the gospel. Knowledge of facts must be combined with behavior. It is one's emotional response to the gospel that moves one from knowledge to behavior (obedience).

This brings us to Jesus' connection between belief, baptism and salvation. Jesus explained in Mark 16:16 that in order to be saved, baptism must occur in response to one's intellectual and emotional response to the event of Jesus' death for our sins and resurrection for our hope. Baptism is not a legality. It is a relational response to the good news of Jesus' death and resurrection. And when one relationally responds to his belief in the salvational work of Jesus at the cross, and in the resurrection, then the blessing of salvation comes into the life of the one who obeys the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus. One is thus born again (Jn 3:3-5).

Paul explains the relational response of baptism to the gospel in Romans 6:3-6. Notice carefully how he makes baptism a personal encounter with the death and resurrection of Jesus. He begins with a question: "Or do you not know that as many of us as were baptized into Christ Jesus were baptized into His death" (Rm 6:3). Jesus' death was personal, and so is our baptism into His death. Paul explained: "We were buried with Him through baptism into death ..." (Rm 6:4). The preposition "with" makes the response of baptism relational in reference to our contact with the death of Jesus. Baptism is not a ceremony. It is not a legal obedience to commands. It is establishing a personal connection with Jesus right at the cross of Jesus and in partnership with His burial and resurrection. If one cannot establish this relationship with Jesus at the cross, and in the burial and resurrection, then he has no real, true and personal relationship with Jesus.

Jesus died for our sins at the cross. If one would establish a relationship with Jesus, then he must begin this relationship with his own death, burial and resurrection in obedience to the gospel. Only through baptism into His death can we be at the cross with Jesus. This is why Peter reminded those on Pentecost in Acts 2 that they must be baptized for remission of their sins (At 2:38). If the separation from God through sin remains in one's life, then there can be no relationship with God against whom we sin (Is 59:2). When one is baptized for the remission of sins, then his relationship with God is established.

But Paul was not finished with his commentary on what Jesus meant in Mark 16:16. Belief leads us to be "united together in the likeness of His [Christ's] death," and thus, "we will also be in the likeness of His resurrection" (Rm 6:5). As "our old man was crucified with Him" at the cross in repentance, our new man walks in newness of life when we come forth from a grave of water (Rm 6:5,6). Paul, through the inspiration of the Spirit, could not have explained the relational obedience of baptism in a better way. There can be no relational walk with Jesus in the new life, if there is no death and burial of the old man.

At the end of His mission on earth, Jesus concluded with a relational statement to His disciples in reference to baptism. He commanded His disciples to "disciple all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit" (Mt 28:19). In this statement, Jesus used the Greek word eis. Eis is relational. In baptism, one comes into a relationship with the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. It is belief in Jesus as the Son of God that moves one to go to the cross with Christ. It is belief that takes one into a grave of water with Jesus in order to wash away sins that keep one separated from God (At 22:16). It is belief that brings one forth from the grave into a resurrected life in a relationship with the Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Unless one's belief results in crucifixion and burial with Jesus, therefore, one has no true or personal relationship with the One who will return from heaven to collect His people who have been washed in His blood (1 Jn 1:7). Those who have not believed, gone to the cross, grave and experienced a resurrection with Jesus, do not have a redeeming relationship with the Christ who went to the cross and grave for them.

We must keep in mind that it is not the responsibility of the sinner to determine his own means by which he would establish a relationship with God. This is God's business. And since it is God's business, then the only way one can discover how to establish a covenant relationship with God is in the word of God.

---

Research:

Book 7: God's Covenants

Chapter 11

FELLOW WORKERS

There are fundamental concepts in the Scriptures concerning relationships that are often glaringly contrary to the accepted behavioral norms of the world in which we live. One of these Spirit-inspired norms is critical in defining how Christians are to relate with one another as the organic body of Christ. This is a relational norm that is often the most violated mandate of all Scripture. Jesus explained, "You know that those who are recognized as rulers over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them. And their great ones exercise authority over them. But it will not be so among you" (Mk 10:42,43). No interpretation need be exercised to understand what Jesus meant in this statement. Nevertheless, this very clear principle in reference to relationships in the body of Christ is a principle that is often ignored by those who seek to rule over their fellow disciples. When it is ignored, the relationship that disciples must maintain with one another becomes very dysfunctional.

In order to explain the relational servitude by which His disciples were to function as His body, Jesus illustrated His teaching on relationships with the practice of slavery that was a common socioeconomic structure of the Roman Empire. Jesus used the relationship of slaves (bondservants) with one another to define the relationship that Christians, as fellow slaves, should have with one another in His kingdom.

Slaves were fellow bondservants (or, servants) (Mt 18:28-35; 24:45-51). Jesus explained that the disciples' relationships with one another must be as fellow slaves. The disciples understood the slavery of the Roman Empire, and thus, they understood what Jesus meant when He spoke of them as fellow slaves of one another (Mk 10:44,45; see Jn 11:16). Being "fellow" meant that no disciple was given the right to have authority over any other disciple. Before His departure from them, therefore, Jesus reminded His disciples that all authority among all His fellow bondservants would always remain with Him (Mt 28:18). Discipleship, therefore, meant serving one another as fellow workers in Christ, not being in positions of authority among slaves.

After the ascension of Jesus, the Holy Spirit took over in defining the relational function that the disciples should have with one another. The Spirit first focused on the reason for the disciples' relationship as fellow members of the body. They were "fellow heirs with Christ" (Rm 8:17), and thus, "fellow heirs of the same body" (Ep 3:6). The Gentiles were "fellow citizens" in the household of God (Ep 2:19). Now if the disciples were called to be "fellows" in reference to their salvation and kingdom citizenship, then, as Jesus had previously stated, there were to be no lords or rulers among them. The definition of disciples being "fellows" in their relationship with one another dismisses the possibility that one "fellow" should rise up over his other "fellows" in Christ. There are no bosses among fellow heirs.

For example, Paul stated in reference to Andronicus and Junia, that they were his "fellow prisoners who are notable among the apostles" (Rm 16:7). Being "notable" does not mean being exalted with authority over the apostles. They were fellow prisoners "among," but not over one another in the kingdom. Aristarchus and Epaphras were likewise fellow prisoners with Paul in Rome (Colossians 4:10; Philemon 23). So there are no lords or rulers among fellow prisoners.

"Fellow" means that we equally share in the same thing. Christians equally share together as heirs with Christ. If required, they equally share together as prisoners for Christ. They equally share together as citizens of the kingdom. And thus, they equally share together as “fellow bondservants” in their organic function as members of the body (Cl 1:7).

Herein is the definition of the disciples’ relationship with one another as members of the body of Christ. The absence of lords and rulers among the disciples means that there is an equality among fellow citizens. Disciples cannot equally share as fellow workers if some “fellows” are designated with authority over their fellow disciples. As soon as one of the “fellows” assumes authority over his fellows in Christ, then the one who assumes authority has made his fellow bondservants his employees. In his claim of authority, therefore, he has denied the fellowship of equality among the disciples (See 3 Jn 9,10).

Timothy was a fellow worker with Paul, though Paul was not a boss over Timothy (Rm 16:21). Paul would not rule over the faith of the Corinthians, but reminded them that he was a fellow worker with them (2 Co 1:24). Titus was a partner and fellow worker with Paul (2 Co 8:23). The two sisters, Euodia and Syntyche, were also fellow workers with Paul (Ph 4:3). In their relationships with one another, the disciples in the New Testament were identified to be fellow workers, or servants (See Pl 1,24; 3 Jn 8; Rv 6:11). Being fellow workers meant that no one disciple had any authority over any other disciple.

This is the secret to the dynamic function of the body of Christ. If there are no lords or rulers among fellow members, then each fellow member must take ownership of his or her responsibility to be a functioning member in the body. All members must assume their responsibility to function equally, though equality does not mean in same way. We have different gifts (1 Co 12:12-31). With the control and authority of only one Head, each fellow member assumes his or her role to function with his or her gift that was granted to them by the Head in order that the body function. Dysfunctions in the body come when members refuse to function as fellow parts of the body (See Ep 4:7,8,11-16).

There is no competition for power among equal fellow workers. If Paul had authority over Apollos, he, on one occasion, could have commanded him to go to Corinth (1 Co 16:12). Since Apollos did not go when Paul requested, Apollos was not sinning against some apostolic authority that was supposedly invested in Paul. Paul simply expressed an opinion that Apollos go immediately to Corinth. He did not issue a command. Likewise, when Paul and Barnabas disagreed over taking John Mark on the second mission journey, Barnabas was not rebelling against any apostolic authority of Paul (At 15:36-41). Paul, Apollos and Barnabas were all fellow workers, and thus, none of them had any authority over the other, and none had any authority over the function of the church as a whole. And for this reason, each of these men assumed their responsibility to use their gifts to be functioning fellow workers in the body of Christ. Each functioned in a global body according to their gifts, and how they individually chose to function in ministry.

We live in a world of lords and rulers. Our social environment, therefore, makes it quite difficult for some disciples to leave the business boardroom of the corporate world and function in equity as fellow workers among the disciples. The boss in the boardroom often wants to treat his fellow workers in the body as his employees. The CEO of his own business often seeks to be the president of the body of Christ. Those invested with authority in government sometimes seek the same among the disciples. However, leaders among the members of the body do not lead with authority. The notable leaders among us do not “lord over those entrusted” to them, but function as “examples to the flock” (1 Pt 5:3). When disciples take ownership of their responsibility to function as fellow workers of the body, it is then that the body grows. When leaders lead by applying their gifts of ministry to the glory of God, then we follow by doing likewise (See Ep 4:11-16).

---

Research:

Book 19: Gospel Leadership

Chapter 12

DEVICE DISCONNECTION DISORDER

I confess. I am self-diagnosed with occasional attacks of DDD (Device Disconnection Disorder). It is an electronic disorder that sometimes makes me socially disengage. I am sitting here in front of my device (computer) communicating to you somewhere on the other side of the world. OK, it’s great that I can do this, for we both know that we would never have any contact with one another whatsoever if it were not for our devices. However, you are there and I am here, both of us being non-threatened by any personal contact with one another, and thus, guarded in the sanctuary of our seclusion. The only contact that we have with one another is my statement here, and possibly . . . I say possibly . . . your “like” or “amen” to what I am saying. So I welcome you to the Internet world of social reclusion wherein we both protect ourselves from any face-to-face engagement, thus risking rejection, if not some confrontation. We are both secure in our “keyboard” relationship with one another.

Device Disconnection Disorder is becoming an increasing social phenomenon, if not relational dysfunction. CNN recently ran a focused documentary on young people in Japan who have quit school. They quit school and confined themselves to a reclusive box (room) wherein their only contact with the personal world is through their devices (smartphones or computers). There are over a half million young people in Japan who have chosen reclusion over social integration. In CNN’s interview with one of these young teenagers, the response was, “I do not like personal engagements with others.” This teenager now represents what has become a social dysfunction of the real world in which we now live.

Has that which brought so many people into electronic contact with one another becoming the demon that is separating so many from personal encounters with one another? Have our devices become social Trojan horses that discourage young people from learning the social skills of personal relational behavior?

This is not a story of fiction as I sit here in my reclusive cocoon and connect with you on the other side of the world through my device. The World Wide Web has become that Trojan horse embedded in our social “connection” to the point that we now justify ourselves to be isolated in our non-threatening quarters. In his extensive article entitled, Tyranny of the Mob, Joel Stein opened his recently released article in Time Magazine with the statement that “the web is a sociopath with Asperger’s” (Time, August 29, 2016). It is sociopathic without social values, and thus enables our inability to socialize with one another. According to Stein, and a choir of psychologists, our DDD has moved many into a dysfunctional relationship that if the battery runs down, or the electricity goes off, we are totally disenfranchised from one another. We are at the point that if a restaurant has no WiFi, we will not eat there. And horrors, if we drive down a road where we lose our connection.

The disconnected millions in society that now “enjoy” this “connected disconnection” through their devices has led them to what psychologists call “online disinhibition” (Ibid). Connectors through impersonal devices have allowed their personal inhibitions to explode on others through what is called trolling. Trolls are people, who in their anonymity and invisibility, relish online freedom in order to tweet out garbage on others, which garbage they would not spew out if they were at risk of their garbage being thrown back in their face in a personal encounter with the one on whom they spewed. Stein explained that trolls are “monsters who hide in darkness and threaten people” (Ibid). And if you don’t think that tweeting garbage is a present social dysfunction, then consider the arena of American politics that has been thrown into the quagmire of a media rubbish bin.

Christians dealt with this problem of humanity long before it was amplified through the Internet via our devices. Back before devices it was called malicious gossip and slander. And the Holy Spirit had a corrective answer to this social dysfunction. His first remedy to correct unspiritual trolls was by command: “Do not speak evil one of another” (Js 4:11). His second remedy was to draw the spiritual trolls out of their places of obscurity by mandating them to be in the presence of those with whom they might be tempted to troll: “And let us consider one another to stir up love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together” (Hb 10:24,25). You cannot be a “monster” who “hides in darkness” if you claim to be a Christian. Christianity is about face-to-face relationships.

Society has spent thousands of years in building social norms whereby individuals can in dignity relate with one another in their personal relationships. Individuals who suffer from DDD are tempted to circumvent these social mores in a time of personal depression, rejection, and discouragement. We are thus tempted, through unspiritual tweets and comments, to project on others our misery. We find a placebo of relief by downing a few pills of criticism. If you discover that you have become an unspiritual troll suffering from DDD, our advice is to first render yourself to the above instructions of the Holy Spirit. Come out of your cave of criticism and find real people with whom you can connect face-to-face. We must be willing to forsake our devices in order to find real friends. We must not forsake our friends by confining our “relationships” to electronic connections. And on that advice, we will seek not to be hypocrites. We will now leave our computer and the security of our cocoon, and go find someone with whom we can do some face-to-face time over coffee. And in doing this, we will be smart and leave our smartphones at home.

Chapter 13

ALIENATED URBANITES

On wooden pews this side of comfort, we settled into an old “church building” that was built two hundred years before. The old Dutch architecture of the premises glowed with antiquity and reverence. With the usual “church building culture” of yesteryear, the ornate pulpit was elevated so high that we assumed the preacher had to take oxygen in order to complete a full sermon. The hard and smooth worn wooden pews made spectators out of all of us as we quietly listened to expositions of Scripture resonate from the speaker of the hour. We sensed coolness in the atmosphere that was mixed with orthodoxy. Nevertheless, we breathed an air of solemnity as we witnessed a tear here and there trickle down dedicated cheeks. And then we erroneously concluded, “This religion is cold and dead, and the spectators have no relationships with one another.”

We were cold dead wrong. Our judgment came two centuries too late. When the old church house was built two centuries before, the people were as neighborly as neighbors could be. It was a relational era in history when “church buildings” were actually meant to be only “places of community worship.” They were not designed to be four-walled factories to manufacture superficial relationships, nor the site of religious concerts.

We grew up in the last remnants of this type of rural neighborly culture in America. When holidays came around, we remember when the entire rural community would come together to celebrate and commune. When there was a school function, all the people in the area were present. Everyone! Well . . . almost everyone. (There was John who lived alone by himself down the road in an old debilitated shack. We called him a “hermit” because he wanted to be left to himself. But in the entire farming community of the York District of Stafford country of Kansas, there was only John who wanted to be alone. No church-house assembly with others would have changed John from being a hermit.)

Back in those days, when Sunday morning came, no one had any thought of allowing different church meetings to separate us as a community simply because we all shuttled ourselves off to sit on pews in different premises throughout the area. We were still a connected community. The premises where we all sat on Sunday were constructed for Bible teaching and worship of God. Places of worship were never constructed in an effort to establish relationships between the attendees of any particular community. The people were already community with relationships before they showed up at the premises of their respective “church.” Communities were “one another” before they came together to worship with one another.

But the modern urban culture has changed us. Modern metropolitan existence has alienated us from one another as citizens. In our efforts to chase money in the urban business world, community relationships are sacrificed for job promotions. In rushing from one appointment to another, we simply bypass one another. The consequence of our alienation is that the “hour of worship” on Sunday morning has become an effort to rewire our relationships. We seek to inject some relational experience into ourselves in order that a temporary and superficial connection sustain us until the next meeting. Some churches use Wednesday nights to check the wiring unless our relationships become frayed in between Sundays. Our wiring is simply disconnected with too many “closing prayers.”

Ever hear the statement, “I went to that church and no one greeted me.” The one making such a statement “went to church” with the wrong expectations. Spectator assemblies of disconnected people do not establish relationships. The one who has made such a statement usually had few relationships before he or she showed up at the doors of the sanctuary. Those who have strong relationships with others do not show up at the assembly in order to “get something.” They show up to give worship to God. If we seek to establish “one another relationships” at an assembly where worship is to be poured out, then we are out of touch with those with whom we should already have a relationship. Assemblies of the saints were never intended to establish relationships. They exist because relationships already exist. The early saints were together daily because they already had a relationship with one another in their common obedience to the gospel (Acts 2:46). They were not together in order to establish relationships with one another. For this reason, it is never the prime objective of the cross-cleansed community of God to construct cathedrals where relationships are to be established.

And in the context of this subject, Hebrews 10:24,25 has since the beginning of the alienated community been twisted out of its historical relational context. The entire context of the Hebrew letter is about maintaining a vertical relationship with Jesus who is the Son of God and our high priest. The context of 10:24,25 is that those who have this vertical relationship with Him should already be in a horizontal relationship with one another. When we take our community relationships with one another that we already have outside our assemblies, and bring such into our assemblies, then expression love is manifested for one another. The connected must then determine in assembly how their love for one another is to go into action through good works in our communities.

There is nothing about legalities in a genuine relationship that is built on love. If our community as “church” exists because we are pushed together by a legal command, then the premises in which we assemble become cold and orthodox. Our assembly becomes theatrical. We will get nothing out of being with one another if we are legally driven to one another. But if we are drawn to one another through love, then regardless of the premises, we will explode into worship of the One who shed blood to make us one united body. Physical premises then become irrelevant to our assemblies. They are convenient, but they are not the foundation upon which we establish our community with one another as the children of God. It is for this reason that the saints who meet under a tree have as much a relationship with one another as those who meet in an air-conditioned/heated orthodox cathedral. Places and premises mean nothing in reference to the “peculiar” people who are precious in the heart of the Prince of Peace who poured out His blood for them. When we are connected with one another outside our assemblies, then our worship, as Jesus explained, can take place anywhere and at any time (John 4:1-38).

---

Research:

Book 35: Worship God

Book 36: Worship Freely

Book 43: Exercising Sobriety & Self-Control

Chapter 14

THE ORGANIC BODY OF CHRIST

The organism of the church can be organized, but its identity is not determined by any organizational structure on earth by which the individual members are marshaled into order. The church is the organic body of Christ that is ordered by Jesus alone as the only head (Colossians 1:18). The church is people regardless of how the people may be organized to accomplish any particular task on earth.

One is a member of the church, not because he or she is fitted into an organizational structure on earth, but because each member works universally, and individually, under the common authority of one Head in heaven (See Ep 4:11-16). For this reason, there can be only one structure of authority for all the members of the worldwide organic body. This is what Paul meant in 1 Corinthians 12:12: “For as the body is one [universally] and has many members [universally], and all the members of the one [universal] body, though they are many, are one [universal] body, so also is Christ.” Christ is the one head of the universal body. He has all authority that reaches from heaven to earth (Mt 28:18; Cl 1:18). No rulers or lords are needed on earth for the organic function of the individual members of the body.

During the end of Jesus’ ministry, one earthly ruler asked Jesus, “Are you a king . . . ?” (Jn 18:37). Jesus responded, “You say correctly that I am a king. For this reason I was born . . .” (Jn 18:37). When we speak of rulers, heads, lords and kings in reference to the organic function of the body of Christ, we must understand that Jesus is the only Ruler, Head, Lord and King. If ever there were appointed rulers, heads, lords, and kings of the body on earth, then the church would turn into an earthly organization. It would morph into a religious institution of men. This would be so because the organic function of the body would be controlled by men on earth, not from King Jesus in heaven. Therefore, it would no longer function organically, but organizationally. The organism would become an organization, and thus be defined as “organized religion.”

The New Testament teaches that the members of the body function organically to reach out to those of the world, wherever there are lost people. If the members were confined only to themselves in order to function organically, then, as Paul said, they “would have to go out of the world” (1 Co 5:10). They would have to confine themselves to themselves. But there can never be anything as a “Christian monk in a monastery.” In order for the members to function organically, they must associate with those to whom it is their mission to invite into eternal glory. In this way, therefore, the members of the organic body always function individually in their relationships with their friends of the world. It is always “one-on-one” in an effort to bring one’s friends into Christ.

The institutional (organized) church “plants churches” that are clones in organizational structure. But the organic body simply spreads as leaven throughout the world, influencing and teaching others about the Son of God (See Mt 13:33). The result of the organic function of the body is not organized “planted churches,” but new members who also begin to function organically for Jesus in their communities. The organic body of Christ was “planted” once over two thousand years ago. That “planting” was the first and last planting. Since the planting of A.D. 30, the organic body has simply permeated the world and time as one spiritual beggar told another beggar where to find spiritual bread. Organic “church growth” is no more complicated than that.

Association does not determine fellowship. And fellowship among members of the body does not necessitate agreement on all matters of opinion. Of necessity, the members of the body must associate with one another, but this does not mean that they are a cloned cult group bound to agree on all matters of opinion. Also, the members of the body must organically function individually in order to reach those of the world, but this does not assume that they condone the evil of the world.

The association of the members of the organic body with those who are of different beliefs does not assume that the members of the body accept the beliefs of those with whom they differ. It was Paul’s custom to function organically by going into the synagogues and associating with the unbelieving Jews (Acts 17:2). But this did not mean that his association with unbelieving Jews in the synagogues would somehow compromise his faith. Aquila and Priscilla associated with the unbelieving Jews in the synagogue in Ephesus, but they did not become unbelieving Jews because they showed up at the synagogue every sabbath (At 18:24-28). On one occasion, Paul wanted to enter a pagan temple of idolatrous worshipers (At 19:29-34). But his association with those of the temple of Diana was not a compromise of his faith, neither would we assume that he was fellowshiping the erroneous beliefs and behavior of idolatrous worshipers. Organic members go everywhere and engage anyone in order to give everyone an opportunity to have eternal life.

The fellowship of the members of the organic body is based on each individual member’s obedience to the gospel through baptism into the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus. “For by one Spirit we were all baptized into one [universal] body ...” (1 Co 12:13). Members of the body, therefore, have a common organic function because of their “common salvation” (Jd 3). Their common obedience to the gospel has placed them on “Jesus’ team.” They obeyed the gospel individually, and thus, they organically function as individual members of the one universal body. And being on some team of men of organized religion is not necessary in order to be on Jesus’ team universally as members of His organic body.

The members fellowship with one another because of their common obedience to the gospel. This is a universal fellowship that allows them to function organically wherever they live in the world. Their common individual loyalty to the one Head, brings them into an organism of members that functions universally. Wherever they sit on Sunday morning has nothing to do with their common connection to the Head as individual members of the universal body. Where they are located any day of the week does not determine their organic connection with one another as individual members of the universal body. They function daily. Their regular assembly encourages their organic function as individuals (See Hb 10:24,25). However, regardless of their assembly behavior with one another, each member is responsible to function individually as an organic member of the body between Sundays. The members do not assemble in order to function organically. They assemble because they are functioning organically. We must not forget that the members of the body were organically functioning as individuals before there was an assembly of the members the following Sunday after the A.D. 30 Pentecost (At 2:41).

The problem develops when an organized church establishes authorities who become the standard by which individual members must be subjected before their organic function is validated as “faithful.” When groups of disciples become highly organized under a common authority on earth—this is “high church” in the minds of some—then they often become the judge and law-giver of those who do not fit into their spreadsheet organization. In this way, institutional hierarchies hinder the universal organic function of the members of the body. Organized religion always considers those who seek to function organically to be a virus to the organization. And in truth, organic members are always a threat to organized religion because they seek to function autonomously from any of the hierarchial authorities that constitute organized religion. They, as Jesus, will always be a threat to the religious establishment of the day.

The organized Jewish religious establishment of Jesus’ day could not cope with the early disciples because the disciples would not conform to the hierarchy of authority of the Jews’ organized religion. On one occasion, the Jewish establishment even “commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus” (At 4:18). This is the attitude of institutionalized leaders toward those who would seek to be autonomous from the constraints of their religious organization. Those who preach freedom from bondage are always a threat to those who hold the keys to religious prisons (See Gl 5:1).

The behavior and attitude of institutional religious leaders has not changed since the days of the Jewish hierarchy of Jerusalem. The organic function of the body continues to be judged by those in “high places” who seek to be rulers and lords of the organized church. By behaving as such, they behave as the Pharisees and scribes who sought to intimidate individual members of the body into compromising their freedom that they have in Christ to function organically wherever they are and with whomever they may encounter every day of their lives.

---

Research:

Book 47: Fellowship and Unity of the Organic Body

Book 55: Organic Function of the Body of Christ

Chapter 15

ORGANIZED RELIGION

Many of us today live in highly organized business/industrial societies. As a result, many churches in such societies have not escaped the influence of corporate organizationalism. How one functions as an employer/employee in the business/industrial world, often determines how he views and functions in the church of our Lord. When an entire membership lives in such a society, it is almost natural for members of the church to behave corporately in their function in the body. The extreme of this invasion of worldly organizationalism into the function of the disciples of Jesus is the conclusion that if one is not a part of the “corporately organized church,” then he is outside the religious “church loop,” or simply a rebel from within. Some have even concluded that those who do not want to involve themselves in organized religion are simply uncooperative.

We must not assume that the stifling efforts of organized religion are something new. The same religious environment prevailed during the era when the Son of God became flesh in order to reveal an organic movement of people outside the function of organized religion. Jesus did not come to establish an institution. He came to empower individuals in their faith. His focus was on people (church), not organizational structures. He thus came to energize an organism of believers that would grow into all the world.

When Jesus came in the fullness of time to begin an organic body (His church) in the midst of a very structured religious organization (Judaism), from the very beginning His ministry was in constant conflict with the authorities of the religious establishment. The establishment called His movement a “sect” simply because His disciples did not conform to the norm that defined the existing religious organization of the day (See At 24:5). The books of Matthew through John explain in detail the conflict between the Jewish religious leaders and Jesus as He initiated the organic function of His disciples. The book of Acts not only explains the organic function of His body of believers, but also the conflict that the Jewish religious leadership in Palestine continued to have with what they considered a virus in their organized religion. Organized religion always considers organic function an infectious virus simply because those who function organically are not controlled by the earthly authorities of the organization.

Organized religion is defined by the existence of rulers and lords on earth. In order to prevent His organism from becoming an organization, Jesus said that there would be no rulers and lords among His disciples. The function of the disciples would be as an organic body of servants functioning in their relationships with themselves and in their communities (See Mk 10:42,43).

An organization (institution) exists because there is a chain of authority on earth of men who seek to maintain the structure of the organization. There is thus pressure from these “powers that be” that everyone who claims to be a part of the organization must conform to their authority structures. Membership in the organization is required. Some sort of attendance to the meetings of the organization are required in order to be considered loyal (faithful) to “the powers that be.” Budgets and spreadsheets are necessary in order to control the income that comes into the common “treasury” of the organization. In order that the leadership of the organized religion be perpetuated, diplomas and degrees often hang on the leaders’ office walls, which diplomas and degrees are usually earned at the accepted Bible training schools of the organization. A specific name is used by the organization in order that members easily identify the groups who are in fellowship with the organization worldwide.

Inherent in any organized religion (institution) is a spirit of sectarianism, for each organized group of a worldwide network of groups must in some way maintain their identity as unique from all other religious organizations. Since competition for members is inherent in sectarianism, a unique name for the religious organization is thus necessary in order to identify the particular organization to which members give allegiance. The validation of one's relationship with Jesus is thus defined by one's faithful allegiance to the religious organization of which he professes membership.

It is incumbent on the accepted leaders of the institutional church to preserve the identity of their church by teaching the mandates of the organization that identify its uniqueness. Members are subsequently subjected to the sanctioned leaders by referring to them with titles that separate them from one another. Authority is relinquished to the leadership by the membership. By doing such the members have established a head of each local church, or the universally organized church, depending on how worldwide the organized church seeks to function according to hierarchies similar to the Roman Catholic Church.

In one statement of the New Testament the organized church is deemed contrary to the organic function of the universal membership of the body of Christ.

“... from whom [Christ] the whole body being fitted and held together by what every joint supplies, according to the effective working of each part, causes growth of the body to the edifying of itself in love” (Ep 4:16).

The words “every” and “each” assign the individual members of the body to one another. There can be no “eyes” or “feet” functioning separately from one another. “If the foot says, ‘Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body . . . ,’” then how would the whole body function as one body without feet (1 Co 12:15)? We must remember that “God has set the members, each one of them in the body, just as He has desired” (1 Co 12:18). The body, therefore, is one, and thus functions in unity.

We must keep in mind that when Paul wrote the above instructions of 1 Corinthians 12, he was speaking globally in reference to the church, not locally. Since the early church met in homes, most local assemblies were only a few people. But throughout a city, or region, there would have been many members. Therefore, there may have been only a “foot” that met in any particular home in Corinth, but another part of the body across town, or across Achaia, the audience to whom Paul directed both 1 & 2 Corinthians. When the global body functions with what every part supplies in all the assemblies, then the body does not simply function according to who shows up at any particular assembly. The one universal body functions with the necessity of all the parts of the body wherever they may be throughout the world.

No man or local group of men has the authority to set any part of the body above any other part of the body that may be located somewhere else. The function of the body, therefore, is the business of Jesus as He directs the global body from heaven through the authority of His word on earth (Jn 12:48; Rm 10:17). Therefore, there need be no local rulers and lords on earth to command the organic function of the body wherever it may exist. Upon the foundation of love, each part of the body throughout the world is energized to function equally and in unity with all parts of the body throughout the world (See Jn 13:34,35). No authorities on earth are needed. The body needs only one Head, one King, and one Lord, the Jesus Christ, who has authority over all things (Mt 28:18).

Research:

Book 47: Fellowship and Unity of the Organic Body
Book 55: Organic Function of the Body of Christ

Chapter 16

CHURCH: THE SERENDIPITY OF LOVING OTHERS

We were all physically born into this world as individuals. After our earthly journey, death will take all of us physically and individually out of this world. However, between birth and death there is the serendipity of the community of all of us who are on the same journey through life. All of us as individuals seek to help one another to make it through life in peace with one another and without loneliness.

We could choose to divorce ourselves from one another and live as hermits, but that would be unnatural. It would be contrary to how we as individuals were marvelously created as social beings. We were not created to live and die alone. We were emotionally wired to have someone say to us, “I love you, too.” Our desire to love and to be loved drives us to be connected to the collective of humanity. It is the same in reference to the church of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Because we as Christians are emotionally wired for community, we naturally seek out others who have likewise been spiritually born anew. “Church” is simply the plan of a Creator who designed us to function together socially as a collective of those who choose to be born again in order to be disciples of Christ. Though we are spiritually born anew individually into the universal body of Christ, it is not natural for us to function autonomously from the body in our spiritual relationship with all those who have likewise come individually into an obedient relationship with the Son of God.

Our innate desire to be with others who have been born again sends us as individuals on a quest. We seek to function in fellowship with the “church of the first-born ones” (Hb 12:23). It is for this reason that the body (church) is always defined in Scripture to be a relational function of all those individuals who have been individually born again, and thus lovingly function under the high priesthood of Jesus Christ. When our Founder stated that we would be identified by our love of one another, He was saying that we would be known by our relational function of love (Jn 13:34,35).

Jesus taught that His disciples would be defined by loving relationships, not as a legally defined corporate institution. Christians are identified by their mutual gratitude for the grace of God, not by the restriction of perfect law-keeping. Grace excludes justification through perfect keeping of law, but especially the restrictions of man-made laws (Rm 6:14). We are saved by grace through faith in God’s grace to save us (Ep 2:8).

Law challenges the relational nature of the body of Christ, for law sets aside mercy. But mercy rejoices over judgment according to law (Js 2:13). If we would seek to be under the legalities of the laws of man-made religious institutions, then there would continually be strife or competition among individual members of the universal collective (church). There would be continual dissension as to which lawgiver the members should follow in a legally structured organization. In our dissension as to which legally defined religious institution we would adhere, we would naturally denominate into our favorite groups. Lawgivers would choose their favorite names for their groups, and thus, offer options for us concerning which group to which we would “place membership.”

In legally defined institutions there is always competition “to climb a ladder of power” for influence and recognition. Where love should be exalted, seniority marginalizes the weak, or those who are unfamiliar with the accepted laws of the legally defined institution. Lordship always encourages competition. However, love always considers others before one’s self. Lordship always prevails in institutionally defined groups. But where fellowship is based on love, relational servanthood prevails. We must never forget that lordship among leaders in the body always marginalizes the Head of the body.

Legally defined institutions are defined by organizational structures that encourage lords, judges and lawgivers to reign. On the other hand, the New Testament definition of “church” is the relational behavior of the members with one another that is based on and defined by love (Jn 13:34,35). The more legally we define the church of Christ, therefore, the less relational the members become in their patience with one another through love. The relationship between lawgivers and judges is always strained.

The more the members focus on maintaining the institutional ordinances that define a man-made religious organization, the less they function relationally. The more the body of Christ is defined by institutional structures, the more stringent we seek to maintain legal codes that define our existence. We become legally stringent because we are afraid that we will lose what we believe defines who we are. Leadership in such institutional organizations turns from teaching the word of God to lords who see their duty to regiment the members of the body into conforming to legal structures that define the institution. Lords always function as regimenting leaders.

In lordship scenarios, relationships are always sacrificed in order to sustain the legalities that define the institution. It is for this reason that the religious institutions of men work contrary to the relational identity of those who have individually been born into the body of Christ. And it is also for this reason that the more we identify the body of Christ as a legal institution, the less relational the membership becomes, and subsequently, the more divided the members become in their debates over defining the legalities of the organized church. The problem with a legally defined church is that judges and lawgivers always seek to insert and bind their opinions. We thus end up squabbling over whose opinions must be legally bound in order to define who we are.

At the end of our journey in life, and when it is time for all of us to stand individually before the Creator in judgment, each one of us will not be held accountable for keeping or forsaking any legally bound opinions that were established by men to define a legal religious institution. Each one of us will be held accountable for his or her relational behavior with all other individuals of the body. “Love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness and self-control” are relational identities that are not enjoined on the members of the body through law (See Gl 5:22,23). They are inspired by love. Nevertheless, these are relational standards by which each member will be held accountable. And because the degree of each of these qualities in our lives always falls short of perfection, there must always be grace to make us perfect in Christ. Being judged by relational abstracts, therefore, must always be by God's grace and through our faith in Him to bring us into His glory (Rm 4:16). Grace and mercy, therefore, must always reign in the hearts of body members in order that we be at peace with one another.

That which destroys peace in the body are relational dysfunctions as "fornication, uncleanness, lewdness, idolatry, sorcery, hatred, strife, etc." (Gl 5:19-21). These behavioral dysfunctions are not based on the love by which the disciples of Jesus are to be identified (Jn 13:34,35). They identify those who are void of love for other members of the community of born again disciples. These "works of the flesh" are relational dysfunctions for which we will be held accountable, since being identified by such character qualities and behavioral practices disqualifies one from cohabiting with others in eternity. Social dysfunctions of the body on earth make it impossible for one to transition into an eternal society that will dwell in peace in the presence of God.

Individuals are born into a fellowship wherein they are held together as one body because of the fruit of the Spirit that is emulated by each member. The members of the body are identified as the collective body of Christ because of their relational function with one another through love. Their function through relational identities, therefore, results from their love for one another (Jn 13:34,35). When the New Testament historian stated, "Now all who believed were together and had all things in common," he was defining the relational function of the body according to the implementation of the fruit of the Spirit, not the submission of those who were born again to a legally defined institution (See Act 2:44). Those first believers knew little or nothing about "church," but they knew everything about Christ. And because they were obedient to Christ in their baptism for remission of their sins, they were church (At 2:38,41). They were born again through baptism into a relational function of love whereby each member was communally loved into eternal glory through the fruit of the Spirit. When members so function, any efforts to define the body through legal statutes pales away under the power of love. Keep in mind that the 3000 who were baptized in Acts 2 were not handed an outline that define "the church." They were church while they were still dripping from water.

It is for this reason that we must first identify the church through love, and not by the adherence of the members to legal identities. Do not be mistaken. We seek to be obedient to the commandments of God, but being so obedient without the love that generates the fruit of the Spirit in our lives, is futile in reference to salvation. Perfect attendance without love will not take anyone to heaven.

Chapter 17

GOING DOWN

It was just a few days past my tenth birthday when I found myself in a situation where, if I did not survive, I would undoubtedly enjoy no more birthday cakes. On our farm in central Kansas (U.S.A), my brother James and I were helping our father to empty a metal grain bin that was cooking hot inside at over 120° (about 50° C.). With our father on the outside of the bin in the truck, we were shoveling the grain inside the bin. Since the bin was full, there was a natural vortex created as the grain was being sucked down through an outlet at the bottom. We were in there to shovel the grain to the inviting vortex as grain was sucked toward the outlet below.

Whether unwilling, or just adventurous, I somehow stepped into the inviting vortex that sucked grain to the bottom of the bin. Once seized by the vortex, however, I realized that I was subject to the forces that be, and subsequently, as quicksand grasps its victims, I knew that I was in deep, deep trouble. I frantically started to grab for anything that would save me from my certain doom. But there was nothing within reach. Being now waist deep in a downward spiral of death, I frantically cried out to my brother. But the suction of the vortex downward was too great and my clawed grasp of his hands was to no avail.

The engine of the auger outside was noisily blasting away as my father was shoveling grain in the truck. As I was approaching neck deep unto death by suffocation, and going down fast, my brother screamed above the noise of the engine to our father in the truck. Everything seemed to go into slow motion in a surreal experience of certain death. I knew that I was helplessly subject to the forces of the vortex as panic took over every emotion of my senses.

But help was there immediately. My father leaped from the truck to the opening in the granary. He immediately grabbed my desperate outstretched hands. I was in terror mode with eyes of horror that surely motivated my father to respond with the reassuring words, “I got ya, son. It’s ok now.” I can never in words explain to you the peaceful sensation of salvation that swept over me. A sense of being saved permeated my very being as my father gently pulled me from the grasping fans of the vortex of death. I would enjoy another birthday cake.

Never think that I cannot understand the release of death-threatening anxiety that surely came over the fisherman Peter when he too experienced a similar moment as a new disciple of Jesus. All the facts of his ordeal were recorded by Matthew, who was there, and Mark, who had heard the apostles speak many times about Peter’s “vortex of death” (Mt 14:22-32; Mk 6:45-52).

It was the middle of the night. The disciples had been laboriously struggling against persistent stormy winds throughout the night. They were experienced fisherman who knew the sea, and thus all surely concluded that they would probably not survive the night. They had unquestionably obeyed the command of Jesus to board a small boat in order to go to the other side of the Sea of Tiberias. But it was one of those times when, because of their knowledge of the sea, their confidence in Jesus had to overcome their apprehension about sailing the sea at night. Regardless of their questionable sailing in the middle of the night, impetuous Peter just made things worse for himself.

A not uncommon storm arose in the night over the sea. The disciples subsequently struggled against a fierce head wind. And then, something faint appeared in the midst of the darkness. The frightened disciples looked out over the cold dark sea and through blackness that could be cut with a knife. In horror, their eyes were immediately drawn to something that emitted light, but could not be identified. And being people of the time who were often spooked with supposed spirits and ghosts, their creative minds conjured up an erroneous conclusion. “It is a spirit, a ghost,” they cried out in terror to one another. It was neither. In fact, it was Jesus who was walking parallel to them if He had not stopped to address their real life drama. So with reassuring words, Jesus looked their way and responded, “Be of good cheer. It is I. Do not be afraid.”

Everything would have gone right at the time except for Peter. He always wanted to go one step further to test the boundaries of his faith. And so, as we all do at times, he said the most stupid thing. “Lord, if it is You, command me to come to You on the water.” Who in his right mind would be so inept that he would say such a thing in the midst of a stormy sea? Well, probably all of us. Forest Gump’s mother was right about us: “Stupid is, stupid does.” This was a Forest Gump moment for Peter . . . and the rest of us.

The answer that Peter surely did not want to hear came immediately back from Jesus: “Come!” In our impetuous humanity we too often open ourselves up for disaster. As Peter, we get our minds running before our brain is in gear. We are the victim of our own bad choices. Our arrogance leads us to places from which we cannot, on our own, return. We often play out in our lives the theme of the old song of Johnny Cash: “I fell into a burning ring of fire. I went down, down, down, and the flames went higher.” And being trapped by our own bad choices, the fire “burns, burns, burns.”

In the agony of defeat, we come to our senses that we don’t like the storm of life we have created for ourselves. So we make a desperate choice to fall for some mental placebos that we think will deliver us from the vortex of death into which we have cast ourselves. We then try for another “fix” by buying more pills, and thus satisfy ourselves with a temporary euphoria until our self-made remedies wear off. So out of desperation of knowing the terminal results of our “ring of fire,” we will follow after the command of any ghost. But in Peter’s case, it was not a self-imagined ghost. It was really Jesus.

But following the command of Jesus to “Come,” does not release us from our responsibility that we must take ownership of our own predicament. In his walk on water to Jesus, Peter neared within arm’s reach of his Savior. But being reassured that Jesus was close, he had a moment of himself. He took his focus off Jesus. And in doing such, he placed himself in his own vortex of death.

“When he saw the wind, he was afraid.” Life is an environment of one storm after another. There are always stormy winds that seek to take us down. And Peter was going down. It was not a slow sink into the watery vortex of death. He was going down fast, so fast that he cried out to Jesus, “Lord, save me!” By faith, Peter had stepped out of the boat. He had taken the watery walk to Jesus by focusing on Jesus. But in a moment of himself, he found himself helplessly plunging down into a grave of water. Ever been there? Maybe you are there now?

“And immediately Jesus stretched out His hand and caught him.” Peter was going down so fast that he needed to be caught by Jesus. And when Jesus caught him, how do you think Peter grasped His hand? I know you want to ask me how tightly he clung to the hands of Jesus.

When we cry out to the right Person, we will be caught out of any self-made vortex of death that is taking us down. But we must first reach out in desperation to our Father. It is He who is always there with the reassuring words, “I got ya, son. It’s ok now.” And so, Peter, too, would enjoy another birthday cake.

Chapter 18

THE BUNNY LIBERATORS

“If you boys don’t let that rabbit out of that box, he will die.” So said our mother to my brother and me in reference to a fluffy baby bunny rabbit we had just captured from running free in a field on our Kansas farm. She knew that one could not pluck a young bunny from the freedom of the wild and expect it to survive in bondage. Nevertheless, for both of us bunny snatchers, the bunny was just too cute and cuddly to let go. And besides, we had captured him by running to and fro in the field until we were exhausted. We wanted to secure our first bunny catch in the bondage of our box as our own pet.

My brother and I had not yet reached our teens when our mother taught us our first lesson about freedom. It was a lesson from nature, for God had created all living creatures to be free. Nevertheless, my brother and I were persistent captors. We were going to keep the prize of our pursuit in the bondage of a box that we deemed better for the small helpless bunny than allowing him to run free in the wild. After all, in our box the cuddly little bunny was safe from hawks and crows who could swoop down from the skies in order to snatch unsuspecting bunnies for a tasty meal, or from a snake that might be lurking in the grass.

It was not that we did not care for the little soft bunny. We picked grass for him to eat and placed a cup of water in the box for him to drink. We were sincere in our efforts to care for the captured creature. But at the end of the first day of captivity, the poor bunny had not even sniffed the food, nor touched the water. So we poured out more gracious gifts upon him by giving him store-bought celery and lettuce from our mother’s refrigerator. He still refused to eat. He simply cowed in the corner of the box, shaking from fear of the two giant captors who had snatched him from the freedom of the wild and stuffed him into a confining environment which he had not chosen to be born.

After two days in bondage, our mother again rehearsed her original message: “You still have that rabbit in that box? I told you, he will die!” And looking upon the poor creature who had refused to eat and drink for two days, we relinquished to mercy and the wise counsel of our mother. We lifted the now frail bunny from the bondage of the box, took him back to the field, and then released him into freedom. We left him there, somewhat guilty because we had not heeded the wisdom of our mother concerning creatures of the farm. We do not know what happened to that little fluff. We kept telling ourselves that our selfish desires to overpower and keep him in our bondage did not suck out of him all his instincts to survive in freedom. We hoped he had wandered off and eaten a fresh blade of green grass and taken a refreshing drink from the dew of a plant, and thus, lived a long life. But we can bear testimony to our own hearts. It truly felt good to set him free. We were converted from being captors of death to “bunny liberators.”

We caught more small bunnies after the boxed bunny incident, but we never again held them in captivity. We would run after and catch them, rub their furry ears, and then release them again into freedom. It just felt good to release them.

In a related experience, we once heard a high pitched squeal in the grass near our old farm house. We were guided by the sound to its source. We were astonished to find a small bunny about half way down the throat of a Kansas bull snake. Now that we were “bunny liberators,” and not captors of death as the snake, the snake was immediately dispatched and the now fortunate bunny set free. He ran off joyfully into the freedom of the wild, being a little more cautious about slithering predators of death that lurked in the grass. We felt joyful about saving the hapless creature, but not half as joyful as the bunny whose beckoning cries had reached the ears of the “bunny liberators.”

The gospel of freedom was first preached in the regions of Galatia by a liberator named Paul, a former liberated captive from the bondage of a religious box. Those who willingly heard and heeded his message of the freedom of the cross and resurrection were immersed out of a box of legal Judaism and into the freedom that is in Christ (Gl 3:26-29). The first converts of Galatia were born again into what James called the “perfect law of freedom” (Js 1:25). It was a realm of freedom, because under the law of Christ, believers are guarded from living again under a legal code of boxed law. They were set free by the law of faith (Rm 3:27). As long as the disciples in Galatia lived under the freedom that they received through the law of faith, they would “live and prosper” (Spock).

But there was a lurking problem in Galatia. There were snakes in the grass. It was a threat of legal-oriented religious captors who sought to bring the free back into the bondage of their religious boxes. “Box makers” were thus lurking among the free in order to confine the free. Paul warned, “They zealously recruit you, but not for good” (Gl 4:17). The religious “box makers” were seeking those whom they could capture and confine in the bondage of their legal boxes. They were recruiters who ran across Galatia in order to bind their opinions as law upon the consciences of the free. Through threats of intimidation and excommunication, they recruited the free in order to bring them into the bondage of their death boxes. They were pursuers of the free “who sneaked in to spy out our freedom that we have in Christ Jesus” (Gl 2:4). Once they had collected together a group of captured “bunnies,” they would lord over them with deceptive religiosity that they thought would sustain spiritual life, but actually was the behavior of bondage. They came in among the free in order “that they might bring us into bondage,” into the bondage of their own legal boxes (Gl 2:4).

It is true that those who are in bondage usually never realize that they are in bondage, especially those who know nothing about the scriptures we have herein referred. Those in bondage usually feel reassured by their religious heritage. They feel confident in the defense of the traditions of their fathers. Or, they may feel validated by concert assemblies that excite the emotions, but disguise true worship. Bondage is always a deceptive thing to those who religiously behave and believe outside the freedom of the word of God.

“Recruiters” for bondage assume that they are doing that which is right by placing the captured into what becomes a box of death. In their diligence to recruit those who were once born into freedom, they seek to lord over their autonomous boxes until the free are starved to death by proclamations of legal religiosity or exhausted with religious performances.

Those who are in religious boxes sometimes realize that something is wrong. Bondage is just not natural. However, for those who have been institutionalized by bondage, it is difficult to discover freedom. It is difficult for them to remember the freedom they once enjoyed when they first came forth into freedom by their obedience to the gospel. So they languish in stagnation, or religious euphoria, while being reminded every week by the proclamations and performances of those who have convinced them that legalities and religious ceremonies should be prioritized over faith, and in doing so, they can be “justified by works of law” before God. But the spies are wrong. They forget that “a man is not justified by works of law, but by the faith of Christ Jesus” (Gl 2:16).

The fact that one is born again into the freedom that is in Christ is evidenced by Paul’s concluding warning in his letter to the free: “Stand fast therefore in the freedom by which Christ has made us free, and do not be entangled again with a yoke of bondage” (Gl 5:1).

We can still hear an echo of our mother from the past: “If you keep that rabbit entangled in that box of bondage, he will die.” It feels good, therefore, to be a “bunny liberator” proclaiming freedom to the captives. It is a feeling of accomplishment to release those who were once held captive by religion in order that they run free in Christ. It is a victorious feeling to snatch the captives from the fangs of the old serpent. So we seek to find those in bondage in order to bring them the message of freedom. We, too, feel the spirit of Isaiah within our bones as he spoke prophetically of the Messiah:

The spirit of the Lord God is upon Me because the Lord has anointed Me to preach good news to the meek. He has sent Me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to those who are bound ...” (Is 61:1).

Book 71

Disciples Of Divinity

Many of the chapters of this book were taught by the author many years ago. Nevertheless, the message of the lessons are as relevant today as they were decades ago. Some of the metaphorical subpoints of a couple outlines have been preached for years by preachers around the world, though the content of the chapters in this book are original with the author. The message of the chapters must continue to be preached, and for this reason, they are contained in the Biblical Research Library in order to aid Bible teachers to better explain discipleship.

Old truths never die. The truth remains unchanged throughout time. The beautiful thing about the word of God is that its teachings remain unchanged and applicable for all people throughout the world. Illustrations of truths may be made more relevant—which thing we have tried to do in this book—but the truths of God’s word are as powerful today as they were centuries ago.

It is the struggle of the disciple of Divinity to be clothed in the aroma of the One after whom he calls himself a follower. The theme of this book was written to aid readers in their struggle to be like Jesus. We have approached this struggle from both a positive and negative perspective. We felt that it was necessary to approach the subject of discipleship from a negative side in order to lay the foundation for personal correction. If one can recognize his or her flaws, then he or she can implement positive corrections in order to grow as a disciple.

Every effort has been made to use the textbook of the Bible as the road map for personal development. Though some principles of psychology have been sourced, it has been the firm belief of the author that the Bible is the best textbook on life. Modern psychology has a tendency to follow the norms of modern society. Reference to such norms as the final authority in moral behavior often leads to social dysfunction and decay. For this reason, the Bible has been sourced for those principles that will sustain society. Because the early disciples survived in a hostile environment, and without all the modern books on psychology, through their discipleship they proved that the eternal principles of the Bible work. We have thus chosen to relate to our readers those biblical moral principles that have proven functional for centuries.

Each chapter of this book is designed to be presented for the benefit of those who are seeking to grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. No credit need be given to the author, for the author claims no copyright over any biblical truth that is revealed in the word of God. Readers are encouraged to feel free to help build up the body of Christ by teaching those eternal biblical truths that encourage relational behavior among the members. It is our prayer that the messages of this book will aid those Bible teachers who have a sincere desire to apply the word of God as our textbook on life. It is our prayer that in some way this book will aid these teachers to proclaim those eternal truths that encourage us to be better people by patterning our lives after Jesus.

A renowned poet can take a piece of paper, write a few words on it, and the paper will be worth millions. A wealthy man can write his name on a piece of paper and the paper check is worth millions. God can write His	name on a finite sinner and the sinner becomes far more valuable than anything of this world. The omnipresent God who can focus even on the hairs of the head of the created, has the compassion to transform that which is mortal into immortality. Even our inadequate understanding of the power and ability of this great God is enough to compel us to submission. Our slightest comprehension of the Incomprehensible humbles us to follow Him. And once we allow Him to write His name on us, we are far more valuable than the words of a poet or the worth of a millionaire. In His sight, we are priceless and worthy of eternity.
--	--

The foolish ones of this world who deny the existence of our God will never understand what and why we are as we are. They will never understand that it is the Great Violinist who creates the music, not the instrument by which the music is revealed to the audience. Disciples of Divinity allow God to play a majestic song for the world through them. The world thus sees Him through them. The God who created all things can create anew our lives in order that we reveal a harmonic melody of joy before the world.

When we allow God to be the needle, and us the thread, He will stitch our lives together into a beautiful garment that is fit for the King. Discipleship is our privilege to reveal to the world the One who holds us together. True discipleship reveals to the world that our lives are not of this world. And being not of this world, it is spiritually overwhelming to be in the control of His supervision in order that the world may see that we are “other world” minded. Since we have relinquished our lives to Him, He in turn has exalted us above angels. It is our earnest desire, therefore, to continue as His disciples in order to make our way into His presence at the sound of the last trumpet. Therefore, we seek to be the heart of God through whom He feels the pain of this world. We seek to be His mouth through whom He speaks the gospel of salvation to the world. And we seek to be His hands through whom He ministers to the needy of this world. We are disciples of Divinity.

Chapter 1

TOTALLY OFFERED SACRIFICES

Romans 12:1-8 is one of the greatest contexts of Scripture concerning instructions by which disciples throughout the world can connect with God and function with one another. It is a context that permeates all cultural barriers. No greater challenge to unity could have existed at the time when Paul wrote the statements of this context, than the cultural, philosophical and sociological separation that existed between the Jews and Gentiles. No Jew was to eat with a Gentile. No Jew was to be caught even in the house of a Gentile. Gentiles were tolerated by the Jews only because the Jews had to live in a world of Gentiles. And yet in this social environment, God instituted a fellowship of people wherein both Jews and Gentiles could be what is stated in the following social environment:

For you are all sons of God through faith in Christ Jesus.

For as many of you as were baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek. There is neither bondservant nor free. There is neither male nor female. For you are all one in Christ Jesus (Gl 3:26-28).

The comments of the text of Romans 12:1-8 follows Paul's arguments that the Gentiles have been grafted into the family of God through the sacrificial offering of the Son of God. They have been grafted in through faith. As some Jews were cut off because of unbelief, believing Gentiles were grafted into the true vine through faith.

Paul convincingly revealed,

“Some of the branches [Jews] were broken off, and you [Gentiles], being a wild olive tree were grafted in among them, and with them became a partaker of the root and fatness of the olive tree” (Rm 11:17).

Being grafted in, and maintaining the unity of this cultural fellowship, required a total commitment to the True Vine. In order to maintain the cultural identity of Christianity, one must forsake all those cultural identities that would harm the one body of Christ. This does not mean that Christians are to be culturally cloned. However, it does mean that there are to be no cultural barriers that would separate members of the body from one another. In order to accomplish this feat of fellowship, total commitment to the Head of the body is necessary. And if the Jews of the first century could accomplish this cultural feat, then there is absolutely no cultural barrier today that should keep members of the body separated from one another in Christ.

Discipleship to Divinity is not easy in reference to total commitment, especially in areas where individuals differ culturally. For this reason, we sometimes culturally fudge on the Holy Spirit's call for a total sacrifice. The Holy Spirit mandated that it will take “a living sacrifice” in order to behave according to the fellowship that must exist in preserving the unity of the faith. Each member of the body must be totally committed to being this sacrifice.

When the Spirit calls on us to present ourselves in total sacrifice to accomplish the mandate of cultural unity, we sometimes think about partial sacrifices, that is, how much we can keep ourselves culturally separated from sacrificing ourselves totally for those who are of a different cultural background. When Paul talks about total transformation in our thinking and behavior, we think more of a halfhearted commitment. We think doctrine, not culture. We thus put limits on our cultural identity, while we satisfy ourselves that we are still united as disciples of the One who gave up being on an equality with Deity culturally and in order to become in all ways culturally as finite humans (See Ph 2:5-11). We thus exalt “doctrinal unity” over “cultural unity.”

It is easier to be doctrinally united than culturally united. When we preach total commitment to one another, we sometimes justify those cultural traits that cause division, while at the same time assume that our doctrinal unity will cover the sins of our cultural division.

We forget that culture involves relationships, and Christianity is about relationships. Two brethren may be united doctrinally, but they abide in sin if they allow cultural differences to keep them divided from one another. This is the challenge about which Paul was writing when he came to the context of Romans 12. No individual disciple, or group of disciples, has a right to neglect a group who may be of a different cultural heritage (See At 6:1-7). Since both Jews and Gentiles have been grafted in by faith, then both Jews and Gentiles must accept one another in Christ through faith. And as he continues to explain throughout Romans 12, it is faith that moves both Jews and Gentiles to function as the one body.

A. Transitioning into a total walk.

“Therefore, I urge you, brethren ...” (Rm 12:1).

Paul begins the context of Romans 12 with the word “therefore.” “Therefore” is reflective. He wants his readers to reflect on the arguments that have been made in chapters 9-11 in order to make a relational commitment that is revealed in the context of chapter 12. In other words, because of the totality of the sacrificial work that God accomplished through the cross to graft both Jews and Gentiles into Christ through faith, then each disciple of faith must make the same commitment to be one in fellowship with the universal body of Christ.

This is taking up our cross and being a disciple of Jesus (Lk 14:27). Romans 12 is the spiritual conclusion to Paul’s arguments in the preceding chapters of Romans, but specifically the conclusion to the redemptive work of the Son of God who sacrificed Himself in order to graft the Gentiles into the true vine. Since the Jews were saved by grace, then they in turn must extend grace to the Gentiles. This is the disciple’s walk in gratitude and thanksgiving.

B. Walking reasonable worship:

“Therefore, I urge you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service” (Rm 12:1).

No greater call to discipleship could have been made. We commit ourselves to the One who became a heavenly disciple on our behalf in reference to our spiritual disconnection from God through our sins (See Is 59:2; Ph 2:5-11).

Since the behavior of the Israelites of the Old Testament is to be an example for our discipleship (Rm 15:4; 1 Co 10:6,11), what happened to some of the Israelites immediately after they came out of Egyptian bondage should be heeded. They were “baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea” (1 Co 10:2). They too “drank of the same spiritual drink, for they drank from the Spiritual Rock that followed them. And that Rock was Christ” (1 Co 10:4).

“But God was not pleased with many of them ...” (1 Co 10:5). God was not pleased with many of them because they did not give themselves totally into His care. They did not walk straight to the land of promise and conquer it through faith in the power of God to work through them. Because of their lack of faith, therefore, those who did not walk by faith were cut off. And when there is no total commitment today on the part of some who have been baptized into Christ, then there is the danger of being cut off for lack of faith. A faith that will not drive us to the promise land through obedience, is a dead faith that will maroon us in the wilderness of sin.

Paul used the word “sacrifice” as a metaphor in reference to our commitment. An Old Testament sacrifice was totally given for the purpose for which it was intended. No partial sacrifices were allowed under the Sinai law. Paul explained in Romans 6:13:

Neither present your members as instruments of unrighteousness to sin, but present yourselves to God, as those who are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness to God.

1. Living: The sacrifice of our lives must be living (total) and active (recognizable). Disciples cannot be monks who hide away in a monastery, and at the same time, profess a total commitment to discipleship. The totally committed life is relational. And to be relational, disciples must be totally committed to relate with one another. Disciples, therefore, must not be “lagging behind in diligence,” but “fervent in spirit, serving the Lord” (Rm 12:11). And “serving the Lord” means totally committed to serving others on behalf of the Lord. The totally committed disciple serves the Lord by serving others.

2. Holy: Purity (holiness) must be characteristic of those who have wholly committed themselves as a living sacrifice (See 1 Pt 1:15). It is a contradiction to claim that one is totally committed, but at the same time has not wholly given himself to function as a part of the body. The total sacrifice is the definition of holiness. The purity of one’s discipleship is identified in the fact that his sacrifice involves the whole of his or her life to function relationally with all members of the body.

3. Acceptable: Unless the sacrifice is living and total, then it cannot be acceptable to God. One could not drag a dead animal to the altar of sacrifice and expect it to be accepted by God. One could not offer only the hind quarters of the sacrificed animal. No sacrifice of the Sinai law was to be blemished. The prophet Habakkuk judged the people unrighteous because they sought to offer blemished sacrifices to the Lord, as well as robbing God by holding back all that was to be given in a tithe to the Lord (See Hk). Their sacrifices were not acceptable because they were partial or blemished.

In the case of Habakkuk’s generation, the people were “keeping back” the best sacrifices for themselves. In the same way, those who pose themselves to be totally committed Christians, often hold back the best for themselves. And those dead Christians (inactive) who drag themselves to the assembly on Sunday are fooling themselves. If the leadership judges their assembly to be dead, then it is composed of dead sacrifices sitting on pews.

Disciples to Divinity are “as living stones” who “are being built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ” (1 Pt 2:5). It is not difficult to understand what the preceding statement means. Jesus explained: “And you will love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your mind and with all your strength” (Mk 12:30). And again: “If anyone will come after Me,” Jesus continued to explain, “let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow Me” (Lk 9:23).

We live in a departmentalized world, the thinking of which is totally contrary to Paul’s definition of the total sacrifice. Our usual day begins in the morning with a departmentalized time for breakfast. We then move into the department of secular work. Once our work day is signed off with the sound of a bell, we close out the Work Department and move on to a variety of departments: Sports Department, Family Department, Date Department, Television Department, and Hobby Department.

On Sunday there is the Religion Department. Unfortunately, we have confined God to the Religion Department, opening up this department with an “opening prayer” and closing it off with a “closing prayer.” As long as God remains in His department, we are content to believe that we are His totally committed people between the “closing prayer” on Sunday morning and the “opening prayer” the following Sunday.

We forget that the totally committed life has no departments from which God is excluded. Totally sacrificed disciples establish all their “departments” on the basis that they are totally sacrificed disciples to the God of heaven every minute of their lives. The only closing bell one will hear in reference to his discipleship is the sound of his last breath on earth.

4. Reasonable service: Translators have a difficult time translating a word that is here used in the Greek text. The Greek word is latreia. The New International Version reads “spiritual act of worship.” The American Standard Version reads, “spiritual service,” with “worship” in the footnote. But in reflecting back to the word “therefore,” with which the text of Romans 12 was introduced, and the context of Paul’s argument in concluding the preceding chapters, the International King James Version might have a better reading: “Reasonable service.” In view of all that God has done for us, as explained by Paul to the end of chapter 11, it is only reasonable that we present our lives in active service (worship) to the Lord. There can be no limits to the totality of our service to God. For this reason, the totality of our lives is a worshipful response (service) to the grace of God.

The Greek word latreia has a meaningful definition in the context of its use in Romans 12:1. Of the 21 times it is used in the New Testament, the word is used to refer to worshipful behavior. It is for this reason that translators have a difficult time concerning whether to translate the word either “worship” or “service” in Romans 12:1. But as previously explained, the disciple’s walk in gratitude to the grace of God is a walk of worshipful service.

The “living sacrifice” of the context helps us to define how latreia is used in Romans 12:1. We are living sacrifices, and thus our worship is living. It is behavioral. And since the living sacrifice cannot be departmentalized, then the latreia of this context cannot be departmentalized. Therefore, the latreia of Romans 12:1 is a life-style of worshipful service. It is a vertical relationship with God in order to have a horizontal relationship with the fellow members of the body of Christ.

This is often difficult for some to understand, especially if they come from a background of departmentalized religiosity. It is difficult because so many have confined their worship to a ritualistic performance of ceremonies that are claimed to be worship, which ceremonies are often used to identity whether we are “church.” Once the ceremonies (“acts”) of the Church Department are completed, and signed off with a “closing prayer,” then it is assumed that we are no longer in worship. “Brother, John, would you lead the ‘closing prayer’ to conclude our worship?” Ever hear that request?

A ceremonial “hour of worship” does not fit into the context of Romans 12:1. It is certain that one worships during the “hour of worship.” But it is also certain that the one who is a living sacrifice worships outside the confines of an “opening and closing prayer” and the ceremonial “hour of worship.”

The living sacrifice does not confine worship to either locations or ceremonies. The totality of his life is a response to the One to whom he has given his life as a sacrifice. His eating a fine lunch is not an “act of worship,” but he worshipfully eats in gratitude to the One who gave the food to be eaten. He drives his bicycle or vehicle, not as an act of worship, but in worshipful thanksgiving of the One who gives all things. All that the living sacrifice either owns or enjoys is appreciated because he recognizes the Great Giver and Provider of all things. His life, therefore, is a worshipful response to the One he recognizes to be the God of all things. His life, therefore, is a natural (reasonable) response (worship) of the one true and living God. His life can be nothing other than “reasonable worship” in view of all that he has and does.

All that the living sacrifice has and does is not a demand on his life. In view of the cross of Christ, it is only natural to present oneself totally to the One who gave Himself totally for all of us. And in looking into the future to what will eventually be given, the living sacrifice gives the totality of his life in worshipful service of the One who will eventually give eternal life.

For I consider that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that will be revealed to us (Rm 8:18).

C. Walking the transformed life:

“And be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your minds, so that you may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God” (Rm 12:2).

James used the word “adultery” in a spiritual context in James 4:4. He used the word metaphorically in order to refer to those who were spiritual covenant breakers. “You adulteresses, do you not know that friendship with the world is enmity with God?” (Js 4:4).

If one would be transformed into the spiritual image of Jesus, then there must be struggle to divorce one’s mind from this world. Those who would seek to be totally committed to being a living sacrifice, and yet, try to be married to the world, are committing spiritual adultery. “But if anyone loves the world,” John explained, “the love of the Father is not in him” (1 Jn 2:15).

“No man can serve two masters, for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will be devoted to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve God and wealth” (Mt 6:24).

The explanation is as Phillips’ translation of Matthew 6:24: “Don’t let the world around you squeeze you into its own mold.” The Greek word in the text that is translated “transformed” in Romans 12:2 is metamorphousthe (metamorphosis). Disciples of Divinity have morphed out of the mentality of the world and into the thinking of God. They have transcended in mind to the One who is transcendent in all our lives. It is as the Holy Spirit explained:

If you then were raised with Christ, seek those things that are above, where Christ is sitting at the right hand of God. Set your mind on things above, not on things on the earth (Cl 3:1,2).

In order to transform (morph) our thinking from the world to things that are above, we must do as Paul exhorted the Ephesians: “Be renewed in the spirit of your mind” (Ep 4:23). When we connect Colossians 3:1,2 with Ephesians 4:23, we understand that when one is born anew from the waters of baptism, there is a renewal of focus. After obedience to the gospel, one focuses on those things that are above. The change in focus leads to the renewal. Because there is a refocus, then there can be a transformation. A metamorphosis takes place in one’s behavior because there has been a change in one’s focus. The change from focusing on the things of this world to things that are not of this world, transforms (morphs) us into being the living sacrifice. The refocus defines the living sacrifice.

When there is a change in our focus, there will subsequently be “proof” in our lives concerning what is the “good and acceptable and perfect will of God.” In other words, our focus on those things that are above leads to a change in our behavior. And by a changed behavior, one has proved in his life that the will of God has become the foundation upon which he bases his thinking. “Your-will-be-done-on-earth-as-it-is-in-heaven” identifies the morphed Christian (Mt 6:10).

For example, it is as John wrote: “We love because He first loved us” (1 Jn 4:19). The more we focus on the God who loved us through Jesus (Jn 3:16), the more we walk in gratitude of His will to love others. Herein is the love by which the disciples of Jesus are identified (Jn 13:34,35). Our love of others is the proof that His love has permeated our lives. Paul explained:

Let love be without hypocrisy. Abhor what is evil. Cling to what is good. Be kindly affectionate to one another with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another (1 Co 12:9,10).

D. Walking the humble life:

“For I say through the grace given to me, to every one that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think, but to think soberly, according as God has dealt to each one a measure of faith” (Rm 12:3).

1. To everyone: The mandate of this text is relational in reference to every Christian. Solomon was right: “For men to seek their own glory is not glory” (Pv 25:27). Pride destroys relationships because it pits one disciple against another. Arrogance moves one to exalt himself over his fellow servant in Christ. When one seeks his own glory, he often moves into “deglorifying” others.

In the sociological context of Romans 12:3, Paul is hitting directly at the pride of the Jews against the grafted in Gentiles. It must be noted what a particular transformed Jewish disciple [Peter] at one time said to a Gentile unbeliever [Cornelius] who had invited the Jew into his home, the following: “Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons. But in every nation he who fears Him and works righteousness is accepted by Him” (At 10:34,35).

By the time Paul arrived at the context of Romans 12, it seems that a reverse cultural prejudice was taking place among the Gentile disciples. He explained this in chapter 11:17-21. The Gentiles were the “wild olive trees” who were grafted into the first Christians who were Jews (Rm 11:17). The Gentiles thus partook of the root and fatness of the Jewish heritage of salvation that came through the Jews. For some reason, some of the Gentile disciples marginalized the importance of this salvational heritage that came through Israel. But Paul answered, “... do not boast against the branches. But if you [Gentiles] boast, remember that you do not support the root [Israel], but the root you” (Rm 11:18).

When Jewish branches were broken off because of their unbelief, the Gentile branches were grafted in because of their faith (Rm 11:19). However, the Gentile branches must not forget that they stand as grafted in branches because of faith (Rm 11:20). For this reason, there is no room for arrogance, but only fear lest one fall because of unbelief. So Paul’s warning to the Gentile branches was direct: “For if God spared not the natural branches [the Jews], take heed lest He also not spare you [the Gentiles]” (Rm 11:21).

2. Sobering thoughts: When discussing the transformed life of the disciple, therefore, there is never room for boasting and arrogance in reference to one’s religious heritage. The Jews came to Christ with a heritage of the one true and living God. The Gentiles came to Christ with the heritage of idolatry. But in Christ “there is neither Jew nor Greek [Gentile]. There is neither bondservant nor free. There is neither male nor female. For you are all one in Christ Jesus” (Gl 3:28).

This truth should inspire sobriety on the part of everyone who comes into Christ through obedience to the gospel. When Paul wrote concerning our resurrection with Christ out of the waters of baptism, he spoke of “walking in newness of life” (Rm 6:4). He was referring to the mind that had been transformed from focusing on the world and self to focusing on God. And since we stand by a faith that focuses on God, then we must be careful not to lose our focus.

3. A measure of faith: “Measure of faith” is defined in Romans 12:3 according to the consistent definition by which we must always understand faith. In verse 4 Paul explained that “... all members do not have the same function.” Verses 3 and 4 connect faith and function. When interpreters define faith as a simple mental ascent of belief without works, they have fallen victim to a twisted understanding of the faith by which disciples of Divinity are to be defined. We must never disconnect faith from function, for if we do, we will end up with a dead faith.

It seems that some of James’ audience had fallen victim to believing that one could be a living sacrifice by disconnecting faith from function. “What does it profit,” James questioned these people, “if someone says he has faith but does not have works [function]? Can faith [alone] save him?” (Js 2:14). James’ inspired answer to the question was direct: “Even so faith by itself, if it does not have works, is dead” (Js 2:17).

No disciple can defend his discipleship on the basis of faith only. If he does, then his faith is dead. If there is no function as a result of our faith, then our faith is not acceptable before God. Both Paul and James agree. If our faith does not motivate one to function as a living sacrifice, then our faith is dead. We are living in the deception of our own lethargy.

Paul answers the “faith only” advocates in a positive manner. The body is universal. Local members manifest the working faith of the universal body, and thus, the universal body is defined by the “measure of [functioning] faith” that is given to each local member to minister to the body with universal results.

Chapter 2

MEMBERS OF ONE ANOTHER

Romans 12:5 is often overlooked in reference to the function of the body of Christ. As a fellow member of the universal body writing from Macedonia to his fellow members in Rome, Paul reminded the Roman members that we “are one body in Christ, and everyone members of one another.” Being a member of the body means that each member is a member of one another. Our needs are ministered to by one another because of our spiritual attachment to one another in Christ. Our membership of the body of Christ, therefore, means that we are connected to one another as ministers to minister to one another wherever and whenever possible.

Each member of the universal body is gifted to function on behalf of Jesus in order to reveal the mutual ministry of the members of the one body. “So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and everyone members one of another” (Rm 12:5). 1 Corinthians 12:12-18 is the commentary passage on what Paul reveals in Romans 12:5: “For as the body is one and has many members, and all the members of the one body, though they are many, are one body, so also is Christ” (1 Co 12:12). Paul was speaking in reference to the universal body of Christ. He reminded the Achaian members concerning the oneness of this body of many members: “For the body is not one member, but many” (1 Co 12:14). And because the body is one universally, then a member that is a “foot” that may be in Ephesus cannot say to an “eye” that may be in Corinth, “I am not of the body,” and thus disconnect from the universal membership of the body of Christ (1 Co 12:16). Members function locally because of faith, and thus they function universally because they are connected to the one universal body. No one member has a right to disconnect from any other member regardless of where any particular member lives in the world.

Peter’s letter of 1 Peter is a good example of how this works. Peter wrote specifically to Jewish Christians of the Jewish Dispersion (1 Pt 1:1). These Jewish Christians were scattered throughout the provinces of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia (1 Pt 1:1). Imagine the distance these Christians lived from one another? Most certainly did not know one another, but may only have known of one another. Nevertheless, in 1 Peter 4 Peter wrote to these scattered members to “be hospitable one to another without grumbling” (1 Pt 4:9). Every Christian has the responsibility of opening up his house to any traveling Christian. Though he may not have previously known a particular traveling member, fellowship in Christ goes beyond knowledge of other members. (See At 18:1-3 when Aquila and Priscilla took in Paul.)

In reference to the function of the universal body, Peter exhorted all these Christians who were scattered throughout all the previously mentioned Roman provinces: “As each one has received a gift, minister it to one another as good stewards of the manifold grace of God” (1 Pt 4:10). This is the membership of the body functioning universally as the global family of God.

A very good example of this universal function is the publication of this book. This book was written by a member of the body in South Africa. However, proof reading of the manuscript was conducted by members of the body in America. The webmaster in America functioned to add the book to the Biblical Research Library on the Internet. It was then distributed by members of the worldwide body from the Internet, and then electronically circulated to all the world through emails and the Internet by members of the body. This is the one universal body of Christ functioning as a united force to teach the word of God to people throughout the world.

In the historical context of both Paul and Peter, each writer wanted the individual members of the body not to forget that the whole universal body is made up of individual Jews and Gentiles. For this reason there can be no disconnection of members in reference to race or location, when functioning as the universal church. The members of the body, all of whom are gifted, can never be autonomous from one another. When any group of members bunches up and claims independence from any other group of members, then they are not functioning as a part of the whole body. They are saying in their declaration of autonomy that “we are not of the body,” or “we are the only body of disciples.” If it is wrong for any one member of the body to declare his or her autonomy from any other member of the body, then it is also wrong and divisive for any group of disciples to declare their function to be autonomous from any other group of disciples. The universal body is not composed of a consortium of autonomous local bodies. It is one body, though members have a right to organize together locally in order to accomplish unique functions.

We must never forget as universal disciples of Divinity that “God has set the members, each one of them [universally] in the body, just as He has desired” (1 Co 12:18). This is another way of saying, “And the Lord added to their number daily those who were being saved,” or as the King James’ rendering of Acts 2:47, “And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.”

When individual members of the universal body function as one body, then the body grows. It grows when each disciple is connected directly to Christ, ...

... from whom the whole body being fitted and held together by what every joint supplies, according to the effective working of each part, causes growth of the body to the edifying of itself in love (Ep 4:16).

All gifts of every member of the body throughout the world are necessary for the building up of the body universally. Therefore, disciples must think universally, not just locally, when considering the importance of their gifts to build up of the body of Christ. The point is that all parts (gifted members) of the body are not all the same, but function in harmony as parts of the same body. When one part works, therefore, he or she functions as one with all other parts of the body throughout the world. When one works in teaching (“prophecy”), then he or she works for the benefit of the one universal body. When one works through serving (“ministry”), then he or she is working to serve the whole body. When one works to edify (“exhortation”), then he or she is working to encourage the body to function to the glory of God. Every member of the one universal body is necessary and gifted for the growth of the body throughout the world.

Paul concludes the context of Romans 12 with a “relational constitution” concerning the unified function of all disciples of Divinity (Rm 12:9-21). In his concluding remarks, he uses words as “love,” “kind,” “diligence,” “serving,” “perseverance,” “contributing,” “blessing,” and “rejoicing.” All these words explain the relational function of the members of the one universal body of Christ. These are the marks that identify the nature of the true body. It is by the implementation of these relational marks of identity that the whole body overcomes all evil of this world (Rm 12:21).

Chapter 3

ENEMIES OF DISCIPLESHIP

When we were children in America during the 1950s we grew up being constantly reminded by the slogan, “Bit by bit by every little bit - - EVERY LITTER BIT HURTS.”

We were taught to keep America clean. As school children we were taught never to discard any trash, no matter how small it might be, without discarding it in a trash bin or appropriate disposal container. Automobile owners were instructed to always have a trash bag in their vehicles. No trash was ever to be thrown out the window of a vehicle. When driving down a road, we were constantly reminded with warning signs along the road that read: “UP TO $500 FINE IF CONVICTED OF LITTERING!” And since 25 cents was a great deal of money to a young boy in those days, we were fearful of ever throwing any rubbish out the vehicle window.

The advertisements and warnings changed America. America cleaned up. Even to this day, we are compelled to always dispose of waste in an appropriate container or rubbish bin. It is a part of the culture. America was cleaned up bit by bit, by every litter bit.

Oceans are maintained by small rain drops. Beaches are composed of small grains of sand. All matter in the universe is a combination of atoms that the eye cannot see. And when discussing the energy of the organic body of Christ, each individual member “bit” throughout the world is a small force. When these small forces are united with one another, they compose a mighty army against the forces of evil. Great things happen when little bits work together. But also, a great tragedy happens when little bits become a detriment to the whole, especially if they are little bits of evil in our lives.

When little bits of unrighteousness are allowed to invade the behavior of each member of the body, then the body becomes diseased. Though we are strong when united, we as individual members of the body can individually deteriorate spiritually with the smallest of evils that may seem harmless in our lives. James reminded all of us: “Even so, the tongue is a little member and boasts great things. See how great a forest is set aflame by a small fire!” (Js 3:5). Every little harsh word hurts. Little bits can trash our souls.

We must not forget the Holy Spirit’s warning: “For God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it is good or whether it is evil” (Ec 12:14). We will give account for every little bit of sin that may litter our souls. With the Spirit’s words on their minds, the early disciples heard the Master warn, “But I say to you, that every idle word that men will speak, they will give account for it in the day of judgment” (Mt 12:36). Every little bit hurts.

As disciples of Divinity, we must keep in mind that every bit of trash in our lives hurts our relationship with one another, but especially our relationship with God. It is for this reason that Christians must be on the lookout for those small things in their hearts and minds that will lead them away from God, and subsequently, destroy their discipleship.

We each have our “demons” with which we must deal, and thus, it takes more than ourselves to slay these unrighteous attitudes and behavioral traits. It was for this reason that James mandated, “Confess your sins [‘demons’] to one another and pray for one another so that you may be healed” (Js 5:16). Through individual prayer, we can receive power to overcome. But many times, we need the prayers of our brothers and sisters in Christ in order to overcome those bits of trash in our lives that persistently plague our efforts to be the living sacrifice we desire to be. When “demons” persist, then it is time to call in the army of our brothers and sisters in Christ to offer up prayers for us.

A. Little bits of error hurt.

Disciples of Divinity must caution themselves in two areas in reference to self-inflicted spiritual harm:

1. Little bits of lordship: Paul saw something coming in the future of the church in Ephesus. On his last visit there, he warned the elders of Ephesus, “From your own selves will men arise, speaking perverse things ...” (At 20:30). When men start leading others away from total commitment to the Lord to commitment to themselves as lords over the flock, then perverse things are being spoken. When leaders start standing between the Head of the body and the members, then new lords are rising up.

Apostasy to a worldwide system of church control among the disciples arises when individuals would speak perverse things. Diotrephes was an individual disciple who assumed control over those whom he had direct influence (3 Jn 9,10). He spoke perverse things of others in order to maintain his control. John called such behavior evil (3 Jn 11). What Paul saw was coming in autocratic leadership in Ephesus, Diotrephes was practicing. Peter realized such leadership was in existence at the time he wrote. He rebuked the would be lords in 1 Peter 5:1-3: “Shepherd the flock that is among you ... not under compulsion ... nor being lords ....”

When just one leader is allowed to be a lord over any other member of the body, then a little bit of apostasy is arising, that if not checked, will eventually lead to a worldwide hierarchy of leadership. We must never forget that we are fellow servants in the kingdom. We work with one another as servants. We do not function as one disciple over another (See Mk 10:35-45). There is no hierarchy among slaves. Once discipleship involves one disciple working over another disciple, then we are on the road to an apostasy to lordship leadership.

2. Little bits of error: Paul’s warning in Galatians 1:8 was stark: “But even if we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel to you than what we have preached to you, let him be accursed.” Paul’s warning was harsh because he knew that “the time will come when they will not endure sound teaching” (2 Tm 4:3).

Because all of us have a little “Athenian” in us, we are always searching for some “new thing” (At 17:21). And because we are always searching, we are often “tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of teaching” (Ep 4:14). When our searching turns from searching the Scriptures to searching the vain philosophies of the world, then we are in trouble.

Following doctrines of demons will cause one to lose his discipleship. Being a disciple means that we are a disciple of Divinity, and being a disciple of Divinity means that we seek to follow the teachings of God. It is as simple as what Jesus said in Matthew 7:21: “Not every one who says to Me, ‘Lord, Lord,’ will enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he who does the will of My Father who is in heaven.” Those who do not follow the “will of the Father” are certainly not disciples of the Father. Those who allow their discipleship to be eroded by every wind of doctrine that passes through will lose what they have in their relationship with Divinity, which relationship is based on a knowledge of and obedience to the word of God. We must be cautious about losing that which we have, as the Hebrew writer cautioned his readers: “Looking carefully lest any man falls short of the grace of God; least any root of bitterness springing up causes trouble, and by it many be defiled” (Hb 12:15).

B. Little bits of indifference hurt.

In order not to be deceived, those who were in Berea “searched the Scriptures daily” (At 17:11). They were not indifferent in reference to their beliefs. They were diligent to keep their thinking in tune with the word of God (2 Tm 2:15). They based their beliefs on the word of God, and when anyone came through town teaching something they did not know or understand, they searched their Bibles.

1. Indifference to teaching: It seems that the disciples to whom the Hebrew writer wrote were becoming indifferent to that which they first learned and believed. But the Hebrew writer responded to this indifference with words that should be a warning to every member of the body: “How will we escape if we neglect such a great salvation ...” (Hb 2:3).

If we become indifferent to the truth that brought us into discipleship with God, then we will not escape if we ignore its importance in our relationship with God. What we believe is important, especially in reference to those fundamental truths upon which our faith is based. If we become indifferent to that which must be believed in order to inherit salvation, then we are on the road to destruction. The Hebrew writer, therefore, concluded his reminder of essential teachings that must be believed by reminding his readers, “But we are not of those who draw back to destruction, but of those who believe to the saving of the soul” (Hb 10:39).

2. Indifference to relational discipleship: By “relational discipleship” we mean that Christians must function in fellowship with one another as members of the body. Each member has a responsibility to associate (assemble) with other members in order to encourage love and good works (See Hb 10:24,25). Members of the body are to love one another, and loving one another means functioning in some way with one another (See Jn 13:34,35; 1 Pt 2:17).

Christians coming together in a one-on-one social and worshipful context is a beginning to a loving function as members one with another. But there is no progress in their relationships with one another until they are bound together in love. When disciples begin working together, it is then that they will be successful as disciples of Divinity and in manifesting their love for one another. Sitting together in assemblies, no matter how energetic the assemblies may be, will not generate the love for one another that we should have. We do no good works together while sitting on pews. It is only when the members of the body function together outside the assembly that love is produced and results realized.

When Jesus said, “I and My Father are one,” He meant that they were one in function at the time He made this statement during His earthly ministry (Jn 10:30). He had given up being on an equality with the Father at the time He made the statement (Ph 2:5-8). However, in the flesh of man, He was still one with the Father in the purpose for which He came into the world. As long as He functioned in His redemptive ministry, He was one with the Father. And so it is in our function with one another for His purpose.

Our discipleship on earth depends on our being one with Jesus. He is now in heaven, but we are one with Him by functioning after the same purpose for which He came into this world. While on earth, Jesus said, “For the Son of Man has come to seek and to save that which was lost” (Lk 19:10). When we function in seeking and saving the lost, then we are one with Jesus and with one another. This is the living sacrifice about which Paul wrote. Those who become indifferent to Jesus, will become indifferent to their sacrificial walk with Jesus. When we become indifferent in seeking and saving the lost together, then we are endangering our oneness with the One after whom we call ourselves disciples.

C. Little bits of bad attitude hurt.

Attitude is the foundation upon which relationships are constructed. This is what Paul meant when he wrote, “Be kindly affectionate to one another with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another” (Rm 12:10). In reference to relationships, this is being “rooted and grounded in love” (Ep 3:17). In order to be the type of disciples that Jesus would have us be, then we must “let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and slander be put away ... with all malice” (Ep 4:31). In doing this, we must “be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another ...” (Ep 4:32). In order to accomplish these relational tasks, each member must associate (function) with other members.

When we harbor unfriendliness, and thus are inhospitable to one another, then our relationships with one another are broken. If we confine our function as the body of Christ only to assemblies, then we will often allow our social inadequacies outside the assembly to keep us away from one another. We must keep in mind that friendships are developed over a long period of time, but are destroyed with just one careless word or act of unkindness. Harsh attitudes cause wounds that may never be repaired. A crushed piece of paper will always bear the scars of being crushed. For this reason, members of the body must continually function together in order to constantly “iron out” any wrinkles that would keep them from one another.

There are those who are always looking for the bright side of things, which is being positive about life. However, there are those also who are always trying to polish up that which is tarnished. The attitude of a disciple must always be a polishing cloth that must be used to put a shine on the hearts of the disheartened. Every bit of bad attitude tarnishes relationships. But every bit of kindness, joy and appreciation puts a shine on a tarnished surface. In order to polish the tarnished, however, there must be contact between the polishing cloth and that which is tarnished.

D. Little bits of covetousness hurt.

Some poetic preacher once wrote in a church bulletin,

He always said he would retire,
When he had made a million clear;
And so he toiled into the dusk,
From day to day, from year to year.
At last he put his ledgers up,
And laid his stock reports aside;
But when he started out to live,
He found he had already died!

Everyone must read of the sin of the covetous Israelites against whom Habakkuk wrote. They robbed God because they held back a little bit from the tithe that was to be given in total sacrifice to God (See Mt 23:23). Every little bit of the tithe that was held back was considered by God to be something that was stolen from Him. When all of Israel held back a little bit, then the accumulation of all the little bits that were held back added up to be a great hindrance to the work of God.

Where our treasure is found, there will our heart be (See Mt 6:21). When we love money, we always want to build bigger barns (See Lk 12:17-21). Commitment to being the living sacrifice can never be total if our heart is divided between building bigger barns for our treasures and Christ after whom we seek to be a disciple (Mt 6:24). A totally committed disciple never has two masters, one being the world and the other being the Lord Jesus.

Total commitment is the sum of a great deal of goodness that is sustained throughout our lives. When every prayer, hour of Bible study, good deed and offering come together throughout a lifetime, they add up to being a lifetime of worshipful service to the Lord.

Chapter 4

ABLE DISCIPLESHIP

This chapter is a play on words in reference to the character and behavior of those who are disciples of Divinity. We are inspired by a particular word that Paul used in 2 Timothy 2:2: “And the things that you have heard from me among many witnesses, the same commit to faithful men who will be able to teach others also.”

Timothy was to focus on “able” men who had the ability to teach. So we also focus on “able” disciples who can affect the global function of the body of Christ. These would be the Ability disciples, who, according to their abilities, determine whether the body of Christ will grow or stagnate. Some members of the Ability family make us go and grow because they are gifted with advantageous leadership skills that lead the church on to victory. However, with the family of enabled disciples comes also some negative Ability members who hold up growth. So we introduce to you the Ability members of the body of Christ, who influence us in different ways.

A. Cap Ability:

Cap Ability is gifted. He is willing to take on any task without grumbling. He is capable of standing against the wiles of the Devil (Ep 6:16) because he does “not give opportunity to the devil” (Ep 4:27). He has “put on the whole armor of God so that” he “may be able to stand against the schemes of the devil” (Ep 6:11). He guards himself against “being puffed up with pride” lest “he fall into the condemnation of the devil” (1 Tm 3:6). He knows “the Holy Scriptures that are able to make” him wise unto salvation through faith (2 Tm 3:15). Cap Ability holds “fast the faithful word as he has been taught, so that he may be able by sound teaching both to exhort and refute those who contradict” (Ti 1:9). And for this reason, he is able to resist the devil (Js 4:7).

Cap Ability does not allow himself to be led into temptation, but seeks for those escapes from temptation that God provides in order to guard his discipleship (See 1 Co 10:13). He may be tempted, but Cap does not surrender to temptation (Js 1:14).

Because Cap Ability remains strong in the Lord, and in the strength of His might (Ep 3:16; Ph 4:13; Cl 1:11), he is “able to comfort those who are in any trouble” (2 Co 1:4). Cap realizes that we are not “adequate in ourselves to think anything as coming from ourselves, but our adequacy is from God, who has also made us able servants” (2 Co 3:5,6). Cap Ability walks with the understanding that it is God working in him as a disciple. With this realization, he is empowered with the Spirit of God. “And God is able to make all grace abound toward you so that you, always having all sufficiency in everything, may abound to every good work” (2 Co 9:8). It is as Paul concluded: “Now to Him who is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that works in us” (Ep 3:20).

Every member of the body has some genes from Cap Ability, for everyone is gifted in some way to function as a capable member of the body.

B. Avail Ability:

Avail Ability has the mind to work. He is ready and willing to answer all calls for help. Those of the family of Avail Ability were the disciples about whom Paul spoke in reference to contributing to the needs of the saints:

But now finish doing [the contribution] so that as there was a readiness to desire it, so there may be also a completion out of what you have. For if there is first a willing mind, it is acceptable according to what one has and not according to what he does not have (2 Co 8:11,12).

The disciples in Achaia had a great desire to help the famine stricken disciples in Judea. They were able to help. Their discipleship was identified by their desire to first help, and then do what they planned. In Paul’s encouragement, they were to follow through with their desires, which thing they did. Avail Ability makes himself known first by a desire to help. He then follows through with what he desires. He makes the plan, and then works his plan.

In reference to zeal to reach out to the lost, Paul made himself available. He first realized that he was a debtor because of the grace of God (Rm 1:14). God had given him so much. He was thus moved into action to live a life of gratitude. So he wrote, “So as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you also who are at Rome” (Rm 1:15).

Paul expressed the same availability as Isaiah when God revealed to the prophet the spiritual need of Israel. Many years later Isaiah recorded his reaction to the call of God to go to the people: “I also heard the voice of the Lord saying, ‘Whom will I send and who will go for us?’”

(Is 6:8). Isaiah made himself available. He responded, “Here am I. Send me” (Is 6:8).

The body of Christ functions when men and women make themselves available for work. When Nehemiah revealed a project that needed immediate attention, the people responded. The people responded because they “had a mind to work” (Ne 4:6). Disciples of Divinity have a mind to do the work of God. Their discipleship is revealed through their work ethic in kingdom business.

C. Adapt Ability:

Life is about adapting to change. Eternal truths of the word of God never change, but how they are implemented in our lives may take some challenge as we live in changing times. However, we must never allow cultural changes to the standards of sin to become so influential in our lives that we sacrifice the eternal moral truths of God. But when neither the doctrinal nor moral standards of God are endangered, Christians must allow themselves to be able to adapt as Paul did when he traveled from one culture to another: “I have become all things to all men so that I might by all means save some” (1 Co 9:22).

Becoming all things to all men in order to save souls is the character of Adapt Ability. This disciple realizes that he or she must, if necessary, sacrifice some of his or her cultural treasures in order to adapt to the cultural wealth of others. Doing this emulates in our lives the adaptability of Jesus when He left heaven and came for us. From His dwelling in heaven to His death as a man, Jesus was willing to adapt to us in order that He might save us. Paul wrote of Jesus’ long road to the cross.

... who, being in the form of God, did not consider it robbery to be equal with God. But He made Himself of no reputation, taking the form of a bondservant and being made in the likeness of men. And being found in appearance as a man, He humbled Himself...” (Ph 2:6-8).

Paul had introduced this incredible adaptability of Jesus with the words, “Let this mind be in you that was also in Christ Jesus” (Ph 2:5). In other words, if we would be disciples of Divinity, this is the extremity to which we must be willing to change in order to accomplish Jesus’ kingdom business of saving the lost.

The conclusion of the challenge of Jesus’ mission to this world is inspiring. There is no extremity of cultural adaptation to which His disciples can go in order to become all things to all men. They are willing to do this in order to preach the gospel to the lost. If one is not willing to go to the extent to which Jesus did in order to find us, then he or she might find it difficult to claim to be walking as a disciple with Jesus.

After we have been in heaven forever, we question whether there will be any cultural differences in heaven that will separate us. If cultural differences in heaven—if there are differences—will not separate us in heaven, then neither should we allow them to separate us on earth.

In an era where the “gospel of prosperity” has become the fashionable message of so many “Balaamite” preachers, such preachers should seriously consider what God demands in reference to discipleship. When the Holy Spirit allowed Paul to write, “Be imitators of me even as I also am of Christ,” some might have a hard time giving up the treasures of this world, as Jesus gave up the treasure of heaven in order to live a simple life on earth without a cellphone or computer (See 1 Co 11:1).

Paul’s availability to preach the gospel did not depend on the availability of finances. He did not preach the gospel “in regard to need” (Ph 4:11). He did not exploit the people for money (2 Th 3:7,8). He did not because he learned to be financially content: “I have learned in whatever state I am to be content” (Ph 4:11). And when he spoke of “state,” he was speaking of his ability to adapt to any financial state of being. “I know,” he wrote, “how to be in need and I know how to abound. Everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need” (Ph 4:12). He was able to do this because Jesus Christ lived in him: “I can do all things through Him who strengthens me” (Ph 4:13). Paul was thus able to walk the life of a totally offered sacrifice because it was Jesus in him who empowered him. Every disciple can do the same.

Our financial life-style often reveals the extent of our discipleship. Finances did not determine Paul’s discipleship. And because it did not, the Holy Spirit gave him the privilege of saying to the rest of us, “Be imitators of me even as I also am of Christ” (1 Co 11:1).

We must be able to adapt to all cultural and financial conditions in order to preach the gospel to the world. The living sacrifice who is a walking worship service to God is willing to give up living on an equality with the rich and famous of this world in order to preach the gospel to the world. As Jesus lowered Himself to come into our culture and state of finances, we too, as His disciples, must make ourselves available to Him to fulfill His ministry on earth. We must remember that every man will die poor, being unable to take any of the world’s treasures to the grave and beyond.

D. Depend Ability:

The members of the family of Depend Ability were in the mind of Paul when he wrote to the Corinthians, “My beloved brethren, be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord ...” (1 Co 15:58). We must be as the Holy Spirit exhorted the disciples in Colosse, that they “continue in the faith grounded and steadfast and not moved away from the hope of the gospel” (Cl 1:23).

If we would be disciples of Divinity, then we must follow the example of brother Depend Ability and remain steadfast through all trials of this life. “For we have become partakers of Christ if we hold to the beginning of our confidence steadfast to the end” (Hb 3:14). It is our hope that will keep us faithful. “This hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast and which enters within the veil” (Hb 6:19). Those who give up their hope become unstable.

There were many brethren as Depend Ability in the history of the early church. Luke, for example, was with Paul in prison until the very end. When Paul wrote his final words, he mentioned that “only Luke is with me” (2 Tm 4:11). When everyone else had forsaken him, Paul could depend on Luke. Peter considered Silvanus a “faithful brother” (1 Pt 5:12). Those who are dependable are following the example of faithful Moses. “Moses indeed was faithful in all his house as a servant” (Hb 3:5). Disciples of Divinity must be faithful in their function in the house of God (See Mt 24:45-47). No matter how insignificant we might think we are, someone is depending on us for an example.

We follow the example of those who remain strong in the face of all trials of this life. Such people are blessed because of their ability to stand against those things that detour many. But “blessed is the man who endures temptation, for when he is tried, he will receive the crown of life ...” (Js 1:12).

Enduring hardships qualifies one to receive the crown. Demas, however, relinquished to the things of the world, and thus left the side of Paul when Paul was in prison (See 2 Tm 4:10). On the other hand, John Mark was once undependable in his youth. He turned from his mission to preach the gospel in the companionship of Paul and Barnabas (See At 15:36-41). However, many years later, and after he matured, Paul, while in prison, called for Mark’s companionship and ministry (2 Tm 4:11). From the example of John Mark, sometimes young people must grow into being dependable.

E. Prob Ability:

Prob Ability sits around waiting for something to come along that might stimulate him or her into action. For this reason, there is always apprehension about depending on Prob Ability for anything. Prob Ability may be the disciple about whom Paul wrote, who had become weary in doing good works (Gl 6:9).

The dangerous position in which Prob Ability places himself is that, in his idleness, he offers Satan the opportunity to distract him to do that which is evil. It was concerning some Prob Ability brethren that Peter wrote the following warning:

For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled in them and overcome, the latter end is worse for them than the beginning” (2 Pt 2:20).

Prob Ability becomes indifferent to the needs around him. And in becoming indifferent, his abilities are allowed to remain unused (See Mt 25:24-30). In a time of discouragement, Timothy fell into this emotional prison. He laid down his gift and stopped preaching. So Paul wrote a very direct letter to him with the words, “Preach the word! Be ready in season and out of season.” (2 Tm 4:2).

Paul had previously admonished Timothy, “Do not neglect the gift that is in you ...” (1 Tm 4:14). And again Paul exhorted, “I remind you that you stir up the gift of God that is in you ...” (2 Tm 1:6). Timothy needed to remember the life of the one who had discipled him in Christ, which one in his final years wrote, “I have fought the good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith” (2 Tm 4:7). Paul never neglected his gift. He continued to fight until his last breath.

We must dream like children who see no obstacles in reference to what they want to do. The older we become, the more challenges we see in everything we want to accomplish. But God asks us to dream in a way that allows Him the opportunity to remove the obstacles. We must keep in mind that when we dream to exercise our gifts in ministry, Satan starts working by stirring up imagined obstacles. And sometimes the obstacles are real. But these obstacles should never disable us. God will take care of the real obstacles.

F. Dis Ability:

When dreams are crushed by imagined obstacles, we are disabled. Timothy allowed Satan to disable his gift, and thus, for a moment in time he became dysfunctional. It can happen to the best of us.

When we consider our gifts as members of the body of Christ, Dis Ability is trying to deceive the rest of us. He is self-deceived because we know that no one is without the ability to do something. Timothy’s dysfunction because of discouragement did not deceive Paul. Paul knew that Timothy was capable of exercising his gift. He knew that there were some who had despised Timothy’s youth (1 Tm 4:12). Timothy simply allowed these antagonists to discourage him. But when Paul wrote to Timothy, that time was over.

